The Trial of Sir THOMAS GASCOIGNE, Bart. at the King's-Bench for High-Treason, the 11th of February 1679. Hil. 32 Car. II.

January the 24th, Sir THOMAS GASCOIGNE was brought to the Bar to be arraign'd.

Cl. of Cr. SIR Tho. Gascoigne, hold up thy Hand.
Sir Tho. Gascoigne. I cannot hear.
Clerk. He says he cannot hear.
L. C. J. * Then somebody must repeat it that stands by him.
* Sir William Scroggs.
† Sir George Jeffries. Mr. Recorder. † Do you hear what I say to you?
Sir Tho. Gascoigne. No, I cannot hear, I am very deaf.

Then the Clerk of the Crown went down close to the Bar, and went on thus:

Cl. of Cr. Sir Thomas Gascoigne, hold up thy Hand. [Which he did.]

Thou stand'st indicted by the Name of Sir Thomas Gascoigne, late of the Parish of Elmet, in the West-Riding in the County of York, Bart. for that thou, as a false Traitor against our most Illustrious and Excellent Prince King Charles the Second, thy natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in thy Heart, nor weighing the Duty of thy Allegiance, but by the Instigation of the Devil moved and seduced, the cordial Love, and true, due, and natural Obedience which true and faithful Subjects of our said Lord the King should bear to him, and of Right are bound to bear, wholly withdrawing, devising, and with all thy Power intending to disturb the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Realm, and to bring and put our said Lord the King to Death and final Destruction; and the true Worship of God in this Kingdom, by Law established and used, to alter unto the Superstition of the Church of Rome, and to move and stir up War against our said Lord the King in this Realm, and to subvert the Government of this Kingdom; the Thirtieth Day of May, in the One and Thirtieth Year of our said Lord the King's Reign, at the Parish of Barwick in Elmet in the said County of York, in the West-Riding of the same County, with divers other false Traitors unknown, didst traiterously compass, imagine, and intend the Death and final Destruction of our said Lord the King; and to change and alter, and wholly to subvert the ancient Government of this Realm; and to depose, and wholly to deprive the King of the Crown and Government of this Kingdom, and to root out the true Protestant Religion. And to fulfil and accomplish the same most wicked Treasons, and traiterous Imaginations and Purposes, the said Gascoigne, and other false Traitors unknown, on the said Thirtieth Day of May, in the One and Thirtieth Year aforesaid, with Force and Arms, &c. at the Parish of Barwick aforesaid, advisedly, devilishly, maliciously and traiterously did assemble, unite, and gather together themselves, and then and there did devilishly, advisedly, maliciously, craftily, and traiterously consult and agree to bring our said Lord the King to Death and final Destruction, and to depose and deprive him of his own Crown and Government, and to introduce and establish the Religion of the Romish Church in this Realm. And the sooner to fulfil and accomplish the same most wicked Treasons and traiterous Imaginations and Purposes, thou the said Gascoigne, and other unknown Traitors, then and there advisedly, maliciously, and traiterously did further consult and agree to contribute, pay, and expend divers large Sums of Money to divers of the King's Subjects and other Persons unknown, to procure those Persons unknown traiterously to kill our said Lord the King, and to introduce the Romish Religion into this Realm. And that thou the said Gascoigne afterwards (to wit), on the said Thirtieth Day of May, in the One and Thirtieth Year aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, didst falsely, advisedly, craftily, maliciously, and traiterously solicit one Robert Bolron to kill our said Lord the King; and then and there, with an Intent sooner traiterously to encourage the said Bolron to undertake the killing and murdering of our said Lord the King, offeredst therefore to give and pay the said Bolron 1000*l.* of lawful Money of England; against the Duty of thy Allegiance, against the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in such Case made and provided. How say'st thou, Sir Thomas Gascoigne, art thou guilty of this High-Treason whereof thou standest indicted, and hast been now Arraigned, or Not guilty?

Sir Tho. Gascoigne. Gloria Patri, Filio, & Spiritui Sancto, I am not guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Not Guilty, you must say.

Sir T. Gascoigne. Not Guilty; nor any of my Family were ever guilty of any such Thing: I hope I shall be tried fairly.

Cl. of Cr. How will you be tried?

Sir T. Gascoigne. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Sir T. Gascoigne. I desire, that in order to my Trial, I may have a Jury of Gentlemen, of Persons of my own Quality, and of my own Country, that may be able to know something how I have lived hitherto; for I am above Fourscore and five Years old.

L. C. J. Tell him he shall have a good Jury of Gentlemen of his own Country.

Sir T. Gascoigne. And besides, my Lord, I desire to know when I shall be try'd.

Mr. Att. Gen. * Some time about the latter End of the * Sir Creswel Term, as soon as I can get a Jury up. Levinz.

Sir T. Gascoigne. I do not know whether I can produce all my Witnesses at that time, if there be not a longer time allowed me; for I have a great many Witnesses to fetch up: These Witnesses must be all here, or I can't make my Defence; and I know not how they shall be got hither in so little time.

L. C. J. Tell him he may have what Witnesses he pleases, and the Aid of this Court to fetch them.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Name them who they are.

Mrs. Ravenscroft. My Lord, some of his Witnesses are at Paris.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Why, he will not be try'd yet this Fortnight.

Mrs. Ravenscroft. They will not have time to come over between this and that.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Mistress, he had reason to believe that he should be try'd some time this Term, for so the Council order'd it; and therefore he should have got his Witnesses ready.

Mrs. Ravenscroft. My Lord, he did not know where they were till a Week ago.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Look you, Mr. Attorney, here is a Lady that is, I suppose, some Relation to this Gentleman.

Mrs. Ravenscroft. He is my Grandfather, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolben. She says a Fortnight's time will be too little to get his Witnesses together for his Defence, because some of the Witnesses are beyond Sea at Paris, she says.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I am willing he should have as long time as the Term will allow of: But sure that is long enough to get any Witnesses from Paris.

L. C. J. What say you to Sir Miles Stapleton? I see he is join'd in the Indictment.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he is not come up yet.

L. C. J. Will you try the one without the other?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord, if we cannot have both: He is in the Hands of the Messenger at York; we have writ down to know the State of his Health to some of the Justices of the Peace, and the Messenger returns word, he is sick and can't come: I have sent down an Habeas Corpus to the Messenger to bring him up; let him return a Languidus at his Peril; that's all I can do.

L. C. J. Well, what Day do you appoint for Sir Thomas's Trial?

Mr. Att. Gen. Tuesday come Fortnight I think will be a good Day.

Mr. Just. Dolben. By that time, Mistress, you may get your Witnesses; you must send a Messenger on purpose.

Mrs. Ravenscroft. But if the Wind should be contrary, my Lord, and they cannot be brought over?

Mr. Just. Dolben. 'Tis not an usual Thing to have Winds long contrary between Dover and Calais.

Mrs. Ravenscroft. But if it do fall out that he wants a material Witness at his Trial, I hope his Life will be consider'd.

Mr. Just. Dolben. He should have had them ready, he had warning before.

Mrs. Ravenscroft. We could do it no sooner, because we knew not where they were.

Mr. Just. Dolben. He saith he hath a great many Witnesses; are they all at Paris?

Mr. Att. Gen. There are a great many in Town, we know, already.

Mrs. Ravenscroft. If we had known when exactly, we might have been more ready perhaps.

Mr. Att. Gen. But we could give no notice sooner; it is early in the Term now. But there is time enough to get any Witnesses.

L. C. J. Ay, you may send to Paris a great many times between this and that.

Mrs. Ravenscroft. What if the Letter miscarry, my Lord?

Mr. Just. Dolben. Why, you must send a special Messenger.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if you please, let it be Wednesday Fortnight, the last Day but one of the Term; because I would give him as much time to provide himself as I can.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Well, Mistress, you must send a special Messenger; we must not consult your Convenience; do it as well as you can, you have time enough.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Your Grandfather is a Man of an Estate; he may very well, in this Case, be at the Charge of a special Messenger.

Mrs. Ravenscroft. But what if the Winds be contrary, must my Grandfather's Life be lost?

L. C. J. We must give you that Favour we can by Law, and you must be content: Tell us at the Trial what you have done.

Then the Lieutenant of the Tower was order'd to take the Prisoner back, and by Rule to bring him to the Bar on Wednesday the 11th of February. On which Day the Prisoner being brought up, the Trial proceeded thus:

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, here is an extraordinary Matter: Sir Thomas Gascoigne had a Rule for some Friend to assist him, by reason of the Defect of his Hearing; and now there are three of them that are got among the Jury.

L. C. J. No, no, they must come in of the inside of the Bar.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray let him tell which he will make choice of; for he is by the Rule to have but one.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Tell him there can but one stay.

Counsel. He says one of them came out of the Country, and knows the Persons that are the Witnesses, which he does not himself.

L. C. J. Well, let the other come in, let him have them both.

Counsel. He says, the principal Man he depended upon is clapt up.

L. C. J. Well, we can't help that.

Then way was made for the Jury to come up to the Stand, and Proclamation for Information was made in usual manner.

Cl. of Court. Sir Thomas Gascoigne, hold up thy Hand.

Sir T. Gas. I cannot hear what is said.

Cl. of Cr. Those good Men which were lately called, and have appeared, are to pass, &c.

L. C. J. Tell him the Effect of it. If he will make any Challenges to the Jury, he must speak to them before they are sworn.

Hobart. If you will challenge any of the Jury, you must speak to them before they are sworn.

Sir T. Gas. I cannot hear who is called.

L. C. J. Tell him who is called.

Cl. of Cr. Sir Thomas Hodson.

Hobart. This is Sir Thomas Hodson, Sir.

Sir T. Gas. What must I say? Ay, or No?

Hobart. Do you except against him?

Sir T. Gas. No. [Who was sworn.

Cl. of Cr. Richard Beaumont, Esq;

Hobart. Do you challenge him, Sir?

Sir T. Gas. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, here is Sir John Cutler in the Pannel, one that lives in Town, and is the Foreman of the Jury; I desire the Court to take notice of his not appearing in particular.

Cl. of Cr. John Gibson, Esq;

The Prisoner challenged him.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. I perceive they skip a great many; pray call them as they are in the Pannel, and record their Non-appearance in Court.

Which was done accordingly; but their Names that did not appear, for brevity sake, are omitted.

Cl. of Cr. Nicholas Maleverer, Esq;

Mr. Att. Gen. We challenge him for the King. I perceive the best Gentlemen stay at home.

Cry. Twelve good men and true, stand together and hear your Evidence.

Cl. of Cr. Sir Thomas Gascoigne, hold up thy hand. Gentlemen, you of the Jury that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner and hearken to his Charge. You shall understand, That he stands Indicted by the Name of Sir Thomas Gascoigne, late of the Parish of Elmet, &c. Prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis. Upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and thereunto pleaded Not Guilty; and for his Trial hath put himself upon his Country, which Country you are, &c.

Then Proclamation for Evidence was made, and Dormer, Esq; of Council for the King in this Cause, opened the Indictment thus:

Mr. Dormer. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, Sir Thomas Gascoigne, Baronet, the Prisoner at the Bar, stands indicted for High-Treason, in conspiring the Murder of his Majesty, the subverting of the Government, and the introducing the Romish Religion: And for the effecting these Purposes, the Indictment sets forth, That the said Sir Thomas Gascoigne, Sir Miles Stapleton, and other false Traitors, on the 30th of May last, at the Parish of Elmet, in the West-Riding of the County of York, did assemble together, and there resolved to put their Treasons in execution. And the better to accomplish their said Treasons and traitorous Imaginations, they did agree to contribute several large Sums of Money to several of his Majesty's Subjects unknown, to introduce Popery, to kill the King, and subvert the Government: And that Sir Thomas Gascoigne did solicit Robert Bolron to kill the King, and for that Service he was to pay him 1000*l*. To this he hath pleaded Not Guilty: If the King's Evidence prove the Charge of the Indictment, your Duty is to find him Guilty.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard the Indictment, and it hath been opened to you. There can be no greater Crime charged upon any, than that this Gentleman is accused of. The Design hath been to kill and murder the King, to change the Religion and the Government; and to effect this, they make Assemblies, they offer Money: and this, my Lord, we shall prove. 'Tis no new Crime, divers have suffered for the like already; and we shall not need to make any Aggravations, for indeed it cannot be aggravated more than the plain matter itself is. We shall call our Witnesses, and prove it directly upon him, even by Two Witnesses; and we shall prove, that he held Intelligence with one Preswicke a Priest; Letters between him and that Person are found in his Custody, and we shall produce one of them wherein it doth appear, that there was Intelligence between them, and Consultations had about the Oath of Allegiance; and that Pracid did write to him, that it was a damnable Oath condemned by the Scorbannists: And upon that Point hangs the changing of Religion; for the Oath of Allegiance is the great Touchstone to discover Men's Sincerity by, and the great Bond to tie them to the Government, and to the Protestant Religion. And we shall likewise prove another Passage in a Letter indorsed with the Prisoner's own Hand, wherein there is an Expression to this purpose: That if England be converted, (the Priest writes this to him) then how a Sum of Ninety Pound was to be disposed: Which was, as you shall hear, and we shall prove, in a Nunnery. If England be converted, that clearly shews what was their Intention, not only to destroy the King, but the Religion and the Nation; and so they were conspiring not only against his Majesty, but against God. That an old Gentleman that hath lived so long under the Peace of this Nation, and been so protected by the Government, which hath been so indulgent to Men of his Persuasion, should be guilty of such a Design, is a lamentable thing to think of; that he should so offend the Law, which hath been so mild in its Execution against such Men. We shall prove the Proffer of the 1000*l*. and so leave it with you.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, these two Papers we shall use in confirmation of that Evidence will be given by two Witnesses, who I think will concur in the same thing; that is, the Conspiracy for killing the King, and for the carrying on of the Plot. The Papers the Witnesses will expound to you; the one is a Letter, as Mr. Serjeant hath opened it to you, to Sir Thomas Gascoigne from a Priest, wherein he does discourse about 90*l*. a Year at Maunston, which Sir Thomas had purchased to settle upon a Nunnery called Dolebank in Yorkshire; and therein it is said, *You will be well advised to put in a Proviso into the former Writing (he meant for the Settlement), That if England be converted, the 90*l*. a Year shall be bestowed at Heworth, or some other Place in Yorkshire*. Your Lordship will hear by the Witnesses, that there were several Places designed for these Nuns to inhabit, as Dolebank and other Places; and this Letter will concur with their Evidence, and they will prove, that this very place that they speak of, was design'd for this purpose; and so it appears by the Papers taken in Sir Thomas Gascoigne's Custody. My Lord, there is another Letter which was mention'd, and which I believe may have a great Influence in this Cause, I am sure it may be likely to produce very bad Effects; which is that Letter from the Priest, wherein he decries the Oath of Allegiance as a damnable thing condemned by the Doctors at Sorbonne, and other Priests from Rome. And this had its effect a little time before; for it was about the time that a matter of Thirty or Forty were convicted of a Præmunire in that County, for not taking the Oath of Allegiance, which they used to do before. And there will be some other concurring Evidence in this Cause, and is by some Papers taken in Sir Thomas Gascoigne's own Hand; they are Almanacks, in which many of his own Memorials are, several Sums of Money mentioned to be paid, and returned to Priests at London: The Witnesses will tell you it was returned for the Design of the Plot. There happens to be 900*l*. return'd to Mr. Corker, who is now in Newgate; and some other Sums to Harcourt, who is executed; and some Money is paid to him, though I think not much, about 25*l*. and several Sums are mention'd, and great Sums return'd to London by Sir Thomas Gascoigne, in five or six Years time, 5 or 6000*l*. to what purpose I can't tell; they will give you an Account: I think he did live always in Yorkshire himself, never used to come to Town; and what Occasion he might have of returning Money, I don't know. We will call the two Witnesses viva voce, and then use the other Evidence as we shall have occasion to confirm them. Call Mr. Bolron and Mr. Mowbray. [Who were sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Bolron, tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of Sir Thomas Gascoigne.

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I came to live with Sir Thomas Gascoigne in the Year 1674, as Steward of his Coal-works; and in the Year 1675, a little before Easter, being in the next Room to Sir Thomas Gascoigne, I did hear Charles Ingleby and Sir Thomas in Discourse together, and Sir Thomas did say he was very fearful his Estate would be liable to be forfeited to the King—

L. C. J. In 75 was this?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What time in 75?

Mr. Bolron. A little before Easter.

L. C. J. Were you in the Room?

Mr. Bolron. I was in the next Room, and the Door was not shut; and Sir Thomas did say—

Mr. Att. Gen. Tell the Discourse what it was.

Mr. Bolron. He said he was resolved to make a collusive Conveyance of his Estate, for fear it should be forfeited to the King. And Charles Ingleby said, it was best so to do: and then he told Sir Thomas he would have the Deceazance made ready, which he would draw with his own hands; but he bid him be sure to bring none but Protestant Witnesses along with him to testify.

And in the Year 1675, I did go along with Sir Thomas Gascoigne to Sir William Ingleby's of Ripley, and there I did see him receive colourably 1000*l*.

L. C. J. How do you know it was colourably?

Mr. Bolron.

Mr. Bolron. I did hear Sir Thomas tell Charles Ingleby so.
 L. C. J. When was that?
 Mr. Bolron. The 7th or 8th of April; the Deed bears the 8th of April 1675.
 L. C. J. Was Charles Ingleby there at that time?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, when the Deed was sealed; and he read it in the Presence of the Witnesses to be dated at that time.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. What, That thousand Pound was the Consideration of the Deed?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, it was. Sir Thomas Gascoigne did part thereby with all his Estate for Seven Years, he allowing him 100*l.* a Year for his Maintenance, besides the 1000*l.* at first paid. And this was done with that intent, for fear he should be discovered in the Plot for killing the King——
 L. C. J. How do you know that?
 Mr. Bolron. I did hear Sir Thomas Gascoigne and Sir Miles Stapleton discourse of it, and he said it was for that End.
 L. C. J. Where was that Discourse?
 Mr. Bolron. In Sir Thomas Gascoigne's Bed-chamber.
 Mr. Just. Jones. When was that?
 Mr. Bolron. It was in or about the Discovery of the Plot.
 L. C. J. But you say you saw the Deed sealed?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, I was a Witness to it.
 L. C. J. And you saw the Money paid?
 Mr. Bolron. I and one Matthias Higgringil did help to count it.
 Mr. Just. Jones. Were you a Protestant at that time?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord, I was at the time of the sealing the Deed; but I did hear the Discourse between Sir Miles Stapleton and Sir Thomas Gascoigne upon the Discovery of the Plot, when I was a Papist.
 L. C. J. When was the Discourse you speak of with Sir Miles Stapleton, do you say?
 Mr. Bolron. It was about the Discovery of the Plot.
 L. C. J. After the Money paid?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, after the Money paid: And he said to Sir Miles Stapleton, he had done well to make over his Estate.
 L. C. J. That is an abrupt thing for him to say; how did he begin the Discourse?
 Mr. Bolron. They were discoursing about the Discovery of the Plot by Dr. Oates and Mr. Bedloe; and then Sir Thomas Gascoigne said to Sir Miles Stapleton, I have done well to make over my Estate to Sir William Ingleby, to prevent a Forfeiture.
 L. C. J. What said Sir Miles Stapleton?
 Mr. Bolron. I do not know what he said very well.
 L. C. J. You seemed but now, as if he had said he was in the Plot.
 Mr. Just. Jones. Did he own he was in the Plot?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes.
 L. C. J. When?
 Mr. Bolron. At several times.
 Mr. Serj. Maynard. Tell the manner how he was concerned.
 Mr. Bolron. My Lord, in the Year 1676, I did hear Sir Thomas Gascoigne say to one Christopher Metcalfe, that he was resolved to send 3000*l.* to the Jesuits in London for the carrying on of the Design.
 L. C. J. What time in 76?
 Mr. Bolron. The beginning of the Year 76.
 L. C. J. To whom did he say so?
 Mr. Bolron. To one Christopher Metcalfe.
 L. C. J. Were you a Papist then?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes.
 L. C. J. When came you first to be a Papist?
 Mr. Bolron. About Whitsuntide, 75.
 Mr. Just. Jones. You are a Protestant now?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord, I am so.
 L. C. J. When did you turn Protestant again?
 Mr. Bolron. I turned Protestant upon the Discovery of this Business.
 L. C. J. When?
 Mr. Bolron. Either the beginning of May, or the latter end of June.
 L. C. J. To whom did he speak it?
 Mr. Bolron. To Christopher Metcalfe, who then lived in his House.
 L. C. J. What said he?
 Mr. Bolron. He said he was to send 3000*l.* to the Jesuits in London, for the carrying on of this Design.
 L. C. J. Who was in the Room besides?
 Mr. Bolron. None but Sir Thomas Gascoigne and Metcalfe.
 L. C. J. Where is that Metcalfe?
 Mr. Bolron. He is since dead, I think.
 L. C. J. What Discourse had they about the Design?
 Mr. Bolron. They were discoursing about it when I came in; and I remember he mentioned 300*l.* for Corker, 300*l.* for Harcourt, and 300*l.* for Cornwallis; and the rest by 300*l.* a-piece to other Persons.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What Name did Cornwallis go by besides?
 Mr. Bolron. Pracid, my Lord.
 Mr. Att. Gen. That's the Name that is to the Letter.
 Mr. Just. Pemberton. Well, what do you know more?
 Mr. Bolron. My Lord, Sir Thomas Gascoigne told this Christopher Metcalfe, that he would return it by 300*l.* at a time, to prevent Suspicion, by the Hands of Richard Phisick; and about the beginning of the Year 77, I did hear Sir Thomas Gascoigne say, that he had returned it, and that if it had been a thousand times as much, he would be glad to spend it all in so good a Cause.
 L. C. J. Did he say he had returned all the 3000*l.*?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes.
 L. C. J. Did he tell you how it was to be dispos'd of?
 Mr. Bolron. It was to be disposed among the Jesuits for the carrying on of the Design.
 L. C. J. That was in the general; but this 900*l.* you speak of was to those three Priests?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes.
 Mr. Just. Jones. You say he resolved to send 3000*l.* to the Jesuits at London about this Design; pray what was the Design? What did they say about the Plot at that time?
 Mr. Bolron. My Lord, at other times I have heard them say it was for killing the King.
 L. C. J. What said Metcalfe to all this?
 Mr. Bolron. He did allow of it, and thought it was the best way so to do. I have seen him return several sums by Richard Phisick.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Was Metcalfe a Papist?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, and he died so, as I have heard.
 L. C. J. Was you in the Room when they first began the Discourse?
 Mr. Bolron. No, my Lord, I came in when they were discoursing.
 L. C. J. You came in when they were talking, you say; but they did not stop talking because you came in?
 Mr. Bolron. No, my Lord, because I knew of it: I was brought in by one Rushton, who was acquainted with the Plot, to know of it, and therefore they did not stop me when I came in.
 L. C. J. You say he said, I will return 3000*l.* to the Jesuits in London: Did he say in what time he would send that 3000*l.*?
 Mr. Bolron. No, but in 76 he said he would do it.
 L. C. J. And it should be employed for carrying on of the Design?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, those were the Words.
 L. C. J. And in 77 you heard him talk with Metcalfe again? And then he said, If it had been a thousand times as much he would have sent it?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes.
 L. C. J. Was no body there but he, Sir Thomas Gascoigne, and you?
 Mr. Bolron. No body else.
 L. C. J. Then go on with your Evidence.
 Mr. Bolron. My Lord, in the Year 77 several Gentlemen did meet and assemble together at Barnbow-hall in the County of York, Sir Thomas Gascoigne's House; and their Resolution was this, That they would build a Nunnery at Dolebank, in case that their Design and Plot of killing the King should take effect, and the Roman Catholick Religion be established in England: Upon which account, the Company there present did resolve they would lose their Lives and Estates to further it: And Sir Thomas Gascoigne did conclude he would give 900*l.* a Year for ever for the maintenance of this Nunnery: Upon which they all agreed, that after his Death he should be canoniz'd a Saint.
 L. C. J. Who were these Gentlemen?
 Mr. Bolron. Sir Miles Stapleton, Charles Ingleby, Esquire Gascoigne, my Lady Tempest, Thomas Thwing, Sir Walter Vavasor, Sir Francis Hungatt, and Robert Kilingbeck a Jesuit, and William Rushton a Romish Priest.
 Mr. Just. Pemberton. Is he dead?
 Mr. Bolron. No, he is fled beyond Sea.
 L. C. J. Who else?
 Mr. Bolron. These are the Persons I can remember at present.
 L. C. J. There was a Woman there, you say?
 Mr. Bolron. My Lady Tempest, my Lord, and one William Rushton, if you had not him before.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. That was your Confessor?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, and engag'd me in the Plot.
 Mr. Just. Pemberton. What was your Discourse? Pray tell that.
 Mr. Bolron. The Discourse was upon establishing a Nunnery at Dolebank, in hopes that the Plot of Killing the King would take effect: The Intention was to alter the Government, and to introduce the Romish Religion.
 L. C. J. Who was it said this?
 Mr. Bolron. It was spoken by Sir Thomas Gascoigne, and the rest of the Gentlemen.
 L. C. J. In their Discourse?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes.
 L. C. J. Did they speak of killing the King?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord, Sir Francis Hungatt said it several times.
 L. C. J. How? Upon what Account?
 Mr. Bolron. They were mutually resolved, and they would talk that they would venture their Lives and Estates in hopes the Plot would take effect; and accordingly about Michaelmas 1677, or near upon, as I remember——
 L. C. J. How long staid they there?
 Mr. Bolron. About six or seven Hours.
 L. C. J. Were you with them in the Room still?
 Mr. Bolron. My Lord, I was sometimes in the Room, and sometimes out: What Discourse I heard, I tell you; there was one Barloe——
 L. C. J. What was that Barloe?
 Mr. Bolron. I have had two Orders of Council for the seizing of him, and never could take him; he is a Priest.
 L. C. J. Was he by?
 Mr. Bolron. He went with them to take possession of the Nunnery.
 L. C. J. Was he not in the House?
 Mr. Bolron. No, not in the Room at that time.
 L. C. J. Was there any Servant by in the Room when this Discourse was?
 Mr. Bolron. No.
 L. C. J. Well, go on.
 Mr. Bolron. Accordingly Sir Tho. Gascoigne did erect a Nunnery about the year 77, at Dolebank.
 L. C. J. What, built it?
 Mr. Bolron. He establish'd it.
 L. C. J. Who were the Nuns?
 Mr. Bolron. Mrs. Lashals was Lady Abbess, Mrs. Beckwith and Mrs. Benningfield were her Assistants, Elling Thwing, Eliz. Butcher, and others, were Nuns, according as I heard Sir Tho. Gascoigne say: And when they went by Sir Tho. Gascoigne, when one Mary Root was taking Horse, Sir Tho. Gascoigne said of her, There goes an old Maid and a young Nun.
 L. C. J. Whither were they going then?
 Mr. Bolron. To take possession of the Nunnery.
 L. C. J. Was it a new built House?
 Mr. Bolron. They call'd it a Nunnery in hopes their Plot would take effect.
 L. C. J. Was it an old or a new built House?
 Mr. Bolron. Nay, I never saw it.
 L. C. J. Whereabouts was this House?
 Mr. Bolron. It was near Ripley.
 L. C. J. What, was that Ripley his House?
 Mr. Bolron. No, his House is at Barnbow.
 L. C. J. Who did it belong to?
 Mr. Bolron. They went thither till the Business was done, and that was only till the King was kill'd, and afterwards they resolved to reside at Heworth.
 L. C. J. How long staid they there?
 Mr. Bolron. They lived in this place near a year and half.
 L. C. J. Till the Plot was discovered?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes.
 Mr. Just. Jones. How do you know they liv'd there?
 Mr. Bolron. I have seen several times Letters come from their Hands.
 Mr. Just. Jones. How do you know they came from thence?
 Mr. Bolron.

Mr. Bolron. The Letters were dated from Dolebank.

L. C. J. Did he let them lie open?

Mr. Bolron. Sometimes he did.

L. C. J. What was in them?

Mr. Bolron. I don't know any of the Particulars, there was no great Matter in them.

L. C. J. Who writ them?

Mr. Bolron. The Name that I saw was Pracid, or from Mrs. Lashals.

Mr. Att. Gen. They, or some of them.

L. C. J. You do not know whose House it was?

Mr. Bolron. No, my Lord, not I.

L. C. J. Where is Heworth-Hall?

Mr. Bolron. Heworth-Hall is about half a Mile off of York.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Does not that belong to one Mr. Dawson?

Mr. Bolron. It did, but it was bought of him.

Mr. Att. Gen. What other Place did you hear him mention?

Mr. Bolron. Broughton, my Lord, but I never knew that any were there.

L. C. J. Nor at Heworth-Hall.

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord, sometime one and sometimes the other; some of them came to Heworth-Hall, and some to Dolebank, but Dolebank was the Place they did generally reside at: And then Sir Thomas did establish 90 l. a Year, which was purchased of Mr. Tim. Maleverer, and Alver Aloftus enjoys it.

L. C. J. How much was it?

Mr. Bolron. 90 l. a Year.

L. C. J. Where does it lie?

Mr. Bolron. It lies at a Place call'd Mawson, near Sir Thomas Gascoigne's House.

L. C. J. Did he say he had seal'd such a Conveyance?

Mr. Just. Dolben. I suppose he bought it of Dawson.

Mr. Bolron. He bought it of Maleverer.

L. C. J. Is Maleverer a Protestant?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where is he?

Mr. Bolron. I can't tell.

Mr. Just. Jones. You did not see the Conveyance of it your self seal'd?

Mr. Bolron. No, I refer to their Words for that.

Mr. Just. Jones. To what Purpose was it bought?

Mr. Bolron. To establish a Nunnery.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. And they told him he should be canoniz'd for a Saint when he dy'd?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, go on, then.

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, about March last, to the best of my Remembrance, Sir Thomas Gascoigne and Esquire Gascoigne being in their Chamber together, I was reading a book call'd, The Lives of the Saints, and Esquire Gascoigne told Sir Thomas that he had been before the Justices of the Peace, and they had given to him and Mr. Middleton License to go up to London, which mention'd, that in Consideration that there was a Suit in Law between James Nelthorpe Esq; and Sir Thomas Gascoigne, therefore it permitted the said Thomas Gascoigne Esq; and his Man to travel peaceably to London. And I did hear the other Copy read of Mr. Middleton's License to travel into the South, and for his Occasion into the South Parts was pretended to receive some Rents there. But I did hear Esquire Gascoigne say to Sir Thomas, that he was resolv'd as soon as he came to London, and had done with Mr. Nelthorpe, that he would fly into France, and so would cheat the Justices, for he was resolv'd not to come back to Yorkshire again, but he would commit the Design in agitation into such Hands as would do it, and would not fail, but he would not stay to see Execution.

L. C. J. You heard him say so?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. What said Sir Thomas?

Mr. Bolron. He commended his Son's and Mr. Middleton's Resolutions.

L. C. J. What Room was it in?

Mr. Bolron. It was in Sir Thomas's own Chamber.

L. C. J. Were there any Rooms near it?

Mr. Bolron. None that they could hear in, unless in the Chamber within, I don't know whether any one was there or no.

L. C. J. Could they hear in no Room that was near to them?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, in the Chamber within.

L. C. J. Was there no Servant there?

Mr. Bolron. Not as I know.

L. C. J. My Reason is, because he must speak very loud to make his Father hear him.

Mr. Bolron. Yes, he did, for I heard him in the Chamber-Window that I stood in against them, they were a little Way off me.

L. C. J. Because, if any of the Servants were near, methinks they must needs be very cautious how they spoke so loud to make Sir Thomas Gascoigne hear.

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, he was not so deaf then as they say he is, and he seems to be now. And Esquire Gascoigne also, because he would be sure there should no Damage come to him, caused all his Goods to be sold off his Ground, and Mr. Middleton sold his very Household-Goods.

L. C. J. He is a Papist too, is he not?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, he is so.

L. C. J. Was not he at the meeting with Sir Miles Stapleton?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, Mr. Middleton was one.

L. C. J. You did not name him before.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. But he said a great many were there besides those he nam'd.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Yes, he did so. Well, go on, Sir.

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, last Thirtieth of May, the Day after Holy Thursday, as I remember, being in Sir Thomas Gascoigne's own Chamber, Sir Thomas Gascoigne bid me go into the Gallery next to the Priest's Lodgings, and after a little time one William Rushton, my Confessor, came to me, and asked me, if I was at the last Pontefract Sessions? I told him, Yes, and that I had taken the Oath of Allegiance, as others had done: Whereupon the said Rushton told me, that I and all the others were damn'd for so doing, if we kept the same; therefore he bid me be sure to come next Sunday to have Absolution from him; for it was a damnable Sin to take that Oath, and he told me, he had Power from the Pope to absolve me; and he added, that few Priests had that Power that he had.

L. C. J. Did he make you confess that as a Sin to him?

Mr. Bolron. No, my Lord, for I did make the Discovery soon after.

L. C. J. When was it you first turned Protestant?

Mr. Bolron. In June, my Lord, after that.

L. C. J. Then you were not a Protestant at that time?

Mr. Bolron. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Were you a Papist when you took the Oath of Allegiance?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. C. J. Why would not you, then, go and be absolved according as your Priest bid you?

Mr. Bolron. I thought I had done nothing that was evil, because several had taken the Oath with me, as you shall hear afterward.

L. C. J. Well, go on.

Mr. Bolron. I told him that several others had done it as well as I, that were Papists, and they judg'd it lawful; whereupon he said, Away, and told me I was a Fool, and knew not how to judge of an Oath.

L. C. J. So you were satisfied the Papists might take the Oath?

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, I told him I thought it was no Sin to take that Oath, because it was an Oath only to be true to my King and to my Country; and I told him that Mr. Ellis, Priest to Mr. Vavasor, had written Commentaries upon the Oath, and justified the taking of it. Said he again, Mr. Ellis was a Fool, and his Superiors will call him to an Account, and check him for his Pains. But, said he, by taking the Oath you have deny'd the Power of the Pope to absolve you from it; but I tell you he hath a Power to depose the King, and had done it: And, said he, you will merit Heaven if you will kill him.

L. C. J. Who spoke to you?

Mr. Bolron. Rushton, my Lord, said it was a meritorious Act to kill the King.

L. C. J. But did Sir Thomas Gascoigne, or any of the Company, wish you to do that Thing?

Mr. Bolron. Not at that Meeting; but afterwards Sir Thomas did, my Lord, if you will give me Leave to go on.

L. C. J. What did he say?

Mr. Bolron. He told me he would assist me in the Act.

L. C. J. Who?

Mr. Bolron. Rushton did. And he told me the Pope had granted him the Power, that I should have the Benefit of Absolution if I would do it. I desired him not to persuade me to do such a Thing, for I would have no hand in it; then he quoted a certain Place of Scripture to me, which was, Thou shalt bind their Kings in Fetters, and their Princes in Chains. Whereupon he concluded, and made this Exposition, that the Pope had deposed the King, and absolved all his Subjects, and it was a meritorious Act to kill the King. And that unless the King would turn Roman Catholick, the Pope would give away his Kingdoms to another.

L. C. J. Well, go on.

Mr. Bolron. Then I told him I would have no hand in that Act and Deed; whereupon he answered me again, You may may hang me, if you please, for speaking these Words. No, Sir, said I, I will do you no Injury, if you do your self none. So he bid me consider what he said, and come to him again, but I did not.

L. C. J. This was the Thirtieth of May?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, and the same Day as soon as I came down, I was told Sir Thomas Gascoigne had left Order with his Servants that I should not depart the House till he came in, and I stay'd there till about six of the Clock.

L. C. J. Did not you live with him then?

Mr. Bolron. I lived a little Way off the House.

L. C. J. How far?

Mr. Bolron. About a quarter of a Mile.

L. C. J. Were you not his Servant?

Mr. Bolron. No, my Lord, not at that time.

Mr. Just. Jones. How long had you been gone out of his Service before?

Mr. Bolron. I went out of his Service about the Beginning of July 1678.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Did Sir Thomas Gascoigne send you into this Gallery?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. And there you found Rushton?

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, he was not there when I came, but he came as it were from Chapel.

L. C. J. You were his Servant when all the Gentlemen met at his House?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. C. J. When did you leave his Service, say you?

Mr. Bolron. The first Day of July 1678.

L. C. J. And this was in May 1678, was it not?

Mr. Bolron. No, in (79) my Lord, last May. My Lord, I watched and stayed till he came in, and took him as he came in. I went up Stairs with him, and when he came into his Chamber he calls me to him, and asked me what Discourse had passed between me and Rushton? I told him our Discourse was concerning the Oath of Allegiance, and the Lawfulness or Unlawfulness of it. Then Sir Thomas Gascoigne took me by the Hand, and told me, Well, Man, if thou wilt undertake a Design that I and others have to kill the King, I will give thee 1000 l. and I will send thee to my Son Thomas, if he be in Town; but if he be not in Town, he said he would give me such Instructions that I should find the rest that were concerned in the Business.

L. C. J. The rest, what?

Mr. Bolron. The rest that were in the Plot.

L. C. J. That you should know where to find them in London, you mean so?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord, if he were gone beyond Sea.

L. C. J. What said you to him?

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, I told him I would have no hand in Blood, and would not do such a wicked Deed, and desired him to persuade me no more. Then he desired me of all Love to keep secret what he had said. But afterwards I recollected that it was a very ill Thing, and went immediately to the Justices of the Peace.

L. C. J. How soon did you go?

Mr. Bolron. Soon after.

L. C. J. To whom did you go?

Mr. Bolron. To Mr. Tindal, a Justice of Peace, and to Mr. Normanton.

L. C. J. Did you make an Oath there?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, that Sir Thomas promised me 1000 l.

L. C. J. And for what Purpose?

Mr. Bolron. For killing the King.

L. C. J. Did you put that in the Oath you made?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What time was this after the Discourse?
 Mr. Bolron. It was about a Week, or such a time.
 L. C. J. Was it the next Day?
 Mr. Bolron. No.
 L. C. J. Was it within a Fortnight?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, I believe it was, my Lord.
 L. C. J. Was it not a Month?
 Mr. Bolron. No, it was not above a Fortnight, for Sir Thomas Gascoigne was apprehended in July or thereabouts, I believe, my Lord.
 L. C. J. But was that the first time that Sir Thomas ever spake to you to kill the King, the 30th of May?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord.
 Mr. Just. Jones. You say you left Sir Thomas's Service in July 1678?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, the first Day of July.
 L. C. J. How? Did you leave him in good Friendship?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord, in very good Friendship.
 Mr. Just. Jones. Were you in good Correspondence?
 Mr. Bolron. I always went to his House to hear Mass, and oftentimes was there.
 L. C. J. How came you to leave his Service?
 Mr. Bolron. It was my own Fault I left it.
 L. C. J. Why, it might be no Fault neither. But why did you leave it?
 Mr. Bolron. My Lord, it was because there was one Henry Addison and Bennet Johnson did seek to take my Work and Service out of my Hands. Sir Thomas Gascoigne did desire me to let them come in and see what they could do, and that I should have my Salary, and that I should gather in his Debts; I was willing to be rid of it, and told him, they that look'd after the Pit should gather in the Debts, for I conceived else it would be but a double Charge to him.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. This is only how he left Sir Thomas his Service; Sir Thomas thought the other Men could do it better than he, and so, said he, then let them do your whole Work.
 Mr. Just. Jones. But he says he did usually resort to the House after he had left his Service, to hear Mass.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. They will ask him some Questions, it may be.
 L. C. J. Had you any Estate of your own when you left Sir Thomas's Service?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, I had a Farm I rented of Sir Thomas Gascoigne.
 L. C. J. What Rent?
 Mr. Bolron. Fifteen Pound and a Mark a Year, after I was married.
 L. C. J. When were you married?
 Mr. Bolron. In July (75.), but afterwards I was there, and did still Service.
 Mr. Att. Gen. I think you have some Estate of your own besides that?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, I have 7l. a Year.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Well, will you for Sir Thomas ask him any Questions?
 Mr. Babbington. No.
 L. C. J. Mr. Bolron, Pray what did the Justice say to you when you made this Oath?
 Mr. Bolron. My Lord, thus: I was resolv'd to come to London, and make my Confession here, and desired I might so do; whereupon one of the Justices was unwilling, but at last they said I might do what I would.
 L. C. J. You say, Justice Tindal it was sworn before, what did he say when you made the Oath?
 Mr. Bolron. My Lord, as I remember, he said, he must give the Council an Account of it, and perhaps he should not have an Answer of it in a Month after; so I thought it was better to come to London, and make a speedy Dispatch of the Business; for I did not know but the Priests in the mean time might escape.
 L. C. J. But did Mr. Tindal do nothing upon that Oath that was made?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, he did make out his Warrant for the apprehending of one.
 L. C. J. Did he not make out a Warrant for the apprehending of Sir Thomas Gascoigne?
 Mr. Bolron. My Lord, I think they would have done it, but I desired I might come to the Council.
 Mr. Just. Pemberton. How long after came you there?
 Mr. Bolron. As soon as I could get ready.
 L. C. J. What time came you thither?
 Mr. Bolron. My Lord, I set out upon Monday, and came hither to London upon Wednesday.
 L. C. J. Do you know what Month it was in?
 Mr. Bolron. In June it was, I think.
 L. C. J. And who did you come and apply yourself to in London, when you came there?
 Mr. Bolron. My Lord, I had a Letter directed from Mr. Justice Tindal to his Brother Tindal in London, to carry me to the Council. I chanced to lose this Letter at Ware, and losing it there, I came to the Green Dragon in Bishopsgate-Street, I was acquainted with the Man of the House, and having told him some of my Business, he carry'd me before Sir Robert Clayton, and then we went to my Lord of Shaftsbury, President of the Council, and presently got an Order of the Council about me.
 L. C. J. How long was this after Dr. Oates's Discovery? When did Oates and Bedloe make their Discovery?
 Mr. Just. Pemberton. This was a long time after, in May last.
 Mr. Just. Jones. Did Mr. Tindal take your Examination in Writing?
 Mr. Bolron. He took a short Thing in Writing.
 Mr. Just. Jones. Did you set your Hand to it?
 Mr. Just. Pemberton. He resolv'd to go to the Council, and tell them.
 Mr. Bolron. I was not willing to tell the Justices all, for I had a mind to go to the Council.
 Mr. Just. Jones. But you told them the great Matter of all, Sir Thomas's Proffer to give you 1000l. to kill the King?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes.
 Mr. Just. Jones. Had you a Lease of your Farm under Sir Thomas Gascoigne?
 Mr. Bolron. It was but a Lease paroll.
 Mr. Just. Jones. For how long?
 Mr. Bolron. For Nine Years.
 Mr. Babbington. May I have leave to ask him any Questions?
 Court. Yes, yes, you may.

Mr. Babbington. You say you had a Lease of the Farm, a Lease paroll?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, I had so.
 Mr. Serj. Maynard. Council must not be allowed in matter of Fact, my Lord.
 L. C. J. But, Brother, this Man hath made a long Narrative.
 Mr. Serj. Maynard. Ay, and a shrewd one too.
 L. C. J. His Evidence is very great, and Sir Thomas Gascoigne does not hear any one Word.
 Mr. Bolron. One thing more I would speak to. It was in September 1678, a little before the Discovery of the Plot, I did hear Sir Thomas Gascoigne say, and tell my Lady Tempest, that he would send 150l. to Dolebank, in hopes the Blow would be given shortly.
 Mr. Serj. Maynard. That is the same Word used by all the Witnesses.
 L. C. J. When was this?
 Mr. Bolron. In September 78; the Plot was not known by us to be discovered then, as I know of.
 L. C. J. Who did he speak it to?
 Mr. Bolron. To his Daughter, the Lady Tempest.
 L. C. J. What said she?
 Mr. Bolron. She seem'd to like it very well; I did not hear any Thing to the contrary: And I heard a Letter read afterwards from Cornwallis, that he had received it; but it was too little for the carrying on so great a Design.
 L. C. J. Who is Cornwallis?
 Mr. Bolron. And it was for the arming the poor Catholicks when the Blow should be given.
 L. C. J. Is his Daughter living?
 Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, she is out under Bail.
 Mr. Recorder. My Lord, I shall desire to ask but one Question, which concerns the Prisoner at the Bar: How long after the Discourse that you had with the Priest in the Gallery was it that Sir T. Gascoigne spoke to you of the same Thing?
 Mr. Just. Pemberton. Mr. Recorder, if you ask him but one Question, let it not be that which he hath answered before; he says the same Day.
 Mr. Hobart. I desire to ask him one Question.
 Mr. Just. Pemberton. No; tell Sir Thomas first what he hath said, and see if he will ask him any Questions.
 Mr. Hobart. Sir Thomas, here is Mr. Bolron hath given Evidence against you, will you ask him any Questions?
 Mr. Just. Pemberton. Read your Minutes to him.
 Then Mr. Hobart repeated the first Part, about his coming to Sir T. Gascoigne's Service, and the Colliery Conveyance.
 Mr. Just. Jones. Ask him if he will ask any Questions upon this Part.
 [Which he did.]
 Sir T. Gascoigne. No, 'tis no great matter at all, for it is true; when 'twas I can't tell, there was something I did seal to Sir William Ingleby, and some Money I had of him.
 Then Mr. Hobart repeated his Saying to Metcalfe, he would send 3000 l. to the Priests in 76.
 Sir T. Gascoigne. How comes that? I deny that utterly.
 Mr. Bolron. 'Tis all true that I have said, by the Oath that I have taken.
 Sir T. Gascoigne. There is no such Thing at all.
 Mr. Hobart. He says it was return'd by Mr. Phiswick.
 Sir T. Gascoigne. Phiswick was a Servant to me, and return'd some Money for me sometimes, but it was all for my Children, my Sons and my Daughters, and my Kinspeople, to whom I paid Annuities; but it was a far greater Sum of the whole than 3000l. and for one great Sum of 1000l. you know how it was dispos'd of.
 Mr. Hobart. He says, that in the beginning of 77, you said you had return'd this 3000l. to London, and if you had a thousand times as much, you would give it for so good Cause.
 Sir T. Gascoigne. I never said any such thing, never thought of any such thing in my Life.
 L. C. J. Now tell him of the Meeting at Barmbow.
 Mr. Hobart. He says, in the Year 77 there were several Gentlemen met at your House at Barmbow.
 L. C. J. Name them. [Which he did.]
 Mr. Hobart. These were all together with you.
 Sir T. Gascoigne. No such Matter at all.
 Mr. Hobart. And he said all these Persons did discourse with you about establishing a Nunnery at Dolebank, and another at Heworth, and another at Broughton.
 Sir T. Gascoigne. Not one Word of all this is true.
 L. C. J. Tell him what he said concerning killing the King.
 Mr. Hobart. He says that the Nunnery was established at Dolebank, and such and such were Nuns.
 Sir T. Gascoigne. He may say what he will, but not one Word of all this is true.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. But you skip over the main Thing, what the Gentlemen resolv'd upon at that Meeting.
 Mr. Hobart. He says, these Gentlemen did resolve the Business should go on for the killing of the King, and that they would venture their Lives and Estates for it.
 Sir T. Gascoigne. I never heard of any such thing as killing the King. Sir, did I ever say any such thing?
 Mr. Bolron. It was in your own Dining-Room, and in your own Chamber.
 Mr. Just. Pemberton. He did not say so, I think, about their Meeting.
 L. C. J. Yes, he says they all met at his House, and there they had Discourse of killing the King. In what Room was it?
 Mr. Bolron. In the old Dining-Room.
 Sir T. Gascoigne. I deny it utterly; there was no such thing: Some Persons might be at several Times at my House, but no such Meeting, nor Words at all at one time or other.
 Then Mr. Hobart told him of Mr. Gascoigne's and Mr. Middleton's Licenses to go to London, and Intention to go to France.
 Sir T. Gascoigne. 'Tis very true, my Son did go to London for that End.
 Mr. Hobart. And so Mr. Middleton, upon pretence of receiving Rent.
 Sir T. Gascoigne. I cannot tell about Mr. Middleton.
 Mr. Hobart. He says, your Son would immediately fly into France, and commit the Design into other Hands; and you said you approv'd of it: And this he heard you discourse very plainly.

Sir T. Gasf. But I plainly deny it all.

Mr. Hobart. He says you bid him go up (the 30th of May) to the Gallery to Mr. Rushton.

L. C. J. No, not to him, but when he was in the Gallery, Rushton came to him.

Then Mr. Hobart repeated the Discourse with Rushton about the Oath of Allegiance.

L. C. J. You need not tell him what Rushton said.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Yes, my Lord, it is convenient.

Mr. Bolron. For I told him our Discourse about the Oath of Allegiance myself.

Then Hobart repeated Sir Thomas's further Discourse and Proffer to him.

Sir T. Gasf. There is nothing of all this true: He might come there and talk with any Body, for what I know, but I was not with him.

L. C. J. But ask him what he says to this, that he proffered him 1000l. to kill the King. [Which he did.]

Sir T. Gasf. Where should you be paid it?

Mr. Bolron. I would not undertake the Design.

Sir T. Gasf. Did you ever know I was Master of 2000l. together in my Life?

Mr. Bolron. Yes.

L. C. J. Tell him, he says he would not undertake it, and therefore it was in vain to appoint where.

Sir T. Gasf. I utterly deny it all, upon my Life; that's e'en just like the rest, I never heard it before.

L. C. J. He puts it to you, Whether ever you saw him have 2000l. together?

Mr. Bolron. I have seen 5000l. at a time in the House, and I have seen in Phiswick's Hand 7000l. [Which was repeated to him.]

Sir T. Gasf. What Phiswick might have of other Men's Monies I do not know, he never had so much Money of mine.

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, Sir T. Gascoigne, I believe, had at that time at least 12000l. a Year of his own Estate. [Which was repeated to him.]

Sir T. Gasf. I wish he would make it good.

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, 'tis true enough: I believe he hath settled some Estate upon his Son, about 6000l. a Year.

L. C. J. I can't tell what becomes of the Papists Estates, nor how the Priests drain them, but there are Men of very great Estates among them, but they are greatly in Debt.

Mr. Hobart. Will you ask Mr. Bolron any Questions?

Mr. Just. Jones. You have not repeated to him one Part of the Evidence; that in September, 78, he said to my Lady Tempest, he would send 1500l. to Dolben, in Hopes the Blow would be given shortly. [Which was then repeated to him.]

Sir T. Gasf. I know no such thing at all; there is not one Word of all this true.

Mr. Hobart. Will you ask him any Questions, or no?

Sir T. Gasf. I know not what Questions to ask, but where the Money should be paid?

L. C. J. That can be no Question, for the thing was never undertaken.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then pray, Mr. Mowbray, tell your Knowledge.

Mr. Mowbray. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I came to Sir Thomas Gascoigne's in the Beginning of the Year 1674.

L. C. J. Were you his Servant?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, my Lord, but never an hired Servant.

L. C. J. In what Quality did you serve him?

Mr. Mowbray. In his Chamber, my Lord, and continued with Sir Thomas until 76, in which time I did observe Mr. Thomas Addison, a Priest, Fincham, a Priest, Stapleton, a Priest, Killingbeck, a Priest, and Thwing, the elder and the younger, several times to visit and confer with Mr. William Rushton, Sir T. Gascoigne's Confessor.

L. C. J. Were you a Papist then?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. Are you one now?

Mr. Mowbray. No.

L. C. J. Well, go on then.

Mr. Mowbray. I being very diligent in attending Mr. Rushton at the Altar, I became in great Favour with him, and was permitted to be in the Chamber when the Priests were in private with him, and I heard them often talk and discourse of a Design laid for setting the Popish Religion uppermost in England, and how like the same was to take Effect in a short time.

L. C. J. Who did speak it?

Mr. Mowbray. The Priests in private with Mr. Rushton: I speak now, my Lord, of the Plot in general; I come to Sir T. Gascoigne anon.

L. C. J. When? In what Year was this Discourse?

Mr. Mowbray. In 1676.

L. C. J. Well, what said they?

Mr. Mowbray. Why, they discoursed concerning the setting up the Popish Religion in England, and how like the same was to take Effect, and succeed, in regard that most of the considerable Papists in England had engaged to act for it; and if it could not be done by fair Means, Force must be used; and particularly declared, that London and York were to be fired.

L. C. J. In 76?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes.

L. C. J. What? Would they fire it again?

Mr. Mowbray. And I heard them often say, that the King in Exile had promised them—

L. C. J. Did they say the City was to be fired a second time?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, to further their Intentions.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. It was effected in Southwark.

Mr. Mowbray. And they did also declare, That the King, when he was in his Exile, had promised the Jesuits beyond Sea to establish their Religion whenever he was restored; which they now despaired of, and therefore he was adjudged an Heretick, and was to be killed.

L. C. J. Who did say this?

Mr. Mowbray. The Priests.

L. C. J. Who was the Heretick?

Mr. Mowbray. The King. Also I did hear Mr. William Rushton tell Addison and the rest of the Priests—

L. C. J. Do you know which of the Priests said the King was to be killed?

Mr. Mowbray. It was Rushton: Rushton and Addison were together; and he did declare to Mr. Addison, that according to Agreement, he had given the Oath of Secrecy and the Sacrament to Sir T. Gascoigne, Esq; Gascoigne his Son, my Lady Tempest his Daughter, Mr. Stephen Tempest, and had communicated the whole Design to them.

L. C. J. Were you by when he said this?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, in his Chamber.

L. C. J. How long after the Discourse of the Priests was this?

Mr. Mowbray. My Lord, he told them he had done it according to Agreement before; and they did approve of it, and had severally engaged to be active, faithful and secret, and would do to the utmost of their Powers, as far as their Estates would permit, to establish the Roman Catholick Religion in England: And about Michaelmas, 1676, there was another Meeting of these Priests, and others, where they declared, That the King was an Heretick, and that the Pope had excommunicated him, and all other Hereticks in England, Scotland and Ireland, and that Force was to be made use of.

Mr. Just. Dolben. When was that, Sir?

Mr. Mowbray. About Michaelmas, 1676.

Mr. Just. Jones. You were his Servant then?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, my Lord: And then did Rushton produce a List of Names of about 4 or 500, and he read them over, all of whom, he said, were engaged in the Design; and he did read the Names of Sir T. Gascoigne, T. Gascoigne, Esq; my Lady Tempest, Mr. Vavasor, Sir Francis Hungatt, Sir J. Savile, the two Townleys, Mr. Sherborne, and others.

L. C. J. Did you see this List?

Mr. Mowbray. I saw several Subscriptions to it, and amongst the rest I saw Sir T. Gascoigne's own Hand.

L. C. J. Do you know it?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, very well.

L. C. J. And upon the Oath you have taken, do you believe that was his Hand to the List?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, my Lord, I do believe it was his Hand.

L. C. J. Did you know any other Hands? Do not you know his Son's Hand?

Mr. Mowbray. No, nor any but Sir Tho. Gascoigne's.

L. C. J. It was in several Hands, was it not?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, it seemed to me to be so.

L. C. J. What did they subscribe to do?

Mr. Just. Pemberton. 'Tis was in 77?

Mr. Mowbray. No, it was about Michaelmas, 1676.

L. C. J. What was it for?

Mr. Mowbray. The Title of it was, as I remember, A List of them that are engaged in the Design of killing the King, and promoting the Catholick Religion.

L. C. J. Was that writ on the Top?

Mr. Just. Pemberton. They were Words, I suppose, to that Effect.

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, it was to that Effect, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was it mentioned in the List for killing the King?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes: And then they declared also, that the Pope had given Commission to put on the Design, and prosecute it as quick as they could; and that he had given a plenary Indulgence of 10,000 Years for all those that should act, either in Person or Estate, for killing the King, and setting up the Romish Religion in England, besides a Pardon and other Gratifications. And so much as to the Plot in general. Now, my Lord, I come to the Particulars as to the Prisoner at the Bar, Sir T. Gascoigne. About Michaelmas, 1676, much about that time, there was Sir Tho. Gascoigne and his Son, my Lady Tempest, and Rushton the Priest together; where I heard them hold several Discourses of this Design about killing the King, and firing the Cities of London and York; and Sir T. Gascoigne did declare and assure Mr. Rushton, that he would not swerve from what he had said, but would keep to the Oath of Secrecy he had given him, and that he would do to the uttermost of his Power for the killing of the King, and the establishment of Popery.

L. C. J. Were you in the Room?

Mr. Mowbray. I stood close at the Door, where I heard very well, the Door was not quite shut.

L. C. J. They did not know you were there?

Mr. Mowbray. No.

L. C. J. They would not trust you with it, then?

Mr. Mowbray. They did not know I was there. And they did unanimously conclude, That it was a meritorious Undertaking, and for the good of the Church, and they would all venture their Lives and Estates in it.

L. C. J. Rushton was there, was he not?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, Rushton was there; and Dr. Stapleton, a Priest, coming from another Door, and finding me at the Door, went in and desired them to speak lower, for there was one at the Door: Whereupon my Lady Tempest call'd me in, and order'd me to go below and entertain some Strangers: So much for the Particulars concerning Sir T. Gascoigne.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Was Sir Miles Stapleton there at that time?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, he was there.

L. C. J. Where?

Mr. Mowbray. In an upper Room.

L. C. J. Who were by?

Mr. Mowbray. Mr. Gascoigne, and the Priest, and my Lady Tempest.

L. C. J. This is all you say?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, so far as to the Particulars of this Matter.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Have you any more to say?

Mr. Mowbray. No, no more but these Particulars, unless some Questions be ask'd.

Then Hobart began to repeat this Evidence to Sir T. Gascoigne, how he came to be his Servant.

Sir T. Gasf. He came as a Boy to me, without hiring.

Then Mr. Hobart repeated the Priest's Discourse at Rushton's.

Sir T. Gasf. I deny it all.

L. C. J. He was not present, this was a Discourse among themselves.

Then Hobart told him about the Oath of Secrecy and the Sacrament.

Sir T. Gasf. No, there is no such thing, there is not a Word of it true.

L. C. J. Then tell him of the List. [Which was done.]

Sir T. Gasc. 'Tis a most impudent Lie.
 Mr. Hobart. What say you to your Hand being to that List?
 Sir T. Gasc. Not one Word of it.
 Mr. Hobart. But he says 'twas your Name to it.
 Sir T. Gasc. He had a pair of Spectacles on, sure, that could see any thing: Was it a printed List, or a Written one?
 Mr. Mowbray. It was written, your Name was put to it, with your own Hand-writing. [Which was told him.]
 Sir T. Gasc. He makes what he will.
 Then Mr. Hobart repeated Rushton's declaring that he had given him the Sacrament of Secrecy.
 Sir T. Gasc. I'll warrant you he hath gotten this Oath of Secrecy out of the News-Books; for I never heard of it before: Let me ask thee: Didst thou ever hear of it before you came to London?
 Mr. Mowbray. Yes, Sir Thomas, I did.
 Mr. Hobart. But will you ask him any Question?
 Sir T. Gasc. No; it is all false he speaks, not a Word of Truth comes out of his Mouth.
 Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, We will now go on to another piece of our Evidence.
 Sir T. Gasc. I must leave it to the Jury to take notice of their Conversations and mine.
 Mr. Serj. Maynard. Whereas he says he was never Owner of 200*l.* together, we will produce his own Almanack under his own Hand.
 L. C. J. Do it, and we will shew it him, and see what he says to it.
 Sir T. Gasc. Why did not he discover it before?
 Mr. Hobart. If your Lordship please, Sir Thomas desires he may be ask'd, Why he did not discover it before?
 Mr. Mowbray. Because the Papists did threaten me at such a Rate, and I being a single Person against them, durst not.
 L. C. J. When did you first discover it?
 Mr. Mowbray. It was about Michaelmas last: The Papists did threaten me, that if I did discover it, they would take my Life away.
 L. C. J. When did you turn Protestant?
 Mr. Mowbray. When the Plot broke out, then I took the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy.
 L. C. J. Why did not you discover it as soon as you turn'd Protestant?
 Mr. Mowbray. My Lord, I was not in a Condition to make any Friends, or come up to London upon such an Account: Besides, my Lord, they did threaten me, and particularly after the Plot was come out, Addison did threaten me.
 L. C. J. But this was a great while before the Plot broke out.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. So long he continued a Papist, and then he would not discover.
 Mr. Mowbray. This Addison was often with me, and he flatter'd me, and made me continue a Papist, lest I should discover it.
 L. C. J. Where is he now?
 Mr. Mowbray. He is fled.
 L. C. J. What said Addison when you did turn Protestant?
 Mr. Mowbray. He said if I did discover he would take away my Life.
 L. C. J. I wonder they did not give you the Oath of Secrecy.
 Mr. Mowbray. Yes, my Lord, I did receive it from Rushton's own Hand.
 L. C. J. When?
 Mr. Mowbray. In '76.
 L. C. J. Who received it with you?
 Mr. Mowbray. It was given to me after the Communicants were gone from the Chapel.
 L. C. J. What was the Oath?
 Mr. Mowbray. He reserved the Sacrament for me, and swore me by it, that I should be faithful and secret, and should not reveal any Discourse I was privy to.
 L. C. J. Reveal no Discourse? What Discourse did they mean?
 Mr. Mowbray. Those Discourses when the Priests were in private with him.
 Then Sir T. Gascoigne's Almanack was produced.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Who proves Sir Thomas's Hand? Is this Sir T. Gascoigne's Hand?
 Bolron and Mowbray. Yes, it is his Hand.
 L. C. J. Shew it him himself. [Which was done.]
 Mr. Hobart. Is that your Hand?
 Sir T. Gasc. Yes, I think I saw it at the Council Table; this is my Writing, and I will justify every Word that is written there.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Read that one Place.
 Clerk. The 15th to Peter for 100*l.* to Corker.
 Mr. Att. Gen. If your Lordship please, I desire he may be asked what that 100*l.* was for.
 Mr. Hobart. Look you here, Sir, did you order 100*l.* to be paid to Corker?
 Sir T. Gasc. It may be I did.
 Mr. Hobart. What was it for?
 Sir T. Gasc. For the Portion of a Child I had.
 Mr. Hobart. What Child was that?
 Sir T. Gasc. I know not who it was, Mary Appleby, I think.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Pray ask him how it came to Corker's Hands? Why it was returned to Corker?
 Sir T. Gasc. I know not that, because we did not know where she liv'd, she was beyond Sea.
 Mr. Hobart. Where is she?
 Sir T. Gasc. She is at Paris.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Here is another Book of his that does make mention of 900*l.* to Mr. Corker, upon an Agreement between them.
 L. C. J. Ask him how much money he might return to Corker from time to time. [Which was done.]
 Sir T. Gasc. My Lord, I don't know, we have been several Years returning of money.
 L. C. J. Hath he returned 8 or 900*l.* in all?
 Sir T. Gasc. No, I don't think so much.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Pray ask him how much was Mrs. Appleby's Portion?
 Sir T. Gasc. Indeed I can't certainly say; but as the Rents came in I was to pay several Sums to several Persons; it was 100*l.* a Year to that Mary Appleby, it may be 2000*l.* in all from first to last, but I shall satisfy you about that.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Will you satisfy us anon why 900*l.* was paid in one Year?

Then the Book was shewn to Sir Thomas, who owned it to be his Hand.
 L. C. J. Read it.
 Clerk. Q. Of Mr. Corker, what Bills, for how much, and to whom directed, he hath received of me since the 21st of July, 1677, to June 1678, vid. the Book, p. 45. and the great Book, fol. 54. where you may find P. for 900*l.* and agree in this Account, Corker, the 7th of August, 1678.
 Mr. Att. Gen. First he makes a Query, how much he returned, and then, says he, the 7th of August I and Corker agreed.
 L. C. J. Let him read it himself. [Which he did.]
 Mr. Hobart. What say you to that, that you sent so much Money to Corker?
 Mr. Just. Pemberton. You must understand he is one of the Priests, and Bolron swears, that he intended to send 2000*l.* and by 300*l.* apiece, he reckons up 900*l.*
 Sir T. Gasc. It was a great many Years, and several times.
 L. C. J. Tell him it was between July '77, and June '78.
 Sir T. Gasc. That does not appear.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, it does, by the Book.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. Then how came you to return 900*l.* in one Year to Corker?
 Mr. Serj. Maynard. And never had 200*l.* he says, together.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Then here is another Passage in this Book, if it please your Lordship to have it read.
 Clerk. Take Heworth of an easy Rent of the Widow—and purchase the Reversion of Craddock—and in the Interim Dawson.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. Ask him what he did mean by taking of Heworth?
 Sir T. Gasc. I took no House there.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. But did he agree to buy the Reversion of it?
 Sir T. Gascoigne. It was for my Niece Thwing. She was born in the House, and was very desirous to be in the House.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. Ay: But why did he take the Lease of the Widow, during her Jointure, and why buy the Reversion?
 Sir Thomas Gascoigne. I know no Reason but my Affection to her.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Ask him who he did intend should live in the House?
 Sir Thomas Gascoigne. Nay, I don't know what they intended, my Niece Thwing.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. Did you intend to buy it for your self?
 Sir Tho. Gascoigne. No, I lent her the Money.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. Did you intend it for her?
 Sir Tho. Gascoigne. I might do with it what I would.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Ask him if his Niece Thwing was a single Woman, and was to have the whole House to her self?
 Sir Tho. Gascoigne. She had her Brother with her.
 Mr. Hobart. He says Mrs. Ellen Thwing was a Nun, Mrs. Lassels was to be Lady Abbess, Mrs. Beckwith was her Assistant, and Mrs. Cornwallis and others were Nuns.
 L. C. J. Ask him if Mrs. Lassels was not to be Lady Abbess, and live there?
 Sir Tho. Gascoigne. I know nothing of it.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Ask him if there was not one Mrs. Benningfield to be there?
 Sir Tho. Gascoigne. No.
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, she was to be there.
 Mr. Just. Jones. Why, do you know any thing of her?
 Mr. Att. Gen. She is in York Goal.
 Mr. Bolron. No, she is gone from thence. My Lord, Ellen Thwing was a Nun, and was sent for from beyond Sea to instruct all them that should be made Nuns; and this Father Cornwallis was Father Confessor to the Nuns. He is now in York Goal, taken with two Women.
 Mr. Just. Jones. Ask him what he meant by that Writing in the Almanack?
 Sir Tho. Gascoigne. I did write things here for a Memorandum to help and assist my Niece, and the poor Children of my Brother; and so the Widow that was Sir Walter Vavasor's Sister, was to sell the House, and one Craddock meant to sell all the Lordship, and the Children were desirous to keep the House, and so they bought the House and one Clofe, and all the rest was sold; so I writ it only that they should have the Assistance of Sir Walter Vavasor to have the House.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. Pray ask him what he means by the Words, in the interim Dawson.
 Sir Tho. Gascoigne. Nay, what do I know?
 L. C. J. Ask if Mrs. Thwing were not a Nun?
 Sir Tho. Gascoigne. They did desire, if they could not get that House, that they might have another House.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. And all this for Mrs. Thwing? Ask him if she was not beyond Sea, and kept in a Nunnery.
 Sir Tho. Gascoigne. Nay, I can't tell what she was.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Here is another Note in this Almanack, pray read it. It was first shewn to Sir Thomas Gascoigne, who owned it to be his Hand.
 Clerk. Mr. Harcourt, next House to the Arch within Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, Mr. Parr's.
 L. C. J. No question but he was acquainted with all the Priests about the Town, and had Directions to write to them.
 Mr. Just. Pemberton. He hath been Priest-ridden by them, that is plain.
 Mr. Recorder. Ask him what he means by the last Mark there set under London?
 Sir Tho. Gascoigne. I can't tell what it is, 'tis a Query.
 Mr. Att. Gen. In the Almanack there is a Memorandum to acquaint Mr. Thwing with the whole Design; what it was I can't tell.
 L. C. J. Ay, pray let's see that.
 Mr. Att. Gen. This Thwing is a Priest in Newgate at this time.
 Clerk. The 15th of April 1676. Memorand. Acquaint Mr. Thomas Thwing with the whole Design.
 L. C. J. Now shew him that.
 Sir Tho. Gascoigne. Look you, what is it you would have?
 Mr. Hobart. What Design was that?
 Sir Tho. Gascoigne. It was my providing Monies for him and his Sister, that they should tell how to purchase the House.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What, a Priest and a Nun?
 Mr. Just. Dolben. They had vow'd contrary to that.
 Mr. Just. Pemberton. Ask him whether Thwing be not a Priest?
 Mr. Hobart. Is not this Thwing a Priest? Thomas Thwing?
 Sir Tho. Gascoigne. No, it was Ferdinando Thwing, that is now dead.
 Mr. Att. Gen. No, but this is Thomas Thwing: Is he a Priest?

Sir Tho. Gascoigne. I do not know. What have I to do?

L. C. J. Then consider how likely it was; he was to purchase an House for a Priest and a Nun, for some such Business as is sworn.

Mr. Hobart. He says no, my Lord.

L. C. J. What is the Meaning of it, then, that he should name the whole Design?

Mr. Hobart. He says, it was the Brothers and Sisters that lived next Door to him.

L. C. J. Ay, but 'tis said, Acquaint Thomas Thwing with the whole Design.

Mr. Hobart. He might acquaint Thomas Thwing with such his Intention.

Mr. Att. Gen. We will now shew your Lordship a Letter, taken among the Papers of Sir Thomas Gascoigne, wherein is this Proviso, talking of the Settlement, In the formal Settlement, let this Proviso be added, If England were converted, then to be disposed so and so.

L. C. J. Mr. Bolron, How came you by that Paper?

Mr. Bolron. I took this Paper in Sir Thomas Gascoigne's Chamber, with several others: I remember some had his Hand to them, others had not, and some were signed Pracid, and some Cornwallis.

L. C. J. Is there any Mark of his Hand to that Paper?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, there is a Mark in this of Sir Thomas's own Hand, the Word (Yes) in the Margin.

Clerk.

Dolebank, June the 9th, 78.

Most honoured Sir,

AFTER most grateful Acknowledgment of all your charitable Favours, as to my own particular; I am also herewith to present most humble and heartiest Thanks on behalf of your Niece, and Mrs. Hastings here, who both would esteem it a great Happiness to see you here, as also my Lady, your honoured Daughter, to whom we beseech our humble Respects may be presented. I have sent the Paper safely to good Mrs. Beddingfield, from whom shortly you will have religious Acknowledgments. I told her that I supposed you would judge fitting to insert into the formal Writing the Proviso, viz. That if England be converted, then the whole 90l. per Annum is to be apply'd here in Yorkshire, about or at Heworth, &c. The which, doubtless, will be as acceptable unto her, and as much to God's Glory as possibly can be imagined. Now, dearest Sir, let me not be too much troublesome, save only to wish you from his Divine Majesty, for whose everlasting Glories greater Praise and Honour you do this most pious Action, the happy Enjoyment of that Glory everlasting. I would lastly advise you in God's holy Name, to compleat the Business by drawing the formal Writing as soon as possible; and without making any material Alteration from what you have already signed, save only the Proviso above written. I should be glad to know concerning the Receipt hereof; and when Sir Miles and your Son are likely to attend you to finish the Business: As also when Mr. Pierpoint shall be arrived. These good Religious are very desirous with your Approbation (and Mrs. Bed. at my coming from her wished the same) to try for a Removal to Mr. Dawson's; the Impediments here being essential, as the House incapable to receive more Scholars, with many other Inconveniencies also. Time permits no more, only we again express our earnest Desires to see your Honour here with my Lady, as the greatest Satisfaction we can desire: I remember you hinted to Mrs. Bedding. not long since, that perhaps you might see her at Hammer Smith; and how much easier you may come hither, we earnestly beseech you to take into Consideration to the Purpose.

Most Honoured Sir,

Your Honour's most obliged faithful Servant,

J. O. P R A C I D.

L. C. J. I think it is pretty plain there was a Design of erecting a Nunnery.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. If England is converted, then the whole 90l. a Year to be employed in Yorkshire about a rotten House, which would be much for God's Glory.

L. C. J. What other Evidence have you?

Mr. Recorder. If your Lordship please, we have another Letter dated from York Castle, and the backside of the Letter is indorsed by Sir Tho. Gascoigne's own Hand, the Time when he received it.

L. C. J. When was it?

Mr. Recorder. The last May, he dates it from York Castle, where he was in Prison, and therein gives Sir Thomas an Account of the Opinion of the Doctors of Sorbonne about the taking the Oath of Allegiance.

L. C. J. No doubt all of them do not approve of it.

Mr. Just. Dolben. As I believe this same Pracid was the Occasion of so many Gentlemen refusing the Oath of Allegiance; I convicted above forty of them in that Country for not taking of it.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Nosctur ex comite. You see if this be the Effect of it, what Reason we have to rid ourselves of these Priests: One that dares write such a Letter; and 'tis found in Sir Thomas's Study.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. And Sir Thomas's own Hand on the Back of it.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, under Favour, I do take it, that the debauching of Men in point of Conscience, that they may not take the Oath of Allegiance, is to set them loose from the Government, and loose from the King, and make them ready to arm when they have Opportunity.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. No doubt of it, Brother.

L. C. J. All the Jesuits say they may not take it, but some of the Sorbonnists say they may.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. But now you see they are against it.

L. C. J. Some will, and some will not allow it.

Mr. Just. Jones. They take or leave Oaths, as it is convenient for them. Then the Letter being shewn to Mr. Mowbray, and the Indorsement acknowledged to be Sir Thomas's Hand, was read.

Clerk.

York Castle, May the 24th.

Honoured and ever dearest Sir,

LONGER Time having pass'd since your last writing, it is fit to inform you how God's holy Providence disposes concerning us. All the Out-prisoners being call'd into the Castle, (as you may have heard) Mrs. Hastings's Room was needed, and so she went into Castle-gate to reside at the former Lodging of one Mrs. Wait, (who is now in the Goal) where she remains with Mrs. Wait's two Children, and their Maid-Servant, teaching the Children as formerly; also the Moor's Niece goes daily thither; and Mrs. Hastings lives without Charge as to Diet and Lodging, as I formerly told you; she spends all her Time well, God be praised, and comes every Morning about Seven o'Clock to serve God at the Castle: But I and two others are much abridg'd of that Happiness by her Room being left by her here. My Liberty of going abroad is restrain'd with the rest, none being as yet permitted the least since these last were forced to come in. Madam was here the other Day, and seem'd somewhat timorous about Mrs. Hastings's teaching: But most in the Castle persuaded her that it was most commendable and most secure, and so she rests satisfied: Mrs. Cornwallis is recovered of her Ague, God be blessed: She desires her dutiful Respects may be always presented unto you, and intends herself to write to you. Mrs. Wood and her Companion are well, but dare not as yet walk in their own Garden. All our now Prisoners are chearful, and each of us comforted, in hopes that God will make all Catholicks of * Mr. Record. That one Mind: For I have a Letter from our * Spr. at is Superior.

London (who was the same Day taken and carried to Prison), wherein he declares, alledging Authority, That the pretended Oath of Allegiance cannot be taken as it is worded; adding, that three Briefs have formerly been sent from the Pope expressly prohibiting it; and in the third it is declared damnable to take it. And yesterday we had a Letter communicated amongst us, sent by Mr. Middleton (now at Paris) to his Friends here, containing the Attestation of all the Sorbonne Doctors against it; adding, that whosoever here in England give Leave, they deceive People, and are contrary to the whole Catholick Church. There was also a Meeting some Years ago of all the Superiors both Secular and Regular, wherein it was unanimously declared, that it could not be taken. Mr. Hutchinson (alias Berry) who has lately printed a Pamphlet in Defence of the Oaths, has the other Day declared himself Protestant at St. Margaret's, Westminster. And so I rest,

Honoured Sir,

Your ever obliged,

J. P.

Mr. Recorder. That is all, the other is private.

Mr. Att. Gen. If your Lordship please, we shall now prove by some Witnesses, that he hath returned great Sums of Money, because he said, he never had 200l. together; and for this we call Mr. Phiswick. (Who was sworn.) Come, Sir, were you a Servant to Sir Tho. Gascoigne?

Mr. Phiswick. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. For how long Time?

Mr. Phiswick. For six Years and upwards.

Mr. Att. Gen. In that six Years time, what Sums of Money did you return to London?

Mr. Phiswick. 'Tis abstracted in a Note.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you return all the Sums in that Note?

Mr. Phiswick. I refer myself to my Almanack.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you set down this Account?

Mr. Phiswick. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then thus, Sir, pray what comes it to?

Mr. Phiswick. Those Sums do come to 6128l.

L. C. J. Whose Money was that?

Mr. Phiswick. Part of it was Sir Thomas's; part his Son's, and part my Lady Tempest's.

L. C. J. Can you tell how much in any one Year you return'd upon the Account of Sir Thomas?

Mr. Phiswick. Not unless I had my Almanack.

L. C. J. It will be endless to look over the Particulars.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Can you make any Estimate in six Years how much you return'd for Sir Thomas himself?

Mr. Phiswick. No, not without my Almanack, because I returned Money for them all.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lady Tempest and Mr. Gascoigne, it hath been proved, were in all the Discourses.

L. C. J. But that hath not any Influence upon Sir Thomas.

Mr. Phiswick. The Esquire liv'd much in London.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What Estate had he to live upon?

Mr. Phiswick. Betwixt 4 and 500l. a Year.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. What Estate had Sir Thomas besides?

Mr. Mowbray. My Lord, I believe it was 1600l. a-year, besides what Mr. Gascoigne had.

Mr. Just. Dolben. And what had my Lady Tempest?

Mr. Phiswick. Three hundred Pound a-Year.

Mr. Just. Dolben. But she liv'd in Yorkshire.

Mr. Phiswick. Yes.

Mr. Just. Dolben. So she needed little Returns to London.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. But admit they had return'd all, there was 300l. a year to be return'd for Sir Thomas.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, here is Mr. Mawson, I think 2500l. was received by him.

Mr. Phiswick. I paid in the Country, at Leeds, Money, that he paid here in Town.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is the 25l. paid to Harcourt, I would ask him whether it were the same Harcourt that was executed?

Mr. Just. Pemberton. I think not that material.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if you please, we will shew you the Examination taken before the Council, that Sir Thomas did own this Bolron had been his Servant, and never unfaithful, but always took him to be, as he now found him, a Fool.

Mr. Just. Dolben. If he object any Thing, it will come in properly by way of Reply.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then now we have done till we hear what the Prisoner says to it.

L. C. J. Tell him they have done with their Evidence against him; if he will have any Witnesses examined, he must call them.

Mr. Hobart. The King's Evidence have been all heard, and said as much as they can; the Court asks you if you would call any Witnesses, or say any thing for yourself? Have you any Witnesses here?

Sir Thomas Gascoigne. Yes.

Mr. Hobart. Name them, Sir.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Ask what he will have done with them?

Mr. Just. Jones. Let him tell us to what purpose he will call them.

Sir Tho.

Sir Tho. Gascoigne. To examine them to the Credit and Demeanour of the Men, and that there is no Probability in their Suggestions.

Mr. Hobart. Name them, Sir.

Sir Thomas Gascoigne. They are all in that Note.

Mr. Babbington was first examined.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Ask Sir Thomas what he would have him asked.

Sir T. Gascoigne. Look you, Sir, what do you know concerning the Difference between Mr. Bolron and I?

L. C. J. Well, what say you to that Question?

Mr. Babbington. My Lord, I have not been employed in Sir Thomas Gascoigne's Business before the last Winter.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What do you know then?

Mr. Babbington. About Spring last Sir Thomas Gascoigne was consulting with me about Money Bolron owed him upon two Bonds, and gave me Directions to sue them. And likewise he was giving me Directions to deliver Declarations in Ejectment for gaining the Possession of his Farm, because he did not pay his Rent.

L. C. J. How much were the Bonds for?

Mr. Babbington. I have them here, I think.

L. C. J. You need not look for them, you may tell us the Sums.

Mr. Babbington. The one is for twenty-eight Pounds, the other twenty, to the best of my Remembrance. Mr. Bolron having Notice of this, did desire he would accept of a Conveyance of an House he had at Newcastle for Satisfaction of his Debt. Sir Thomas was unwilling to accept of it, but I did prevail with him to accept it, not in Satisfaction, but as an additional Security; and the Deeds I have here that I drew for that End.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. What time was this?

Mr. Babbington. This was a little before last Trinity-Term begun. I have taken a Memorandum within a Day or two, if your Lordship will give me leave to look upon it.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Have you not had all this time to get your Papers ready?

Mr. Babbington. My Memory is very short, indeed. But now I see about the third or fourth of June, Sir Thomas gave me Orders to deliver Declarations in Ejectment.

Mr. Just. Dolben. When did he first bid you question him for Monies upon the Bonds?

Mr. Babbington. It was sometime in May.

L. C. J. Did he tell you you must sue him?

Mr. Babbington. Yes.

L. C. J. What then did Bolron say?

Mr. Babbington. Bolron did then desire that Sir Thomas would accept of Security out of his House at Newcastle. Sir Thomas was very hard to be persuaded, but at length I did prevail with him, and I used this Argument, that it was not to lend so much Money upon that Security, but his Money was already out of his Hands, and else desperate, and this was a further Security, and that it would not lessen his other Security, and upon these Persuasions he did let me draw a Deed to that Purpose.

L. C. J. Was this some time in May?

Mr. Babbington. This Discourse was in May.

L. C. J. Are you sure of it?

Mr. Babbington. The Directions that I had for drawing the Deed was in June, but the Discourse with Sir Thomas was in May, and I do perfectly remember it by a Circumstance which I shall tell your Lordship. After the Deeds were Drawn (for drawing of which I had a Letter under Bolron's own Hand, and if occasion be, I have the Letter here to produce), I came from York, having been there, and appointed a Day for the sealing of them. I came to the House where Bolron lived, and Sir Thomas met me, and there I produced the Deeds, and he of himself was very ready and willing to the sealing of them, but his Wife, who was joined in the Deeds with him, would not by any Means seal, unless Sir Thomas would deliver up the Bonds he had taken for the Money, but Sir Thomas did utterly refuse to deliver up the Bonds.

L. C. J. What time in June was this?

Mr. Babbington. A little before Whitsuntide.

L. C. J. What time was that?

Mr. Babbington. That was the 14th of June, as I remember, that I delivered the Declaration; and the Day before, which was the 13th, to the best of my Remembrance, I had this Communication and Discourse about sealing the Writings, which the Wife refused to join in; but Sir Thomas would only take it as an additional Security, refusing to deliver up the Bonds, but he would suspend further Prosecution, and Bolron did then desire no longer time than a Month for Payment of the Money. But his Wife, though she were urged to seal the Writings would not be persuaded, but utterly denied it. After we had spent a great deal of Time there, Bolron comes to me, and desires me to come another Time, and he would persuade his Wife to seal the Deed. Nay, said I, 'tis not fit for me to come up and down unless it be to some Purpose, and your Wife will seal. Will! nay, says he, I will force her to it. My Answer was this, If you take these Courses, Mr. Bolron, I must by no means be concerned in the Matter; for your Wife must pass a Fine, and we must examine her secretly, and if she tells me she does it by your Force, I will not pass it if you would give 1000*l*. After this, about a Fortnight, he sent for me to come and his Wife would seal.

L. C. J. By the way, are you a Protestant?

Mr. Babbington. Yes, I am, Sir.

L. C. J. And always was?

Mr. Babbington. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, he is an Attorney at large, I know him very well.

that, for he would be very glad of it. I went up with him to Barmbow; and as we went along, he asked me if Sir Thomas did intend to sue him upon his Bond? I told him I had Directions so to do. He asked me likewise if he would turn him out of his Farm? I told him, Yes, if he would not pay his Rent; and the Truth of it is, he did then deny he had received the Declaration in Ejectment: But my Man afterwards made his Affidavit of Delivery, and had Judgement upon it. Afterwards I went up to Sir Thomas, and told him what Bolron desired; and he consented to it as readily as it could be asked; and in coming away he told Bolron, that in the Management of his Coal-pits he did neglect very much, and did go Abroad, staying away two or three Days together. To this Bolron made some Excuse, and said it was for collecting his Debts. Said Sir Thomas, I know not what you are about, but if you do well for your self, I am satisfied.

L. C. J. How long had he been from him, and left his Service, then?

Mr. Babbington. I know not when he went, but this was in June last. After this we went back again, and in coming back he was very inquisitive to the same Purpose; he was asking me—

L. C. J. You say he chid him, and told him he was not a good Husband in his Colliery.

Mr. Babbington. Yes; and as we came back he was inquisitive whether Sir Tho. Gascoigne would sue him, and turn him out of his Farm. I did then enter into the same Expressions, and told him, if he did not pay, he must be sued.

L. C. J. You told me, Sir Thomas had agreed to stay so long, when was this?

Mr. Babbington. My Lord, this was after we had parted with Sir Thomas.

L. C. J. After Sir Thomas had promised him to stay so long Time, then, said he, as you were coming Home, do you think he will sue me, and turn me out of my Farm?

Mr. Babbington. Yes, said I: Well, said he, then by God I will do that which I did not intend to do. What he meant by it I cannot tell; but this was a little before he came to London, which I judge to be the latter End of June; and this is all I have to say.

Then Obadiah Moor was called.

Mr. Just. Jones. Did you tell Sir Tho. Gascoigne what he said, Then I will do what I never did intend to do?

Mr. Babbington. I did never tell him, my Lord, for I looked upon it as an idle Expression. And I will tell your Lordship why; because this Man that is now to be examined did tell me how that he was bound for him, and that Bolron, to encourage him to be bound, said, You need not fear, for if Sir Thomas sues me, I will inform against him for keeping Priests in his House; and I did look upon it as an idle Expression.

Mr. Moor. My Lord, in September last was Twelve-month, Mr. Bolron did desire me to be bound with him to Sir Tho. Gascoigne. Said I, I told him, Mr. Bolron, I have some small Acquaintance with you, but I have no reason to be bound with you. Said he, Do not fear; there is my Brother Baker and Stephen Thompson are to be bound as well as you. Said he, I will give you my Counter Security. That signifies nothing, said I. You need not fear any Suits, said he; for if Sir Thomas sues me, I will inform against him for keeping Priests. Said I, When must this Money be paid? Said he, At Candlemas next. So we went and were bound; the one Bond was to be paid at Candlemas last, and the other in August. And after Candlemas he did not pay the Money; and said I, Mr. Bolron, I don't like these Bonds, you must make new Bonds for my Security. I was afraid of being sued, and I desired Mr. Babbington to bring a Writ against him, which he did; and upon Holy-Thurs'day I had two Bailiffs ready to arrest him, but he could not be found; and I had two likewise the Saturday before at his Pits. Presently after he came up to London, and made an Information; and on the 8th of August last I met him in Ferry-Bridge, and he came along with me; said he, Mr. Moor, you and I have often discoursed of Sir Tho. Gascoigne, you may do me Good, if you do not, pray do me no Harm. You have been often at his House. With that, I asked him if he was concerned in the Plot? For, said I, you have been often telling me, and sworn it, and denied it utterly, that he was no more concerned than any body else. But I did but equivocate then, said he, for I was a Papist, and if I had told 1000 Lies, or killed 20 Protestants, our Priest would have forgiven me for it. And so coming to Farnborn, two Miles from Ferry-Bridge, he plucked out ten Shillings, and said, I have no more Money in my Pocket but this, but pray be kind, and do me no Harm, for you know I have denied it all along.

Mr. Just. Jones. Hath he done so?

Mr. Moor. Yes, several Times.

L. C. J. How came you to discourse with him, and question him about it?

Mr. Moor. Because there was a general Discourse in the Country, that there were few Papists but what were concerned, and guilty of the Plot.

L. C. J. When was that Discourse?

Mr. Moor. The latter end of September was Twelve-month, when the Plot was first discover'd. And he said, Sir Thomas was no more concerned than the Child that was to be born.

L. C. J. Had you any Discourse with him about May last?

Mr. Moor. No, my Lord; in August, as I told you, I had.

L. C. J. When was the last time that he told you, Sir Thomas had not an Hand in the Plot?

Mr. Moor. I can't certainly remember, but I think it was in February, when I told him I would sue the Bond, or have better Security. It was a small time after Candlemas.

Mr. Just. Jones. What are you, a Protestant or a Papist?

Mr. Moor. A Protestant, bred and born so.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. He would have sworn it no doubt at that Time, for he was under an Oath of Secrecy.

L. C. J. But you say August was the first time that he discoursed to you that Sir Thomas was in the Plot?

Mr. Moor. Yes.

Then Stephen Thompson was called.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Well, what do you know of this Business?

D

Mr. Thompson.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, if you will give me leave to speak, I know a great deal of the Unkindness betwixt Sir Thomas and Mr. Bolron. He came down to me, he was Sir Thomas Gascoigne's Steward of his Colliery, and Sir Thomas liked not of his Accounts, and turned him forth. There was a great deal of Money owing to Sir Thomas, and he came to Sir Thomas to agree about it, and he desired me to be bound with him to Sir Thomas: Said I, Mr. Bolron, how shall I be secured? Said he, There is a great deal of Money, of which I never gave Sir Thomas any Account, I will gather it in, and secure all; and so Sir Thomas Gascoigne knew nothing of it. So Bonds for 60*l.* were entered into to pay 28*l.* at Candlemas. So, Sir, when Candlemas came, and he did not pay the Money, I went up to him, and asked him what he would do about this Money, what Course he would take to satisfy? Oh! never fear, said he. Why, said I, hath he any Hand in the Plot? If he hath, let us know it; for he had made a great deal of his Goods away, and then I thought I should not be secured. Oh, said he, he is finless of it.

L. C. J. Who did make away his Goods?

Mr. Thompson. Bolron did.

L. C. J. When was this?

Mr. Thompson. Candlemas last. For then I thought Sir Thomas might sue me for the Money, and I would fain have known if Sir Thomas had any Hand in the Plot, and I pressed him much to tell me. Then it passed on, and having a Writ out against me, I durst not stir out myself, but I did send my Man to him to know what he did intend to do about it: He told my Man, Brother, tell thy Master he need not to fear at all. Why, said my Man, do you know he hath any Hand in the Plot?—

Mr. Just. Dolben. That is but what your Man said.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Is your Man here?

Mr. Thompson. No.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Therefore you must not urge that he said to you, 'tis no Evidence.

Mr. Thompson. On Thursday after I went up to him myself, and got him to go up to Sir Thomas; and so when he came to Sir Thomas, he would give him no Time but a Fortnight to pay the Money; Bolron desired but three Weeks Time, and he would procure him his Money; so away we came down. Said I, What do you intend to do in this Case? Said he, If he do sue me, I will do him an ill turn; and soon after he went to London, and said, he would go to sell his Land at Newcastle: And a while after I went out to see if he were come again; and meeting him, it was when he was going to London again to carry on his Design, said I, Robert Bolron, what do you say in this Case? You now are going to leave the Country, and how shall I be secured against Sir Thomas? Do not question it, said he, for I am to receive on the King's Account 30*l.*

L. C. J. Upon whose Account?

Mr. Thompson. Upon the King's; concerning the taking Sir T. Gascoigne.

Mr. Bolron. But I never had a Farthing of it.

Mr. Thompson. But, said he, I will not take it, for another bids me 60*l.* and I know what Oates and Bedloe had, and I won't abate a Farthing of that.

L. C. J. When was this?

Mr. Thompson. It was after he had taken him; and on Holy Thursday he did say, If he did sue him, he would do him an ill turn.

Then the Lord Chief Justice, being to sit at Nisi Prius at Guildhall, went off.

William Backhouse was next called.

Mr. Just. Jones. Let him ask Backhouse what he will.

Sir T. Gasc. I would ask him what Threats he gave to his Wife to swear against her Conscience, and Promise of 500*l.* he should gain by it.

Backhouse. I served the Warrant to carry the Witnesses before Squire Lowther and Squire Tindall: I was charged the 7th of July last to help fetch the Witnesses before the Justices, and to take Sir Tho. Gascoigne, I and two of my Sons, and he opened the Door his own self. When we had taken him, Squire Lowther directed us to bring the Witnesses before him, and we did so. When we came to Bolron's House, his Wife was sick on Bed, and I said that she must go before the Justice of Peace to swear against Sir T. Gascoigne for High-Treason: She said she knew nothing against Sir Thomas; but Bolron said she must go, or he would have her drawn at the Cart's Arse.

Then Hamsworth was called.

Mr. Just. Jones. What will he ask him?

Sir T. Gasc. I ask him about the threatening of his Wife.

Hamsworth. May it please you, my Lord, the same Day that Sir Tho. Gascoigne was taken, Robert Bolron came to his Wife, and told her she must go to Squire Lowther to swear against Sir Tho. Gascoigne: She fell a weeping, and would not go by no means; he threatened if she would not go, he would tie her to the Horse's Tail.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Did he tell her what she should swear?

Hamsworth. I did not hear him, only to swear against Sir Thomas.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What she knew, was it?

Hamsworth. Yes; and she said, she did not know anything of Misdemeanour of Sir Thomas Gascoigne touching his sacred Majesty, or the Church Government.

Mr. Just. Jones. Art thou sure she said those Words?

Mr. Mowbray. My Lord, he is a Papist.

Hamsworth. I am a Protestant.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. How long have you been a Protestant?

Hamsworth. I was born so.

Mr. Just. Jones. Well, thou hast added a few fine Words that I dare say she never said.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Were you never a Papist?

Hamsworth. Yes, I was.

Nicholas Shippon was called.

Mr. Mowbray. This Man is a Papist too.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Do you think he is not a Witness, for all that?

Sir T. Gasc. What Discourse he had May 30, the Day after the Race.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Well, ask him what you will: What do you say?

Shippon. Mr. Bolron was with me the 30th Day of May.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What, May last?

Shippon. Yes, the Day after Ascension-day: He came to my House about two o'Clock in the Afternoon, and staid at my House all that Afternoon while an Hour after Sun-set before he went away; he came and brought a Letter with him to carry to Newcastle, and it was sent away thither.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Are you sure it was the Day after Ascension-day? How if it should fall out to be another Day?

Shippon. Yes, Ascension-day was the 29th of May; he came to me about two o'Clock.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Pray what Reason had you to take Notice of this?

Shippon. He came and brought a Letter to me that was to go to Newcastle, and desired me, that my little Boy might carry it to a Kindian's House of mine; for he said, he was afraid of the Bailiff, and did not care for stirring out; my Wife brought him some Meat and Drink, and he said it was better than he had at Home; and she said she was the more sorry Things were no better with him.

Mr. Just. Dolben. But how came you to take Notice that this fell out the 30th of May?

Shippon. The Night before I met him coming from the Race, which was the 29th of May, and he asked me if I saw any Bailiffs waiting for him; and I said Yes; and he said, It was well if he missed them; and he asked me, if I saw Bennet Johnson?

Mr. Just. Jones. How long was it you say he staid?

Shippon. He came about two o'Clock, and staid till an Hour and Half after Sun-set.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. What Religion are you of, Friend, let us know?

Mr. Just. Dolben. What say you to the Truth of this, Bolron?

Mr. Bolron. My Lord, there is not a Word of it true; for I was about two o'Clock at Sir Tho. Gascoigne's; they were marking some Sheep, and I was there most of the Afternoon.

Mr. Just. Jones. Were you ever at his House at any other time to send any such Letter?

Mr. Bolron. I never sent any such Letter: Indeed that Day I was a little of the Afternoon at his House, but I staid there but Half an Hour; But I was most Part of the Afternoon at Sir Tho. Gascoigne's seeing them mark Sheep.

Then Roger Gregson was called.

Mr. Just. Jones. What do you say to him?

Sir T. Gasc. Let him speak his Knowledge.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. I desire he may ask the Question, for he only generally refers to them what they know.

Sir T. Gasc. What did he say to you about August last?

Gregson. My Lord, I will tell you: We met about August last, Robert Bolron and I, about a Week before Bartholomew-day: We had some Discourse; he came from London a little before that, and I asked him how Sir T. Gascoigne did.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Was he apprehended in August last?

Gregson. Yes, he was in the Tower. He said, Well. I asked him how he would come off about the Plot (as they call it)? Said He, he may come off well enough, but it will cost him a great deal of Money. I then did ask, how they came to fall out? And he said it was long of that Rogue Addison, Brother to the Priest, who had called him to Account, or else he never had done Sir Thomas that Injury; and I suppose that was the Cause of it. And then we had some more Discourse, and that Discourse was this: He rides a little from me (he was on Horseback) and came back again; said he, I can tell you, the King was at Windsor, and one of the Privy-Council made an Attempt to stab the King, and the King made his Escape, and now they will believe my Informations the better.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Go on.

Gregson. That is all I have to say.

Mr. Just. Jones. What are you, a Papist?

Gregson. No, I am no Papist, I deny it.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Nor never was?

Gregson. Nor never was.

Then James Barlow was called.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, I conceive this Man ought not to be heard, for he is under an Accusation of the same Crime; and we have had two Orders of Council to apprehend him.

Mr. Att. Gen. There was an Order of Council within this Fortnight to send for him up in Custody.

Mr. Just. Dolben. There is nothing upon Record against him, and you may discredit his Testimony, but you cannot refuse him; he is not to come upon his Oath.

Mr. Sol. Gen. * Bolron swears too, that he was at the * Sir Francis Winnington.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Let us hear him what he says; we must leave it to the Jury what to believe.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. They would question him about Mr. Bolron's cozening, which ought not to be.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This Man hath sworn against him.

Mr. Hobart. Why did you not indict him, Sir?

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Sir, you ought not to prate here.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Come, I doubt you are a little too pragmatical.

Mr. Just. Jones. If you had any Record of the Indictment to shew against him, we would not examine him.

Mr. Hobart. Will you ask him any Questions, Sir?

Sir T. Gasc. You know, Sir—

Mr. Serj. Maynard. That is not proper, he tells him what he knows.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Look you, Sir, we did not intend that you should come here to manage all as a Counsel; it was said, he could not hear well, and so you were only to tell him what was said.

Sir Tho. Gasc. I would ask him what he does know concerning taking of Money, and stealing from me?

Mr. Just. Dolben. But that must not be asked. [Which Hobart told him.]

Sir Tho. Gasc. Then you must tell me what I must ask.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Come, you have been pragmatical, Sir, and made him a Brief, and he cannot manage it without you.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Did you write this Brief? [Meaning a Brief in Sir Tho. Gascoigne's Hand.]

Mr. Hobart. No, an't please you, Sir.

Then Mr. Ravenscroft offered to speak what this Witness had told him.

Mr.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Look you, Mr. Ravenscroft, if what he says tend any thing to this Business, that Sir Tho. Gascoigne comes to know of his feeling, and then turned him out of his Service, it is material; but if you come to tell a Story here of another Man's Knowledge, we can't spend our time so.

Mr. Ravenscroft. It was not known but last Night to me; and if you will not let me tell you what it is, how shall you know it?

Mrs. Ravenscroft. He is a chief Witness for my Grandfather, and I desire he may be heard, for he discovered it but last Night to my Husband.

Mr. Just. Dolben. If it tend any thing to this Business, that Sir Thomas turned him out of Doors, and therefore this Man bears him an ill Will—

Mr. Just. Pemberton. We had as good hear Mr. Ravenscroft, however; but pray, Sir, make your Story short.

Mr. Ravenscroft. He came to me and said these Words; I have kept a Secret a long while, in which I have done very ill—

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Then it does not tend at all to this Affair; for you must not come to tell a Story out of another Man's Mouth.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Pray sit still, Sir, and be quiet.

Mr. Just. Jones. Indeed you must be satisfied.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. If you have any other Witnesses, call them, and do not spend our time.

Mr. Just. Jones. For the Jury must be told, that 'tis no Evidence coming out of another Man's Mouth.

Mr. Just. Dolben. 'Tis as if a Man should come and say, I can say something to Sir T. Gascoigne, when I know nothing but what another Man told me.

Mr. Just. Jones. Ask Sir Thomas if he would have this Barlow examin'd? Sir T. Gascoigne. Yes.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Then what Questions will you ask him?

Sir T. Gascoigne. What Conspiracy was had to take away a great deal of Money from me; and how he concealed it, because he would not do him a Mischief?

Mr. Just. Dolben. What is that to Sir Thomas's Life?

Mr. Ravenscroft. I cannot tell you by bare Assertion, but if you will hear what I have to say, do. Last Night, late at Night, about Nine o'Clock, Barlow came to me; says he, Mr. Ravenscroft—

Mr. Just. Dolben. Come, don't tell us the Preamble, but the Story.

Mr. Ravenscroft. Said he, I have a Thing that sticks upon my Thoughts, which I doubt may endanger Sir Thomas's Life.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Well, was it about taking Money?

Mr. Ravenscroft. Said he, If I am silent, I doubt it will cost Sir Thomas's Life. Then I asked him what it was? Says he, Mr. Mowbray, who is a Witness in this Court, and I, did just a little before his going away, combine, or rather he did seduce me—

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Was it about Money?

Mr. Ravenscroft. Money is in the Case.

Mr. Just. Dolben. He did conspire, what to do?

Mr. Ravenscroft. If you will hear me, I will tell you.

Mr. Just. Jones. Pray do it quickly then.

Mr. Ravenscroft. Did combine to rob Sir Thomas of a great Sum of Money; and whereas I held my Tongue, thinking not to spill his Blood, I see now if I do not tell the Truth, I shall make good his Credit, and so endanger Sir Thomas's Life.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Well, I'll ask you, or any Man alive now, two Men combine to rob Sir Thomas, whether one man be a competent Witness against the Credit of the other Witness? He makes himself a Rogue by combining, and you have made him a Knave by his own Confession.

Mr. Ravenscroft. I may perhaps err in that Word; he did not say combine, but the other seduced him.

Mr. Just. Dolben. You have told a Story to no Purpose.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. You think it a fine Thing to be a Catholick, and to appear brisk for them.

Mr. Ravenscroft. Who says I am a Catholick?

Then George Dixon appeared.

Sir T. Gascoigne. What do you know of any Conspiracy of these People against me?

Dixon. My Lord, I was at William Batley's in August last in the Morning at ten o'Clock, and Mr. Bolron and Mr. Mowbray came in, and called for a Flaggon of Drink; and when it was brought, they fell into a Discourse together concerning Sir Thomas Gascoigne and my Lady Tempest. Says Mr. Mowbray, I know nothing of Sir Thomas but that he is a very honest Man.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. He was not bound to tell you what he knew.

Mr. Just. Jones. When was this, in August last?

Dixon. Yes; but, said he, if I knew any thing against my Lady Tempest, I would discover it, for I would hang her if I could. And they sat down at Mr. Batley's House to consult what they should do.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Before you?

Dixon. Yes, I heard every Word.

Mr. Just. Jones. And what did they say?

Dixon. They said they would meet at Mr. Bolron's House; and if they would compleat their Business, they should be very well gratified.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Against whom?

Dixon. Against my Lady and Sir Thomas.

Mr. Just. Dolben. But you say, Mowbray said he knew nothing against Sir Thomas Gascoigne?

Dixon. No; he said he knew no Hurt by them.

Mr. Just. Dolben. How came they to say they would contrive their Business.

Mr. Mowbray. What Man is that, Mr. Bolron?

Mr. Bolron. I know him not, nor ever held any such Discourse.

Mr. Mowbray. Nor I.

Mr. Just. Jones. How far do you live off one from another?

Dixon. I live at Leeds, Mr. Mowbray knows me.

Mr. Mowbray. I don't know that ever I saw you.

Dixon. He hath drunk with me.

Mr. Mowbray. I know him not, nor where he dwells.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What Trade are you of?

Dixon. A Cloth-dresser by Trade, but I keep a Publick-House.

Mr. Just. Dolben. This Discourse was at Leeds, was it not?

Dixon. Yes.

Mr. Just. Dolben. They say both they do not know you, nay, they swear it. And 'tis very like you were but very little acquainted; would they let you hear them talk thus?

Dixon. We were as well acquainted as can be, but that he will deny it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what Religion are you of?

Dixon. A Protestant.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long have you been so?

Dixon. All the Days of my Life.

Mr. Att. Gen. I can't but wonder at the Strangeness of your Acquaintance.

Mr. Mowbray. My Lord, I have not drunk at that Place which is near the old Church at Leeds, not this two Years:

Then William Batley was called.

Batley. And if it like your Honour, these two Gentlemen, Mr. Bolron and Mr. Mowbray, came to my House, and called for a Pot of Drink.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you not know this Man neither?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, I do, but I was never three times in his Company in my Life.

Batley. I filled them a Flaggon of Ale, and when I had done I left them. They began to discourse of the Plot, and Sir Thomas Gascoigne, and Mr. Bolron—

Mr. Just. Dolben. At your House; where is your House?

Batley. My House is near the old Church at Leeds.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Is that the same Place the other Man speaks of?

Batley. Yes. Says Mr. Bolron to him, Thou knowest that Sir Tho. Gascoigne hath been very severe against thee and me, and now here is an Opportunity offered us to take a Revenge upon Sir Tho. Gascoigne. Mowbray replied again, As for Sir Thomas, he is a very honest Man, and I know no Hurt by him; but as to my Lady Tempest, if I knew any thing against her I would hang her, for I would discover it. But thou knowest, says Bolron, that Sir Thomas sues and troubles me, and if I do not make somewhat out against him, he will ruin me, and it must be done by two Witnesses. To which Mr. Mowbray answered again, How shall we bring this Business about? If thou wilt but come to my House, said he, I will put thee in a Way to contrive it, and we shall have a considerable Reward. And Mowbray told him he would come to him such a Day.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Was that Man that went out last, with you all the time they spake?

Dixon. Yes.

Mr. Just. Dolben. He does not say half so much as you do.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Were you in the Room?

Batley. No, I was at the Stairs-head.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. What did you stand there for?

Batley. I hearing them discourse of Sir Tho. Gascoigne, hearkened what they did say.

Mr. Just. Dolben. The other Man said he was in the Room with them; were you in the Room?

Batley. I stood upon the Stairs.

Mr. Just. Jones. Were you in their Company at all that Day?

Batley. Yes, my Lord, I carried up a Flaggon of Ale.

Mr. Just. Jones. Was the Door left open?

Batley. Yes.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Would any Man talk in such a Place as this, that all the World may hear them, when they are contriving to take away a Man's Life?

Mr. Just. Pemberton. You were in the same Room, Dixon, were you not?

Dixon. They were at the Grice Head, and we at the Foot.

Mr. Just. Jones. But the other says he was at the Top of the Stairs, the Head of the Stairs.

Dixon. We were at the Stairs-foot, and they were in the Room.

Batley. The Table they sat at joined just upon the Head of the Stairs.

Mr. Just. Jones. Did you hear them down to the Stairs-foot?

Dixon. We did stand there to hear them discourse.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Could you see them where you were?

Dixon. Yes, as fair as I see you.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Could they see you?

Batley. No, they could not.

Dixon. Yes, if they had looked down.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Why then I ask you, Do you think, if you stood in so open a Place to be seen, and they had seen you, can you imagine that they would talk so about taking away Sir Tho. Gascoigne's Life?

Batley. I do imagine they did not know I was there, nor believe any one heard or saw.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Do you know how they came there?

Batley. They said they came out of Leeds, and said one Mr. Legat was to come that Way, who they were to speak with.

Mr. Just. Jones. I ask you if you were in the Room under them?

Batley. And if it like your Lordship, I stood at the Stairs-foot.

Mr. Just. Jones. Just now you said it was the Stairs-head.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Did you say any thing to them about this?

Batley. No; I did not open my Lips to them about it, but I told it to a Friend about three or four Weeks after.

Mr. Just. Jones. To whom?

Batley. To a Neighbour of mine: I suppose it was told Mr. Babbington.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What say you, Mr. Babbington? How came you to know of this?

Mr. Babbington. When the Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer were sitting at Leeds, there was one came and told me, George Dixon could afford me something that would be very advantageous for the Benefit of Sir Tho. Gascoigne.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Who was that Man?

Mr. Babbington. Bennet Johnson, or Francis Johnson.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Was that the Man you spoke to?

Batley. No, I spoke it to a Smith, one Richard Loftus.

Mr. Babbington. I'll tell you another Person I heard it from, that was Mr. Bailiff of Leeds.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Well, was this the common Discourse of Leeds? Mr. Just.

Mr. Just. Dolben. He says so. Was it then presently?

Mr. Babbington. The Bailiff did not tell me so suddenly.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Would it not have been to your purpose to have brought the Bailiff here?

Mr. Babbington. It was after the Commission of Oyer and Terminer that I had it from him, which was in October.

Mr. Bolton. In the time of August I was not at Leeds, I was in Northumberland searching for Priests, and in the Bishoprick of Durham, all but a little of the first of it.

Then Mrs. Jefferson was called.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. What do you ask her?

Sir Tho. Gascoigne. Pray be pleased to speak to the Conspiracy and Combination against me.

Mr. Just. Jones. Whose Combination? Come, Mistress, what do you know?

Jefferson. I asked Mr. Mowbray one time what he knew concerning Sir Tho. Gascoigne? And he said he knew nothing, but Sir Thomas was a very honest Gentleman for what he knew, and the best Friend he had.

Mr. Just. Jones. Is that all you know?

Jefferson. He thought he was wrongfully accused.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. When was this? Was this after the time he was accused by Bolton?

Jefferson. It may be it might be, I think it was in August.

Mr. Just. Jones. In August last?

Jefferson. Yes.

Mr. Just. Dolben. But you must needs know (it was the Talk of the Country) when Sir Thomas Gascoigne was sent for up to Town; was it after that time?

Jefferson. Yes, I think it was.

Mr. Just. Jones. Then you say, you heard Mowbray say that Sir Tho. Gascoigne was an honest Gentleman, and he could say nothing against him.

Jefferson. Yes, ask him else.

Then Matthias Higgringil was called.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Was he one at the Meeting?

Mr. Bolton. He was at the sealing the collusive Conveyance.

Mr. Just. Jones. This Higgringil is a Protestant, is he not?

Mr. Bolton. I know not, I think so.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Come, Sir, what say you in this Matter?

Higgringil. To whom?

Mr. Just. Dolben. What can you say to the Business about Sir Tho. Gascoigne?

Sir T. Gascoigne. Speak to the Threatnings to take away my Life.

Higgringil. I have nothing to say to Bolton; but Mowbray on the 25th of September last, being at an Alehouse, Mr. Legat and he were together, consulting how to disgrace Sir Thomas, and take away his Life; and he calls me out to speak with me: Now, said he, I shall match them, for they have done what they could to disgrace me.

Mr. Just. Jones. How did he mean that?

Higgringil. I suppose he had taken away some Money and Gold, and they spoke of it, and that was to disgrace him.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Was it charged upon him?

Higgringil. It was suspected always he had taken it away.

Mr. Just. Dolben. But was there any such thing talked of in the Country?

Mr. Just. Jones. What did he say to you?

Higgringil. He said, they did what they could to disgrace him, and take away his Life, and he would requite them.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Who, they?

Higgringil. Sir Thomas Gascoigne and my Lady Tempest.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Why? Did Sir Thomas indict him?

Higgringil. No; but the Noise was about the Country.

Mr. Just. Dolben. When was this? In September last?

Higgringil. Yes.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What Profession are you of, Higgringil?

Higgringil. An Husbandman; I graze, and I farm a Farm.

Mr. Just. Dolben. You know this Man, do you not, Mr. Mowbray?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes; Sir Thomas employs him, he is a kind of Collector to him.

Mr. Ravenscroft. He is no Papist.

Then Francis Johnson appeared.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Well, come, what do you know?

Johnson. He hath sustained great Losses by him.

Mr. Just. Dolben. He! Who?

Johnson. Sir Thomas Gascoigne.

Mr. Just. Dolben. By whom?

Johnson. By Mr. Bolton.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What loss hath he received?

Johnson. The very first Month he entered, he wronged him of 3*l*.

Mr. Just. Jones. How do you know that?

Johnson. I cast up the Account myself.

Mr. Just. Jones. But he kept him two Years after that?

Johnson. Yes, he did.

Mr. Bolton. My Lord, I lost 3*l*. the first three Weeks, and Sir Thomas forgave me it, I don't deny it.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Do you know of any Malice between them, and that he said he would do him any Mischief?

Johnson. No.

Then Mr. Pebbles, Clerk of the Peace in the County of York, was called.

Sir T. Gascoigne. I would desire you to speak of the Carriage of Mr. Bolton to you, Sir, what you know.

Mr. Pebbles. My Lord, I was in York last Assizes, and Mr. Bolton came to me into a Room where I was with some Gentlemen, and asked me how I did? and asked me if I did not know him? I told him I did not remember him: Said he, I am the Prosecutor against Sir Tho. Gascoigne. So when he was sat down, after a little while he desired to discourse with me, and asked me, If a Man was indicted as a Traytor, whether it were fit to pay him Money? I owe, said he, Sir Tho. Gascoigne Money, and I would know whether it be fit to pay it to him? Said I, I think you may safely pay him his Money before he be convicted, but then 'tis the King's, in my Opinion. Nay, said Bolton, he is sure to be convicted: Then said I, I think it not safe to pay it, therefore I leave that to your own Discretion, whether you will or no. A little after he desired to have my Opinion concerning the two Judges that came our Circuit, for I am mightily abused by them, said he, they will not at all give me Audience; I came from the King and Council, and they slight me, and will not hear me speak: Said I, I believe if you will go to them, they will hear you. I went to speak with them, and they sent some of their Servants out to know what I would say to them; but I have writ a Letter to them to tell them my Mind. But, said I, I can't believe that any one will presume to carry such a Letter; but for that I will leave it to you. So I came away from him, and after he follows me out, and desires to speak with me again: Said he, I have something against you concerning this Business in hand, I can do you a Prejudice if I will: Said I, God bless me, I know nothing of it, and I do not at all intend to court your Favour, I have no mind at all to that: Said he, I will not do it; and he spoke as if he had no Desire to do it: I would not court him, but came away and left him: He followed me to the Street again, and said, Will you help to apprehend a Traytor? Who is it, said I? It is a Gentlewoman, said he; a Woman greatly concerned in the Plot; you may apprehend her in the Street, and 'tis the best time. Now the Street was full, and I thought it a little unseasonable; so he looked after me, but I never offered to go from him: But, said I, was she in the Plot? Yes, said he, she was to be the first Lady Mayorefs of York after the Plot took Effect, and the King was killed; but he did not lay hold upon her; so I parted with her. Then, said he, I can have no Respect. Said I, I have nothing to do with you; I am Clerk of the Peace of the West-Riding in this County, and am always ready to do my Duty there; so away I went and left him. The next News I heard was, he had procured a Warrant of the Council against me; and he brings the Warrant to a Justice of Peace, and that Justice of Peace told him there would be several Justices of Peace at Leeds within two or three Days after, and then they would examine the Business. I chanced to be in a Room with some Gentlemen, not knowing of the Warrant that was out against me; and this Gentleman that was the Justice of Peace called me into another Room, and told me of this Business: I admired at it, and told him I did know nothing of it, nor that I had disobliged him, unless it was because I did not give him the Compliment and Ceremony of my Hat, nor give him Money; neither did I know what Information he had procured that Warrant upon. He told me Mr. Mowbray and Mr. Bolton were in Town: So I desired him to send for the other Justices into the Room, where he acquainted them with the Matter, and said he, if you will we will examine it to-night; so they sent notice to Mr. Mowbray and Mr. Bolton, that they would examine the Business that Night at six o'clock, and they came; and he was asked what he had to say against me? He said I had taken Money for keeping a Man from taking the Oath of Allegiance, and they had Witnesses to prove it—

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Must he be here admitted to make his own defence?

Mr. Just. Dolben. Brother, let him go on.

Mr. Pebbles. The Witnesses was called upon, and they asked him to that Point, and he denied absolutely upon his Oath that he gave me any Money, and also swore he had taken the Oath when it was tender'd to him. Then, my Lord, there was one Mr. Dunford an Attorney was spoken of, as if he could prove something, but he was fourteen Miles off, and they could not send for him, and so I begg'd they would appoint another Time for hearing when he could be there; they appointed Monday following, and ordered me to attend, and one of the Justices of the Peace undertook to give Dunford notice. Accordingly I came there, but there was no Mr. Bolton nor Mr. Mowbray; but I desired that Mr. Dunford might be examined upon his Oath, and they did take his Information in Writing, and he swore he knew nothing of it, neither did he ever give me Money upon such Account.

Mr. Just. Dolben. You were not by when it was sworn?

Mr. Pebbles. I saw the Examination taken in Writing.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. And you were discharged?

Mr. Pebbles. Yes; for he could not make out any thing at all.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. It was well for you he could not make it out.

Mr. Pebbles. They said they could prove it, and vouched these two Persons, but both denied it upon their Oaths.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Is that all you know?

Mr. Pebbles. That is all I can say in particular, I have not a mind to speak against him in general, because he is the King's Evidence.

Mr. Just. Dolben. You can say nothing of his Repute?

Mr. Just. Pemberton. You were a Stranger to him, you did not know him?

Sir T. Gascoigne. I desire he may speak what Reputation he had among the Justices.

Mr. Pebbles. I have no mind to reflect on the King's Evidence; and if I did, it would seem as if I should speak in Malice; he hath done me wrong, but I never did him any.

Mr. Just. Jones. But what is his Reputation generally?

Mr. Pebbles. Truly, 'tis not very good in the Country.

Mr. Just. Jones. Among whom?

Mr. Pebbles. The Grand Jury and the Gentlemen of the Country.

Mr. Just. Jones. Is it a common Fame in the Country?

Mr. Pebbles. Most People discourse ill of him.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Did he say he did not speak with the Judges?

Mr. Bolton. No, my Lord, I did not.

Mr. Just. Dolben. You did speak with us; indeed you would have had us allowed you a Guard for your Safety, which we could not do.

Mr. Bolton. Whereas he says I gave in a wrong Information, this same Hunt when he came before them confessed he gave him 40*s*. but he would not swear for what it was.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. 'Tis nothing to the purpose one thing or other that he hath said.

Mr. Just. Dolben. 'Tis altogether uncertain; no body knows what to make of it.

Then Hardwicke was called.

Sir Tho. Gasc. Do you speak what Threats Bolron hath used to his Wife to swear against me.

Hardwicke. When the Pursuivants came up to Barmbow, the chief Constable ordered me to assist Mr. Bolron in Execution of the Warrant, and to carry the Witnesses before a Justice. We went to Robert Bolron's House to take the Witnesses, and there was his Wife, his Brother, and his Sister: We were to carry them before a Justice, and they refused to go; his Wife pretended to be sick and could not go, and they begg'd of us to excuse them.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Who do you call they?

Hardwicke. His Wife, his Brother and his Sister: Bolron told them they must go, and William Backhouse and I ordered them by all means to go along with us; I suppose it was to testify what he had sworn.

Mr. Just. Jones. What were they to do, did he tell them?

Hardwicke. They were to go to tell what his Testimony was above, as well as I understood the Discourse.

Mr. Just. Dolben. We have had two Persons to this purpose before. They say he would have his Wife go, and she refused to go; and cried; but they do neither of them say he pressed her to speak any thing more than she knew, or against her knowledge.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. No, one of the Witnesses said, he told her it was to speak her Knowledge.

Then William Clow was examined.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Come, what say you?

Clow. The 22d of May last I had a Writ against Bolron, and my Man arrested him and brought him to my House.

Mr. Just. Dolben. At whose Suit?

Clow. At the Suit of one Higgringil that was Servant to Sir Thomas; and there I had him two Days, and would not carry him to the Goal, for he begg'd of me I would not; but then I told him I would keep him no longer there, for he had no Money for Lodging and Diet; but he begg'd so hard of me that I would but tarry till Higgringil came, and then he did not care what they did with him; for he would make Sir Thomas pay Higgringil his Debt that he owed him, or he would play him such a Trick as he little dreamt of.

Mr. Just. Dolben. When was this?

Clow. The 21st or 22d of May last, or thereabouts.

Mr. Just. Dolben. May last?

Clow. Yes. And so Higgringil came over, and they did agree, and he gave him a Lease of an House he lived in, and Higgringil took the Charge of both the Debts upon him.

Then Hobart stood up.

Sir Tho. Gasc. Speak whether he pretended he writ a Letter to the Duke of Monmouth from Leeds.

Mr. Hobart. My Lord, I have nothing to say to that.

Mr. Just. Jones. What can you say then?

Mr. Hobart. All I can say is to the Sums of Money returned to Town.

Mr. Just. Dolben. He did not mention that.

Mr. Hobart. If you please to let me declare what I know about the returning of the Money.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Pray speak what you know of your own Knowledge.

Mr. Hobart. For most part of it, I know of the Payment of it, and to whom; 1800l. there was paid to Mr. Trumbal about the Purchase, it was paid at Mr. Mawson's: I was a Witness to the Deed, and to the Receipt.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is some, but what to the rest?

Mr. Hobart. 200l. was paid to a Client of mine, 80l. was paid to one Widow Cawson that was upon Bond.

Mr. Just. Dolben. How much was paid to Mr. Corker?

Mr. Hobart. Several Sums, above 300l. paid to Corker in six Years time.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Nay, in four Years time.

Mr. Hobart. This 300l. and 300l. before I drew the Receipt for; and commonly he ordered me when Mr. Corker came for it, that I should have a Receipt from Mrs. Mary Appleby; and it came back signed by her, to whom Sir Thomas was Guardian.

Mr. Just. Dolben. And was all this Money paid to Corker upon the Account of this Appleby?

Mr. Hobart. It was mentioned in the Receipt.

Mr. Just. Dolben. How much was she to have by the Year?

Mr. Hobart. 100l. by the Year, or 2 sometimes.

Mr. Just. Dolben. How came she to have 900l. in four Years?

Mr. Hobart. My Lord, I will tell you; for that there was a great Arrear upon a Suit between Sir Thomas and Mr. Appleby, this Mrs. Appleby's Father; and upon the hearing of the Cause, my Lord Keeper Bridgman was pleased to order, that this Money should be paid to Sir Thomas for the Use of the Daughters; 200l. a Year, that is 100l. a-piece; and there was an Arrear for 3 or 4 Years during the Suit, about 2 or 300l. it was: I drew a Receipt for it, and Sir Thomas being pressed for the Money by Mrs. Appleby, who went beyond Sea, he sent to Corker to get the Money returned to her.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Ay, but you dance about the Bush: Was there an Arrear of 500l.?

Mr. Hobart. For three or four Years, and Mrs. Ravenscroft was one of the Sisters; her Part was paid when she was married, but this Gentlewoman's was paid beyond Sea.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Were there Arrears from Sir Thomas to the Gentlewoman beyond Sea?

Mr. Hobart. Yes.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Are you sure there was?

Mr. Hobart. Yes, Sir Thomas told me so.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Who was to pay this Money?

Mr. Hobart. Mr. Appleby, by Order of my Lord Keeper.

Mr. Just. Jones. Sir Thomas was Guardian, was the Estate in Yorkshire?

Mr. Hobart. It did arise out of Rents there.

VOL. III.

Then one Culliford was called.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What say you? What do you know of this Matter? Culliford. This Gentleman lodged at such a time at my House; the 4th of June 1677, he was at my House 7 Weeks; and he was gone 3 Weeks and returned again; he was 3 Weeks away.

Mr. Just. Jones. What Gentleman was this?

Culliford. Mr. Mowbray.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What is that to the purpose?

Mr. Just. Jones. How do you apply that?

Mr. Hobart. Mr. Mowbray hath said he sent a Letter to the Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. Just. Dolben. There hath been no mention made of any such thing: Have you any more Witnesses?

Mr. Hobart. No.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Then ask Sir Thomas what he hath to say for himself.

Mr. Hobart. Have you any thing to say to the Court for yourself?

Sir Tho. Gasc. No, I refer myself to the Judgment of the Court.

Then a Woman Witness appeared.

Sir Tho. Gasc. What do you know concerning Mowbray, whether he was suspected of stealing when he was at my House?

Witness. Yes, he was, my Lord; he would have given me 5l. to have gone away, and he did intend to have clapped me in Prison, and to have laid it all upon me.

Mr. Just. Dolben. How do you know that?

Witness. He told me so.

Mr. Mowbray. This is a common Woman, and not to be believed.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, we will reply but one short thing in matter of Evidence. Much of this that hath been given by the Defendant hath been to take off the Credit of the Witnesses; and for Bolron, they would suggest that he hath been dishonest to Sir Thomas; but when Sir Thomas himself was examined to that Point before the Council, he said he found him honest, but only accounted him a Fool.

Mr. Just. Dolben. That is proper for you to do now, Brother.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. And Sir Thomas being examined about Rushton, he said he did not know such an one, and then afterwards he did say he knew one of that Name. Here is Sir John Nicholas, the Clerk of the Council. [Who was sworn.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, do you know what Sir Thomas Gascoigne said at the Council-Table?

Sir John Nicholas. He was asked whether he knew Bolron? He said, he knew him very well, he had been his Servant till within this Twelve-month, or something more; but for his Honesty, he had nothing to say to it, till of late that he had not behaved himself so well, in giving Informations against him: But he did find him now, what he did always take him to be, a Fool.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What did he say about Rushton?

Sir John Nicholas. At first he did say, he did not know Rushton the Priest; but after it was brought to his Memory, he said he knew one of that Name.

Mr. Att. Gen. 'Tis taken down in the Minutes; Sir John, look upon them.

Sir John Nicholas. He denied at first that he knew Rushton the Priest; and afterwards the next time he came to the Council, he said he did deny it, because he was afraid of an old Law against harbouring of Priests.

Mr. Att. Gen. If your Lordship please, we will now trouble you with a Witness or two in answer to what Backhouse and Hardwicke have said as to Bolron's threatening of his Wife. We will call the Wife to give you an Account of that.

Mr. Just. Dolben. They did not charge him, that they pressed her to swear falsely.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. That does not at all touch upon the Witnesses.

Mr. Att. Gen. If the Court be satisfied, we will trouble you with that no farther.

Mr. Just. Jones. I believe Backhouse did say, That this Bolron would have his Wife go before the Justice of Peace; she said she knew nothing at all, yet he would have her go and testify her Knowledge; and if she would not, he would have her dragged at the Horse's Tail.

Mr. Att. Gen. I think 'tis necessary to call a Witness or two to that. First to call her herself. [Then Mrs. Bolron was sworn.]

Mr. Att. Gen. What did your Husband threaten you to make you swear against Sir Thomas Gascoigne?

Mr. Just. Dolben. Now you are upon your Oath, speak the Truth.

Mrs. Bolron. No, never in his Life did he threaten me upon any such Account.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Do you remember when the Constable came down to have you go before Squire Lowther?

Mrs. Bolron. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolben. How chance you did not go with him?

Mrs. Bolron. I was unwilling to go then, because I could say little to the purpose.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Did he use any Threats to you to make you swear against Sir Thomas?

Mrs. Bolron. No, my Lord; but he would have me go, whether I said any thing or no.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Did he ever desire you to speak any thing you did not know?

Mrs. Bolron. No, my Lord, never in his Life.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, Mr. Bolron desires to have this Woman, his Grandmother, beasked whether he threatened his Wife? [And she was sworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. She was by at that time.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Were you by at that time when the Constable came to carry the Witnesses before Mr. Lowther?

Mrs. Bolron Sen. Yes.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Heark you, did not you see the Woman that went over there cry, and say she was unwilling to go?

Mrs. Bolron Sen. Her Husband said she should go, though she said nothing.

Mr. Just. Dolben. But her Husband did not press her to say any thing but what was Truth?

E

Mrs. Bolron

Mrs. Bolton Sen. No, indeed did he not.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. And did not seem to stick before?

Mr. Att. Gen. What can you say to this honest Man here, your Son?

Mr. Just. Dolben. I'll warrant she will say he is honest still.

Mr. Att. Gen. But here are a Company of People would make him a dishonest Man.

Mrs. Bolton Sen. Sir Thomas Gascoigne said he was as truthful a Servant as ever he had in his Life.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Did you hear him say so?

Mrs. Bolton Sen. I heard him say so in his own Chamber.

Mr. Just. Dolben. When?

Mrs. Bolton Sen. After he was married: And besides, Sir Thomas did say he would do any thing he could for him, in relation he had been a true Servant to him.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Call Mr. Phiswick again. (He appeared.) Look ye, Sir, you are a Man that I see hath been trusted by all the Family of the Gascoignes, and you know in what Reputation he was.

Mr. Phiswick. Sir, while I was his Fellow-servant, I knew no Ill by him.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Was he accounted an honest Man?

Mr. Phiswick. I can say nothing to the contrary.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Then, my Lord, to conclude, I desire to speak a word. On the one side here is an ancient Gentleman's Life in Question, and that or his Death are to be the Issue of this Cause; on the other Side, here is the Discovery of a Plot upon which all our Lives, our Religion, and the Life of our King depend. It did require your Patience, and you have yielded it. Where lies the Question? If these Witnesses that have been examined be believed, there is no Question but he is highly guilty of the Plot: The Witnesses tell you, when there was no talk of the Plot, there was a Preparation of a false and fraudulent Conveyance to be drawn by Advice of Counsel; and why was this made? Left he should forfeit his Estate. This is proved in the beginning. You find next a Meeting of the Priests, and there what they did do: does not concern this Gentleman at the Bar, till he took Notice of it, and then joined in it, and approved of it, and did declare it was a worthy Plot, a meritorious Plot for the Good of the Church, and at last particularly he would give 1000*l.* to Bolton to destroy the King and murder him. The other Witness agrees with him. And what is said against all this? They have call'd and examined I think nineteen or twenty Witnesses, three touching the threatening of his Wife, but that falls out to be nothing; two Alehouse-keepers that stood at the bottom of the Stairs, and overheard their Discourse; but you have all heard how they have contradicted one another, they had not agreed well enough together on their Story. All that the rest do is meant thus, and so far they make something of it, that there should be a Debt due from this Bolton to this Gentleman, and so it were some Contrivance as if he would do it by way of Revenge; it does fall out many times that Men do quarrel, but this is a Business of another Nature. They say that he should threaten he would serve him a Trick, or there were some such Words; but under Favour, the Question is of the Truth of his Testimony; now it is not likely, that they knew what his Testimony would be; and there is nothing against the other Witness that concurs with him, but the Fellows that were upon the Stairs, that talk one of one part of the Stairs, and the other of the other. The Matter is clearly, Whether the Witnesses be to be believed, or whether there be any thing sufficient offered to take off their Testimony. You will be pleased to observe as to what was spoken about the Money and the Nunnery: We brought you a Letter from the Priest who was mention'd to be one of them at the Meeting, Pracid, that writes and dates his Letter from the Place the Witness speaks of, and there you will observe that in one of the Letters 'tis express'd; If England be converted, (there is the main of the Plot) for all I suppose goes to that Purpose. Pray who thought of England's Conversion at that Time? What led them into that, but a Conscience of a Design to convert England? My Lord, another piece of a Letter there is concerning the Oath of Allegiance, you have heard it read, and every body knows what the Meaning of it is; it is the Engine of the Jesuits, that if they can but draw Men off from their Fidelity to the King, whereof there is no Testimony so great as the Oath of Allegiance, they need not use so much of Equivocation; but that is an abominable Thing, and not to be endured, to go take off the Strength of that Oath that hath been taken by Men more honest than the rest, and not suffering the rest to take it at all: And it is a damnable Thing that they should alient the King is an Heretic, and the Pope has deposed him, therefore it is meritorious to kill him: But you have heard the Evidence fully, and it needs no Aggravation.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I think the Evidence hath been already repeated by Mr. Serj. Maynard; and, my Lord, I think there is nothing in this Case, but only the Credit of the Witnesses; for if they be to be believed, there is an Evidence as full as can be. I know your Lordship observes how it is introduced, how they are fortify'd in some Circumstances, which Sir Thomas did at first deny. They tell you, that he had a pious Intent to found a Nunnery, and did proceed so far as to make a Settlement; this was deny'd by Sir Tho. Gascoigne, but hath been verified, and made out by his own Books and Letters writ to him, which were found in his own Custody. This did Sir Thomas Gascoigne do with an Expectation of a sudden Change; for the Letters do declare, that England was to be converted, as they called it, and therefore they had settled their Matters in order, and they thought fit to insert that Proviso in the Settlement, That if England should be converted, then the Money was to be disposed to and so. But your Lordship likewise observes, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, what other Correspondence Sir Thomas Gascoigne had with one Cornwallis or Pracid a Priest. He receives a Letter which shews you what the Principles of all the Catholics are, how far they have proceeded to take away even the Oath of Allegiance, and the Consequence of that how far it will go, when they think themselves obliged in Conscience to cast off Fidelity to their Prince; and what Mischief may ensue no Man knows, but we may in part imagine. You have already had sufficient Discovery to make out the Use of this instilled Principle, and that is the Design to kill the King; for this you hear what the Evidence say. Mr. Bolton, one of them; is sent to the Priest to be instructed by him; and by him was chid for offering to go against their Principles to take the Oath, and told him he was damned for so doing. And presently after he was examined by Sir Thomas Gascoigne upon some Discourse with him what Rushion had said, who had moved him likewise to kill the King, as he says. Sir Tho. Gascoigne knew to what Purpose he sent him thither, not only to renounce the Oath of Allegiance, but to carry on the Design which he had in hand, and did introduce, by laying aside the Oath, and tells him he must engage in the Design to kill the King. He examines him what the other had spoke to him of, and he said he knew it was more than bare chiding of him for taking the Oath of Allegiance; and he told him for his better Encouragement to go on; that if he would undertake, he should have 1000*l.* And this is the Sum of Bolton's Evidence, as to Sir Thomas Gascoigne. What then says Mowbray, the second Witness? He was so faithful a Servant, and so diligent, that he was employed by Rushion the Confessor to attend him at the Altar; and being in service immediately about him, and he being by that means so dear to him, waited upon him in his Chamber, and was privy to all the Consultations held there. And he gives you an Account how long this Plot hath been in Agitation, for they had been discoursing a good while of it; and resolved it should be done, if not by fair Means, by foul, and tells you plainly by killing the King: And that he heard Sir Thomas Gascoigne himself declare that it was a meritorious Act to kill the King; and that as before he had the Oath of Secrecy given him by Rushion, so he did declare (which Mowbray standing at the Door heard) that he would never swerve from the Oath, but he would assist to the utmost of his Power; and they that were with him said, they would stand by it with their Lives and Fortunes; and when my Lady Tempest understood he was there, and was jealous of him, she bid him go down, and entertain the Guests below Stairs. So here is an Evidence from two Witnesses as full as can be in any Case, that Sir Tho. Gascoigne was privy to the Conspiracy, and himself Partaker of it, to kill the King. All that hath been said against 'em, is to vilify their Reputation. As to Mowbray I hear but little, only there are two Witnesses that touch him; and indeed if these Witnesses were to be believed, they say a great deal; that is, they were in an Alehouse together, and heard them conspire to take away the Life of Sir Thomas Gascoigne. Indeed Mowbray said, for Sir Thomas Gascoigne, I know nothing but that he is a very honest Gentleman, but for my Lady Tempest, if I could hang her I would: That they should hear them contrive this together, and conspire how they should take away the Lives of this Gentleman, and the others. Indeed, if these Men say true, 'tis a great Matter to take off the Credit of their Testimony; but you heard, Gentlemen, how they did vary; for the one said, as I apprehended, at first he was in the Room, afterwards he was below Stairs. Ask the one, Could you hear them? Yes. Could you see them? No; said the other Yes. So that they were not well provided, as to that Matter, nor had they consulted that Point well, where they should agree to stand to overhear the Matter. Now if that be likely, they should in the Presence of two Persons whom they did not know, and one of them they never saw, but in the Court, declare and discourse of such a Matter as this for the taking away the Life of Sir Thomas Gascoigne, then we have nothing to say to them, we must leave the Credit of that to you; you will observe their Variety in the Story, and the Improbability of the Thing. But then for Mr. Bolton, the Evidence against him is, that he is a very dishonest Man, and that this is all out of Malice to Sir Thomas Gascoigne, because he would sue him upon his Bonds. You observe how he does behave himself under that Prosecution; all that he hath he is willing to part with for Payment of his Debt; he makes over his Estate for Satisfaction and Security, and does as much as an honest Man can do, all he had shall lie at stake: And as for Sir Thomas Gascoigne himself, he hath no such Opinion of him in point of Dishonesty, for he declared he lived in his Service without Exception, and said before the Council, he knew nothing of Dishonesty by him, but only this Information, and now he found him to be (what he always thought) a great Fool. Now whether he thought him a Fool for telling this Story, or what else, you may explain the Meaning of his Expression; but as for any thing of Dishonesty, there is nothing against Mr. Bolton. He was in Debt, 'tis true, but what he had lay at Stake for the Payment of it, and as far as it would go Sir Thomas might take it; but that for Malice he should come to swear against him, there is nothing clearly made out. One Witness says indeed, that he should say, Does Sir Thomas Gascoigne intend to sue me, then I will do what I did not intend to do. Whether that be a Speech of Malice or no, or rather does confirm the Truth of his Evidence, is left to your Consideration: It shews rather, there was something that he had in his Power to do before any Prosecution from Sir Thomas Gascoigne, or any occasion of his Malice against him; it hath not the necessary Import of a malicious Speech, that he did intend not to do such a Thing, and because he was sued did do it; that therefore is only Truth, and no Malice. For the other Matter that is said against him, that he should endeavour to suborn his Wife to swear falsely, that was by no means fully proved, but rather that Matter hath been sufficiently clear'd; that though she said she knew nothing, yet he would have her go, though she said nothing; and you hear what the Evidence hath been for Mr. Bolton, that he never did press her to swear falsely, nor threaten her if she would not, but only desired her to declare her Knowledge if she knew any Thing, the Truth, and nothing but the Truth. These are all the Objections made against the Credit of the Witnesses; and I think if their Credit do stand, you cannot have a clearer Evidence to convict any one than hath been given you to Day; but that we leave to you, and submit these Objections, whether they have any Weight in them, and whether they have not been fully answered.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. And our Evidence is given in all upon Oath, and theirs is not.

Mr. Just. Jones. Gentlemen, you of the Jury: The Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted for High-Treason, and for High-Treason of the highest Nature, for conspiring to take away the Life of the King, and for endeavouring to change the Religion, the Protestant Religion into Popery; that is, contriving to extirpate the Religion of Protestantism here, and introduce Popery instead of it; and certainly greater Crimes than these no Man can be accused of. There have been produced, on the Behalf of the King, two Witnesses, Mr. Bolton and Mr. Mowbray, both of them Servants to Sir Thomas Gascoigne, the Prisoner, and therefore might very possibly and probably enough be privy to all they have said and testified ified in this Case. It does appear by them both, that Sir Thomas Gascoigne was a very early Man in the Plot (if they say true). We heard nothing of it till the Long Vacation (78); but it seems Sir Thomas Gascoigne was a Plotter and Conspirator in the Year 75 or 76. And that he might be able to do this somewhat more safely, he contrives how he might convey away his Estate to prevent the Forfeiture; and he makes an Assurance of it to Sir William Ingelby, colourably, as the Witnesses swear, for 1000 l. And it does appear likewise, as to the Introduction of the Popish Religion here, they began to settle a Nunnery, and it was fit to do so against England should be converted; first, in such a Place; but if it happened England were converted, then to be removed to another Place. There was at this Nunnery appointed an Abbess, an Assistant, and several Nuns; and Sir Tho. Gascoigne so well knew of this, that one of them that was appointed to be a Nun, at the time of her taking Horse, he said to her, There goes an old Maid and a young Nun. And there are Letters come from that very Nunnery, and from the Priest that was appointed to attend them as Confessor, which have been read to you. And there is another Preparation thought necessary to introduce this Plot; and that is, That all Papists might be seduced into an Opinion that it was a dangerous thing to take the Oath of Allegiance, and that it was a damnable Sin. For this Purpose Letters came from the Doctors at Sorbonne, and they determine it to be so; lest any Man of that Religion should be so good a Subject as to profess Obedience to the King in Temporals. Then the Plot goes on between Sir Miles Stapleton, Sir Francis Hungart, Sir Charles Vavasor, Sir Tho. Gascoigne, Mr. Gascoigne, Middleton, Rushton, my Lady Tempest, and a great Company more; all met together and consulting in Sir Tho. Gascoigne's House, in his great Room, his old Dining-Room, to this Purpose, not only to bring in their Religion, but kill the King expressly (so says the Witnesses). I think they had often talked of it before the Witnesses in the Priest's Chamber; for he being then a Papist was privy to his Master's Design, and the rest of the Confederates, for killing the King, which was the only thing they desired to effect, as the best way to bring in their Religion; and there was great Reason to do it, they said too, for the King had not kept his Word with them when he was in his Exile; for they said, he had promised, if he was restored to his Kingdoms, he would restore the Popish Religion; but now he was returned and had broke his Promise, and nothing more was to be done, the Pope having declared him an Heretick, but to destroy him; and this was that which was agreed among them. The 30th of May last, after divers other Consults had about it, the Priest Rushton being at Sir Tho. Gascoigne's House, Bolron is desired to go into the Gallery, and there presently comes in Rushton, Sir Thomas's Priest; Bolron acquaints him that he had been at the Sessions, and taken the Oath of Allegiance. As soon as ever he heard it, he cries out, He had committed a damnable Sin, he must of necessity renounce it, and repent of it, and he could give him a Pardon, for he had an extraordinary Power, more Authority than others, he could give him Absolution if he did repent of it, and that no Catholick must by any means take the Oath. A while after they had a Discourse concerning killing the King; and the Witnesses says indeed, he was not actually in the Room, for he says he stood at the Door, and heard all the Discourse, till at last the Lady Tempest, one of the Conspirators, taking notice of his being there, sent him down Stairs.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. That is Mowbray.

Mr. Mowbray. I was called into the Room, and then sent down.

Mr. Just. Jones. 'Tis true, Brother, that was Mowbray: But as to Bolron's Discourse with Rushton; when Sir Tho. Gascoigne, who was not in the House at the time Bolron was with Rushton, but had given a Charge he should not go before he spoke with him: When he did come home and spoke with him, he takes upon him to go on with the Discourse concerning the Plot, and he swears positively that he offered he would give him 1000 l. and this he swears he should have paid him in London. This is expressly the Testimony of Bolron. Now what says Mowbray? He tells you (tho' that is but Introduction to make his Evidence more probable) that there was great Resort of Priests to the Prisoner's House. He tells you of the Discourse and Consultation the Priests had in the House, and that it was expressly and precisely for killing the King. He tells you, that he did stand at the Door and heard it, as I observed before; and he tells you too, which hath not been observed, that at that time there was produced a List of four or five hundred Persons that had engaged in the Design of killing the King: he did see the List, he did see Sir Tho. Gascoigne's Hand, which he very well knew and was acquainted with, and which might very well be, being his Servant. So that here is not only a Discourse and Agreement by Paroll, that he should be in the Conspiracy; but if you believe him, he says, that here is actually the Hand of Sir Thomas to the Engagement to do the Villainy; and truly they that were of that Persuasion at that time, might easily be induced to it. For it was agreed amongst them, that they should have a plenary Indulgence of 10000 Years, and it was a meritorious Act; and tho' Sir Thomas perhaps was not so ready to contribute in all Things, yet hearing of the Meritoriousness of the Act, and withal that he should be canonized for a Saint for this Piece of Piety, he certainly might readily consent to it. Mr. Mowbray indeed was ask'd, Why he did not discover it sooner? He tells you why, He was in fear of the Papists; he was threatened; and very like he might be possessed with Fear, and so might a Man of greater Constancy till the Business was discovered; and therefore he did not talk of it in the Country, but came up here, where it was more safe to discover it, and hath been here ever since. Besides this Testimony of these Witnesses, Gentlemen, there are some Papers produc'd, some that mention Money that hath been convey'd by Sir Thomas Gascoigne, in Confirmation of the Testimony of Bolron the first Witness, who does swear that he heard Sir Thomas say he would send 3000 l. to the Jesuits to go on and prosecute this Plot; and afterwards he did hear him say, he had sent the 3000 l. that he had promised. Now it does appear by Sir Thomas's Almanack, that he had sent several Sums; his Receiver Phiswick did speak of 6000 l. and he himself did give a Touch towards it. Indeed Phiswick was a Receiver for Sir Thomas, and likewise for his Son, and for the Lady Tempest; but it is impossible, if they had sent all the Money that ever they had; and considering too that the Lady Tempest, as appears by the Witnesses, lived in the Country, that it could have amounted to near that Sum of Money; for she had but 300 l. a-year, and the eldest Son had but 400 l. a-year; how then could 6000 l. be returned for them in four years time? 'Tis true, there is some Answer given as to that 3000 l. by that Witness Hobart, who says there was a Suit, and 100 l. a-year decreed to be paid to Mrs. Appleby, Sir Thomas's Niece, for so many Years; and he to take care of sending that to her: and tho' that was but 100 l. a-year; yet there was a Decree, or some Order, to pay the Arrears with the other Money, which made it up 3000 l.

The Evidence for the King against the Prisoner is but two Witnesses, but they as positive and express as possibly can be: What then is said by the Prisoner, or the Witnesses, in his Defence? There is one, that is Shippen, that gives some Testimony against the very Evidence, and the Possibility of it to be true in one part of it: For Bolron, he tells you, that the 30th of May was the time when there was that Consult held at Sir Tho. Gascoigne's in the Gallery with the Priest, that he staid there till Night, and that then Sir Thomas talked with him, and made this Proffer to him for the Murder and Destruction of the King. Here comes a Witness, Shippen, and tells you, that that very 30th of May, Bolron was at his House at 2 o'clock, and staid an Hour or two after Sun-Set. If that were true that he were there all that time, it is not then true that he speaks of about Sir Thomas Gascoigne; and it was impossible that he should be at the Consult at that time when he says he was there, and afterwards spoke to Sir Thomas Gascoigne. Now, Gentlemen, you have the King's Witnesses upon his Oath; he that testifies against him is barely upon his Word, and he is a Papist too, for that he was ask'd, and he did confess himself so. I do not say that a Papist is no Witness, a Papist is a Witness, and he is a Witness in a Papist Cause, and for a Papist; but I must tell you, there is less Credit to be given to a Papist in a Cause of this Nature, who can easily believe they may have Indulgences and Pardons enough for saving one from the Gallows who is to be canonized for a Saint if the Plot take effect. He hath only affirmed it who is a Papist, the other who is a Protestant swears what his Evidence is.

Mr. Babbington, who was the first Witness examined for the Prisoner, he tells you there had been some Debates and Differences about Rent and Money that was owing by Bolron to the Prisoner. He laboured and interceded often on his Behalf; but at length not being able to prevail that he should not be sued, the Witness swears, I will then do that which I did not intend to do. What he meant by it is doubtful, and it is an ambiguous Speech; but to interpret it that he would swear falsely to take away a Man's Life, and so commit both Murder and Perjury, is hard to infer and conclude from such doubtful Words. There are some Witnesses that tell you, that is, Moor and others, that Bolron did say and swear that Sir Tho. Gascoigne was never concerned in the Plot: That might very well be, especially if you take the Time when he did say this, he was a Papist a great while after Sir Thomas had engaged himself in the Plot; and while he was so, it is not unlike he would venture an Oath to save any of the same Persuasion and Religion he himself was of. But whatsoever he said, it was not judicially, he was not bound to discover to him he spoke to; he is now upon his Oath, and you have heard what an express Testimony he gives. As to what is said concerning his Wife, that he should endeavour to persuade her, contrary to her Knowledge, to give Testimony against Sir Tho. Gascoigne, and therefore he is not to be believed here upon his own Oath, who would have his Wife forswear herself to fortify him; there is no such Thing; and it does appear by the Evidence of those that are sworn, that he was earnest, and would have his Wife go and testify her Knowledge; but did not infuse or intimate any thing to her she should say, whether she did know it or no: And to assure you that, you have the Oath of the Woman herself, who hath been present here, and tells you the same thing. Dixon he comes and says, in August last, Mowbray said he knew nothing of the Prisoner, which may be answered by his Fear; but concerning the two Witnesses that Mr. Solicitor did take notice, he did tell you, and 'tis plain, how very improbable it was two Persons should speak in the Presence of Strangers, and tell them they were about to take away the Life of another Person, the one of the Lady Tempest, who had done him a Displeasure, the other of Sir Tho. Gascoigne; but Mowbray at that time said he knew nothing of Sir Tho. Gascoigne; but, Gentlemen, besides what was said before, this is improbable any such thing should be, and you hear the Witnesses, at least one of them, that he never knew one of the two.

Mr. Bolron. I knew neither of them.

Mr. Just. Jones. I should be very loth to omit any thing on the Witnesses side, or that hath been materially testified against them on the Prisoner's. I did not conceive the Evidence given by Mr. Pebles to come to any thing at all. There was a Discourse between Bolron and him at last Affizes; after some Talk Bolron tells him he had something to say to him, and what was it? Bolron was told that he had discharged some Persons that he ought not to do, (excused them for Money that did not take the Oath of Allegiance as they ought to have done) and it seems he did it here, and so far he went as to bring Witnesses before the Justices of Peace to prove it. And although they did not give Evidence against Mr. Pebles in that very Particular, yet certainly he thought they would have said something; but that does not argue at all, that because he did accuse Mr. Pebles (as he thought justly in that Particular), therefore that now he should falsely accuse Sir Thomas in a Matter that concerns his Life so highly. There are some other Things that were said by the Witnesses that would tend towards the proving of some Malice in the Witnesses towards Sir Tho. Gascoigne, and therefore they give in this Evidence; One thing indeed was spoken by Hickeringil; that is, it was generally reported in the Country, that Mowbray had taken away Money from Sir Thomas Gascoigne, and that Mowbray himself said, that as they had endeavoured to take away his Fame and Life, now he had found an Opportunity to requite them, so saith the Witness, but 'tis not very probable. I leave it with you upon the Credit of the Witnesses for the King, who have sworn it upon their Oaths, and the others that go upon their Words, and not their Oaths, whether they have taken away the Force and Strength of the King's Evidence, which is as full, express, and positive as can be by two Witnesses.

Gentlemen, here is on the one Side the Life of an ancient Gentleman before you; on the other side there is a Conspiracy against the Life of the King, who is the Breath of our Nostrils, and whom God long preserve. I know you being upon your Oaths will take into your Considerations both, and give a Verdict according to the Evidence you have heard.

Mr. Just. Dolben. I will tell you, Gentlemen, I cannot forbear saying one thing to you. There is some Evidence that makes it a very improbable thing to be true what Mr. Bolton hath said; and yet Mr. Bolton having said it so positively, and Mowbray agreeing with it, Probabilities must give way to positive Proofs. I saw you did observe it when it was mentioned; and 'tis true, to me it seems improbable, that at the very same time that Sir Tho. Gascoigne should sue him upon his Bond, and take a Course to turn him out of his House, that he should then be privy to such a Conspiracy; 'tis improbable either that Sir Thomas should offer him such a Sum of Money to kill the King, or if he had, that he should afterwards take that Course at Law against him. Now for that I say this to you, You are to give a Verdict according to your Evidence. They have such Secret Contrivances amongst themselves, (and he was a Papist at that time) that where there are two Men that positively tell you a thing that lies within their own Knowledge, and swear it is true, it is scarce any Improbability that should weigh against such an Evidence.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. And, Gentlemen, consider withal as to that; for truly my Brother Dolben hath rightly minded you of that Improbability, for it was no more: But then you must consider all the Circumstances. 'Tis indeed at the first Blush improbable that a Man would communicate so great a Secret to another, if he did intend to sue him for Money he ow'd him; but then 'tis likewise as improbable that he would provoke him by a Suit, if his Life were in his Hand; but consider the delivering of the Lease of Ejectment, and those things were the 13th of June.

Mr. Babbington. But I had sued him before, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolben. The 2d of June, he says.

Mr. Babbington. I had Direction long before I did it.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. They threaten'd him the 2d, but they did not do it. But look you, Gentlemen, consider this; I do not doubt but Sir Thomas Gascoigne was sure that this Man durst not discover any Thing of this, for they had given him the Sacrament and an Oath of Secrecy, which they look upon as a Tie among themselves, as long as they continue in that Religion, not upon any Account whatsoever to be undone; and they have such confidence in it, that they will trust their Lives and every thing in a Man's Hand when they have given that Oath. Alas! how could these People have the Confidence to plot one with another, as they do, when they know their Lives are in the Hands of any one of all the rest, but upon this Account? Do but swear them unto Secrecy, and give them the Sacrament of the Mass upon it, and then they think such a one is Proof enough against any Thing in the World, for that is Damnation if they break it, as their Priests tell them; but I doubt not but Sir Thomas thought he had them as fast as can be upon that Lock. But as to Sir Thomas's Evidence of those two Men at Leeds, this is after the Accusation of Sir Thomas that they spake of; and can any Man alive believe that they would go and plot to contrive the Death of these two Persons in the Face of two Strangers, after he was accused? 'Tis so strange an Evidence, that no Man alive can believe it to be Truth. Look you, Gentlemen, Persons that go to contrive such things as these are, go in secret; and hope they should never be discovered, but by one of themselves. Who would contrive when two be by? and, if they say true, might see them as well as hear them? though they did contradict one another in their Evidence; the one said he was above, the other said he was below; the one said he might see them, the other not. Look you, Gentlemen, I do see that they do lay some Stress upon this, that he was his Debtor, for that they seem to prove by their Witnesses; but you must lay no great Stress upon that at all, for the Money were not quit if Sir Thomas were found guilty; the Money is due to the King then; he saves nothing by it, his Money must be paid; let the Prisoner be found guilty or not guilty, 'tis all one to him. You must consider this Case, Gentlemen: If you believe these Men are perjured Men, and have gone and contriv'd a malicious Design against a Man's Life, then God forbid they should be believed any way: but it is a positive Evidence; and 'tis not an Evidence barely of itself, but introduced by a great many Circumstances that went before; they tell you the whole Affair, that it does seem they have been privy to the Affairs of these Jesuits all along, and Sir Tho. Gascoigne's House hath it seems abounded with them; he hath been very beneficial to that Sort of People, mighty charitable, as they call it, in Superstition; and you must consider, that nothing can seem strange to them that will be ridden by Priests; they put them upon all the Immoralities and Villainies that can be found out for the Cause of Religion, as they call it; nothing can seem strange that is testified against them. Therefore I must leave it to you, upon what you have heard, and upon their Credit, whether you believe the Witnesses or not.

Mr. Just. Jones. Ay, 'tis left upon their Credit that are your own Countrymen, better known to you than us.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Look you, Sir Thomas Hodson, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, if you will come in again in any time we will stay in Court, otherwise you must lie by it all Night, for we can take no privy Verdict in this Case.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Ay, we will stay and hear Motions a little while.

Then the Jury withdrew from the Bar, and after half an Hour returned again, and being call'd over gave their Verdict thus:

Cl. of Cr. Sir Thomas Gascoigne, hold up thy Hand. Look upon the Prisoner: How say you? Is he Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Did he fly for it?

Foreman. Not that we know of.

Then the Verdict was recorded, and the Court rose.

XCVI. The Trial of ELIZABETH CELLIER, at the King's Bench for High-Treason, June the 11th, 1680. Trin. 32 Car. II.

After the Jury were sworn, the Clerk of the Crown read the Indictment, viz.

THE Jurors of our Lord the King do present, that Elizabeth Cellier, Wife of Peter Cellier, late of the Parish of St. Clement Danes in the County of Middlesex, Gent. stands Indicted, for that she as a false Traitoress against our most Illustrious and Excellent Prince, King Charles II. her natural Lord, not having God before her Eyes, not weighing the Duty of her Allegiance, but by the Instigation of the Devil moved and seduced, and the cordial Love and true due natural Obedience which all faithful Subjects of our said Lord the King towards him should bear, and of right are bound to bear, utterly withdrawing, and devising, and with all her Might intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom to disturb, and to bring and put our said Lord the King to Death and final Destruction, and the true Worship of God in this Realm by the Law establish'd and used, to alter to the Superstition of the Church of Rome; to move and stir up War against the King in this Kingdom, and to subvert the Government of this Realm; the first Day of November, in the thirty-first Year of the said King's Reign, at the Parish of St. Clement Danes aforesaid, with divers other false Traitors unknown, traiterously did compass, imagine, and intend the Killing, Death and final Destruction of our said Lord the King, and to change, alter, and utterly to subvert the ancient Government of this Realm, and to depose, and wholly to deprive him the said King of his Crown and Government of this Kingdom, and to extirpate the true Religion within this Realm establish'd; and to fulfil and accomplish the same most wicked Treasons and traitorous Imaginations and Purposes, the same Elizabeth Cellier, and other false Traitors unknown, the said first Day of November, in the thirty first-Year aforesaid, with Force and Arms, &c. at the Parish of St. Clement Danes aforesaid, advisedly, devilishly, maliciously, and traiterously assembled, united, and gathered themselves together, and then and there devilishly, advisedly, maliciously, cunningly, and traiterously consulted and agreed to bring the said Lord the King to Death and final Destruction, and to depose and deprive him of his Crown and Government, and so introduce and establish the Romish Religion in this Kingdom; and the sooner to fulfil and effect the same most wicked Treasons and traitorous Imaginations and Purposes, the said Elizabeth Cellier, and other unknown Traitors, then and there did contribute, pay and expend divers great Sums of Money to several unknown Persons, to procure them traiterously to kill the said King, and introduce the Romish Religion in this Realm; and for the better concealing of the Treasons aforesaid, the said Elizabeth Cellier then and there did pay and expend to divers other Persons unknown, divers other Sums of Money, falsely to impose the said Treasons upon some other Persons unknown, against the Duty of her Allegiance, and against the Peace of our Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in such Case made and provided, &c.

John Gadbury Sworn.

L. C. J. Mr. Gadbury, What do you know concerning Sir William Scroggs this Plot?

Mr. Gadbury. I know nothing of it, neither one way nor another.

L. C. J. Do you know of any Contrivance of Mrs. Cellier's to kill the King?

Mr. Gadbury. No, rather the contrary.

L. C. J. Do you know of any Attempts to change the Government?

Mr. Gadbury. I will tell your Lordship what I do know, if these Gentlemen will not be too nimble for me. I have suffer'd a great deal of Prejudice of late in relation to a Plot, as if I had known of a Plot; but God is my Witness, I know of none, unless it were a Plot to bring Sir Robert Peyton over to the King's Interest. That Plot I had some concern in, and had some Knowledge of Mrs. Cellier's Concern in it; but she was so far from doing any Thing against the King's Interest, that she was willing to bring over with him the three Gentlemen turn'd out of Commission when Sir Robert was. So that how she could be acting for the King and against the King at the same Time, I do not understand.

L. C. J. Mr. Gadbury, you are a Man of Learning, pray will you give your Testimony of the Things that you know in relation to Mrs. Cellier.

Mr. Gadbury. Mrs. Cellier was not committed upon my Accusation; therefore, I hoped she might have been tried without my Testimony. But when I was in danger of my Life, when I lay in the Gate-House, Mrs. Cellier was reported to be a third Witness against me, and then I raked up every Trifle; but if I had thought it Treason, I would have discovered it before. And as to that particular Business concerning Mr. Smith, that Smith some time since did come to me, being my old Acquaintance, to ask my Advice in his Affairs; and he had then an Affair of so great Moment, that it was necessary to ask my Advice in it, which was to go to the Lords in the Tower. I asked him, what to do? Saith he, I can say enough against Dr. Oates to serve them, and take off his Evidence, and asked me if he should do it. By no means, Mr. Smith, said I. Mrs. Cellier Cellier afterwards told me this Smith and one Phillips were willing to tell some Stories or other of Mr. Oates and Mr. Bedloe, and I told her this very Story; saith she, You being acquainted with him, it is possible you may do some good upon him; and saith she, I had as lieve as ten Guineas that you could do it.

L. C. J. That is, when that you advised Mr. Smith not to meddle with any thing against Dr. Oates.

Mr. Gadbury. She said, she did not care if she had been at the Charge of ten Guineas, if he would be honest and discover the Truth. And, my Lord, she did say she had heard Mr. Dangerfield talk of a Nonconformists Plot that would off the Popish Plot.

L. C. J. Did she say that she had heard Dangerfield say there was a Nonconformists Plot, and that he was to have a Commission among them? And did she say, that she had heard him say, that he hoped under the Colour of that the Popish Plot would go on? Or did she say it of her own accord, that she hoped that would carry on the Popish Plot?

Mr. Gadbury. My Lord, I cannot remember Particulars.

L. C. J. There is a great deal of difference between Dangerfield's saying it, and her saying it.

Mr. Gadbury. I have no reason to spare her: But I am unwilling to speak any thing that is contrary to Truth, though she hath done me the greatest Injury in the World.

L. C. J. How came you to talk of a Nonconformists Plot?

Mr. Gadbury. It was only common Discourse, as it was at Coffee-Houses.

Mr. Just. Raymond. Had you heard of it before she spake of it, that you say it was common?

Mr. Gadbury. No, not till she spake of it.

L. C. J. Did Mrs. Cellier tell you of any Popish Priests or Jesuits coming hither from beyond the Seas?

Mr. Gadbury. Upon the going over of one Clay, I think she did say she heard there were some more coming over.

L. C. J. What to do?

Mr. Gadbury. God knows what.

L. C. J. Did she speak of any Plot or Contrivance to kill the King?

Mr. Gadbury. No, she was always an Enemy to Plots, or else I would not have kept her company.

L. C. J. Did she say there were, or that she heard there were several Priests and Jesuits coming over?

Mr. Gadbury. My Lord, I think she said she heard it. And I have said several times to her, the Popish Plotters would be destroyed: But she answered, she was afraid the Nation would be destroyed first.

L. C. J. Did she say she was afraid of it, or that the Nation would be destroyed first? I ask you once more, we must try People according to their Oaths. By the Oath you have taken, when you said you thought the Popish Plotters would be destroyed, what Answer did she make?

Mr. Gadbury. She said she was afraid the Nation would be so; because she said, abundance of the best of the Nation went into other Nations, to weaken our Nation, and spend their Money, and therefore she was afraid the Nation would be destroyed before them.

L. C. J. What Discourse had you with Mrs. Cellier passing through Westminster-Abbey?

Mr. Gadbury. My Lord, my Memory hath been exceedingly bruised; but I remember, my Lord, as I was going through the Abbey in a rainy Afternoon, she said, this Abbey was formerly filled with Benedictine Monks, or something to that purpose; and, saith she, what if it should be so again?

L. C. J. Are you a Protestant or a Papist?

Mr. Gadbury. A Protestant, my Lord.

L. C. J. He talks as like a Papist as can be, was it, what if it should be filled?

Mr. Gadbury. She said, what if it should be again?

L. C. J. What did you say to that?

Mr. Gadbury. I only smiled to hear a Woman's Discourse, my Lord.

L. C. J. You make all the Company laugh: What did she say of the Temple?

Mr. Gadbury. That the Temple had been filled with Friars too.

L. C. J. And what then? Did she talk of filling it again?

Mr. Gadbury. Saith she, this Place was filled with Benedictine Monks, and the Temple with Friars.

L. C. J. This may do well enough: But what did she say else concerning the Temple?

Mr. Gadbury. Nothing, my Lord.

Mr. Serjeant Maynard said something to him here, which was not heard, but Mr. Gadbury replied,

Mr. Gadbury. Mr. Serjeant, I was none of the Tribe of Forty-one. Here Mr. Gadbury was going to read in his Paper; but the Court told him that would not be allowed; but he might refresh his Memory with it.

L. C. J. Now tell me what she said: Mr. Gadbury, keep it in your Hand.

Mr. Gadbury. My Lord, she put it by way of Interrogation to feel my Pulse.

L. C. J. What did she else?

Mr. Gadbury. There was nothing but transient Discourse, my Lord.

L. C. J. We must ask you what the Truth is, and you have looked upon your Paper. Now consider what you say, and consider that you are upon a solemn Occasion, and are to testify it in the Presence of God Almighty. I would have you tell plainly what it is, and neither to make it more, nor stifle it.

Mr. Gadbury. It was only transient Discourse.

L. C. J. Say what it was. Was it, This Place was once filled with Benedictine Monks?

Mr. Gadbury. She said that the Abbey had been filled with Benedictine Monks, as the Temple had with Friars.

Mr. Just. Jones. Look upon your Paper.

L. C. J. You have looked upon the Paper, and pray tell us what she said. Did she say she hoped to see this Place filled with Benedictines?

Mr. Gadbury. My Lord, I do not remember that Word Hope.

L. C. J. How long have you been acquainted with Mrs. Cellier?

Mr. Gadbury. Ten or a dozen Years.

L. C. J. Did she never ask you any Questions about the Life of the King?

Vol. III.

Mr. Gadbury. My Lord, when the King was very ill at Windsor, and all People were fearful that he would die, she did move the Question to me.

L. C. J. What Question?

Mr. Gadbury. To know, whether I thought his Majesty would live or die? But it was her fear that he would die.

L. C. J. Had you seen the King?

Mr. Gadbury. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. How then did she expect you should give her an Answer? From your Art?

Mr. Gadbury. From my Art, my Lord!

L. C. J. Did she desire you to consult your Art, how long the King would live?

Mr. Gadbury. She did as I said.

L. C. J. What did you say to that?

Mr. Gadbury. I would not tell her, because he was my Sovereign.

L. C. J. What answer did you make?

Mr. Gadbury. I told her I would not meddle with it.

L. C. J. She would have had you consult your Art or Scheme, or whatever it is, to know whether the King would live or die?

Mr. Gadbury. It was something of that.

L. C. J. And you said you would not meddle nor make with it?

Mr. Gadbury. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. She desired you to make a Scheme?

Mr. Gadbury. No, my Lord, I can't say she mentioned a Scheme, but she asked the Question.

Mr. Just. Raymond. What did she ask else?

Mr. Gadbury. Only that Question.

L. C. J. How often do you believe she spake of it?

Mr. Gadbury. Never, my Lord, but when he was ill. I will not baffle any thing that may conduce to the Safety of the King and Kingdom.

L. C. J. Indeed it is very conducive to the Safety of the King and Kingdom, if any go about to destroy him, and with evil Intentions to ask how long he will live, and you ought in Duty to God and your Sovereign to declare it. Did she ever make any Enquiries about the King's Death more than what you have said?

Mr. Gadbury. No more, my Lord; and then she was fearful he would die.

L. C. J. Did she say she would go to somebody else?

Mr. Gadbury. My Lord, when she perceived me shy, she said, I see you are afraid of me, I will go to some other Astrologer.

L. C. J. For what?

Mr. Gadbury. To satisfy her Curiosity, as a great many do.

L. C. J. What Curiosities did she ask besides this?

Mr. Gadbury. She would ask me sometimes about the Condition of Bodies, Whether they would be prosperous in the World, and several other Questions.

L. C. J. Were you nice in these Curiosities?

Mr. Gadbury. Truly, my Lord, I was shy of meddling with any thing, when I heard there was a Talk about Plots.

L. C. J. Was you nice to give her Satisfaction according to her Hopes concerning these Things you call Curiosities, questioning whether one should be well wed, how many Children she should have, &c. were you scrupulous in that?

Mr. Gadbury. I think I might not be nice in that very particular.

L. C. J. How came it, then, that she would go to another Astrologer?

Mr. Gadbury. She asked me something about Mr. Dangerfield.

L. C. J. For what?

Mr. Gadbury. How to get him out of Prison.

L. C. J. Pray how came she to say she would go to another Astrologer? You were not shy to give her an Answer to these Questions?

Mr. Gadbury. It was something about Mr. Dangerfield, my Lord, she asked me something about some Deeds or Papers which he was to search for, or seize, which concerned Mr. Bedloe.

L. C. J. She had better have gone to one of the Clerks than to a Conjuror for them. But why would she go to another Astrologer?

Mr. Gadbury. Because I was shy.

L. C. J. You were not shy in these Things about Bedloe. Did she not say, when you refused to meddle with the Death of the King, that she would go to another Astrologer?

Mr. Gadbury. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did you any thing for her at that time?

Mr. Gadbury. My Lord, I did calculate a Scheme, which since I found to be for Mr. Dangerfield, but I knew not for whom it was when I did it.

L. C. J. How! Can you apply one Scheme to any body?

Mr. Gadbury. My Lord, when Mrs. Cellier came to me, she gave me the time of a Person's Nativity, and I set the Figure of the Heavens to that Sign, to know whether he were a Person fit to be trusted, her Husband being a French Merchant, to get in Money.

L. C. J. For aught you know, Dangerfield was a Woman, and the Question was, Whether Dangerfield was with Child, and he happens to be a Man—How did it fall out?

Mr. Gadbury. I have forgotten, my Lord.

L. C. J. When did you know it was for Dangerfield?

Mr. Gadbury. My Lord, never before I came before the King and Council; neither did I know his Name before, for he went by the Name of Willoughby before.

L. C. J. What other Discourse had you with her? Did she not at any time talk of Mr. Dugdale?

Mr. Gadbury. She did say she had heard of some People that were to discourse with Mr. Dugdale; she had heard such a thing, but I don't know whether she knew any thing of it or no.

L. C. J. What Discourse had you about that?

Mr. Gadbury. She told me there was a Woman to go down to Windsor to beg Mr. Dugdale's Pardon, for he was penitent for what he had said in some Trial or other.

L. C. J. Call another Witness.

Mr. Att. Gen.* Mr. Dangerfield, pray give the Court Sir Creswel an Account of what you know of Mrs. Cellier, the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mrs. Cellier. My Lord, I except against that Witness.

L. C. J. Why so? You must shew some Reason, and then we will do you Justice in God's Name.

F

Mrs. Cellier.

Mrs. Cellier. If I can prove he was whipp'd and transported, pilloried, perjured, &c. he is no Witness. The last time I was upon my Trial, he threatened some of my Witnesses, that if they would not swear as he would have them, he would kill them.

L. C. J. If you can shew any Record whereby he is convicted of any thing that can by Law take away his Testimony, do it.

Mrs. Cellier. He has been indicted for Burglary.

L. C. J. (to Mr. Dangerfield) Was you indicted for Burglary?

Mr. Dangerfield. I will take it at their Proof.

Ralph Briscoe, a Witness for the Defendant, Sworn.

L. C. J. Do you know Dangerfield?

Briscoe. I remember one Thomas Dangerfield; I saw him burnt in the Hand at the Old-Bailey.

L. C. J. Is this the same Man?

Briscoe. I do believe it is the same Man; but I have not seen him these several Years.

L. C. J. Let every body have their Right, in God's Name. Have you any more?

Mrs. Cellier. My Lord, I can prove him perjured.

L. C. J. Have you any Records to shew he was perjured? Is he convicted?

Mrs. Cellier. No.

L. C. J. Then you can't do it.

Mrs. Cellier. My Lord, I can prove him guilty of Forgery.

L. C. J. If you don't produce the Record, you do nothing.

Mr. Recorder. That which she calls Forgery, is not that which the Law calls Forgery; it is counterfeiting Guineas.

L. C. J. Can you shew he forged any Deeds? If you can prove that he hath committed Forgery, and be not convicted, it is no Error.

L. C. J. Have you your Pardon? She hath proved the Conviction of Felony, prove your Pardon.

Mrs. Cellier. I have the Copies of several Records here in Court, which will be sworn to.

To which Mr. Dangerfield pleaded his Majesty's most gracious Pardon. To which Mrs. Cellier replied, That she had a Copy of the said Pardon in Court, but it did not extend to some of the Crimes for which he stood convicted; and then produced a Record, wherein it did appear he was outlawed upon a Felony. Upon which the Court commanded Mr. Dangerfield to go and fetch his Pardon; in the interim examining several of the King's Witnesses.

Thomas Williamson Sworn.

L. C. J. Did you ever see Dangerfield and Mrs. Cellier in Company?

Williamson. No, my Lord, but I have been employ'd for Mrs. Cellier in several Businesses of Charity to get Prisoners out. When Mr. Dangerfield was in Newgate, she employed me to get him out.

L. C. J. Why was she so kind to Dangerfield?

Williamson. My Lord, I don't know that; but she bid me get him out, whosoever staid behind.

Mr. Just. Raymond. Why should she get him out? Did she tell you what she would do with him when she had him out?

Williamson. No, my Lord.

Mr. Recorder. We bring him for a Witness, that she had a great Kindness for Dangerfield.

Margaret Jenkins Sworn.

L. C. J. What Discourse have you heard between Dangerfield and Cellier?

Jenkins. I never saw them together but twice. It is a Year since I came from them.

L. C. J. When you saw them at Dinner or Supper together, what other Company was there?

Jenkins. Her Husband was with her one time.

L. C. J. What did they talk about?

Jenkins. They were talking about the Prisoners that were condemned.

L. C. J. Where was it, at her House?

Jenkins. No, at my Lady Powis's House.

L. C. J. How came you there?

Jenkins. I carried Notes backwards and forwards.

L. C. J. Did you never hear no Discourse about the Plot?

Jenkins. No.

Susan Edwards Sworn.

Mr. Recorder. What Intimacy have you known between Dangerfield and Mrs. Cellier?

L. C. J. Did you ever see them together?

Edwards. Yes, very often, my Lord. She said, That the Popish Plot would turn to a Presbyterian Plot.

L. C. J. Who did she say that to? To Dangerfield?

Edwards. No, my Lord; but I have heard him say those Words, and that he would make it his Interest it should be so.

L. C. J. What did you say to him, when he said he must turn Rogue, and discover all their Plots?

Edwards. I said, he would be no greater Rogue than he was before.

L. C. J. You were pretty nimble with him.

Edwards. He thought he should be hanged.

L. C. J. For what?

Edwards. If he did not turn Rogue he thought he should be hanged.

(Edwards to Mrs. Cellier.) You were very often together in your Chamber.

Mrs. Cellier. Who gave you your Clothes?

Edwards. Her Husband was gone to Church one Morning, and he was with her in her Chamber.

L. C. J. I can't see why you should prove this Matter too far.

Mr. Recorder. Susan is a civil young Woman.

Edwards. She said she would do my Business for me, and I go in danger of my Life.

Bennet Dowdal Sworn.

L. C. J. What do you know of any Intimacy between Dangerfield and Mrs. Cellier?

Dowdal. I have seen them together.

L. C. J. What did they talk about?

Dowdal. Mrs. Cellier proposed a Match between Mrs. Mary Agrey and I, and they used to talk of that when I was with them.

L. C. J. Did they talk of the Plot at any time?

Dowdal. No.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear them talk of the King?

Dowdal. No.

L. C. J. Have you any more?

Mr. Recorder. Not till Mr. Dangerfield comes.

L. C. J. (to Mrs. Cellier) Have you any Record to shew he was put in the Pillory?

Mrs. Cellier. Yes, my Lord.

Upon which the Copy of a Record from Salisbury was read, of his standing on the Pillory for uttering counterfeit Guineas: As also a Copy of a Record of an Outlawry for Felony.

L. C. J. What say you to this Outlawry?

Mr. Recorder. It is not the same Person.

L. C. J. We ought to be very careful in these Concerns, else we may do a Work this Day may make all the Kingdom rue it. It is a sad thing that People of a vicious profligate Life, both before they came to Newgate, and all along in their Life-time, should be suffered to be Witnesses to take away the Life of a Woman. I question whether he will come again, or no, he hath been gone a great while. Such are fit to be employed to find out, but hard to be believed when they find out.

L. C. J. Captain Richardson, is this the Man that broke Chelmsford Goal?

Capt. Richardson. My Lord, I can say nothing to that, but he was brought by an Habeas Corpus from thence to me.

L. C. J. Was he burnt in the Hand for Felony?

Capt. Richardson. Yes, my Lord, I believe he was.

L. C. J. He made me believe as tho' he would fly, I believe he is. We will not hood-wink our selves against such a Fellow as this, that is guilty of so notorious Crimes. A Man of Modesty, after he hath been in the Pillory, would not look a Man in the Face. It appears that after he hath been burnt in the Hand, he hath been Outlaw'd for Felony, and so it doth appear by Record.

After about half an Hour's Stay, Mr. Dangerfield returned and brought his Pardon; which was read, and the Word Felony omitted; and instead of Utlagaria qualiacunque pro Feloniis quibuscunque, there was only inserted; Omnia Maleficia & Utlagaria qualiacunque; which Omission had made the Pardon defective, it being my Lord Chief Justice his Opinion, that the Word Utlagaria did only reach to Outlawries between Party and Party; by which his Evidence was wholly laid aside.

L. C. J. (to Mr. Dangerfield) Such Fellows as you are, Sirrah, shall know we are not afraid of you.

He produces us here a Pardon by the Name of Thomas Dangerfield of Waltham, and says, his Father and Kinsman are both of that Name and Place. Will you have him sworn, whether his Father or Cousin Thomas were ever convicted of Felony? It is notorious enough what a Fellow this is, he was in Chelmsford Goal. I will shake all such Fellows before I have done with them. Have you any more to say? Are there any Waltham Men here?

Mr. Dangerfield. My Lord, this is enough to discourage a Man from ever entering into an honest Principle.

L. C. J. What? Do you with all Mischief that Hell hath in you, think to brave it in a Court of Justice? I wonder at your Impudence, that you dare look a Court of Justice in the Face, after having been made appear so notorious a Villain.

Mr. Just. Jones. Indeed, if he be the same Man, he is not fit for a Witness.

L. C. J. And that he is the same Man is very notorious. Come, Mrs. Cellier, what have you more to say?

Mrs. Cellier. Enough, my Lord.

L. C. J. You have said enough already. Come, Gentlemen of the Jury, this is a plain Case; here is but one Witness in a Case of Treason, and that not direct; therefore lay your Heads together.

Which being done, they returned her Not Guilty: Upon which the Clerk of the Crown bid her down on her Knees; which she did, and cried, God bless the King and the Duke of York.

L. C. J. Where is Dangerfield? Is he gone? Call him.

Who being come, the Court asked if he had Bail for his good Behaviour?

Mr. Dangerfield. No, my Lord, but with the leave of the Court I will fetch some.

L. C. J. Let a Tipstaff go with him, and return before the Court rises.

Mr. Dangerfield. My Lord, that cannot be, for I can't return so soon.

L. C. J. Then let him be committed.

Which was accordingly done.

XCVII. The Trial of ROGER PALMER, Esq; Earl of CASTLEMAINE, in the Kingdom of Ireland, at the King's-Bench, for High-Treason, June 23. 1680. Trin. 32 Car. II.

Roger Palmer, Esq. having been arraign'd of High-Treason, and pleaded Not Guilty, was this Day brought to his Trial.

Cl. of Cr. CRYER, make Proclamation.

Proclamation for Silence.

Crier. O yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King doth strictly charge and command all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon pain of Imprisonment.

O Yes! If any one can inform our Sovereign Lord the King, the King's Serjeant at Law, the King's Attorney General, or this Inquest now to be taken of the High-Treason whereof Roger Palmer, Esq; Earl of Castlemaine in the Kingdom of Ireland, stands indicted, let them come forth and they shall be heard; for the Prisoner stands at the Bar upon his Deliverance.

Cl. of Cr.

Cl. of Cr. Cryer, make an O. Yes.

Cryer. O Yes! You good Men that are impaneled to enquire between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Roger Palmer, Esq; Earl of Castlemaine, within the Kingdom of Ireland; answer to your Names.

Cl. of Cr. Roger Palmer, Esq; Earl of Castlemaine, in the Kingdom of Ireland, Hold up thy Hand: These good Men that were lately called, and now here appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you upon your Life or Death; if you challenge any of them, you are to speak as they come to the Book to be sworn, and before they are sworn.

Sir John Cutler, Kt. Bar.
Sir Reginald Foster Bar.
Henry Herriot Esq;
Richard Cheney Esq;
Thomas Johnson Esq;
John Roberts Esq;

Jur' Fr. Dorrington Esq;
Hugh Squire Esq;
Charles Good Esq;
John Pulford Esq;
Edw. Claxton Esq;
Fr. Mayhew Gent.

Cryer. O Yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King doth strictly charge and command all manner of Persons to keep Silence; upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Cl. of Cr. Roger Palmer, Esq; Earl of Castlemaine, in the Kingdom of Ireland, hold up your Hand.

You Gentlemen of the Jury that are now sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Charge.

You shall understand, that he stands indicted by the Name of Roger Palmer, Esq; Earl of Castlemaine, in the Kingdom of Ireland; for that he as a false Traitor against our most Illustrious and Excellent Prince and Lord Charles the Second, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, &c. and his Natural Lord; not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, his Cordial Love, true, due and natural Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King ought to bear towards him, altogether withdrawing; and contriving, and with all his Might intending to disturb the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom, and to bring and put our Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Destruction, and alter the true Worship of God within this Kingdom established, to the Superstition of the Romish Church; and to stir up and move War against our said Sovereign Lord the King within this Realm of England, and to subvert the Government thereof; the twentieth Day of June, in the thirtieth Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, &c. at the Parish of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, with divers other false Traitors to the Jurors unknown, did traiterously imagine and intend the Killing, Death and final Destruction of our said Lord the King, and to change and alter, and utterly subvert the ancient Government of this Kingdom, and to despoil and wholly to deprive our said Lord the King of his Crown and Government of this Realm of England, and to extirpate the true Protestant Religion: And to accomplish and fulfil the same most wicked Treasons and traiterous Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid, the said Roger Palmer, Esq; Earl of Castlemaine, in the Kingdom of Ireland, and other false Traitors to the Jurors unknown, the same twentieth Day of June, in the thirtieth Year aforesaid, with Force and Arms, in the Parish of St. Giles in the Fields aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, advisedly, devilishly, maliciously and traiterously did assemble, unite, and gather themselves together, and then and there advisedly, devilishly, maliciously, subtilly, and traiterously did consult and agree to bring our said Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Destruction, and to deprive him of his Crown and Government of England, and to introduce and establish the Religion of the Church of Rome, in this Kingdom; and the sooner to fulfil and accomplish the same most wicked Treasons and traiterous Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid, he then and there did falsely, maliciously and traiterously promise divers great Rewards, and did pay divers Sums of Money to several Persons unknown; and then and there falsely and traiterously did write divers Notes, to incite several other Persons to accomplish the Treasons aforesaid, against the Life of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and contrary to the Form of the Statute in such Case made and provided.

Cl. of Cr. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and hath pleaded thereunto Not Guilty; and for his Trial he puts himself upon God and his Country, which Country you are.

Your Charge is to enquire, Whether he be Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty? If you find him Guilty, you are to enquire what Goods and Chattels, Lands and Tenements he had at the Time when the High-Treason was committed, or at any time since? If you find him Not Guilty, you are to say so, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Cryer. O yes! If any one will give Evidence on the Behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, against Roger Palmer, Esq; Earl of Castlemaine, in the Kingdom of Ireland, let him come forth and he shall be heard; for the Prisoner now stands at the Bar upon his Deliverance.

Mr. Bonithon. May it please you, my Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted for High-Treason; for that he intending to disturb the Peace within this Kingdom established, and to destroy and alter the Government, and to bring the King to Death and final Destruction, and to alter our Religion to the Superstition of the Church of Rome, did, on the 20th Day of June, in the 30th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord the King, consult and treat with several other Persons, and that he with these Persons did agree to destroy the King, and alter the Religion, and cause Rebellion; and further to accomplish these Treasons, he did promise and agree to pay several Acccompts, and deposit several Sums of Money, and did likewise write and publish several Books.

To this he hath pleaded Not Guilty; if we prove these Things, you are to find him Guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. * May it please your Lordship, my Lord

* Sir Creswell Castlemaine here stands indicted for High-Treason; that is, For designing to murder the King, and alter the Government and Law. And this is but a Parcel of the Plot, which hath been carrying on a great while, and many Persons tried for it, and some have suffered and been executed for it: And, my Lord, we will give your Lordship Evidence, That my Lord Castlemaine hath at several times conspired the Death of the King, and he hath reproved Persons for not doing it. And, my Lord, he hath been in Consults among Jesuits, where these Matters have been carried on, and this whole Design hath been negotiated; and my Lord Castlemaine hath been consenting and agreeing to all these Matters. And, my Lord, when the Trials were in Hand, it did appear upon those Trials there were many Persons brought from St. Omers to be Witnesses against Dr. Oates, to prove he was not in England at that time when he said in his Depositions that he did consult with the Jesuits; and these Persons my Lord Castlemaine had the Management and Instruction of at that time: And all along at the Old Bailey my Lord Castlemaine was present there, and did countenance these Persons, and was an Intercessor for them. These are but Branches and Circumstances; what is material we will prove by Witnesses.

Mr. Att. Gen. Come, Dr. Oates, pray tell what you know.

Prisoner. My Lord, I have a long time wished for this Day; and your Lordship may very well remember it. The Reason why I have so much desired a Trial is, because I thought it a means, and the best means, and the only means to shew to the World my Innocency, and also to shew to the World how much I have been calumniated by this Charge.

L. C. J. * What have you to say? Have you any thing to say against Dr. Oates?

Prisoner. No, my Lord: I only say this, Here I am a Prisoner at the Bar, and I have pleaded Not Guilty, and throw myself upon this Court; and therefore I am very willing to hear what this Man will say:

Dr. Oates. My Lord; I humbly move the Court, Whether or no I may use my own method?

L. C. J. Give your Charge, we direct nothing.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, in the Year 1677, I was sent over into Spain by the Jesuits that were here in England; where I remained for several Months; and transacted Business for them, and, my Lord, I returned from Spain in November, and brought several Letters from some English Fathers there; among which there was one directed for my Lord Castlemaine. My Lord, I did not deliver the Letter to him; but, my Lord, the Contents of the Letter was to this Effect—

L. C. J. How came you to see the Contents?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I was at the writing of the Letter, and so I did see the Contents of it.

L. C. J. Did the Priests shew it you, or did you only see it yourself?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord; it was shewn me by them: And the Contents of this Letter were, That the Fathers in Spain were very zealous to concur with the Fathers here in England in the Design; which was the Subversion of the Government, altering the Religion, and the Destruction of the King.

L. C. J. Was that in the Letter?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord, not in Words at Length.

L. C. J. What was, as far as you know, the very Expression of the Letter?

Dr. Oates. The Word Design, my Lord.

L. C. J. Only that, to promote the Design?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord; and under that Word we did comprehend all those things; that is, as we usually took it among one another.

L. C. J. Did you deliver this Letter to my Lord Castlemaine?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord, I did not deliver this Letter; but when I went to St. Omers, we received an Account from my Lord Castlemaine of his Receipt of this Letter.

L. C. J. What did you do with it?

Dr. Oates. I left it with the Provincial, my Lord, who was then Mr. Strange.

L. C. J. Was it not given to you to give it to him?

Dr. Oates. It was given me to give the Lord Castlemaine; but being then a Stranger to him, I was willing to send one of his own Messengers with it.

L. C. J. Where was my Lord?

Dr. Oates. I can't tell, my Lord; I did not see him then; I went over to St. Omers in December 77, or the latter End of November.

L. C. J. Where were you when you gave this Letter to the Provincial?

Dr. Oates. I was in London, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where did you receive this Letter?

Dr. Oates. In Spain, my Lord, at Valladolid, of one Armstrong.

L. C. J. Who was it directed to?

Dr. Oates. To my Lord Castlemaine; but I did not then know him, and so I gave it the Provincial, my Lord: I went over to St. Omers in the latter End of November, or the Beginning of December 77, and after I had been there some few Days, there did arrive a Pacquet from London to St. Omers, in which there was a Letter from my Lord Castlemaine.

L. C. J. To whom?

Dr. Oates. To the Fathers of the Society of St. Omers; in which my Lord Castlemaine gave them an Account of a Letter that he had lately received from Spain.

L. C. J. How did you know the Contents of this Letter?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I was privy to their Letters.

L. C. J. Was you acquainted with my Lord Castlemaine's Hand?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I will give an Account of that; I did not know it then, but only as it was generally said amongst us.

L. C. J. How was it subscribed?

Dr. Oates. Castlemaine, my Lord; and sometimes, my Lord, he subscribed himself Palmer.

L. C. J. How many Letters have you seen?

Dr. Oates. Several Letters.

L. C. J. Was this the first?

Dr. Oates. This was the first, as near as I can remember. And, my Lord, he gave an Account in that Letter, that he had received a Letter from Spain, and was glad the Fathers in Spain had so good an Opinion of his Integrity in the Cause.

L. C. J. Did he say from whom he had received it?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I can't remember that; that he had received a Letter, I am certain.

L. C. J. Do you know what the Purport of the Letter was?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, I will give you a plain Account. My Lord, he wrote he had received a Letter from Spain, and that he was glad the Fathers in Spain had so great Confidence in his Integrity. And, my Lord, in March there came another Letter from my Lord Castlemaine; for my Lord Castlemaine had left some Things at Liege, wherein he did complain of the Fathers, that they made no more Haste for to send his Things to to him some odd Things he had left there; and my Lord, he gave an Account of a certain Letter he received from the Rector of Liege, whose Advice he did not like: for the Rector of Liege and the Rector of Gant were mighty zealous that the secular Clergy should be personally present in this Affair.

L. C. J. Did he write so? I would have you say what he writ.
Dr. Oates. My Lord, I have told you, he gave an Account, that he was unwilling to have the secular Clergy engaged, because they were a loose sort of Men, and of no Principles, and therefore he thought them not fit to be trusted. My Lord, in April there was a Consult; I came over from St. Omers in April, some three, or four, or five Days before the Consult, I am not able to guess at the particular Time; but it was near upon the Consult. My Lord, this Consult was divided into several Companies, after they had met at the White Horse Tavern, wherein they did some Things that did relate to the Order, as to send Father Gary to Rome. And after they had divided themselves into several Companies, wherein they did agree in ordering the Death of the King.

L. C. J. You were by?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I was employ'd by them to give an Account of the Sense of one Company to another.

L. C. J. Were you by when they concluded the Death of the King?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, I was then present.

L. C. J. Did you sign among the rest?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I don't come here to accuse myself.

L. C. J. You are pardon'd, if it be so.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I did consent. My Lord, in this Consult they met together, and an Oath of Secrecy was administered; my Lord Castlemaine was there too within some few Days after the Consult: That is, the Gentleman whom I accuse for Treason, I say, did come, and enquir'd about the Copies of some Letters for to be sent up into Germany, and did desire, that an Agreement between them and the Monks might be made up, there being a Difference between 'em, so that they might have the Assistance of that Order to carry on the Design.

L. C. J. What Gentleman was this?

Dr. Oates. It was the Prisoner, my Lord, at the Bar.

L. C. J. Would the Gentleman let you hear him say, that he desired Assistance to carry on the Design, and you a Stranger to him?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I do not think I was a Stranger to him so much as he was a Stranger to me; he knew I was their Servant, and employ'd by them.

L. C. J. Would he say in your Hearing, that he desired their Assistance to carry on the Design, and you did not know him?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I did not well know him at that Time; and I brought several Messages from the Fathers, and from Mr. Langborn, and gave them an Account before him.

L. C. J. How often had you seen him?

Dr. Oates. That time he was there, my Lord.

L. C. J. How many Messages had you?

Dr. Oates. I will tell your Lordship where I had been: I had been at Mr. Simmonds's, who was then Confessor to the Earl of Arundel, who is since turned Protestant; Confessor to him, as he pretended, and we looked upon him to be so. And I had been at Father Gain's, who was in Turnmill-Street; and I had been, my Lord, at Mr. Langborn's in the Temple; and some other Places which I do not now remember; it is so long since. So, my Lord, I gave them an Account of my Business, and I did see that Gentleman, but did not know his Name till, my Lord, in June.

L. C. J. When was this?

Dr. Oates. This was, my Lord, as near as I can remember, in May.

L. C. J. So you did not know his Name till three Weeks or a Month after?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord, it was in the latter part of June.

Mr. Just. Jones. You saw him first in May?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Jones. And you did not see him till after the Consult? I don't ask you whether he was there or no? But whether you saw him before the Consult was sign'd?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. How did you come to know his Name?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, in June Mr. Langworth and I were going over Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, intending to go to the Fountain in Fuller's-Rents, because there was a Sort of Drink that he loved, and we were to drink together, it was in the Evening; and so in our way as we went, we met with my Lord Castlemaine, whom Mr. Langworth did salute, and then we came back to Mr. Fenwick's Chamber.

L. C. J. With whom did you come back?

Dr. Oates. With my Lord Castlemaine.

L. C. J. Did you know his Name?

Dr. Oates. Mr. Langworth told me it was the Prisoner at the Bar, my Lord, and the Prisoner at the Bar was giving an Account of some Letters he had received out of the Country; and Mr. Langworth was giving an Account how forward the Rector of Liege and the Rector of Gant were in offering to have the secular Clergy engaged with them; and some other Discourse they had which I can't remember, but about the Design.

L. C. J. What did they talk of at that Time? You must, as near as you can, tell us what Discourse they had.

Dr. Oates. I will give your Lordship this, they were speaking of the Transactions of the Consult, and how unanimous the Fathers were in signing the Consult.

L. C. J. Who were speaking of it?

Dr. Oates. Mr. Langworth and Mr. Fenwick, and my Lord Castlemaine was present.

L. C. J. They did talk of it?

Dr. Oates. Yes.

L. C. J. Did they mention the Particulars of that Consult?

Dr. Oates. Yes.

L. C. J. What was that?

Dr. Oates. Laying aside the King.

L. C. J. And what else?

Dr. Oates. And bringing in the Popish Religion, the Catholick Religion, I speak their own Words.

L. C. J. And this Discourse they had in the hearing of my Lord Castlemaine?

Dr. Oates. Yes; and my Lord Castlemaine said, Now he should be revenged for the Injuries done to him.

L. C. J. Go on.

Dr. Oates. I have nothing else to say of my Lord Castlemaine that I can think of at present.

L. C. J. Now, my Lord, you may ask him what Questions you think fit.

Prisoner. Mr. Oates, repeat your Journey again.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I say this: I went a Ship-board in April, I returned from Valladolid in November, I arrived in London in November, and staid in London some Time, and then I went to St. Omers in November or December, New Style or Old Style; I staid at St. Omers; from thence I went to Watton; then, my Lord, in the Month of March we went to Liege, and returned back again; in the Month of April we came hither, some time before the Consult, and staid here some time after.

Pris. What time were you at Liege, pray, Sir?

Dr. Oates. In March 77.

Mr. Just. Jones. The end of 77?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord, we were at St. Omers again in March.

L. C. J. You returned in March 77-8?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, the Style does so alter.

Pris. That is before Lady-Day.

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, it was before Lady-Day, we arrived here in London in May or in April, and we staid here some few Days.

Pris. When did you come over again, pray, Sir?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, it is now two Years ago, or better, and I can't remember every particular time; my Lord, we were here in May.

Pris. I will ask him as many Questions as I think reasonable; and when, my Lord, I do desire Time, and he can't tell the Times, he must tell me so.

L. C. J. Mr. Oates, answer my Lord what Questions he asks you.

Dr. Oates. I will tell my Lord Castlemaine as near as I can remember, my Lord.

Pris. Mr. Oates, When was it you came over?

Dr. Oates. Really it was some few Days before the Consult.

Pris. How many Days do you think?

Dr. Oates. Really I can't remember.

L. C. J. I suppose you have your Memorials.

Dr. Oates. Really, my Lord, no.

L. C. J. Have you any thing more to ask?

Pris. Yes, my Lord, a great many Questions. Were you present, Mr. Oates, pray, at that Consult, when I consented to the King's Death?

Dr. Oates. I was present at the Consult; but I do not charge you to be at the Consult.

L. C. J. He asks you where it was he agreed to it?

Dr. Oates. At Mr. Fenwick's Chamber, I remember it was about seven or eight o'Clock that we were going over Lincoln's-Inn-Fields.

L. C. J. How long might you be at Fenwick's?

Dr. Oates. It was about eleven or twelve o'Clock I came away.

Pris. When you met me in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, was I in a Coach or on Foot, or was any body with me?

Dr. Oates. I can't say whether your Lordship had a Man with you, or no.

L. C. J. Was there any body with him?

Dr. Oates. I did not take notice of that.

L. C. J. You were two Hours together, pray let me ask you this Question, What was your Discourse about?

Dr. Oates. That was part of the Discourse, my Lord.

L. C. J. What? You have given us a very short Account of it in four Lines: You were two Hours together, What was the main of your Discourse about?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I will give you as plain as I can, the Discourse at that time.

L. C. J. Pray let us know what the main of your Discourse was about.

Dr. Oates. One part of their Discourse was about the Revenues of their Colleges, and how they had suffer'd by the French's taking St. Omers, and what Losses they had sustain'd by reason of the Change of Government by the Conquest; for the Crown of Spain had entail'd on the College of St. Omers five or six hundred a year, for the maintaining the Foundation of their House, or Foundation-Rent, and it was taken away by reason of the Conquest that France had made over the Spanish Dominions there; and they were consulting how they should write to Father Le Chaise to be an Instrument to move the French King to restore this Annuity, that was a Settlement entail'd upon it.

L. C. J. How came you into this Discourse?

Dr. Oates. This was after the other Discourse.

L. C. J. How came you to discourse this Affair here in England?

Dr. Oates. I will tell your Lordship as near as I can remember: When we met in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, Mr. Langworth recommended me to my Lord Castlemaine, and bad me take notice of him. I can't say this is my Lord Castlemaine, but this is that Man I saw.

L. C. J. Did he call him by his Name?

Dr. Oates. He told him that I was such a one, and that I was serviceable to them. And upon our way as we went to Mr. Fenwick's Chamber, he enquir'd into the Causes of my coming over so soon again, for he said I went over but last Month. Said he, How came it to pass he came over so soon again? Saith he, We wanted him to do some Business for us. And there were more Particulars of the Transactions of the Consult mentioned to my Lord Castlemaine.

L. C. J. How did they bring in the Particulars of that Design?

Dr. Oates. This is as near as I can remember.

L. C. J. How came they to talk of laying aside the King, and bringing in the Catholick Religion?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, after they had given an Account of the Transactions of the Consult: This was one part of the Consult.

L. C. J. Pray how came they to bring it in, in Discourse?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, they spake of the Particulars of it.

L. C. J. I wonder what introduced the Particulars: Was it to acquaint him with those Particulars?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I have nothing to say to that; they were Things so generally talked of by those of the Jesuitical Party, that whenever they met, met, they scarce did talk of any Thing else but of that; and so they did at this Time.

L. C. J. Pray tell me the whole Discourse, as you can remember; that relates to this Time.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I have told your Lordship we met with my Lord Castlemaine in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields. I have told you, my Lord, that we went to Mr. Fenwick's; I have told you, my Lord, that after some Discourse (how it was introduced I cannot be positive, but as I can remember) they were speaking of my going over and coming again so soon; my going from the Consult to St. Omer's, and returning again into England so soon; and so one Word brought in another.

L. C. J. Did you know then that my Lord Castlemaine had ever heard of this Matter before?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I don't know; but I am morally certain as to myself; but I can't swear he did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he speak of it to him as a Stranger to it?

Dr. Oates. No.

Mr. Just. Jones. By the Letter you speak of he knew before.

L. C. J. Answer my Brother's Question, Was the Letter you had seen, before or after that Discourse at Fenwick's?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, that was after the Consult.

L. C. J. Then you know he did know of the Design?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I think not of the Particulars of the Design.

L. C. J. That is, he knew of this Design for the main. When you talk of the Design, you always mean the Consult.

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord, when we say the Consult, we mean what was agreed on at that Consult; not concerning these Matters that were done six Months before.

L. C. J. Mr. Oates, Tell me, when you mention the Design and the Consult, do not you always mean the Death of the King and the bringing in Popery?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, but the Terms are not convertible: For, my Lord, when we say the Consult, there was something else done, my Lord, at that Consult which had not an absolute Relation to the Design; and of that I will give your Lordship one Instance, as the sending Father Cary to Rome, which they did in some three Years.

L. C. J. Some trivial Matters concerning their own Government, but the thing you talk of is the same Consult and Design.

Dr. Oates. When I speak of the Word Design, it was so taken among us, and so received by my Lord Castlemaine.

L. C. J. How can you say it was so receiv'd by him?

Dr. Oates. Because he used the same Word, and answer'd us according to our Interpretation.

Mr. Just. Jones. My Lord, he speaks of the Design thus: There was a Design for the killing of the King, there was a Design of the Priests and Fathers for it; but faith he, Afterwards there was a general Consultation, and this Design came to be formed by this General Consult, which my Lord Castlemaine, as he thinks, had no Knowledge of till the time they met together in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and afterward went and discoursed about it.

L. C. J. It is very fair, that he doth not know that my Lord Castlemaine had any Knowledge before the Consult of this Business; but, he says, The Design upon which the Consult was, that he might know, which was to destroy the King, and bring in Popery. And he says, my Lord Castlemaine did understand this Word Design in that Sense they did; because he answered their Letters according to their Interpretation of it. How do you know he understood the Word Design in its utmost Capacity as you understood it?

Dr. Oates. When we have our Words, we have our Keys whereby we understand them. But I will answer this Question to the Satisfaction of the Gentlemen of the Jury. My Lord, he hath many times spoken in his Letters of introducing the Popish Religion, and annex'd it to the Word Design of promoting the Catholick Religion here in England.

L. C. J. Now methinks you have brought the Word Design to something else than killing the King.

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, the Subversion of Religion and the Government.

L. C. J. Did he put in Government? Did he talk of bringing in the Catholick Religion, and altering the Government?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord, I won't say that.

L. C. J. When we are examining concerning Men's Lives, we must be careful of their Words in such Matters.

Dr. Oates. One part of my Evidence I have omitted, Your Lordship did ask me how I came to know my Lord Castlemaine's Hand. My Lord, sometimes we received Letters from him subscribed Palmer, and sometimes subscribed Castlemaine, sometimes some other Name which I may not remember, and they were generally received as from him. And I have seen, my Lord, my Lord Castlemaine write; for that Night, as near as I remember, it was Post-night.

L. C. J. At Fenwick's Chamber?

Dr. Oates. At Fenwick's Chamber, and my Lord Castlemaine did write a Letter, subscribed it and sealed it, and I was fain to go to the General Post-house, it was so late.

Mr. Just. Jones. What, did he subscribe then?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord, I saw no more than the Superscription.

L. C. J. Then you did not see his Name to it?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord. My Lord Castlemaine did ask, Why he had not Answers to such and such Letters? For several Letters I had seen which were not of much Moment.

L. C. J. I wish you had one that was of Moment.

Dr. Oates. It cannot be expected, my Lord, that I should have them.

L. C. J. My Lord, ask him what you please.

Pris. You say, Mr. Oates, you received Letters from me in Spain?

Dr. Oates. I never said so.

Pris. You saw Letters in Spain from me?

Dr. Oates. Yes, I have seen Letters in Spain that were from you.

Pris. Look you, Mr. Oates, pray let me ask you a Question, you said this, That you did not know me when you met me at the Consult?

Dr. Oates. What Consult?

Pris. At Fenwick's Chamber.

Dr. Oates. I did not know you at Wild-houfe.

Pris. There you met me first?

Dr. Oates. There I met the Prisoner at the Bar.

VOL. III.

L. C. J. He says he did not know you at Wild-houfe, but he came to know you by Langworth in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and then you went together to Fenwick's Chamber.

Pris. Mr. Oates, Did not you say, that at Wild-houfe you did not know me, nor I you?

L. C. J. He says he can't tell whether you knew him or no, but he did not know you.

Pris. Was I familiar with you?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord.

Pris. Did I talk Treason at Wild-houfe?

Dr. Oates. It was the Discourse of the Day; but I do not remember every Particular of the Discourse, but I remember what your Opinion was concerning the Rector of Liege and the Rector of Gant.

Pris. Was there any thing about killing the King at Wild-houfe?

Dr. Oates. Really, my Lord; I can't remember, I won't charge it there because I am upon my Oath; though I morally believe, as to myself, that there was Discourse bad enough there.

Pris. Mr. Oates. Pray will you hear me? Then the Acquaintance I had with you was by Mr. Langworth, and then we went that Night to Fenwick's Chamber, and there we staid very long, and there we had all this Discourse?

Dr. Oates. Yes.

Pris. Look, Mr. Oates, Was there any body by besides Mr. Langworth and Mr. Fenwick?

Dr. Oates. Really, my Lord, I don't remember any body was by, unless a Maid might come to fill a Cup of Drink or so.

Pris. Mr. Oates, Pray, Mr. Oates, did you and I ever meet together after that time?

Dr. Oates. Really, my Lord, I can't be exact in that.

Pris. Did you never see me nor discourse with me after that time?

Dr. Oates. I cannot recollect my self as to that, I cannot remember.

L. C. J. He does not remember that ever he was with you afterwards.

Pris. You don't know whether ever I discoursed with you afterwards?

Dr. Oates. I don't remember.

Pris. Very well, Mr. Oates: Look you, Sir, you don't remember that I ever had any Discourse with you after that time; and no body was by but Mr. Fenwick and Mr. Langworth?

Dr. Oates. As I remember.

Pris. Was not there another Priest there?

Dr. Oates. There is no body occurs to my Memory.

Pris. Mr. Oates, you brought me Letters from Spain?

Dr. Oates. I brought a Letter from Spain directed to you in 77.

Pris. Was I in Town or out of Town?

Dr. Oates. I delivered it to the Provincial.

Pris. You went over to Liege; did not you see me there?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord, I did not see you there, I only went to wait upon a Gentleman that was a Priest afterwards, that went to take Orders.

Pris. Did you not see me at Liege?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord.

Pris. You were at Liege, did you stay there?

Dr. Oates. I lay there one Night.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you any thing to ask, my Lord?

Pris. Presently, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Jones. It is very reasonable, my Lord should question you. You own him to be the Lord Castlemaine: When was it you did first discover this Business concerning my Lord Castlemaine?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I did discover my Lord Castlemaine to be in the Plot the last Sessions of the Long Parliament, and I accused my Lord Castlemaine this Trinity-Term was Twelve-months, and my Lord Castlemaine was committed: For when Mr. Dangerfield came in and accused my Lord Castlemaine, I brought a Charge a second Time against my Lord Castlemaine.

Mr. Just. Jones. Did you discover all this then?

Dr. Oates. I did charge him for having an Hand in the Design in general.

Mr. Just. Jones. To the Parliament?

Dr. Oates. Yes, to the Parliament.

Pris. You say, when I assented to the King's Death in Fenwick's Chamber, that I said I should now find a Time to be revenged?

Dr. Oates. Pray, my Lord, don't put me to mention such reflecting Evidence.

Pris. When you were before the King, you did in Pursuance of this speak of a Divorce.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I will give Evidence as to that, if that my Lord comes to be indicted for his Priesthood.

L. C. J. My Lord may ask what Questions he shall think fit.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord says he has said it, and what he said in another Place he is not to treat now of.

Pris. Suppose I can prove him an ill Man in any Place, is not that fit to be spoken of here? Since he hath brought the King upon the Stage, and since he hath accused me before the King and your Lordships of a Divorce, I ask him whether he saw it?

Dr. Oates. I will tell your Lordship what I said as to the Divorce: I heard it discoursed of generally among the Fathers beyond Sea, and this was some other Part of the Discourse at Wild-Houfe; and I heard my Lord Castlemaine say that he had been at a great Charge to carry on that Business of the Divorce.

Pris. At Wild-houfe?

Dr. Oates. At Wild-houfe. Now, my Lord, I took no Notice of it, because it was not my Business. But, my Lord, after that there was a Priest's Chamber that was searched, and there was the whole Case stated; now what is become of the State of that Case, my Lord, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. By whom was that Case stated?

Dr. Oates. There was a Letter found, whereby my Lord Castlemaine should have the Matter directed, in order to the carrying on the Divorce that was to be between him and his Wife Barbara.

Pris. Did not you tell the King that you saw the Divorce in Strange's Hand?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I will tell you this, I gave an Account to the King, that I saw in Strange's Hand an Account of a Divorce that was between my Lord Castlemaine and Barbara Duchefs of Cleveland.

Mr. Recorder *. My Lord, if he ask too many Questions * Sir George that don't relate to this Matter, it is impossible to give an Account of every Particular.

G

Pris.

Prif. My Lords, I humbly submit this Case.

Mr. Recorder. Ask him what you said to such a Man upon the 9th of August was Twelve-month, must he give an Account?

L. C. J. He must say he does not know.

Mr. Recorder. Indeed it is reasonable that my Lord Castlemaine should ask him some Questions, and that Mr. Oates should give him an Account.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, will you give me leave to speak? If he may ask Questions about such foreign Matters as this, no Man can justify himself.

L. C. J. This is not so mighty remote but Use may be made of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. If he should ask whether he were such a Day at such an House, and tell him yes, and mistake the Day; any Man may be caught thus.

Prif. How can a Man be caught in the Truth?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord Castlemaine may, if he can, catch him in any Thing he gives in Evidence here.

Prif. My Lord, if your Lordship over-rule me, I will say no more. Mr. Attorney says I come to catch him, I confess I do.

Mr. Att. Gen. You should not ask him foreign Questions.

L. C. J. He asks a plain Question; why do you labour so much that he should not ask, whether he had seen the Divorce? My Lord Castlemaine, I have asked the Question for you, Whether or no he said he had seen the Divorce? And he does not remember whether he said so or no.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I think, with your Lordship's leave, that he is not bound to answer Questions that are not to the Evidence.

L. C. J. If so be he would come to make Application, it may be well enough.

Mr. Att. Gen. I say it for the Method of the Evidence, my Lord, that I would not have these Excursions.

Prif. I desire your Lordship that I may say out what I have to say. I say this, That no Man in the World that speaks Truth can be caught, neither will Mr. Attorney suffer me to catch him.

Mr. Att. Gen. I say you have Liberty to catch him in any Thing that doth belong to the Evidence.

Prif. I come to shew you the Fitness of it to this Affair. He comes and tells you, among other Consults, of Wild-House, and my meeting him in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, the Recommendations of Mr. Langworth, and going to Fenwick's Chamber, where we talked of altering the Government, and my assenting to kill the King: And since you have brought the King upon the Stage, I will refresh your Memory a little; since you talk of revenging my self, look you if you did not mention a Divorce to the King, and also to my Lord Chief Justice.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, you are under a Mistake.

Prif. Pray give me leave, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. You make such Excursions into foreign Matters.

Prif. Mr. Oates, you did say you saw a Divorce. I ask you whether you saw a Divorce, and where; or whether you said so?

L. C. J. He says, he does not remember he said so.

Dr. Oates. I do not remember whether I said so or no, my Lord, I have it down, but indeed I did not set my Thoughts a-work.

Mr. Att. Gen. He hath given you an Answer that may satisfy you.

Mr. Just. Raymond. He hath Papers wherein he hath entered Memorandums to refresh his Memory, but these Papers he hath not by him.

L. C. J. Then he may say, he hath not.

Mr. Att. Gen. That he hath already, my Lord.

L. C. J. Have you any more to say?

Prif. I have, my Lord, if you will give me leave to write down two Words.

Prif. Mr. Oates, you told my Lords the Judges that I did say, I was at great Expence about a Divorce?

Dr. Oates. Yes.

Prif. That is very well, Mr. Oates.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mr. Dangerfield.

Dr. Oates was going out of the Court.

Prif. May Mr. Oates go out of the Court?

Court. Yes, yes.

Dr. Oates. I will be within Call, my Lord.

Prif. I only submit it to your Lordships, Whether or no a Witness may go out of the Court?

Dr. Oates. I will stay then.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Mr. Dangerfield.

Prif. Pray stay.

L. C. J. Why so?

Prif. Here I am a Prisoner, my Lords, and submit it to your Lordships, Whether or no Mr. Dangerfield, who hath had the Censure of this Court, may be a Witness? Whether or no Counsel shall shew Reasons to your Lordship, whether he may speak or no?

Mr. Just. Jones. You must shew your Exceptions that you have against him.

Prif. My Exception is this: That he was convicted of Felony, that he broke Prison, and was outlawed upon it. Besides this, my Lord, he is a Stigmatick, hath stood in the Pillory, and was burnt in the Hand. Now I humbly beseech your Lordships, that you will be pleased to hear what my Counsel can say: And then, my Lords, if you over-rule, I shall give place with all my Heart.

L. C. J. I think it reasonable, if you desire Council, that they should be allowed to speak.

Mr. Att. Gen. If your Lordship please, when my Lord's Exceptions appear.

Mr. Just. Jones. What are your Exceptions, my Lord?

Prif. That I told you beforehand; he is an out-lawed Person, he is convicted of Felony.

Mr. Just. Jones. When was he outlawed?

Mr. Att. Gen. In the 27th Year of the King, and we say he hath a Pardon in the 30th Year of the King.

L. C. J. How do you prove he was burnt in the Hand, my Lord?

Mr. Att. Gen. When was he burnt in the Hand?

Prif. Call Brifcoe.

Mr. Att. Gen. We bring a Pardon unto that, and that will restore him.

[A Record produced.]

Mr. Att. Gen. That Record we confess; shew the Pardon, shew the Pardon.

L. C. J. Now go to that for which he was burnt in the Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is a Pardon that extends to them all.

[The Pardon read: Decimo tertio die Januarii, Anno Regni, &c.]

L. C. J. This does not do it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord, it does.

L. C. J. Is that the Newgate Pardon?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. We have had it in the Court.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. And Felony and Outlawry is in it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where is that for which he was burnt in the Hand?

Mr. Att. Gen. For that we give an Answer; he was received to the Benefit of his Clergy; and he was burnt in the Hand, and his Pardon is after that too.

L. C. J. So it is.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then his Pardon answers them all.

L. C. J. Now you see, my Lord, you think Dangerfield ought not to be a Witness, who hath gone through so many Punishments, outlawed for Felony, and burnt in the Hand for Felony: Mr. Attorney makes Answer, We have a Pardon, and by that he is restored, as he says, to be a Witness again. If you desire Council to speak to this Point, Whether or no a Man branded and burnt in the Hand for Felony, and afterwards is pardoned, is capable of being a Witness? I see no Reason to deny it you.

Mr. Att. Gen. If there be Matter for Counsel to speak, in that Case we must submit, if your Lordship make it a Doubt.

L. C. J. I do for my own Part: In this I am clear; if a Man were convicted of Perjury, that no Pardon will make him a Witness, because it is to do the Subject wrong. A Pardon does not make a Man an honest Man; it takes off Reproaches; and the Law is wise in that, the Law will not suffer endless Contumelies to be heaped upon Men, nor to be called perjured Rascals, and such Things; it is only to prevent upbraiding Language, which tends to the Breach of the Peace. But, in my Opinion, if a Man stands convicted in Court for Perjury, no Pardon can ever make him a Witness, and set him upright again. But that is a different Case from this; we are upon this single Case, Whether a Man that is burnt in the Hand for Felony, whether a Pardon can set him right or no? For this I make more doubtful than the other; for a Man may be, that hath committed a Robbery, would be afraid to forswear himself; for though one is a great, the other is a greater Sin, and that in the Subject Matter; which considered, I think it reasonable to allow my Lord Council to speak to that single Point, That a Person being burnt in the Hand for Felony, and afterwards pardoned, Whether he is capable of being a Witness?

Prif. Then I do name Mr. Jones, Mr. Saunders, and Mr. Darnal.

L. C. J. Very well.

[Mr. Saunders was called, but was not in Court.]

L. C. J. Are you prepared, Mr. Jones, to speak?

Mr. Jones. No, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Jones. My Lord, do you except against that one Particular?

Prif. I stand upon both, his being pilloried and burnt in the Hand.

L. C. J. Will you admit that he stood in the Pillory?

Mr. Att. Gen. I know nothing of it.

L. C. J. I will tell you, my Lord, you will see whether it be necessary to protract this or no; for your Council will hardly undertake to argue unprepared about this Point; and if the Trial should be adjourned, it would be very troublesome. I think it the Duty of my Place to discharge my Conscience for you and against you, as the Matter shall fall out; and if so be that you should insist upon it, and he be capable of being a Witness, supposing it so, yet I must say, you may give in the Evidence of every Record of the Conviction of any Sort of Crimes he hath been guilty of, and they shall be read. They say last Day there were sixteen; if there were an hundred they should be read against him, and they shall all go to invalidate any Credit that is to be given to any Thing he shall swear.

Prif. My Lord, I humbly submit myself to your Lordship; sixteen we have, I bring but six, you shall have them, Mr. Attorney, when you please.

L. C. J. My Lord, if you think it worth your while to put it to Council to argue, Whether he may be a Witness, or whether you think it may be as well for you, supposing he be a Witness, the producing those Things against him, or the Records of those Crimes that he hath been convicted of; whether that will be as well for you or no, I leave it to yourself to do as you think best.

Mr. Darnal. I conceive, with Submission to your Lordship, that he cannot be a Witness.

L. C. J. Are you prepared to speak to it now?

Mr. Darnal. My Lord, I am ready to offer somewhat to your Lordship, why I conceive he ought not to be sworn: But I desire first, that the Pardon may be read, because many Persons and Offences are comprized in it.

L. C. J. It is a Pardon for Felonies and Outlawries of Felony in general.

Mr. Darnal. If the Persons and their Offences are severally and sufficiently pardoned, then my Lord, I will proceed unto the other Point.

Mr. Just. Jones. The whole is good.

Mr. Darnal. Then, my Lord, I conceive, notwithstanding this Pardon, Mr. Dangerfield ought not to be sworn; and that no Person attainted of Felony (though pardoned) can be a Witness. My Lord, it hath been adjudged in 11 Hen. IV. quadragesimo, That a Man attainted of Felony (as Mr. Dangerfield is) though he be afterwards pardoned, cannot be sworn of a Jury. My Lord, the same Question hath been resolved since, in nono Jacobi. It is reported in Mr. Brownlow's and Goldborough's Reports, Folio tricesimo quarto. And my Lord Cook in Mr. Bulstrode's second Reports, 154. in Brown and Crashaw's Case, is of the same Opinion. He says, A Man attainted and pardoned cannot serve upon any Inquest; and that by the same Reason, the Testimony of such a Man for a Witness is in all Cases to be rejected.

L. C. J. Who says so?

Mr. Darnal. My Lord Cook.

L. C. J. Men do not slight my Lord Cook; where do you say that is?

Mr.

Mr. Darnal. It is in Mr. Bulstrode's 2d Reports, in Brown and Crashaw's Case, fol. 154.

Mr. Just. Jones. But you should have brought these Books hither.

Mr. Darnal. I suppose, Sir, they may be had in the Hall. My Lord
Cook gives this Reason for it in that Case; he saith, that notwithstanding his Pardon, he is not probus & legalis homo.

Mr. Just. Jones. That Pardon was before any Judgment; it was a Pardon of Felony before any Trial or Judgment; but here is a Conviction.

Mr. Darnal. My Lord Cook puts the Case there of a Man attainted. And, my Lord, in duodecimo Jacobi, it is reported in Brownlow's Reports, fol. 47.

Mr. Just. Raymond. Which of his Reports?

Mr. Darnal. I know but of one set out in his Name alone, the other
(which is call'd the first Part) is set out in his and Goldborough's Name.
I have Mr. Brownlow's Reports here, and if your Lordship please you may see it.

L. C. J. What is the Page?

Mr. Darnal. 47, my Lord; the Case there reported is, the King par-don'd a Man attainted for giving a false Verdict; yet he shall not be at another time impannell'd upon any Jury; and the reason given there is, that though the Punishment was pardon'd, yet the Guilt remain'd.

Mr. Just. Jones. That is a very short Note, and not so much in the Book as you have mentioned.

Mr. Darnal. I writ it word for word out of the Book, Sir, and I am sure there is so much in my Book. My Lord, in Mr. Just. Crooke's
Elizabeth, fol. 686, in Shelborn's Case, it is held, that though the King may pardon Simony, yet he cannot enable a Simoniack to retain a Living.

L. C. J. The Act doth make him not capable.

Mr. Darnal. I conceive, Sir, it is upon the same Reason, because the Pardon cannot take away the Guilt, though it may the Punishment of the Offence.

Mr. Just. Raymond. He can't dispense with Simony, he can't give a Dispensation to take a Living.

Mr. Darnal. My Lord, upon these Resolutions and the Reason of them,
I humbly submit it to your Lordship, whether Mr. Dangerfield (having been attainted of Felony, though he be since pardoned) can be a Witness.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, with your Lordship's Favour, this is quite contrary to the constant and general Opinion, and contrary to the constant Practice: For, my Lord, with your Lordship's Favour, when a Man is pardon'd for any Crime, if a Man can't say he is a Felon, or he is perjured, then he can't be reckoned so to any Intent or Purpose whatsoever.

L. C. J. I told you before, it is consonant to all the Reason and Law in the World, that a Pardon should stop Men's Mouths from reviling Speeches that signify nothing; but it is one thing to say Men shall not go reviling, that can have no consequent good, but which tends to the breach of the Peace, and another thing to say he shall be Liber.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, when the King gives him a Pardon, it is as if he had never committed the Offence.

L. C. J. He may be Outlaw'd notwithstanding the King's Pardon, and then it is not as if he had never committed the Offence.

Mr. Just. Jones. It restores him to wage Battel, and it makes him liber & legalis homo: For if a Man may wage Battel, he is liber & legalis homo.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, if he be so, he shall be a Witness:
For, my Lord, in the point of Perjury, a Man that after a Conviction of Perjury had a Pardon, hath been admitted several times.

L. C. J. Was the Exception taken, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord, and he rejected before he had a Pardon.

Mr. Just. Raymond. How many Men have been Witnesses that have been convicted of Felonies, after the Kings have pardoned them?

Mr. Recorder. I will not adventure to say that there hath been a particular Objection made, and so that the Court hath had the Debate of it; but I will undertake to give your Lordship several Instances of Men that have been convicted, and the Judges sitting there knew them to be so convicted, and did not take Notice of it.

Mr. Just. Raymond. I speak of Witherington particularly.

Mr. Recorder. He was a Witness, tho' every Man did know that Witherington was convicted. I beg your Lordships leaves to speak it, that the Judges themselves did know that he was convicted and had received Sentence of Death.

† Sir Francis Mr. Sol. Gen. † The constant Practice of the Judges is Winnington. a mighty Conclusion.

L. C. J. What think you, Mr. Attorney, if a Man be convicted of Felony, and afterwards hath a general Pardon, is he a Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes truly, my Lord, it signifies the same thing, my Lord, as to be a Freeman again.

Mr. Just. Jones. He cannot be of a Jury, if he be attainted of Felony; and the Reason is, because he is not probus & legalis homo; and why he should not as well be of a Jury as a Witness I cannot understand.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is a great deal of difference, my Lord; a great many Men may be admitted to be Witnesses, that cannot be admitted to be Jurymen.

Mr. Just. Jones. Shew me any Man that is excluded from a Jury and admitted to be a Witness, except in the case of kindred.

Mr. Att. Gen. An hundred.

L. C. J. Shew me any Man who being of a Jury was excluded, and yet made a Witness.

Mr. Att. Gen. A Villain was not admitted to be a Jurymen, but a Villain was always to be a Witness, and that was a point of Infamy.

L. C. J. What Infamy was contained in being a Villain?

Mr. Att. Gen. He was a Criminal, he was not liber homo.

L. C. J. But tho' he be not a Freeman, he may be an honest Man.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord Hobart says, A Pardon takes away the Guilt.

L. C. J. It takes away Guilt so far as he shall never be questioned; but it does not set a Man as if he had never offended. It cannot in reason be said, a Man guilty of Perjury is as innocent as if he had never been perjured.

Mr. Att. Gen. I say, if a Man be pardoned, he is as if he were not guilty.

L. C. J. If I were in my Lord Castlemaine's Case, I would submit it; but when he hath given his Testimony, my Lord shall have liberty to give in the Records against him of what Crimes he hath committed.

Mr. Just. Jones. I do confess, indeed, that my Lord Hale, in his little Book Of the Pleas of the Crown, saith, that a Man that hath had the Benefit of his Clergy is restored to his Credit.

Mr. Just. Raymond. If that Case be allowed, it is a plain Case; for there is no Man can wage Battel, but he that is liber & legalis homo.

Mr. Recorder. A Man broke Prison, and therefore he could not wage Battel; he replies, the King hath pardoned me that Felony, and thereupon he is admitted to wage Battel.

Mr. Just. Jones. Where there is no Judgment given in the Case, and the King doth pardon a Man, that doth make a very great difference.

Mr. Recorder. In the Case of Witherington, my Lord Chief Justice did look upon the Records, and afterwards said he was a good Witness, and was admitted.

Pris. If you have Law by you, I must consent.

L. C. J. Then you must consent.

Mr. Recorder. There are several Persons who have had Pardons after Robberies, and we are forced to make use of some of these Fellows.

L. C. J. Before Conviction.

Mr. Recorder. No, after Conviction, my Lord, I have known a Prisoner at the Bar, when my Lords the Judges have been there, to be a Witness; and if the Court had made any doubt, it would have been a Question before this time of Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if you please, Mr. Dangerfield may be sworn, if your Lordship pleases.

L. C. J. My Lord shall have the Benefit of excepting against his Credibility.

Then Mr. Just. Raymond went down to the Court of Common Pleas, to know their Opinion.

Mr. Just. Jones. Have you any other Witness in the mean time?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord, he is a principal Witness.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Besides the common Practice, here is a Book that says he shall wage Battel.

Mr. Just. Jones. That is, when there is a Pardon before Conviction.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But here, my Lord, he says the Reatum is taken away, and then it takes away his Disabilities too. The Difference can be nothing here before Conviction, and after; because before Conviction he is disabled from waging Battel: So that that makes no Difference before Conviction, and other Cases after Conviction; and the Disability is taken away by the Pardon, and he is restored to be a Freeman.

L. C. J. There is a Disability upon Presumption, though not upon Conviction.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There is the same legal Impediment in the one as in the other; but his Credit is left to the Breast of the Jury.

Mr. Recorder. When a Pardon comes, it takes away not only Pœnam, but Reatum; and the Reason my Lord Hobart gives is—

L. C. J. Nay, give your Reason.

Mr. Recorder. For Felony is contra Coronam & Dignitatem, is a Fault against the King; and when the King pardons it, it ceases. And in another place it is said, It pardons all Disabilities incident to him.

Mr. Just. Jones. That is before Conviction, still.

L. C. J. Don't my Lord Coke tell you expressly, that the taking a Pardon doth not prove any Offence? You take a Pardon, it ought not to be concluded that you are guilty; but the proper Conclusion of a wise Man is, that you would be safe. It can't be thought that every Man that hath a Pardon in England is guilty of all those Offences that are there Pardoned.

Mr. Just. Jones. There is a Difference between a general Pardon, and a particular Pardon: When a Man doth accept of a special Pardon, it must be intended that he hath some consciousness of Guilt, or else he would not take it; but he that is included in a general Pardon may be clear, because all Men are included in it, unless some Persons particularly excepted; and the Difference is taken in that very point, from accepting a general and a special Pardon.

L. C. J. That the Acceptance of a general Pardon doth not barely of itself intend Men to be guilty of the Crimes, is plain, and the Reason is most apparent; for besides that Men be safe, so there be Times that give a Reason why Men should have a Pardon, because no Man knows when he is safe; Perjury so abounds that no Man can say he is safe, and that is a Reason why Men should be very willing to accept of Pardons.

Cl. of Cr. Here's my Lord Hale's Book about the Pleas of the Crown.

Mr. Recorder. He says, When the King hath discharged and pardoned him, he hath cleared the Person of the Crime and Infamy.

Mr. Just. Jones. It is so, no doubt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May we pass upon these Authorities?

Mr. Just. Jones. Sir Francis, we are not willing to go about it till it be concluded; for that purpose we have desired my Brother Raymond to know the Judges Opinions of the Common-Pleas.

Mr. Recorder. He doth expressly say, It hath restored him to his Credit; and in Witherington's Case he did call for the very Records.

Mr. Att. Gen. If it restore him to his Credit, I hope it shall not blemish him so much when he is sworn, that he shall not be believed.

L. C. J. We won't have any Prepossession in that Case, his Crimes shall be all taken Notice of; is it fit to have Men guilty of all Sorts of Villainies, and not to observe it?

Mr. Just. Jones. In that very Case my Lord Hobart says, A Man may say of a pardoned Man, he was a Felon, though he cannot say now he is a Felon; and now what can be objected to this Case?

Mr. Recorder. Things may be objected against a Person, and his Credit left to the Jury; but the Question now is, Whether he shall be a Witness or not?

L. C. J. We have Men grown so insolent, they behave themselves with that vile Insolence, that now they take upon them to speak against whole Societies of Men; as if so be there were any thing in them that should render them better than their former Lives or Natures. Humility becomes Penitents, and no wicked Man is supposed to be a Penitent that hath not that; but these carry it with that Insolency, as if they were not

not concerned themselves, when God knows the best of them discover what they do, by being but Parties themselves.

[Mr. Justice Raymond returned from the Court of Common-Pleas.]

L. C. J. I will tell you what my Brethren's Opinions are; he hath put it to them on both Accounts, That he was convicted of Felony, and burnt in the Hand for it; that he was outlawed for Felony, and hath a general Pardon. They say they are of Opinion, That a general Pardon would not restore him to be a Witness after an Outlawry for Felony, because of the Interest that the King's Subjects have in him. But they say further, That where a Man comes to be burnt in the Hand, there they look upon that as a Kind of a more general Discharge than the Pardon alone would amount to, if he had not been burnt in the Hand. They say, If he had been convicted of Felony, and not burnt in the Hand, the Pardon would not have set him upright; but being convicted and burnt in the Hand, they suppose he is a Witness.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Dangerfield.

L. C. J. The very Attainder is taken away, and so all is gone.

Mr. Att. Gen. Come, Mr. Dangerfield, are you sworn?

Mr. Dangerfield. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray tell what you know of my Lord Castlemaine.

L. C. J. I perceive my Brethren's Opinion is, That if a Man were convicted of Perjury, if there be no burning in the Hand in the Case, that a Pardon could not set him upright, because of the Interest of the People in the Thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. Come, Mr. Dangerfield, are you sworn?

Mr. Dangerfield. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then pray say what you do know of my Lord Castlemaine.

Mr. Dangerfield. About this time Twelvemonth, my Lady Powis sent me with a Letter for the Prisoner at the Bar, my Lord Castlemaine.

L. C. J. Don't you know him?

Mr. Dangerfield. Yes, my Lord, this is the Person. And, my Lord, the Contents of that Letter I know not: But his Lordship made me stay till he wrote an Answer, and the Contents of the Answer, my Lord, were to this Effect: For I returned with the Answer to the Lady Powis, and she opened and read it while I was present.

L. C. J. Aloud?

Mr. Dangerfield. Aloud, my Lord.

L. C. J. To you?

Mr. Dangerfield. To me.

L. C. J. Who was there?

Mr. Dangerfield. Mrs. Cellier was there besides. And the Contents of this Letter were, This Person I like well, and though he be no Scholar, he will serve to instruct the Youths as he shall be directed. By the Youths were meant the St. Omer's Witnesses.

L. C. J. How do you know?

Mr. Dangerfield. Because I know my Lord was employed for that Purpose. I know his Lordship did use to instruct the Youths; and it was a common saying among them, when one of them was out of his Part, they used to say, I must go to my Lord Castlemaine.

L. C. J. What Part?

Mr. Dangerfield. That which they were to say; and one of them did say, I am out of my Lesson, I must go to my Lord Castlemaine.

L. C. J. When did he say so?

Mr. Dangerfield. Before the Trial, my Lord; and my Lord Castlemaine went along with them to the Trial, and his Lordship complained of some ill Usage that the Witnesses received there. His Lordship was one of the Persons that employed me to get Lane out of the Gate-House, my Lord, and his Lordship sent me to a Solicitor of his, whose Name was Mr. Lawson (the Person is now in Court), to take an Account how far he had proceeded in this Affair. I did take an Account, and I proceeded in it afterwards, and got him discharged.

L. C. J. How came you into my Lord's Acquaintance?

Mr. Dangerfield. That was the first Time, when my Lady Powis sent me with that Letter, my Lord. A pretty while after this, in the Month of July, I went to wait upon his Lordship at his House at Charing-Cross, the same Place where I found his Lordship before; and I was to take his Advice about some Letters that came from one Neuil alias Paine. Those Letters and List of Names I shewed his Lordship, and he gave his Approbation of them, and desired good Store of Copies might be writ: For it was of Consequence, and ought not to be neglected. And asked me, Are there working Persons employed in that Business? And said he, Encourage them, and I will pay my Part. So, my Lord, after there were a great Number of Copies writ of these Letters, I writ a Letter to my Lord Castlemaine, to let his Lordship know that the People had finished their Work, and that there was something more to be done as a Gratuity; and then his Lordship in answer to this Messenger (who is here also in Court) with a Letter his Lordship sent forty Shillings, for his Part. And Mrs. Cellier told me she received forty Shillings, and disposed of it to the Use intended; now, my Lord, the Contents of these Letters were to the same Effect with those Letters and loose Papers which I conveyed into Colonel Mansel's Chamber; and these all tended to the promoting the Sham Plot, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pray tell me what was the Subject of these Letters; what was the Substance of them?

Mr. Dangerfield. To the promoting the Sham-plot, my Lord.

L. C. J. That is a General nobody knows what to make of.

Mr. Dangerfield. I will give your Lordship an Account in particular: The Contents of many of them were to this Purpose.

L. C. J. Were they not all alike?

Mr. Dangerfield. The Copies were the same, and there were so many Originals to draw Copies from.

L. C. J. Were not the Originals all to the same Purpose?

Mr. Dangerfield. Agreeable in Point of Sense.

L. C. J. Pray tell us the Purpose of them?

Mr. Dangerfield. The Purpose was, that so many Letters should be conveyed into the Houses of several Persons of Quality in this Kingdom, that were called Presbyterians: For that was the Notion, that all Persons that were not the immediate Promoters of the Catholick Interest, lay under; because they looked upon that Notion to be most obnoxious.

L. C. J. Who and where?

Mr. Dangerfield. In general, my Lord.

L. C. J. In general, where?

Mr. Dangerfield. By my Lady Powis, and the Lords in the Tower.

L. C. J. Were you by when the Lords in the Tower did agree to it?

Mr. Dangerfield. When my Lord Petre and my Lord Arundel did.

L. C. J. What did they agree to?

Mr. Dangerfield. My Lord, the Thing is this: After they received an Account from one Mr. Paine, I brought a Billet from that Paine; where-in was contained a Ground or Scheme of the Presbyterian-plot; so from thence it derived its first Name, my Lord: So that when I came to discourse with the Lords in the Tower about it, they called it the Presbyterian-plot; and Mrs. Cellier and the Lady Powis said, This is a Notion that will do the Business, as it is most obnoxious, and as best to our Purpose.

Mr. Just. Jones. How far was my Lord Castlemaine concerned in this?

Mr. Dangerfield. I have not heard his Lordship speak of it under that Notion.

L. C. J. Pray let us hear what you can say against my Lord Castlemaine.

Mr. Dangerfield. Now, my Lord, some considerable Time after I had gotten Lane out of Prison, I was employed by several other Persons, his Lordship was one, and he sent me to his Lordship's Solicitor, that is now in Court. A pretty while after this, and the Letters and Lists of Names, containing Matter to the same Effect as I told you before, as those in Mansel's Chamber, and all tending to the Credit of the Sham-plot, or the Presbyterian-plot: Now, my Lord, a pretty while after this, in August, as near as I can remember; about the Middle of August, I went to wait upon his Lordship the very next Day after I had been treated withal in the Tower to kill the King, whom God preserve, my Lord; and his Lordship had a Servant then in the Room, and he sent his Servant down Stairs, and looked upon me with a very austere Countenance: Said he, Why would you offer to refuse the Business for which you were taken out of Prison?

L. C. J. To you?

Mr. Dangerfield. To me, my Lord.

L. C. J. Who was by?

Mr. Dangerfield. No body but his Lordship and my self; for he sent his Servant out before: So he asked me, Why I would offer to refuse the Business I was taken out of Prison for? I asked his Lordship, What that was? Said he, Was not you at the Tower Yesterday? Yes, my Lord, I was. Would your Lordship have me kill the King, I suppose that's the Business? Yes, that is, said he. Upon which my Lord fell into such a Fury, that I was forced rudely to leave the Room, and went down Stairs. I think at the same time his Lordship was writing the Compendium of the late Plot; for there I saw some Words in a Paragraph that lay upon the Table, which I afterwards saw in that Book. There was Ink set upon the Table, and open in his Lordship's Hand. And his Lordship did use in his Discourse to call his Majesty Tyrant.

L. C. J. Have you heard him? In what Company?

Mr. Dangerfield. In his familiar Discourse. As to ask when his Majesty will return from Windsor? Says he, When the Tyrant pleases. And I remember I heard his Lordship mention the Word Tyrant to Mrs. Cellier at Powis-house.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came that Discourse about killing the King? What was the Occasion of that Discourse?

L. C. J. Had you refused it to my Lord?

Mr. Dangerfield. Yes, my Lord, I refused.

L. C. J. What did you say to him?

Mr. Dangerfield. I said, any body but my King, my Lord.

L. C. J. He said, Why did you refuse to do that for which you were taken out of Prison? What is that, my Lord? Was not you at the Tower Yesterday? Why won't you do it? What is it, my Lord? Is it to kill the King? I suppose that it is, said he, that your Lordship intends. Yes, says he, That is it, why won't you do it? That is what he says.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is the Evidence we give.

Mr. Just. Jones. You say he was very violent?

L. C. J. Was you ever in his Company afterwards?

Mr. Dangerfield. No, not after that, my Lord, that I know of.

L. C. J. What kind of Fury did he shew to you at that Time?

Mr. Dangerfield. My Lord, he was in a great Rage, as his Lordship is very cholerick; he was bustling about, and I knew not what he intended to do, and I was unwilling to stand the Test of his Anger. His Lordship seemed by his Look to be meditating Revenge.

L. C. J. How?

Mr. Dangerfield. I say this, After his Lordship had sent his Servant out of the Room, said he, Why would you offer to refuse the Business for which you were taken out of Prison? Said he, Were not you at the Tower Yesterday? Said I, Yes, my Lord, I was. Would you have me kill the King? Is that the Business? Yes, that it is, said my Lord very angrily.

Pris. When did you go to the Tower? Was this the next Day after it?

Mr. Dangerfield. The next Day after it.

Pris. Mr. Dangerfield, Pray let me ask you one Question. Did not I threaten to kill you, or have some of my Servants kill you, if you came unto me again?

Mr. Dangerfield. One Time his Lordship saw me at my Lady Powis's House, and he shewed me a very particular Favour. I speak it in the Presence of Almighty God, nothing out of Revenge, nor for any Sort of Interest.

Pris. Was I never angry with you but at that time?

Mr. Dangerfield. No, my Lord, I know not of any other Time that your Lordship was angry.

L. C. J. Now, what say you, my Lord?

Pris. The first Thing I desire to do, is, Here are two Gentlemen give in Evidence against me, the one is Mr. Oates, and the other Mr. Dangerfield. Mr. Oates says, That he in Spain did see several Letters from me: That when he came over into England, he brought a Letter from Spain to me, that that Letter was given to the Provincial, and the Provincial (he supposes) gave it to me. Now, my Lord, I only desire this, that the first Thing that shall be done, is, that you will please to call Mr. Parker, who will shew you what a kind of Man Mr. Oates is. And I am glad, since you say say that Mr. Dangerfield is a good Witness, that I can prove that every Word he says is a Lie. And so begin with Mr. Oates.

Pris. I would offer you a Record; a Record of some particular Actions from Hastings.

L. C. J. Read the Record.

The Record read.

L. C. J. What Use can you make of this?

Pris. My Lord, the Case is only this, my Lord; I will tell you, here is Mr. Oates, this is only to shew what kind of Man this Mr. Oates is. Mr. Oates he comes and accuses a Man at Hastings for Buggery, there he is indicted and comes to his Trial, and then he is found innocent: Now, my Lord; I sent for this Mr. Parker, to tell your Lordship what kind of Man this Mr. Oates was, and for that Purpose shew the whole Proceeding.

L. C. J. My Lord, you shall have all the Justice in the World; but we must have right done to the King's Evidence. You have brought in a thing, whereby all you can make against Mr. Oates is this, that he was the Prosecutor of a Man for the Crime of Buggery, and is supposed to have taken his Oath there, and notwithstanding the Jury would not believe him, and found the Man Not Guilty.

Pris. My Lord, I come to shew you the Motives how the Jury came to clear him, that is, by proving this Man was in another Place at that time; and satisfied the Court and Jury, that he was from Eleven o'Clock or sooner, till Eight or Ten o'Clock with them in Company; where it was only the Malice that was between Oates and Parker; and several Witnesses that were in the Place where he said the Buggery was committed, said that he was not there; and the Witnesses positively said they were with him, and all looked upon Mr. Oates as a detestable Man, and sent him out of the Court.

L. C. J. Do you prove this by any but Parker?

Mr. Just. Raymond. This ought not to be admitted; for if it be, Mr. Oates stands here to answer all the Faults that ever he committed.

L. C. J. Here is the Case: Supposing it be true now, that Mr. Oates prosecuted a Man for Felony, and he gave Testimony, supposing it should be so, and yet the Jury acquitted him; what use can you make of it? You can make no Inference; it is a thing we must allow all the Juries in England: For there is Witness generally given on both Sides; and when there are for the Plaintiff, the Defendant's Evidence are all perjured; and when for the Defendant the Plaintiff's Evidence are perjured.

Pris. My Lord, this is the Inference. Thus much I make of it, that this Parker is innocent. Oates swears positively he did so, the other swears positively this Man was not there; to shew the Malice Oates had against him.

L. C. J. My Lord, you can go no further than you have gone. The Result of all is, that the Jury found him Not Guilty; for what Grounds no Man can come to say, but the Jurymen themselves. No Man can tell what prevailed with the Jury to find him Not Guilty, that is in their own Consciences, and these are Things that cannot be examined. His Jury, notwithstanding Mr. Oates was the only Prosecutor, they found him Not Guilty, and it amounts to nothing.

Pris. My Lord, there is another thing: While this Man was in Prison, what does Oates do, but comes here to London, accuses the Father, who was a considerable Man in the Town, a Justice of the Peace, and Mayor the Year before; accuses him because he should not assist his Son; accuses him before the King of speaking scandalous Words; then he gets him by a Messenger brought up before the Council: The King was present at the Hearing, and there it was proved to the King, as the Order of Council shews, that he was an honest Man, and so the Council sent Oates away with the greatest Contempt, and freed the other Man.

L. C. J. Was this before the Plot was discovered?

Pris. Yes, my Lord, in pursuance of it.

L. C. J. You said it was that he should not help his Son, his Son was not free.

Pris. No, he was in Prison, my Lord.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord may think it hard if he hath not some competent Liberty; but he must keep to the Business. You say, that notwithstanding he hath the Opinion of the Court, that the Jury must take Notice; then the Jury must take Notice it signifies nothing.

Pris. Very well. Having told you this, I desire you would be pleased to take Notice, after Oates was thus forced to run away from Hastings, here it seems he was converted to be a Papist, by a Person whom Mr. Oates hath since converted to be a Protestant; and you shall see what an Account this Gentleman will give of him.

L. C. J. What is his Name?

Pris. Hutchinson.

L. C. J. What will you do against him?

Pris. Several things, my Lord.

L. C. J. You must not do it: If you are able to disprove Mr. Oates in any of these Particulars, you may do it. If you alledge Testimony against the particular Matter he hath sworn, you will do very well; but pray, my Lord, keep to that.

Pris. I will, my Lord; I will submit any thing to your Lordship's Commands; and therefore, my Lord, I will tell you for what Reason I sent for this Man, to tell you how Mr. Oates went to Spain, and how he lived in Spain.

L. C. J. If you can shew the Jury any Reason why they should not believe his Evidence, that will be very proper.

L. C. J. What is your Name?

Hutchinson. My Name is, Hutchinson.

Pris. Mr. Hutchinson, pray say what you have to say, and not follow Mr. Oates's Method: I only ask you this Question, Sir, Whether you did convert this Man, that is, reconcile him to the Church of Rome?

Hutchinson. Yes, my Lord, that I did.

L. C. J. You ought not to ask him such Questions, you bring him in danger of his Life; you are not to ask him such Questions.

Mr. Recorder. Let us see the Statute-Book.

Cl. of Cr. It is High-Treason.

L. C. J. You thought this had been meritorious now, and it is High-Treason.

Mr. Recorder. This it is to abound in a Man's own Sense. We must beg your Lordship's Advice in this.

L. C. J. Are you a Protestant now?

Hutchinson. Yes, my Lord.

Pris. He was a Priest, and confesses his Error.

VOL. III.

L. C. J. Did you know Oates first in Spain?

Hutchinson. No, my Lord, I knew him first here; and we were in Company, and I told him he could not be a true Priest, since he was of the Church of England.

Mr. Att. Gen. He offers such Things as are not Evidence.

L. C. J. Pray what do you know of his Employment in Spain?

Hutchinson. I received Letters from him when he was in Spain. He went over to study Philosophy and Divinity there, and I saw his Recommendations to the Rector of Liege.

L. C. J. Did you see him?

Hutchinson. Yes, my Lord, I did see him before he made this Disturbance.

L. C. J. What Disturbance? Do you know? What Discourse had you with him?

Hutchinson. I employed him in writing for me.

L. C. J. Writing what?

Hutchinson. In writing certain Things against the Corruption of the Church of Rome. He had 10 s. I gave him, and this was before the Discovery he made (as he pretends) of the Plot. And he told me he would suffer no more for Conscience-sake: It is an hard Thing, said he, Mr. Berry, for a Man to want Bread; upon which I gave him 10 s.

L. C. J. He says, Having been formerly with Mr. Oates, he employed him to transcribe many Things for him; and Mr. Oates said to him, He was resolved no more to suffer for Conscience sake. How, saith he, not so? Oh, but, Mr. Berry, said he, it is a very sad thing to want Bread. And upon that, he says, he gave him 10 s. for his Pains in writing.

Hutchinson. And hereupon, my Lord, in May was Twelvemonth he sent for me, when I heard he had done some more Mischief; and I went to him, my Lord.

L. C. J. That was after the Discovery?

Hutchinson. Yes, my Lord, upon that he was very kind to me, and gave me 20 s. Said he, Mr. Berry, you have been civil to me, and you shall never want any thing so long as I have it. Said I, Mr. Oates, are these Things true that you swear against the Jesuits? Said he, As I hope for Salvation they are. And that was the truest word he spake these three Years. Then, said I, Mr. Oates, answer me this only one Thing. There are an hundred and twenty Persons that saw you every Day, and dined and supped with you at St. Omers; and these you have recommended to me for virtuous People, and I know them to be so. He said, They are Outlaw'd Men.

L. C. J. What did Mr. Oates say more?

Hutchinson. He was with me frequently, my Lord.

Mr. Recorder. He paid your Angel well when he gave you 20 s.

Hutchinson. Mr. Oates, speak the Truth: There is a God in Heaven.

Dr. Oates. Shall I be allowed to satisfy the Court as to this Evidence? I will give the Court a very good Account.

L. C. J. The Substance is this; that you were poor. Is it true that he gave you 10 s.?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I believe I might not have much Money among them.

L. C. J. And you said, You would suffer no more for Conscience Sake?

Dr. Oates. That is not so, my Lord.

L. C. J. And, That it is an hard Thing to want Bread?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I never wanted Bread.

Hutchinson. But you said so to me, Mr. Oates.

Mr. Att. Gen. Hark, Mr. Hutchinson—

Dr. Oates. To shew the Invalidity of this Evidence, my Lord, the Bishop of London hath turned him out of his Living at Barkin.

L. C. J. What is that?

Dr. Oates. To shew that he is not fit to be trusted.

L. C. J. Why, you have never a Living.

Dr. Oates. Yes, I have, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where?

Dr. Oates. In Kent, my Lord.

L. C. J. How long have you had it?

Dr. Oates. I was restored to it last Summer.

Mr. Recorder. He says that he had Discourse with him concerning his Priesthood; whether Mr. Oates thought himself to be a good Priest; that is, as he was made by the Order of the Church of England?

Mr. Att. Gen. He says, He converted Mr. Oates to be a Papist.

Dr. Oates. And I have a Charge of High-Treason against that Man, for seducing me from my Religion, my Lord; I will swear he turned me to the Church of Rome, and I desire it may be Recorded.

Dr. D. I have one thing to tell your Lordship, the Man is mad, he is distracted.

L. C. J. This Doctor of Divinity is a very honest Man, he will tell you.

Dr. D. He was my Curate at Barkin, and my Lord of London having some Information against the manner of his Preaching, sent me word to Rippon he would provide me another Curate; on Saturday last, dining with him, my Lord told me he was distracted.

Mr. Recorder. His Behaviour is a very concurrent Testimony.

Mr. Just. Raymond. I appeal to my Lord, if I did not tell him, as he came into the Court, that he was a distracted Man.

L. C. J. Call another Witness.

Pris. Here's a Gentleman was his School-fellow at Valladolid. I ask you, Mr. Armstrong, Whether you knew any Thing of Mr. Oates there?

L. C. J. How long had he been there?

Armstrong. He was three Months there before me.

L. C. J. How long was he there in all?

Armstrong. A matter of a Month.

L. C. J. Was he not there four Months?

Armstrong. Yes, a matter of four Months in all.

L. C. J. He says, he had been there three Months before he came, and a Month after he came; and that then he was but a common Scholar.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I will satisfy the Court when they question me.

L. C. J. In what would you satisfy us?

Dr. Oates. About being a Scholar. I was ready to commence when they came; but being they were Strangers in the Town, not being Town-Scholars, and not undertaking Philosophical Dictates, the Fathers did pray me to shew them the way to School; and I went with them two or three times.

L. C. J. Call another, my Lord.

Pris. Mr. Palmer and Mr. Doddington.

H

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Did you know Mr. Oates at St. Omers?
Palmer. Yes, my Lord, and he was an ordinary Scholar there, and din'd and sup'd with us.

L. C. J. You said he din'd at another Table.

Palmer. Yes, my Lord, he did dine at a Table by himself, but it was at the same time.

Dr. Oates. Had I Scholars Commons? Pray, my Lord, ask them that.

Palmer. He had the same Commons that we had; but they had a Respect for him, as he was an ancienter Man, and that was the Reason that he had more Freedom than the rest.

Prif. My Lord, he says he came from St. Omers at the Consult: Pray, Sir, who did you come along with? Did you come with Hilsley?

Dr. Oates. Hilsley came with me in the Pacquet-Boat.

Prif. Call Mr. Hilsley and Osbourne. My Lord, this Gentleman—I would bring nothing to offend your Lordship, or nothing that hath been old, if it had not some new Inference from it; therefore, my Lord, this is the Reason that I sent for Mr. Hilsley. Mr. Hilsley, did you come with Mr. Oates in April in the Pacquet-Boat?

Hilsley. No, my Lord.

Prif. You left him at St. Omers?

Hilsley. Yes, my Lord.

Prif. Now, my Lord, I have several Witnesses to prove this. And pray, Mr. Osbourne, tell my Lord what he said to you.

Osbourne. My Lord, about the latter end of April I heard Mr. Hilsley was in Town; I went to see him, and one time at a Coffee-house about the Turnstile we fell in Discourse.

L. C. J. My Lord, you say you have two Persons of Quality: I will tell you, my Lord, what you shall expect; I will not be for one, and not for t'other; but be equal as near as I can. If he comes only to testify what Hilsley told him, it signifies nothing.

Prif. I do depend upon Hilsley; but this is that Hilsley told him, that there was one Oates at St. Omers.

L. C. J. That is no Evidence, nor can Ladies of Quality prove by their own Experience what Mr. Hilsley affirms, that Oates came not over with him.

Prif. My Lord, they can tell; and one Lady, a Protestant, that talking with this Gentleman before the Plot—

L. C. J. This is only Discourse what another Man says; if Mr. Oates himself should have said so, then indeed it is proper: But to shew you this, it is impossible, supposing they speak truth; that is, if they do witness what they do not, that long before they heard of the Name of Oates, this Gentleman should tell them, one Oates was left at St. Omers; it signifies nothing.

Prif. Does not that confirm Mr. Hilsley's Testimony?

L. C. J. No, indeed.

Prif. I only refer this to you, my Lord; Hilsley says, in April he did leave Oates, and here are four or five Witnesses that Hilsley told them so.

Mr. Just. Jones. All that my Lord says, is this, that he did leave Mr. Oates at St. Omers. If it be objected, they are Catholics, as they call them; says my Lord, Hilsley did tell this Story before there was any Plot. Why should he tell them so? It is not in favour of that Religion that he speaks; but the time of testifying such a thing shews he speaks true. This is all.

Prif. This is the Inference; this is only to corroborate and shew you the Credit of his Testimony.

Mr. Just. Raymond. It may be a Mistake, tho', and it is of no more Force than what he says now.

Mr. Att. Gen. They were all mistaken in that Matter.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, he did leave me at St. Omers, but I overtook him at Calais.

L. C. J. Will you swear it, Mr. Oates?

Dr. Oates. I say, upon my Oath I did it.

L. C. J. It were a great Matter if you had any body to prove, that this Gentleman came alone; but that is still but one Man's Testimony.

Prif. But here is Confirmation to his Evidence that he could not invent it.

Mr. Att. Gen. You had 16 once, but the contrary was proved and believed, and so it may be again.

Prif. Call Mr. Gregson and Mr. Rigby. Mr. Gregson, were not you Landlord to Mr. Oates before the Plot was discovered? How long before the Plot did he lie at your House?

L. C. J. What time?

Gregson. A Week before Easter, 77.

Mr. Just. Raymond. When did he go away from you, Sir?

Gregson. The Sunday after Easter-day.

Mr. Just. Raymond. When did you see him again?

Gregson. He came to me about All Saints.

Mr. Just. Raymond. The same Year?

Gregson. Yes.

Dr. Oates. Who paid for my Quarters? Pray ask him that, my Lord.

Gregson. He paid for it himself.

Dr. Oates. Did not Mr. Fenwick pay for it?

Gregson. He did after you came from St. Omers.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, when I came last from St. Omers, I went directly to his House.

Prif. Was not he in a poor Condition?

Gregson. He was then indifferently poor.

Prif. My Lord, this is only to prove his Condition.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I had only what the Jesuits allowed me.

L. C. J. You had nothing but what they allowed you?

Dr. Oates. Nothing else, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Jones. They allowed you a very scanty Living.

Prif. Call Mr. Littcott. Mr. Littcott, Do you know any thing about a Divorce?

L. C. J. What should he know?

Prif. Pray, my Lord, don't discourage me.

Mr. Just. Raymond. But you must not ask things that are not to the Purpose.

Littcott. My Lord, it was morally impossible there should be a Divorce.

L. C. J. Was there any Endeavour by my Lord concerning it?

Littcott. There was no such Design.

L. C. J. How was that? But pray mind, you will be morally not believed else: Do you know my Lord used any Endeavours, in order to obtain a Divorce?

Mr. Recorder. That is all that he says, he never knew any thing.

Prif. I only say this, my Lord, Mr. Oates comes here and says, that he heard me say, that I did spend a great deal of Money. Now if I satisfy the Court that I never spent a Farthing towards a Divorce—

L. C. J. If he had said, your Lordship laid out Sums of Money, then it had been an Answer to that, if you could prove you had not.

Prif. You know I stand here accused for a great Crime; pray give me leave.

Mr. Just. Raymond. If it were a matter of Moment, we would.

Prif. Pray, my Lord, hear me: Here's a Man says, I spent a great deal of Money about a Divorce? I come to tell your Lordship, that this very Man, before your Lordships, and also before the King, and if your Lordships have forgot it, I will shew you Witnesses that he spake it before the King; and before the House of Commons, that I did actually sue out a Divorce: Now I will shew, my Lord, that I neither could, nor did go about it.

L. C. J. We are not to take Notice of that now. If he did say a false Thing before the House of Commons, we cannot take Notice of it now; for we cannot go to try whether he said so, and whether that be true or false.

Prif. I humbly beg, my Lord, if this Man that is upon his Oath hath sworn before the King that he did actually see the Divorce, and I prove that it was impossible that he should see the Divorce, because it was impossible to get a Divorce—

L. C. J. What then?

Mr. Just. Raymond. You must not be permitted to prove that, it is not pertinent to the Question.

Prif. My Lords, with humble Submission to you, he hath told me this before your Lordships, that I spent a great deal of Money about a Divorce.

L. C. J. My Lord, you will be satisfied, when we have acquainted you what the ordinary Proceedings of a Court of Justice are in Matters of this Nature: what is and what is not to be admitted. If you should come to prove Mr. Oates had falsely sworn a thing in another Court, and five or six Witnesses shall come and say it is not true; we are not to hearken to it. The Reason is this: First, you must have him perjured, and we are not now to try, whether that Thing sworn in another Place be true or false: Because that is the way to accuse whom you please; and that may make a Man a Liar, that cannot imagine this will be put to him: And so no Man's Testimony that comes to be a Witness, shall leave himself safe. And this is another Case, if he swore in another Place what is contradictory to what he says now; then it is proper. If you could prove that he had sworn in another Place that he never saw you, it is very proper: But now to us he says, that he doth not remember whether ever he had seen a Divorce, or that you had sued out a Divorce. All that he remembers is, that you said you had expended a great deal of Money about a Divorce, and this is all he testifies here.

Prif. My Lord, my Evidence against Mr. Oates is this, that he waves what he said before, when I came to ask him, and says, I don't remember. Now, my Lord, if he lies in one thing he may in another.

Mr. Just. Raymond. No Man can remember all the things that ever he did in his Life.

Prif. I have Witnesses to appeal to, to witness every thing; and I represent it here to you, that I would with all my heart have indicted him of Perjury, but for Mr. Attorney General: For I employed two to attend the Clerk of the Peace for Copies of the Indictment against Mr. Langborn and Mr. Ireland; they did come to the Clerk of the Peace; faith the Clerk of the Peace, I can't do it without Mr. Attorney's Authority. My Lord, faith he, I would give them you with all my Heart, but I must have leave from the Table.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord, I told you I would not give it you without you had an Order from the King, and the Council did not think fit to give it you.

Prif. I think this a little pertinent.

Mr. Just. Jones. How doth any thing that your Lordship excepts against in this Gentleman's Testimony contradict it self? All that you accuse him of is, that Mr. Oates had said he heard you say, you had spent a great deal of Money about a Divorce.

Prif. I only shew, if you are pleased to hear it, that he reported to the King that he actually saw the Divorce.

Mr. Just. Jones. That agrees well enough with what he says now.

Prif. He said so in your Lordship's Hearing.

L. C. J. I don't remember it, if I did I would speak of it; I don't remember it, upon my Word.

Mr. Just. Raymond. I protest I don't remember a Word.

Mr. Just. Jones. In the Court, did he say it?

Mr. Just. Raymond. Here we have all three that were present, I protest I don't remember it; but as to the Business of the Divorce, I might look upon it as impertinent, and so possibly might not mind what he said.

Prif. I only offer this to you; and if your Lordships command me to desist, I will desist.

Dr. Oates. I desire my Evidence to prove that I was in Town.

Mr. Just. Raymond. Pray, Mr. Oates, you are an Evidence, you must be govern'd by Mr. Attorney.

L. C. J. It would be very fit, Mr. Attorney, to prove that Mr. Oates did come over with Hilsley in the Pacquet-Boat.

Mr. Just. Raymond. Mr. Oates, I remember very well, gave an Account of his coming over; said he, I did come over with such and such Persons, and among the rest was Mr. Hilsley. This is only to prove that he was at the Consult.

Mr. Att. Gen. We can prove it.

Records produced against Mr. Dangerfield.

L. C. J. Here is, that he was burnt in the Hand, and Out-lawed for Felony, Pilloried for Cheating, twice Pilloried; and see whether he was Whipp'd or no.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I know nothing of the Pillory.

Mr. Just. Raymond. Here was a Record of being burnt in the Hand, and a Record for putting away false Guineas.

L. C. J. For that he was to stand in the Pillory.

Cl. of Cr. Here is one Record for another Shilling Gilt.

L. C. J. Was that in the Pillory too?

Mr. Att. Gen. He was fined Fifty Pounds.

Cl. of Cr. Here are three in Salisbury for three several Guineas, and he was adjudged to the Pillory for them all.

Mr. Att. Gen.

Mr. Att. Gen. It was all at one Affizes, my Lord.
 L. C. J. My Brother try'd him.
 Cl. of Cr. He was tried before Mr. Just. Jones, and to stand in the Pillory for all three.
 L. C. J. What have you else to say?
 Prif. Call Mrs. Cellier and Mr. Dowdal.
 L. C. J. What is your Name, Sir?
 Dowdal. My Name is Bennet Dowdal.
 L. C. J. What have you to say to him, my Lord?
 Prif. Mr. Dowdal, the Case is this, Mr. Dangerfield tells me I was angry with him at such a time for a Business at my House; Was I not angry with him at Powis House for going to the Lords in the Tower?
 Mr. Att. Gen. Then he did go about it?
 Dowdal. Mrs. Cellier spake to me to speak to Mr. Dangerfield not to be troubled at your Anger.
 Mr. Just. Raymond. When was this?
 Dowdal. After the Jesuits died.
 Prif. He proves this, That Mrs. Cellier spake to him to pacify Mr. Dangerfield, and Dangerfield did tell him I was angry with him for going in my Name to the Lords.
 Mr. Just. Raymond. He says no such Thing, my Lord.
 L. C. J. You must not ask him what Mrs. Cellier said.
 Mrs. Cellier. This Day twelve-month he and I had been employ'd in writing Copies of some Letters, and I sent him to my Lord to know if he would go something towards the printing them, and he went from him to the Lords in the Tower. In an Hour and half after, my Lord came to me very angry: Mrs. Cellier, said he, I thought you would not forfeit your Discretion to send such a Rascal to me; if you send him to me again, I will bid my Servants kick him. And, said I to Mr. Dangerfield, you are not to note that; for he is a very good Man, and may be angry one time and pleased another; and I would have sent him another time, and said he; Pray, Madam, don't send me thither, I would rather go an hundred Miles of your Errand.
 L. C. J. Dangerfield, That Discourse you had with my Lord, was it before the Jesuits dy'd, or after?
 Mr. Dangerfield. What Discourse?
 L. C. J. When you discours'd about killing the King.
 Mr. Dangerfield. No, my Lord, two Months after.
 L. C. J. When was the time that these Words were spoken?
 Mr. Dangerfield. When his Lordship was in that Passion.
 L. C. J. When was that?
 Mr. Dangerfield. My Lord, it was about the Middle of August.
 L. C. J. Was you ever in his Company after?
 Mr. Dangerfield. No, my Lord, I saw him once at Powis House.
 L. C. J. Had he ever been angry before?
 Mr. Dangerfield. No, not till this time, my Lord.
 L. C. J. Here Mrs. Cellier witnesses, that this Day twelve-month, my Lord was extremely angry, insomuch, that when she would have had you go on an Errand, you would not.
 Mr. Dangerfield. My Lord, that time I had been with my Lord Castlemaine, I went home to Mrs. Cellier's House, which I did then call my home, and said I, my Lord Castlemaine is most violently angry with me.
 L. C. J. When was this?
 Mr. Dangerfield. This was the latter End of August.
 L. C. J. But the talks of this time twelve-month.
 Mr. Dangerfield. It is no such thing, my Lord.
 Mrs. Cellier. I said, Pray carry this Letter to my Lord Castlemaine: Pray excuse me, said he, I had rather go an hundred Miles than go by his Door.
 L. C. J. Whereas Dangerfield says, he had this Discourse in August, Mrs. Cellier says in June or July; this Day twelve-month particularly she gave him a Letter, and he said, Pray excuse me, I would go an hundred Miles for you; but I would not go into my Lord's Company again if I could help it.
 Prif. My Lord, Mr. Dowdal can tell it.
 L. C. J. Did he acknowledge to you my Lord's Anger in the beginning of July?
 Dowdal. It was within a Week after the Jesuits died.
 L. C. J. I don't know that.
 Dowdal. It was about the twenty-first of June.
 L. C. J. Here are two Witnesses, one says in June or the beginning of July; says Mrs. Cellier, this Day twelve-month he came and told me, my Lord was extremely angry with him. And she would afterwards have had him carried a Letter: But he said, Pray excuse me, I would go an hundred Miles, but he would not go again to him if he could help it. And Dowdal says, he told him about that time of my Lord's Anger with him.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Hold your Tongue, Mr. Dangerfield.
 Mr. Just. Raymond. What Jesuits?
 Dowdal. The five Jesuits.
 Prif. If you please, my Lords, I would only tell you this. My Lords, you see that these two Witnesses testify that I was angry with Mr. Dangerfield in June; my Lords, I only say this to you, that when I was examin'd at the Council before the King of this Particular, my Lord Chancellor ask'd him the Particulars of it, and he did confess this thing which I now prove. Now, my Lords, I infer this, if I was so angry with him for offering to go to the Tower, when he went to the Tower in my Name—
 L. C. J. That they have said, that you were very angry.
 Dowdal. Dangerfield told me so, that he was angry about his going to the Tower in my Lord's Name, unknown to him.
 L. C. J. Here are two Witnesses to prove that my Lord was angry with him for going to the Tower in his Name; and they both testify he was extremely high, and refused to carry a Letter to my Lord; and yet he says, in August following he had this Discourse.
 Prif. I have now only one thing to say what hath pass'd between Mr. Oates and Mr. Dangerfield.
 L. C. J. Do it as near as you can.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. We have some other Evidence to answer this.
 Mr. Att. Gen. If your Lordship please, we will call two or three Witnesses to prove the Point. First, to prove this last thing, that we have been in my Lord's Company later than my Lord speaks of.

L. C. J. He says August.
 Mr. Att. Gen. We will prove after that time, that is the time that pinches us.
 Prif. My Lady Powis is in Court, will you hear her?
 Lady Powis. My Lord, I never did send a Letter by Mr. Dangerfield to any body in my life, nor I never read a Letter in Mr. Dangerfield's Presence, nor never had him so much in my Company to read a Letter or any Tittle to him.
 L. C. J. I will tell you Gentlemen, what he says; Mr. Dangerfield swears he carried a Letter from my Lady Powis to my Lord Castlemaine, and there was an Answer brought back, and that that Answer of my Lord Castlemaine's was read before him; and (you will do well to call Mrs. Cellier in again) my Lady Powis doth deny that she ever sent a Letter by him to my Lord Castlemaine; or any body else, by him in her Life; or that she ever communicated any Letter to him: This is apt Evidence, this is the Truth of it; for it answers directly to what he says against my Lord Castlemaine.

Sir Richard Barker.

L. C. J. What say you, Sir Richard Barker, can you give an Account of Oates? When was Mr. Oates in Town? What time that you know of?
 Sir R. Barker. My Lord, I remember we were once upon this before your Lordship.
 L. C. J. In 78?
 Sir R. Barker. Yes; my Lord; the Evidence that I gave, my Lord; was only this, that my Servants told me that Mr. Oates had been at my House: It was before Whitsontide in May 78.
 L. C. J. Did you see him then? When was it you saw him?
 Sir R. Barker. My Lord, I saw him after.
 L. C. J. How long after?
 Sir R. Barker. My Lord, it was about the latter end of June.
 L. C. J. He says, to his own Knowledge he saw him in June.
 Mr. Att. Gen. But we have his Servants here too, Philip Page, and Cecily Mayo.
 L. C. J. Do you hear, Mrs. Cellier, was there any Letters sent by my Lord Castlemaine to my Lady Powis, that was read before you and Dangerfield?
 Mrs. Cellier. No, my Lord.
 L. C. J. Here are two Witnesses; my Lady says there is no such Thing, and Mrs. Cellier says it.
 Prif. There is another Thing, that is, the Teaching the Scholars at St. Omers, that I taught the Scholars their Lessons.

— Turner.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray inform my Lord and the Jury, what time it was you saw Mr. Dangerfield at my Lord Castlemaine's.
 L. C. J. What Month can you charge your self to say you saw Dangerfield in my Lord Castlemaine's Company?
 Turner. I can't say just the time.
 L. C. J. Might it be August?
 Turner. I can't well tell, I think it might be about July.
 Mr. Just. Raymond. Why do you think so?
 L. C. J. You are not asked to accuse your self in any thing, but when you saw them together.
 Turner. I was coming down Stairs, my Lord.
 Mr. Just. Raymond. You don't tell when it was.
 L. C. J. Tell us whether you can tell or no: If you are doubtful; say you are doubtful; but speak the Truth.
 Turner. I can't be positive.
 L. C. J. It might be in June, or July, or August; but you think July.
 Turner. Yes, Sir.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. The sooner it is after that, the Evidence is the better against it.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Madam, I think your Ladyship says you never sent a Letter by Dangerfield?
 Lady Powis. Yes, Sir.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Nor did you never receive any Notes from him?
 Lady Powis. I have received some Notes from Mrs. Cellier, which were his Writing.
 L. C. J. But did you ever receive a Letter from my Lord Castlemaine?
 Lady Powis. Never, my Lord.

— Woodman.

Mr. Just. Raymond. What do you say, Mr. Attorney?
 Mr. Att. Gen. Heark you, Woodman, were you sent with any Letter?
 Woodman. To whom?
 Mr. Att. Gen. To my Lord Castlemaine, or any body?
 Woodman. I was sent with one Letter, it was Mrs. Cellier's, my Lord.
 L. C. J. To whom?
 Woodman. To my Lord Castlemaine; as I remember, my Lord, I took it from Mrs. Cellier's Daughter.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever receive any Money of my Lord Castlemaine?
 Woodman. Yes, my Lord.
 L. C. J. What was it? How much was it?
 Woodman. About three Pounds, or thirty Shillings, I believe.
 L. C. J. How do you believe it?
 Woodman. To the best of my Thoughts it was.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Was it for Dangerfield?
 Woodman. My Lord, I don't know that.
 L. C. J. Have you any more?
 Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I have this to say, to prove Dr. Oates was in London in April 78.
 L. C. J. He doth not deny but he might be here too.
 Prif. I don't dispute it, my Lord, I have only this one Word more. It is not of Treason, but it is against my Reputation; because this Man, before your Lordship, I think, has accused me of it; and I think, my Lord, I shall give you very good Satisfaction: That is, that the Boys that came from St. Omers were not instructed and taught by me. Now, if you please, my Lord, to give me leave to shew it, I have done. Look my Lord, the thing that I can say, is this: Mr. Littcott—
 Mr. Just. Raymond. You see he said it was morally impossible.

Prif.

Pris. Pray, my Lords—

Mr. Just. Raymond. I will undertake you will say it is time lost.

L. C. J. I will stay some time to observe to the Jury what I have taken notice of, with all my heart, but I should be gone.

Pris. I have done, my Lord, I would not say any thing to disgust any body.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, I will deliver my Observations in this Cause as I would in any Cause, to the best of my Understanding, and I will make those Observations that are as natural as I know how to do; and proper for you to take notice of. It is in vain to dispute what my Lord stands indicted of: It is for attempting to murder the King, and change our Government and our Religion. To prove this there have been two Witnesses only that are material, and that is Mr. Oates in the first place; and Mr. Oates his Evidence, the Sum of it is to be reduced—

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, do you stand up to speak any thing?

Mr. Att. Gen. If your Lordship pleases, we will sum up the Evidence for the King, not to offend your Lordship.

L. C. J. If you would be short, Mr. Attorney, we would not hinder you of any thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. I will be very short.

If it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, my Lord Castlemaine is here charged with High-Treason. The Proof that we have against him is by two Witnesses, that is, Dr. Oates and Mr. Dangerfield. Mr. Oates he doth swear this, namely, That after the Consult (for I will bring it in short) that after the Consult that was for killing the King and altering the Government, my Lord Castlemaine being acquainted with it at Mr. Fenwick's Chamber, did hope it good Success, and that he should come to be reveng'd. Mr. Dangerfield he hath prov'd, That being treated with to kill the King, and having refus'd to do it, my Lord Castlemaine was very angry with him for it, and said, Why won't you do that for which you were taken out of Prison? Here are two Witnesses express. What is said against Mr. Oates signifies nothing. As to Mr. Dangerfield, there are some Exceptions, which we must confess to be true; but he is a Witness, and, my Lord, such Matters are to be expected to be proved by such Witnesses: For if a Man will discover Robberies, he must go to such Persons as do such Things; and if Treasons, it must be among them that have been employed in such Things. Tho' he were a dishonest Man before, yet he may be honest now: He was never guilty of any Treason but as he was employed among them. There are some Witnesses brought to encounter him, and one is my Lady Powis, who, as he says, sent him with a Letter to my Lord Castlemaine; but she says she did never send a Letter by him: And others say, he would never come at my Lord Castlemaine after he was angry, which was in June. Now for that, Gentlemen, you do hear Turner say, That in July or August, for he can't tell which, he thinks it might be July, he saw Dangerfield at my Lord Castlemaine's; so that That encounters that Evidence.

L. C. J. If Mr. Attorney had not interrupted me, I would not have left out any thing of this Nature, for I would be certainly careful where the King's Life lies at stake: I would be sure to preserve my Sovereign above all things; and therefore no Man ought to think that I should be partial in a Cause wherein our Religion, and the Life of the King and the Government is in Danger. But I must say on the other side, That there should be good competent Proofs of these Things against those accused, because their Lives and Fortunes, and Honours, and all are at stake. And so, Gentlemen, we shall discharge our Consciences to the best of our Understandings, and deal uprightly on both hands.

For the Case it stands thus: It is truly observed by Mr. Attorney, That there are but two material Witnesses to the Charge of this Indictment, that is to say, Mr. Oates and Mr. Dangerfield. Mr. Oates his Testimony is in two Things; the one close, the other is more remote. That more remote is, That he had a Letter to send to my Lord Castlemaine, which he gave to the Provincial to send it, and as he says, he saw a Letter subscribed Castlemaine; and that afterwards by seeing him write a Superfcription, he could recollect the Character so well, that he believed that to be his Hand which he saw in Spain among the Jesuits or the Fathers, as they call them there, to whom they communicated that Letter; wherein he mentioned the general Design, that is, the bringing in Popery, which is the bringing in the Catholick Religion, as they call it. That is more remote. He says, there were Letters pass'd between them, wherein my Lord approved of some Things, and disapproved of others, which related to the Design; by which, says Mr. Oates, we meant the whole Matter and Transaction of killing the King; and that doth appear by that Letter he saw of my Lord Castlemaine's, for that annexes to design the advancing the Catholick Religion. The first time he saw him he did not know who he was; and there, at Wild-house, he says, That my Lord Castlemaine should drop out some Words which were suspicious, and one thing, as if he understood something of this Matter that they had in Agitation.

But more particularly he says, That when he came to Fenwick's Chamber, there was the great Matter. They talked before but of the Design in general, at Wild-house; but afterwards meeting in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, where he was told who he was, they went to Fenwick's Chamber, where they fell a discoursing about several Things that related to the Concern, and at last they fell upon the Matter in hand, and said, they were glad to see the Fathers so unanimous in this Matter: I asked about what Matter? He said, the killing of the King and bringing in Popery; to which, he says, that my Lord should make answer, He wished them good Success in their Design, and that then he should be revenged. This is the Substance of what Mr. Oates says; against whose Testimony, I must tell you, there hath been but little. There is but little thrown upon Mr. Oates by way of Disgrace and Infamy; for that Verdict that the Jury found against his Evidence, it is not material, for then every Man must be accused when the Jury does not go according to the Testimony he gives. It is not to be denied, but there is something said against him in another Particular, and that is his coming over from St. Omers; where he says that Mr. Hilsley came over with him in the Pacquet-Boat, but Mr. Hilsley denies it; Mr. Oates would have saved it, by saying he left him at St. Omers. 'Tis true, says Mr. Oates, but I overtook him afterwards; but he says to the Point, that he came not with him. Now, it is not to be denied on the other hand, but Mr. Oates might be here, and my Lord of Castlemaine seems to admit it, and it is probable enough Mr. Oates might be here. This is all I remember in reference to Mr. Oates. You must weigh well with your selves how probable or not probable what he does swear is: But I must tell the Jury they are to weigh the Natures of People among themselves, as they carry Probability or not, or else the Confidence of a Swearer shall take away any Man's Life whatsoever. And to that Mr. Oates says first, I understand not how he should be so free, Mr. Oates being a Stranger to him, when he knew not my Lord, and doth not know whether my Lord knew him or no. But he says, my Lord must needs see the Jesuits trusted him, and that might make him more confident: That afterwards going to Fenwick's House, he spoke broader in plain English. They were talking of a Design to kill the King and bring in the Catholick Religion; and Mr. Oates says, he wish'd them good Success in the Design, and that then he should be revenged. How far this Oath is to be taken or not, I must leave to your Consideration.

The next is Mr. Dangerfield; for nothing infamous is proved against Mr. Oates. Dangerfield is a Man of whom there is enough. You see what Crimes there are; for it is the Duty of every Judge; and I can't see how he can discharge his Conscience, and the Duty he owes to the Government, in respect of his Oath and Place, if he doth not make those just Observations to the Jury which are done in all Cases: That is to say, when Men have contracted great Crimes upon themselves, tho' by Law they may be Witnesses; yet it hath always been observed, and their Credit left to them to consider of. You see how many Crimes they have produced, a matter of six great enormous Crimes; and by them you will see how far you ought to consider his Testimony. Had Mr. Dangerfield been guilty only of being concerned in the Treason, and come in as a Witness, I should have thought him a very competent Witness, for that is Mr. Oates's Case; but they prove Crimes of another Sort and Nature, and whether the Man of a sudden be become a Saint by being become a Witness, I leave that to you to consider, and how far you are satisfied in the main.

The next thing is the Opposition to his Testimony. He hath sworn that he carried a Letter from my Lady Powis to my Lord Castlemaine, and an Answer returned back from my Lord to her, and that my Lady Powis did read it in the Presence of Mrs. Cellier and him. Of this my Lady Powis hath been asked (it is true, they are not upon their Oaths, but that is not their Fault, the Law will not allow it), and my Lady Powis hath affirmed to it, as much as lay upon her to do, that she never sent a Letter by Mr. Dangerfield to my Lord Castlemaine, nor any body else. And whereas he says Mrs. Cellier was present, she says she knows of no such Letter, nor was any read in her Company. And this is a contradicting his Evidence, supposing him to be a Man otherwise untouch'd. And whereas Dangerfield says, that in August, he was with my Lord, and he said, How chance you would not do that thing for which you were brought out of Prison? What? Would you have me kill the King? Yes, faith he, that is it. And my Lord speaking very angrily and very roughly, made him think it time to withdraw out of his Company, and never come into his Company more; and that this was the time of his Anger, and no other time, my Lord rather complimenting him, as he would say, with friendly Salutations. But they produce Witnesses against this. Says Mrs. Cellier, This Day Twelvemonth; and says t'other, about a Week after the Jesuits were executed, which was about the beginning of July, faith she, I would have you carry a Letter to my Lord Castlemaine; faith he, I would not do that, I would go an hundred Miles upon another Errand, but I would not go to him. Another Witness says, my Lord was mighty angry with him, and told him the Cause, because he went in his Name to the Lords in the Tower. First, this contradicts what he said, as if there had been no Anger before. The next is, that it is very improbable that my Lord should be angry with him so much, that my Lord should be very angry with him for going in his Name to the Tower, and afterwards for his refusing to kill the King; when he said, Why did you not do that you came out of Prison for? What, my Lord, to kill the King? Yes, that. This is an Argument in Opposition to his Testimony.

The next is a Consideration for his Testimony. Turner says, in answer to that, in July he takes it, but can't charge himself whether June, or July, or August, but he himself thinks July, that he saw him at the Lord Castlemaine's House. And the King's Council would gather from that, there could not be such an Unwillingness to go before that time, it being after the time they speak of that this Man saw him there. Whether or no it was in June, or July, or August, is something uncertain. So that I have repeated, as near as I can, all that is substantial on either Part; and I have, according to the best of my Understanding, dealt fairly on both Sides, and observed to you what hath been sworn against my Lord, and what hath been said in Contradiction to what they swear, and what appears upon Record, as to Dangerfield.

There is a great deal of Difference between Mr. Oates's Testimony and Mr. Dangerfield's; for you may believe one, when you may perchance not believe another. There are not those Things cast upon Mr. Oates that are upon Mr. Dangerfield. Now I must tell you, tho' they have produced two, if you believe but one, I think (if so be by my Brethren's Opinions be otherwise, I would be very willingly contradicted in this Matter) if two Witnesses are produced, both speaking materially to the thing, the one is believed, and the other not. Whether upon these two Witnesses the Jury can find a Person guilty, or no? I am of Opinion, it is but one Witness, if you don't believe one; and I am sure one is not sufficient to find one guilty: And therefore if so be you are of another Opinion, let us deal fairly and above-board, that it may appear we deal rightly between the King and his Subjects, and so preserve Men that are accused, and not guilty.

Mr. Just. Jones. I think, in the first place, my Lord hath very faithfully delivered the Evidence; and I do think it necessary, in a Case of Treason, that there must be two Witnesses believed by the Jury.

Mr. Just. Raymond. I never heard any Man question it. If the Law says there must be two Witnesses produced, it says they must be both believed.

L. C. J. Now you have our Sense of it.

[The Jury went from the Bar, and returned.]

Cl. of Cr. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.
Cl. of Cr. Who shall speak for you?
Jury. The Foreman.
Cl. of Cr. Roger Palmer, Esq; Earl of Castlemaine in the Kingdom of Ireland, Hold up thy Hand, look upon the Jury.
Cl. of Cr. Is Roger Palmer, Esq; Earl of Castlemaine in the Kingdom of Ireland, Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Jury. Not Guilty.
Cl. of Cr. This is your Verdict, You say he is Not Guilty, so you say all?
Jury. Yes.

XCVIII. The Trial of HENRY CARR, at the Guild-hall of London, for a Libel, July 2, 1680, 32 Car. II.

AN Information was filed in the Crown-Office against Henry Carr, which sets forth, that a certain Plot of a traitorous Conspiracy was lately had within this Kingdom of England, amongst divers false Traitors of this Kingdom of England, to put to Death and murder our Lord King Charles II. and the Government of this Kingdom of England, and the sincere Religion of God within this Kingdom of England well and piously established, to destroy and subvert, and the Romish Religion within this Kingdom of England to introduce; and that also divers Traitors for High-Treason aforesaid, were lawfully convicted and attainted, and other Persons, for High-Treason, aforesaid, were by due Course of Law tried and acquitted. Nevertheless, one Henry Carr, of the Parish of Sepulchres, London, Gent. knowing well the Premises, but minding, and maliciously intending the Government of the Kingdom of England, and the Administration of Justice in the same Kingdom to scandalize, and to bring the same in Contempt:

The first Day of August, in the Thirty first Year of our now Lord the King, at the Parish of Sepulchres, London, a certain false, scandalous and malicious Book, Entituled, The Weekly Packet of Advice from Rome, or the History of Popery, maliciously and unlawfully hath printed, and caused to be published: In which Book is contained among other Things, as followeth: There is lately found out by an experienc'd Physician, an incomparable Medicament, call'd The Wonder-working Plaster, truly Catholick in Operation, somewhat of kin to the Jesuits Powder, but more effectual. The Virtues of it are strange and various. It will make Justice Deaf as well as Blind, takes out Spots out of deepest Treasons, more cleverly than Castle-Soap does common Stains. It alters a Man's Constitution in two or three Days, more than the Virtuofos Transfusion of Blood in seven Years. Is a great Alexipharmick, and helps Poisons, and those that use them. It miraculously exalts and purifies the Eye-sight, and makes People behold nothing but Innocence in the blackest Malefactors. It is a mighty Cordial for a declining Cause, stifles a Plot as certainly as the Itch is destroyed by Butter and Brimstone. In a word, it makes Fools wife Men, and wife Men Fools, and both of them Knaves. The Colour of this precious Balm is bright and dazzling, and being apply'd privately to the Fist in decent Manner, and a competent Dose, infallibly performs all the said Cures, and many others not fit here to be mentioned:

To the great Contempt of our Lord the King and his Laws, to the great Scandal of the Government of our now Lord the King, and the Laws of this Kingdom of England, and the Administration of Justice in the same Kingdom; to the evil Example of all others in such a Case offending, and against the Peace of our Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

To which Information appeared in the Court of King's-Bench, Henry Carr, by his Attorney, Benedict Brown, the eleventh of February, and having heard the Information aforesaid, said that he was not Guilty.

Issue being join'd, it was tried by Writ of Nisi Prius, at the Guild-hall, before the Lord Chief Justice Scroggs, upon the Second of July, 1680, where a Jury was summon'd, whose Names are as followeth:

Benjamin Thorogood.	John Debmam.	Richard Blaney.
Richard Blackburn.	Lewis Wilson.	Henry Averie.
Godfrey Richards.	Henry Lashoe.	Joseph Hall.
Leonard Bates.	Thomas Salter.	William Bridges.
Philip Harman.	Jeremiah Gregory.	Thomas Lee.
Francis Breerwood.	Nicholas Bondy.	Richard White.
Thomas Kemble.	George Day.	Randal Dod.
William Longman.	Nicholas Dawes.	Richard Bowater.

Of all which only Four appeared and were Sworn, viz.

Nicholas Bondy.	Henry Averie.
Leonard Bates.	Randal Dod.

Whereupon a Tales was prayed and granted, and then were sworn and added to the principal Pannel, according to the Form of the Statute,

Nicholas Caplin.	William Yap.	John Odenfel.
Richard Cavotham.	James Wood.	Emanuel Conyers.
Arthur Young.	Thomas Gilby.

After which the Court proceeded, and the Recorder began to open the Offence, as follows.

Sir George Jefferies. Mr. Recorder. This Person among others, intending to scandalize the Government, hath caused a Book to be published, which I have here in my Hand, called, The Weekly Packet of Advice from Rome; there are some Papers besides what are bound up together, that are continued on, which, my Lord, would not be amiss for us that are of the King's Council to take Notice of, not only for the Jury's Satisfaction, but likewise for the Satisfaction of this great Auditory, some whereof I know come to pick Advantage, and to know whether or no Rascals may have Liberty to print what they please. Now all the Judges of England having been met together, to know whether any Person whatsoever may expose to the publick Knowledge any manner of Intelligence, or any Matter whatsoever that concerns the Publick: They give it in as their Resolution, that no Person whatsoever could expose to the publick Knowledge any thing that concern'd the Affairs of the Publick, without Licence from the King, or from such Persons as he thought fit to entrust with that Affair. But such is the Age that we live in, that Man that hath Wit enough to libel any Man in the Government, thinks he hath Licence enough to expose that Man to publick Knowledge also. And they do it under specious Pretences, because they think that any Man may be exposed to the publick Censure that they can either call a Papist, or but popishly affected; and that Man is either the one or the other, that is not agreeable to every Rascally Humour that some People affect. I acknowledge, my Lord, that any Man that will in a legal manner endeavour to suppress Popery, ought to be encouraged in his Endeavour, to the utmost; but if in case any Man will be transported with Zeal, because he is of a Party, and under Pretence of endeavouring to suppress Popery, should support a Party, that Man ought to be detected. The Author of this Packet of Advice from Rome, or the Publisher of it, Mr. Carr, that is now the Defendant, he thinks he can scratch the Itch of the Age, and that he may libel any Man concern'd in the Government, if he can but call him a Papist, or popishly affected; let a Man be never so honest, let a Man be never so much for the Support of that Religion that every honest Man ought to support, that is, the Protestant Religion, as it is establish'd by Law, without going to Rome or Amsterdam for Assistance. I will not mention the Persons that are concern'd in it, but I will apply my self wholly to this Matter, that it is the Opinion of all the Judges of England, that it is the Law of the Land, that no Person should offer to expose to publick Knowledge any Thing that concerns the Government, without the King's immediate Licence. Now we are to try whether this Person exposed this Thing to publick Knowledge, and that is the Matter, Gentlemen, that you are to try. The other is the Business of the Court; we are to say whether, if we prove the Fact, this Man is guilty of Punishment, and no doubt the Justice of the Nation will punish him. But when I see so many swarm about me, I am willing to hear what Proof there is.

Sir Francis Winnington. I am of Council for the Defendant, I only offer it to your Lordship, that the Information may be proved.

L. C. J. Here are two Things we are to keep to, the Matter of Proof according to the Information, and accordingly are we to proceed as in common Justice we find the Case to be. I must say that for the Prisoner, he has behav'd himself with as much Modesty as in Duty and Honesty he ought; but I find that Sir Francis Winnington puts you upon proving.

Sir Francis Withins. My Lord, we will prove it.

L. C. J. Let them that are not of the Jury go forth, the Jury is no more to be corrupted than the Judge.

Sir Francis Withins. We must be allowed the first Part, that there was a Plot.

L. C. J. The Jury may take that upon their Oaths, they know there was a Plot, the certainest of any Thing of Fact that ever came before me.

Mr. Stevens, Printer.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Carr own he writ this Packet, had you any from him? Printer. I had several from him.

L. C. J. Of whom else had you any?

Mr. Recorder. Besides Carr?

L. C. J. You are upon your Oath; from whom ever had you any besides? Printer. I do not remember that I had any from any body else.

L. C. J. You printed them, did you?

Printer. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. C. J. And you know of none from any else, but by him or his Orders? Printer. No, my Lord.

Sir Francis Winnington. Shew him the Paper. Can you swear upon your Oath, that Mr. Carr did send or deliver to you that very Paper?

Printer. I can't tell that any body else did send it.

L. C. J. We must do here, as we do in all Cases: He saith, I had divers of these Papers from him, I printed them, and I know of none that ever was but by him or his Order.

Sir Francis Winnington. He saith so, but, my Lord, the Information is to such a particular Book Entituled, A Packet of Advice from Rome.

L. C. J. He says this in Answer to it, I can't charge my self with this Particular, to say positively I had it from him: But this I can say, we had several from him, and I know of none else, but all were by him or his Order.

Sir Francis Winnington. Will your Lordship give me Leave to ask him one Question? Can you swear that any that came from him contained the very Matter in that Book? Was it the Matter or Words?

Mr. Recorder. Do you believe it?

Sir Francis Winnington. Good Mr. Recorder, let me alone. Can you say it is the very Matter contain'd in that Paper?

Printer. I can't say that.

L. C. J. It is not an easy Matter for a Man to remember the Matter of a Paper that is writ on all Sides. He swears that they had several; and that they had none, though he printed them, from any but him or his Order. This Question Sir Francis Winnington asks, Had you this particular Paper from him? He cannot swear it was the same he had from him; but he does swear, all the Weekly Intelligences were from him or his Order; he does not swear for the Matter of this Book, which no Man will do: But he does swear that these Papers were always by him or his Orders, and that several were received from him.

Mr. Williams. I ask you upon your Oath, he brought it to you in Writing, did he not?

Printer. They came in Writing.

Mr. Williams. Have you any of these Papers to shew?

Printer. We did not regard them when they were printed.

L. C. J. His Cause shall be try'd very justly, and very indifferently.
Mr. Williams. Had you ever a Paper from Carr's Hand, or no?
Printer. We had few from his own Hand.
Mr. Williams. Had you any?
Printer. I can't remember.
L. C. J. Had you any? You are upon your Oath.
Printer. My Lord, I can't remember.
L. C. J. Had you one, or two?
Printer. Indeed, my Lord, I can't remember, I can't say upon my Oath he ever brought one.
L. C. J. How then came you to say, you had several from him?
Printer. Ay, my Lord, from him, that is, by him, or his Order.
L. C. J. Are you sure it was by his Order?
Printer. I did conceive so, my Lord.
L. C. J. Had he any Money?
Printer. From me?
L. C. J. Had he any Money from any body for printing any of these Papers, as you can remember?
Printer. I do suppose so, I have heard he had.
L. C. J. Did you give him any?
Printer. No, my Lord, I was not concern'd. The Publisher, my Lord, was between him and me.
L. C. J. Who is that?
Printer. That is one Curtis.
L. C. J. Did Curtis pay him any Money?
Printer. I never saw him pay him any, my Lord.
L. C. J. Hath he owned at any time he had any Money?
Printer. My Lord, I never had any Occasion for that Question.
L. C. J. Have you talk'd with Carr?
Printer. Yes, my Lord.
L. C. J. Now I shall have you: For I do believe you are an honest Man. Did Carr ever own himself to you to be the Author of this Book, or any of these Papers?
Printer. My Lord, as I said in the other Case, so I say in this, I had no Occasion to dispute it, I took it for granted.
L. C. J. Have you ever heard him own it?
Printer. I have heard him deny it.
L. C. J. How did you come to take it for granted that he was the Author, when he did once deny, but never own'd it? Answer me that Question, and thou shalt be a brave Man.
Printer. My Lord, there was never Occasion for that Discourse.
L. C. J. Look you, Sir, you must answer me in a way agreeable to common Reason and Understanding. Why did you say just now, you took it for granted that he was the Author, and yet you say he hath deny'd it, and never owned it? Why should you then believe he was the Author?
Printer. I don't say, my Lord, he never own'd it.
L. C. J. What Tricks we have in this World!
Mr. Recorder. I would ask the Gentleman, I will not quarrel with him at all, if he thinks not in his own Conscience he has reason to quarrel with himself. Did he ever own it to you?
Printer. I don't remember he ever own'd it to me in so many Words.
L. C. J. Did he treat with you in these Circumstances as if he were the Author?
Printer. Yes, my Lord, I grant that.
Mr. Recorder. But do you swear it is so? We don't care for your granting: I ask you upon your Oath, did you ever discourse him as the Author of these Papers?
Printer. I supposed him to be the Author.
L. C. J. Did he deny it, or baulk when you discours'd him of this Matter?
Printer. My Lord, I must needs say as I said before, it was taken for granted.
Mr. Williams. You had it in Writing, Where are those Writings?
Printer. We seldom regard those Writings.
L. C. J. It is hard to find the Author, it is not hard to find the Printer: But one Author found is better than twenty Printers found.
Mr. Williams. My Lord, I will ask this Man a Question. Upon your Oath, Who brought you that Writing?
Printer. What Writing?
Mr. Williams. That by which it was Printed: Who brought you that Paper?
Printer. I don't remember particularly I had any of Mr. Carr himself.
Mr. Williams. Can you name the Person that brought this Paper, or any one Person that brought any one Paper?
Printer. There was a little Boy.
Mr. Williams. Whose Boy?
Printer. Mr. Carr's Boy.
Mr. Recorder. Now it is out.
Mr. Williams. Name the Boy.
Printer. I do not know his Name.
Mr. Williams. Can you name another, can you name any body else?
Printer. Truly, Sir, I don't remember any body else.
Mr. Williams. Now I will ask you one Thing: Had you any Directions for the Printing this Paper?
L. C. J. To what Purpose was this written Paper brought to you?
Printer. To be printed, my Lord.
Mr. Williams. Who gave Directions?
Printer. It was the Publisher that chiefly directed me.
Mr. Williams. Who was that?
Printer. I have named him.
Mr. Williams. Name him again.
Printer. Curtis.
Mr. Williams. Did Carr never direct you to print this Paper?
Printer. He did not deal immediately with me.
Mr. Recorder. When the little Boy came, who did you take him to come from? From Mr. Carr, or Mr. Curtis?
Printer. From Mr. Carr.
L. C. J. He says he was Carr's Boy, and that he came from him: This I speak to the Jury; and I promise you this, if my Life and Fortune were at stake, I would be try'd by this Jury at the Bar, and would do in this, as in all Cases. Mr. Carr is look'd upon as the Author of this Book; that it either came from him, or by his Order, his Boy (he can remember no body else) did bring it. This is now remaining only: Are you sure Mr. Carr sent him? Saith he, We talk'd with Mr. Carr several times.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Thus it is, my Lord, in the Information, Mali-ciose & illicite imprimi causavit & publicavit. Now I would only ask him a Question, my Lord, Whether or no did Mr. Carr own to you that he sent the Boy to have it printed?

Printer. No, Sir, I think not.

L. C. J. That is the same Question ask'd before. Did Mr. Carr ever own it as his, or no? Upon your Oath, Did Carr own this Packet to be his, when you discours'd with him about it?

Printer. My Lord, I humbly crave your leave to explain myself. I mean by the Discourse I had, common Conversation, as the drinking a Glass of Wine; but I know not that ever we discours'd upon this thing.

L. C. J. I mean so: When you talk'd about this Matter, Did you take it, by his Discourse, for granted, that he was the Man that published it?

Printer. I took it for granted, because I had it from him.

L. C. J. What say you to this? Have you blamed Carr for writing too sharply in this Book against the Government?

Printer. My Lord, I do confess I have.

L. C. J. What Answer hath he made, when you blamed him for writing too sharply, as you thought? Did he deny that he did it?

Printer. I don't remember that.

L. C. J. What sort of Answer did he make to excuse it? That he thought it not too sharp; or did he say, I care not.

Printer. My Lord, I can't particularly say what Answer he made.

L. C. J. When you blamed him, by the Oath you have taken, upon that Blame of yours, did he deny he wrote it?

Printer. No, my Lord, I do not remember he did.

Mr. Williams. Did Carr at any time deny he was the Author or Publisher of it?

Printer. He hath at some times.

Mr. Williams. What did he deny?

Printer. That he was the Author.

Mr. Williams. Of what Book?

Printer. Of the Pacquet.

L. C. J. Did he deny he was the Author of this particular Book for this Week, or deny it in general? Did he deny in general that he was the Author of that Book that is call'd, The Pacquet of Advice?

Printer. I have heard him say sometimes that he was not the Author.

Recorder. And sometimes what?

Printer. I have heard him say some time or other that he was not the Author.

Mr. Recorder. And what else?

The Printer's Servant.

Mr. Williams. Are you acquainted with Carr?

Man. I never had any Converse with him.

Mr. Williams. Do you know any thing of the Pacquet of Advice?

Man. I know we have had Pacquets from him: I fetch'd some from him.

Mr. Williams. What, from his Hands?

Man. Yes.

Mr. Williams. What, from his own Hands?

Man. Yes, in Pieces, no whole Sheets.

Printer. This is my Servant, I am not always there.

Sir Fr. Winnington. My Lord, I would ask this Man a Question. This printed Paper that is put in the Information, Did he ever deliver that to you?

Man. I can't speak particularly to any one.

Mr. Recorder. But generally to all?

L. C. J. Have you done?

Mr. Williams. I ask you a Question.

L. C. J. If you could, Mr. Williams, shew me any Author besides Mr. Carr, I would say something.

Mr. Williams. Who brought you this Paper?

Man. Which Paper?

Mr. Williams. I don't speak of this Paper particularly. Did any bring any besides Carr?

Man. Yes, his Boy.

Mr. Williams. Did any body else bring any from any Place?

Man. No body else that I know of.

Mr. Williams. The Pacquet he brought you, had it been printed before? I ask you upon your Oath, was it printed before he brought it?

L. C. J. Did he bring Papers to print that were never printed?

Man. They were never printed that I know of.

Mr. Williams. Did he bring any to print?

Man. I can't say he brought any.

Mr. Williams. Did Mr. Carr bring any?

Man. No, the Boy.

Mr. Williams. Who directed you to print them? Did Carr direct you?

Man. I can't tell, I am a Servant in the House.

L. C. J. I will assure you, a Non est Factum can't pass at this rate.

Mr. Just. Jones. Who did you take to be the Man that sent you all the Pacquets?

Man. I very seldom took any, because I was not always in fight.

L. C. J. Who did you understand?

Man. I understood they came from Mr. Carr.

L. C. J. Have you any more? Read the Words in the Information.

Clerk. Friday the 1st of August 1679. There is lately found out by an experienced Physician, an incomparable Medicament, call'd, The Wonder-working Plaster; truly Catholick in Operation; somewhat of kin to the Jesuits Powder, but more effectual. The Virtues of it are strange and various. It makes Justice deaf, as well as blind, and takes out Spots of the deepest Treason more cleverly than Castle-Soap does common Stains. It alters a Man's Constitution in two or three Days, more than the Virtuosus Transfusion of Blood in seven Years. 'Tis a great Alexipharmick, and helps Poisons, and those that use them. It miraculously exalts and purifies the Eye-sight, and makes People behold nothing but Innocency in the blackest Malefactors. 'Tis a mighty Cordial for a declining Cause; it stiffes a Plot as certainly as the Ich is destroyed by Butter and Brimstone. In a word, it makes Fools wise Men, and wise Men Fools, and both of them Knaves. The Colour of this precious Balm is bright and dazling; and being applied privately to the Fift, in decent Manner, and a competent Dose, infallibly performs all the said Cures, and many others not fit here to be mentioned. Probation est.

Sir Fr. Winnington. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Council in this Cause for the Defendant: And the Question is, Whether or no we must take the Information as it lies? And truly, for the first Part of it, whether there was a Plot or no, I do not intend to make Exceptions; for I believe there was one, and do intend to take it as in the Information. Gentlemen, we are to proceed now to this other Question; which is, my Lord, Whether or no this Defendant, that is, Carr, did falsely and maliciously, and with Design to scandalize the Government, cause to be printed and published this false Libel that is in the Information. Now truly, my Lord, we that are for the Defendant, say we are not guilty. My Lord, we very well know how penal a Thing it is for a Man to be the Author of a Libel that relates to the Scandal of the Government. And, my Lord, whether this Defendant be guilty of this, or no, we must submit that to your Lordship's and the Jury's Consideration. They have produced two Witnesses, that is to say, the Printer and his Man. Now, my Lord, there hath been going out for some Time, A Weekly Pacquet of Advice from Rome; and I did ask the Witnesses (for the Information points at one Paragraph, and puts the Paragraph in hec verba)—I did ask him whether or no he did send, or whether the Matter that he sent is that contained in this Information. That he could not swear: but must be left in point of Evidence, it being, we allow, a very penal Matter. The second Witness and the first Witness likewise say, there was a Boy; but whether that Boy came by his Master's Direction, he does not know. I asked him if ever his Master sent the Boy; he does not know, he says, that he sent him. But the last Witness says, divers were had from the Hands of Carr; but whether it was the Thing that is now complained of, there is the Question, and that is in the Dark: For, by your Lordship's Leave, I do not understand that ever this Man was complained of to any publick Magistrate for writing this Book; for it was thought he was a Satyrist against Papery, and thought to be very well liked on till this Fault was found with it; and it may be very justly; whether or no we be guilty of this, is uncertain: For we know, in the Age we live in, there are too many Shams put upon Men; and who knows but that the Papists, that might have an Ill-will to this Mr. Carr, that hath been no Friend to them, might shuffle in this Paragraph, by that Means to have Justice come upon him? I would not contrive against common Evidence, where a Man is guilty to the Publick; but we know there are Abundance of Artifices in this Age to abuse Men. For this Purpose I hope your Lordship and the Jury will expect that you should have positive Evidence against him. Now granting your Lordship should have conjectural Evidence that he did cause it to be printed and published, that this Man did write it, is, I say, very uncertain, for there is no positive Evidence. What a Man may have in his private Thoughts of it, is not enough: But, whether secundum allegata & probata, it shall be alledged and proved, that this Man was the Author of it. Now, my Lord, I say, I must submit it to your Lordship, I say, that as to the causing it to be printed, or the causing it to be published, or that this individual Paragraph was writ by him in order to its being printed or published; my Lord, I say, there is but remote and conjectural Evidence, and an angry Papist might contrive this Way to have an innocent Protestant found guilty.

People. Hem—

L. C. J. You see what a Case we are in, Gentlemen; you see what a Sort of People we are got among. Go on, Sir Francis.

Sir Fr. Winnington. With your Lordship's leave I have one thing to put to your Lordship. The Information says, false, illicite & maliciose. I know there are some Things that do imply Malice in themselves. Truly, my Lord, I am upon a tender Point, and know not how to express myself. I say, supposing it should fall out that this Man writ this Book, and he might have some little Extravagancies in his Head in writing; whether this Man did it maliciously to scandalize the Government, as the Information says, is a Question. Truly, my Lord, there is many an indiscreet Act a Man may be guilty of, that cannot be called a malicious Act; and that is the second Thing. There must be Evidence that this Man did it maliciously, or that he did it with a Design to scandalize the Government. If you be of Opinion that it is otherwise, that is in your Lordship's Breast; we are of the Negative, and we say we can't prove a Negative. But if you find him innocent, I suppose there will be no Cause to complain of him afterwards, for he had no Malice in his Heart.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, it can never be supposed that a good Man, and a good Subject, should do an ill Action. If he be a very good Subject, if he be upon a Square in every Respect, a Person that loves his King, and loves the Government in Church and in State; if he be such a Person, he cannot be thought guilty. My Lord, we will prove him to be such a Man, and I hope the Gentlemen will believe us.

Call Mr. Sutton, Mr. Ayliffe, and Mr. Ambler.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Sutton, Do you know Mr. Carr?

Mr. Sutton. I know him very well.

Mr. Williams. How long since have you known him?

Mr. Sutton. Two or three Years.

Mr. Williams. Does he go to Church or Meeting?

Mr. Sutton. He hath been with me at Church often.

Mr. Recorder. Does he receive the Sacrament according to the manner of the Church of England?

Mr. Sutton. I was never with him at the Sacrament.

Mr. Williams. Is he one of them you call Dissenters?

L. C. J. Did he ever discourse with you concerning this Book?

Mr. Sutton. My Lord, I have often spoken to him.

L. C. J. Has he disowned he was the Author?

Mr. Sutton. He has sometimes.

L. C. J. How do you believe it was upon that Discourse?

Mr. Sutton. I do not think he is able to write such a Book.

L. C. J. That is not the Question, answer me what I ask.

Mr. Sutton. It did seem something like his writing, methought.

L. C. J. Did it seem by his Answer to your Discourse with him?

Mr. Recorder. Pray tell us, Did you look upon him to be the Author?

L. C. J. By the Discourse you had with him, How did it appear upon that Discourse? Pray tell us plainly and clearly, how you do think, by the Discourse you had with him concerning this Pamphlet, whether he was the Author or no?

Mr. Sutton. My Lord, about a Year, or a Year and half since, I did ask him whether this Book were licensed? He told me it was licensed by Mr. L'Estrange; but he did not tell me he was the Author.

L. C. J. How did it seem by his Discourse?

Mr. Sutton. I did apprehend he might write it.

Sir Fr. Winnington. My Lord, but the Question is, whether he wrote this Paragraph.

Mr. Ambler.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Ambler, pray do you acquaint my Lord, do you know Mr. Carr?

Mr. Ambler. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. How long have you known him?

Mr. Ambler. Three Years.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Of what Conversation is he, and how affected to the Government?

Mr. Ambler. He went to Church with me.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Do you look upon him as a Man well affected to the Government? Do you think he would maliciously write any Thing to scandalize the Government?

Mr. Just. Jones. How do we know how Mr. Ambler understands the Government?

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Ambler, Had you any Discourse with him about the Pacquet of Advice?

Mr. Ambler. Never in my Life.

Mr. Recorder. Did you ever hear of the Book?

Mr. Ambler. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. Upon your Oath, Did you look upon him to be the Author?

Mr. Ambler. The common Report was, that Mr. Carr was.

Mr. Ayliffe.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Ayliffe, Do you know Mr. Carr?

Mr. Ayliffe. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Williams. Is he a conformable Man to the Government in Church and State? Does he go to hear Common-Prayer?

Mr. Ayliffe. I have seen him at Church, and at Divine Service.

Mr. Recorder. Did he behave himself reverently there?

Mr. Ayliffe. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Do you think he writ this?

Mr. Ayliffe. My Lord, I never asked him.

Sir Fr. Winnington. My Lord, it seems he was accounted the Author of the Books; but whether of this particular one in the Information, we conceive not proved.

Mr. Recorder. If we should not do right, we disclaim that Service we owe to the Crown, and that Respect we owe to the Government as honest Men and as true Protestants, and as much against Papists as any Man whatsoever. I shall endeavour to give the World Satisfaction that this Man is guilty of this Offence. My Lord, for any Man to come and pretend that we must prove that a Man is malicious; or because that a Man writes against the Papists, he must never therefore be convicted of Malice, surely is a strange Argument. And I wonder to hear any Man that pretends to Reason, Men of Sense, and Conscience, and Understanding, so out of their common Sense and Understanding, as to make that go as an Argument. Gentlemen, the Things themselves bespeak their Malice. For so we in our common Discourse, when we bring our common Actions (of which you have heard a Number), if in case any Man call a Man Thief, we say he does falsely, and maliciously, and scandalously call a Man Thief: If we prove he called him Thief, the very Thing does intimate he does it falsely, scandalously, and maliciously; therefore the Thing itself is a sufficient Indication of the Malice and Depravity of it. There's no Man but may know in plain English what's the Meaning of these Words; it is as plain as can be in the World: We must debase our Understandings, and be as great Dolt-heads as they would make all Men that will not be of their Party, if we don't plainly see into the Meaning of these Words, that Justice is to be bribed with Money. In the next Place, Gentlemen, we do not come and say, that the Information lies against these very particular Words; that is a Mistake of the Information. But the Information is, That he did cause to be printed and published a Book, in which among others there were such Words as these; though if they had been the very Words themselves, the very Words have been proved. Now, There is no better Proof under the Heavens, than the Proof we have offered. The Printer himself, he comes here and says, That Carr did acknowledge himself the Author, and he did generally publish the Book; I appeal if you do not believe it. This they would now come and excuse; for they are glad to make a Rascal of any of their Party, if they can but save a Man that is guilty. But Things come out with much Difficulty and much Straitness; and I must say, if ever any Thing were an Instance of Papery, then that Man is one of the Jesuited Fellows that ever was; for he does cant so like them, that a Man can't tell how to govern himself. Who was it that should write these Things? Truly, he had discoursed with him about the Matter. Who sent the Boy? Do you know? Truly I can't tell: And wonderful great Snuffing and Canting before he comes to the Business. Besides, what can there be more plain than the Proof-pieces before the publishing? T'other Man says, that he was the Man that fetched Pieces from Carr's own Hand, and that he always looked upon it that all did come from Carr.

Now every Man that knows any Thing of Printing, knows this, that after it hath first taken the Press, it is always carried back again to the Author, to see whether it be done according to his Mind; and after that it comes to the publick View. And that this Man, Carr, is the Author, Mr. Sutton and the rest of his Witnesses, if they speak according to Conscience, they themselves looked upon this very Man to be the Author. Their own Witnesses looked upon it so. It was not only the private Opinion

Opinion of these Men, but the general Report of all. So that, my Lord, had it not been necessary to the Support of the Government, I should have scarce troubled my self to give your Lordship and the Jury this Trouble. But I must say, and I do believe, that there is no Man whatsoever, that stands to have Vices of this Nature convicted and punished, but desires the Protestant Religion may be supported to the utmost, and that Popery may be suppressed. But I say, whoever it is, that after this Evidence, who is bound by his Oath to go according to Evidence, shall acquit this Man, he must be a Man of a humming Conscience indeed.

Sir Fr. Withins. I shall hint one thing to your Lordship in this Case: That it is an unlikely Thing that a Papist should set out this Pacquet at this Time. For then, my Lord, how came it to pass that Mr. Carr had none come out that Week; for his is a Weekly Intelligence? If Mr. Carr's had come out, and this likewise, there had been some Pretence for this: But since there came out but one, that the Papists set out this is unlikely. They have not pretended to bring in any body else as the Author; but their own Witnesses say, and they themselves say, he was looked upon as the Author. Those things that are done against the Government, are never done in the Face of the Government.

L. C. J. Really, Gentlemen, I thought not that this had been a Cause of that Moment that now I find it. For their very Disturbance hath altered it from Mr. Carr's, to a publick Concern. The Noise which they make, this Way that these People use, that with their Shouts and Noise attend the Cause, hath quite spoiled it: As in the Case of Harris. But those People that did then attend him, leave following him in a Goal for five hundred Pounds, which may be five Shillings apiece had discharged him of, if they had been as free of their Purfes as they are of their Noises and Acclamations: So that in Truth they are only violent against the Government whilst they can make Shouts and Noises, but if it comes once to deliver a Man from a penal Sum, they will let him rot in Goal. For so Harris sent to me, that his Party had all forsaken him, and no Man would give him any thing. And this is for those Hummers, those brave Fellows that seem to espouse a Cause, and yet leave their Party in Distress. But let them go away with this, that they prove themselves hereby Enemies to the Government, and false to that Interest and Men that they seem to espouse; that come only here to affront a Court of Justice with their Shouts and Noises, and will not relieve their Party: For this is the Complaint of Harris, and the Disparagement of all Men that come to espouse it. This Cause, the Truth on't is, I did not look upon to be of this Nature and Moment, when it was opened. For though there are in this very Paper upon which the Information is grounded, Words malicious and reflective enough; yet they were not so apparently appropriated, that a Man might observe an extraordinary Design in them. This I thought; but really the Case is altered even by those Men. For I'll tell you, Harris is poor, and his keeping in Prison is principally occasioned from the Manner of the Reception of his Punishment, which he calls his Pardon. And therefore these Fellows, these Hummers, let them all know, whenever they come to espouse a Cause of publick Concern against the Government, they spoil it; and when they are taken, then they ruin one another. And this is like to be so, for none will help them with a Groat. And this is the Misfortune of that unfortunate Man Harris, that he hath no Place of Mercy left him from the King, because he was attended with such a Rabble as these People are, that have made a Noise here, and yet will give him no Help nor Assistance when he wants it: And let them know, it hath turned this Man's Cause into a publick Cause, because here are People that do espouse it, and the Government is hereby concerned much more than by any one Action that this Carr could have done. I have said so much more of this, that I might shew you to what a sad Case this is brought from what at first it was. For if it had passed without such a Noise, as you see how they express themselves, I should not have thought much Matter in it; and though you had convicted him, I should have thought a better Sentence might have served the Turn: But they have undone Carr, if you find him guilty; and so it's like to prove, whenever there is popular Attendance upon publick Causes that concern the Government.

The present Case it stands thus: Mr. Carr, here is an Information brought against him for publishing a printed Pamphlet called, The Pacquet of Advice from Rome, and in it there are recited some Particulars, which were observed to you before, which was not well done; but yet not so insolently done as some perhaps do conceit. The Question is, Whether he was the Author or Publisher of this: You hear he is thought the Author, but say his Council, it is not plain; and that is true. But it seems by their own Witnesses, to any Man's Understanding, that they looked upon him as the Author. But then, is he the Author and Publisher of this particular Book? I had rather Mr. Carr, with all his Faults about him, and his Hummers, should go away with Applause, and have him found not guilty, than do him wrong in one Circumstance; for I come to try Causes according to the Truth of Fact; I come not to plead on one Side nor another; not to condemn Men that are innocent, nor to acquit them if they be guilty. Now it remains for you to consider what Proofs you have, as to this particular Book against which the Information lies; and that's the Printer himself, who is one of the best Sorts of Evidence that can be had: For you very well know that Evidences of Fact are to be expected according to the Nature of the Thing. That is, Forgery is not to be proved so plainly, as to expect Witnesses as you do at the sealing of a Bond; for Men do not call Witnesses when they forge a Thing. Therefore in Things of that Nature we are fain to retreat to such probable and conjectural Evidence as the Matter will bear. I believe some of you have been of Juries at the Old-Bailey, and that even for Men's Lives, you have very often not a direct Proof of the Fact, of the Act, or of the actual Killing; but yet you have such Evidence by Presumption, as seems reasonable to Conscience. If there be a known Case in Men's Lives, certainly that should govern in Offences, and especially when Offences are of a Nature that reflect upon the Government. As for those Words, illicite, malicious, unlawful; for that I must recite what Mr. Recorder told you of at first, what all the Judges of England have declared under their Hands: The Words I remember are these: When, by the King's Command, we were to give in our Opinion what was to be done in point of the Regulation of the Press; we did all subscribe, That to print or publish any News-Books or Pamphlets of News whatsoever, is illegal; that it is a manifest Intent to the Breach of the Peace, and they may be proceeded against by Law for an illegal Thing. Suppose now that this Thing is not scandalous, what then? If there had been no Reflection in this Book at all, yet it is illicite, and the Author ought to be convicted for it. And that is for a publick Notice to all People, and especially Printers and Booksellers, that they ought to print no Book or Pamphlet of News whatsoever, without Authority. So as he is to be convicted for it as a Thing illicite done, not having Authority. And I will assure you, if you find any of those Papers, I shall be more merciful in the Consideration of their Punishment, if it be inoffensive. But if so be they will undertake to print News foolishly, they ought to be punished, and shall be punished if they do it without Authority; though there is nothing reflecting on the Government as an unlawful Thing. The Reason is plain: So fond are Men in these Days, that when they will deny their Children a Penny for Bread, they will lay it out for a Pamphlet. And it did so swarm, and the Temptations were so great, that no Man could keep two Pence in his Pocket because of the News. But still they never repented of laying out their Money, till they found there was nothing against the Government. This is not worth a Farthing, there is nothing of Treason in it, we will not give a Farthing for it. Therefore this Book, if it be made by him to be published, it is unlawful, whether it be malicious or not. Now for the Matter, the Subject Matter. What, doth Carr think he hath too much Wit to fool us that are to try the Malice? It was fillily writ, if he did not believe we understood it, and that were very intolerable in us; I hope I speak plain: That is, the Sort of Books that he writ; it must be with an Intent People should know what Reflections he made; and shall all Mankind know, and shall they that try the Cause not know it? If you find him Guilty, and say what he is guilty of, we will judge whether the Thing imports Malice or no. Sir Francis Wilmington hath told you there are some Things that do necessarily imply Malice in them. If this Thing doth not imply it, then the Judges will go according to Sentence; if it doth, so that it concerns not you one Farthing, whether malicious or not malicious, that's plain. Now, there remains only one Thing, that is, Whether or no he was the Publisher of this Book? For that we have this Evidence. The Printer tells you, he was the Person that they looked upon to be the Author of this Book, that he sent this Book to be printed by his Boy. The Printer saith, that he often discoursed with him, and he took it for granted. His Boy brought it. To what Purpose? To be printed. The Printer's Servant says, they looked upon him as the Author, and I have fetched Sheet by Sheet, several Sheets from his own Hand. I will do Right in the Case, be it what it will, let him escape or not. Say his Council, Had you this particular Paper from him? I urge this as clearly, as their own Council have objected. For that you must consider, whether he is the Author of the Book. You must take Evidence in this Case, as you do all the Year long; that is, in other Cases, where you know there is an absolute Certainty that the Thing is so: For human Frailty must be allowed; that is, you may be mistaken. For you do not swear, nor are you bound to swear here, that he was the Publisher of this Book; but if you find him guilty, you only swear you believe it so. God help Juries, if so be in Matter of Fact they should promise otherwise. They can't swear it. Now the Question is, Whether you have Evidence enough here to swear he was the Publisher: For this is the main Thing, to prove that he is so. Now the Printer tells you that he knew the Man, that he had frequent Converse with him about it, and that he took it for granted. Now consider, when a Man talks at this rate, he does not say he was, but that he took it for granted; he does not as much as say he is. They will own he writ several Sheets of this Book; then, why not all this Book? Now we come to the more principal Matter of Fact, according to Reason and the probable Evidence of Things. That this Person is taken to be the Author, and that it was his Boy that brought these Papers to be printed. If you can't say he sent him, you can give no Verdict while you live, if you expect that. The Printer says, he had been often discoursing with him, that his Boy brought them, and that he knew no other Person in the World that had any Pretensions to be the Author, and if he were the Author, no doubt but he is the Publisher. Whether or no any body else had an Hand in this, we don't know. If you are satisfied in your Consciences that you believe he is not the Author, you must acquit him. If you are satisfied it is not he, you must find him Not Guilty. So that as you are honest Men and wise, as I believe you are; if you believe he was not the Publisher of this Pamphlet, that he did not send his Boy to have it printed, but that he came of his own Head, you must find him Not Guilty.

The Jury went from the Bar, and nigh an Hour after returned, and brought him in Guilty.

L. C. J. You have done like honest Men.
Mr. Recorder. They have done like honest Men.

XCIX. The Trial of JOHN GILES at the Old Bailey, for Assaulting and Attempting to Murder John Arnold, Esq; July 14, 1680. 32 Car. II.

THE Sessions began on Wednesday the seventh Day of July 1680. The ninth Day Mr. John Giles was brought to the Bar to be tried; and there pretended that he had Witnesses at Monmouth, who could testify very material Things for him, and therefore pray'd the Court to put off his Trial until the next Sessions. Then the Court asked him his Witnesses Names, and what they could say? Which he then declared to the Court. Upon which Mr. Arnold, being present, and Prosecutor (Tam pro Domino Rege, quam pro seipso), the Court asked his Consent, and what he could say why the Trial should not be put off; that so all the World might hereafter say, That Mr. Giles had all the Favour that he could reasonably desire, and what the Court could in Justice shew him, and that no manner of Excuse might be left him.

After which Mr. Arnold, in a very pertinent Speech, declared part of the Fact and also of the Proceedings before his Wounding, as it had occurred between him and Mr. Herbert; and of his favourable and just Proceedings against Mr. Herbert, and also against John Giles, after the Fact was committed; and declared that Giles had sufficient Notice of his Trial; but notwithstanding he did submit himself to the Judgment of the Court.

Thereupon the Court advised a Minute or two's Space; it was ordered, That the Court should be adjourned until the Wednesday following; by which time Mr. Giles might send to Monmouth, and have what Witnesses brought up he could get.

And the Day appointed being come, and the Court being sat, Proclamation was made according to Custom. Then the following Jury were called and sworn, viz.

Christopher Plucknet,
William Dodd,
Anthony Nurse,
John Burton,
Nathan Goodwin,
George Wood,

Jur

James Partridge,
Lawrence Wood,
John Bradshaw,
William Withers,
Edward Proby,
Rich. Bromfield.

Who, according to the Form of Law, were charged to enquire, Whether the Prisoner were guilty of the following Indictment upon which he had been arraigned, and had pleaded Not guilty?

Cl. of Cr. The Jurors of our Lord the King, upon their Oaths, do present, That John Giles late of the Parish of St. Dunstan in the West, in the County of Middlesex, Gentleman, not having God before his Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, contriving, and maliciously, by a most wicked Conspiracy, with divers other Malefactors to the Jurors unknown, forethought and had, intending one John Arnold, Esq; a faithful Subject to the King, and one of the Justices of the Peace for the County of Monmouth, inhumanly to maim, wound, kill, and murder, the fifteenth of April, in the thirty-second Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. with the said Malefactors unknown, at the Parish of St. Dunstan in the West aforesaid in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, in and upon him the said John Arnold, then and there being in the Peace of God and the King, unlawfully, voluntarily, and of his Malice forethought, with Force and Arms; that is to say, with Swords, Staves, and Knives, of Design, and by lying in wait, did make an Assault; and him the said John Arnold did then and there beat, wound, maim, and evilly entreat, and the Throat and Face of him the said John Arnold did grievously cut with a certain Knife; also divers almost mortal Wounds then and there to the said John Arnold; that is to say, one Wound of the depth of seven Inches in his Body, between his Belly and his Left Pap, two Wounds upon his Breast, and two Wounds in his Left Arm, with certain Swords, did then and there give and impose, so that it was despaired of the said John Arnold's Life, and other Enormities then and there unto him did bring, to the great Danger of the said John Arnold, and against the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Mr. Gibbs. Gentlemen, this is an Indictment against John Giles, the Prisoner at the Bar, for assaulting and intending to dispatch and murder John Arnold, one of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace, on the 15th Day of April. This John Giles and several others did intend to kill Mr. Arnold, and set upon him in Jackanapes-Lane, threw him down, and endeavoured to thrust their Swords into him; but finding no Penetration there, they kneeled upon him, and with a Knife endeavoured to cut his Throat, and in one Place made a very large Gash, and cut his Face; he endeavouring to keep them from his Throat, they gave him a Wound in his Side seven Inches deep, between his Belly and Left Pap. They gave him several other Wounds. To this he has pleaded Not Guilty.

Mr. Holt. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Council for the King, and the Indictment hath represented to you the most horrid, vile, and barbarous Assault that has been almost ever committed, and that any Man has heard of; and which I think scarce any thing in History can parallel. It was, Gentlemen, in its Nature most cruel, by the giving him so many Wounds as are set forth in the Indictment; having first way-laid and surprized him near a Place, and at such a Time, as was convenient for the Execution of their wicked Design. This Mr. Arnold having Occasion to go through Bell-Yard between the Hours of ten and eleven of the Clock at Night, at the End of Jackanapes-Lane, he was suddenly seized by two Men, and by them hauled into the Lane, where they gave him several Wounds, and used him in a most barbarous Manner. And this did not arise from any private Difference or Animosity that they could conceive against Mr. Arnold; but from a Cause more general, that is, the Prosecution of the horrid Popish Plot; against which Mr. Arnold, as became him, and according to the Duty of his Office, he being a Justice of the Peace, was a very zealous Person. Gentlemen, in the first place we will call Mr. Arnold, who shall plainly prove that this Prisoner at the Bar was one of the three Assassins; and he proves it by a miraculous Providence: For just before they seized upon him a Woman in Bell-Yard held out a Candle, which gave Mr. Arnold an Opportunity to see the Prisoner at the Bar, and did perfectly discern him. Gentlemen, though this is enough, considering the Integrity and Reputation of the Person; yet we shall fortify his Evidence by strong and undeniable Circumstances, Circumstances that do particularly relate to this Matter. In the first Place, Gentlemen, the very Day that this Fact was done, this Person, though he had a good Sword by his Side, yet he did enquire where he might buy a more convenient Sword, and did desire to know where he might have a Rapier, which was thought more convenient for this Design; and the very next Day after this Fact, though Mr. Arnold's having Armour on was a Secret which no Persons but Mr. Walcup, a Justice of the Peace, and Mr. Arnold himself knew; yet this same Giles could say, Arnold had Armour on; and if Arnold had not had Armour on, his Business had been done. And after this Fact was committed, this Giles goes into Gloucestershire, and being pursued by a guilty Conscience, he durst not stay there, for he was afraid, as he said himself, of being apprehended for assassinating Mr. Arnold. After this, Gentlemen, he came to one Darcy a Cutler in Monmouthshire, with his Sword which was broken, and desired him to mend his Sword. How now, says he, how came this Sword to be broken? Have you been fighting with the Devil? No, says he, I have been fighting with damn'd Arnold. And at the very same time when these Villains thought they had effected their bloody Purpose, and gave Mr. Arnold his Dispatch, one of them said to him, Now, Villain, if thou hast any Life in thee, pray for the Soul of Captain Evans; which Evans was a Priest executed in Wales upon Mr. Arnold's Prosecution, at whose Execution this Giles was present, and dipp'd his Handkerchief in his Blood. Now, Gentlemen, considering all this, which we will make plain to you by Mr. Arnold, and all these Circumstances; I suppose you will have sufficient Evidence to find him guilty.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Indictment has been opened, and the Matter of it, that base Attempt made upon Mr. Arnold, that was a Justice of the Peace in Monmouthshire, that is shewed in the Indictment. But I must crave your Lordship's Leave, that I may more particularly open this Case. This is a Case, Gentlemen, of very great Consequence, and though it more immediately concerns Mr. Arnold, yet it highly concerns every Man present; you of the Jury, and I; nay, every other Freeman of England, which ought to be protected by the Laws, must needs be concerned at so great a Violation of them, and cannot but set our Faces against such villainous and barbarous Attempts as these, wherein there did not want the Good-will of the Actors to make it a most barbarous and bloody Murder. In the Course of our Evidence, and the Method we will take to proceed in, it will be necessary to do these three Things. First of all, we shall acquaint you with that which we apprehend to be the Reason and Occasion of this horrid Fact. Next we shall tell you what that Fact was. And in the last place, enquire how far this Defendant is guilty thereof.

For the First; give me leave to acquaint you with what we apprehend to be the true Reason of this Assassination. 'Tis notorious to most Men, but especially to the County of Monmouth, where Mr. Arnold was a Justice of Peace, how active and diligent, how faithful and vigorous a Man he has been in the Discharge of his Duty to his King and Country, in putting the Laws in Execution against the Papists, and endeavouring to suppress Popery: This was the Ground of their Malice, as you will find by the Evidence, and by the several Threats that he had before this Act was done. But more particularly there was this occasion; there was one whom they call'd Captain Evans, but indeed was Father Evans, a Popish Priest; this Man in Monmouth was taken by Mr. Arnold, and was prosecuted according to Law, and convicted. I mention this Circumstance, because our Evidence will refer to it, and that you will see out of the Actors own Mouths, if we may believe the Actors in this bloody Tragedy when they did the Fact: This Prosecution of Father Captain Evans, was no small Occasion of their Villainy which they acted upon Mr. Arnold. These were the Grounds of their Malice, Gentlemen, and what happened to Mr. Arnold was the Effect. And I do the rather mention this Particular, that you may know what Sort of People these were that practised this Villainy upon Mr. Arnold; for it will be a necessary Circumstance in our Proof against this Prisoner at the Bar, to shew that he is one of that bloody Tribe.

Gentlemen, the next Thing is to shew what this Fact was, and how it happened. Mr. Arnold had a Controversy with one Mr. Herbert, another Justice of the Peace in Monmouthshire: that Cause between them was to be heard before the King and Council the next Day after this Fact was committed: I mention Mr. Herbert, but I hope he is more a Gentleman than to be concerned in such a Villainy. We will not at this time give any Evidence that relates to him: For truly I believe this could only be the Contrivance of a Jesuit, and the Practice of a bigotted Papist. But thus it happen'd: Mr. Arnold going to attend his Council upon this Occasion, to prepare himself for this Hearing that was to be before the King and Council; in Bell-Yard there he is set upon, there he is wounded, there he is murder'd, as these Assassins thought. And this Mr. Arnold will prove to you when he comes to give his Evidence. This to the Fact.

K

Gentlemen,

Gentlemen, the next is now to consider how far this Man at the Bar is guilty of it; and for that, Gentlemen, we will give you Evidence of several Sorts:

1. The positive Proof of Mr. Arnold himself, who, as Mr. Holt has observ'd before, almost by a Miracle, discover'd the Defendant's Face; for a Light accidentally coming out of one of the neighbouring Houses, and the Defendant looking at Mr. Arnold to see whether he was the Man they wanted, immediately upon that he was assaulted and carried into Jackanapes-Lane, and was wounded in several Places. This, Gentlemen, is plain, and will be positively prov'd; and then when this Man was taken up on Suspicion, and was carried before a Justice of the Peace, and Mr. Arnold was sent for, though Mr. Arnold had no private Intimation, no kind of Knowledge before-hand of Giles's being taken; and there were several Men stood beside this Man, yet though he had never seen him before, but at the time when the Fact was done, Mr. Arnold immediately charged him with the Fact, and as soon as he heard him speak he knew his Voice. This was so plain upon Giles, that he had not the Power, though he might have had the Confidence, at that time to deny it: But instead of a Denial said, The Matter could but amount to an Assault and Battery. In the next Place we have Evidence from the Defendant's own Mouth, which in a Case of this Nature ought to weigh as much as can be, and I think is as much as the Nature of the Thing is capable of. This Man the very next Day after Mr. Arnold had been thus assaulted, discoursing with one Phillips by Name, and relating the Business which happened to Mr. Arnold, and before he could know he had Armour on, as we will prove from the Circumstance of the Time (what does Giles say?) Says he, Damn him, rot him, Mr. Arnold, said he, had Armour on. And this, Gentlemen, could not be known by him at that time, if he had not been a Party in this base Attempt. And there is a Circumstance that goes yet beyond this, which I would have you observe, that when Mr. Arnold was assassinated, when they made their Attempt, in the very Act were these Words used, Damn him, rot him, he has Armour on. These very Words were spoken then, and upon that they fell to cut his Throat. We have this Circumstance more; he had broken his Sword, and went to a Cutler, one Darcy by Name; this Man was a Papist, and says he, Where hast thou been Giles, fighting with the Devil? No, it was with damn'd Arnold. This we will prove to you: These are Evidences that are positive.

Some other Witnesses we have, that will be very material to prove to you what sort of Man the Defendant is: That he has declared there is no Plot; that those that believe it are Rogues; and if ever any of the Lords in the Tower should suffer, this Nation should feel a bloodier War than ever it had done; by which you may see his bloody Nature. Gentlemen, besides this we shall prove (according to their Custom of Shamming) that he has from time to time pretended as if Mr. Arnold had done this Business himself, or some of his Friends, to revive the Plot. A very fine Contrivance indeed! for a Person to stab himself, and cut his own Throat, to revive the Plot. These Things we will make out clearly to you: And I must tell you it is a notorious Crime, such a Fact as has no Precedent: There's no Remembrance in History, that I know of, of such barbarous Attempts, except in the Case of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, who was most barbarously murdered by this sort of Men. And this Case, Gentlemen, differs from that only in this, that there they accomplish'd their Villainy upon him: But the Providence of God saved Mr. Arnold's Life, and I hope to as good Purpose: For as Providence ordered That to confirm the Truth of the Popish Plot; so this Assassination of Mr. Arnold must convince all Mankind (not concerned in the Plot it self) that this damn'd Popish Plot still continues, and that 'tis high Time for all honest Men, as much as in them lies, to endeavour to suppress it. You, Gentlemen, will do your Duty in finding this Man guilty (if the Evidence we give satisfies your Consciences that he is so, else God forbid), and then I doubt not but the Court will do their Duty, in putting such an Exemplary Punishment upon this Villain, that may deter the like barbarous and bloody Attempts for the future.

Mr. Thompson. Pray, Mr. Arnold, give an Account of this Business.

Mr. Arnold. My Lord, I was ordered by the King and Council to attend upon them the next Day after this Villainy befel me. I was upon the 15th Day of April in my Chamber in the Afternoon, and my Lord Chandos and several other Persons came to my Chamber, and one Evans, one of the Messengers belonging to the Council, came to give me Notice that my Hearing (which I was inform'd was to be at Four in the Afternoon) was ordered to be at Ten in the Morning, which was the Reason I sent my Servants out to give Notice of this Alteration to my Witnesses and Council. And though I had resolv'd not to stir out that Night, I went out with the Company to the Devil-Tavern, where we were, and staid till about Ten, or past; and just as we were breaking up, I recollected that I had some Business with Mr. Phillips, who is a Counsellor at Law, and lives near the End of Bell-Yard. I desired the Company to stay, and I would come to them in a Moment. I went to the Room where several Servants were, and called to some of them to go with me; For several of my Friends and Neighbours being in Town, I very often took their Servants with me, when mine were busy or out of the way. As I went cross Fleet-Street, I did see Two Men in Campaign-Cloaks follow me, and I thought them to be Servants belonging to some of my Company, who had followed me on my Calling; and as I came into Bell-Yard, one of them went faster than I went, and got before me, and turned and looked earnestly in my Face, and I went by him, when a Woman standing in a Door about the middle of Bell-Yard, with a Candle in her Hand, I looked in his Face, and that Person was the Prisoner at the Bar; and when his Companion or Companions came up to him, I heard them laugh aloud; I took no Notice, but went on, and went as far as to that House.

* Sir George Mr. Recorder. *. You knew him before, Mr. Arnold?

Jeffries. Mr. Arnold. I did not know him so well before as to know his Face. At the Kennel at the End of Jackanapes-Lane, I looking down to find the Kennel, a Cloak was thrown over my Head, then I found very rough Hands upon my Shoulders, and they ran me into Jackanapes-Lane, just cross the Lane, against the opposite Wall, and they run my Head so hard I think they broke it; I drew my Sword before, but before I could use it, I was struck, and immediately upon that, one of them struck me; then I apprehended what it was, but could not turn to make any Defence. I received a second Blow and fell, and the first thing I was sensible of was a very sharp quick Thrust in my Side, and the Point at that Thrust ran into my Belly; then I recovering began to make what Defence I could. With a broad Sword I was run through my Arm, and with a small Weapon I was run through in another Place of my Arm. I had several other Wounds; one of them set his Foot hard upon my Breast, and kept me down, and he was, as I conceive, run into the Leg by one of his Companions; for I heard him say, Damme, thou hast spoiled my Leg. They laughed all the while, and were exceeding merry. I had then on a Pair of Bodice of Whalebone, notwithstanding which I had four or five Wounds in my Body through them, for they were not Proof, but they imagin'd they were, finding their Swords double sometimes, and then said one of them, Damme, he has Armour on, cut his Throat. Immediately one knee'd down, and gave me several Cuts in the lower Part of the Face, and I did what I could to defend my self, but they have given me some indelible Marks, Characters that will never be obliterated while I live, and I am afraid I shall never be my self again, by Reason of the Bruises in my Head and Breast. By a Candle in a Window, I conceive in Sir Thomas Baldwin's House, and some Women in his Yard, gave them the first Disturbance, and a Boy coming by with a Link the same time, I both saw the Face of the Prisoner at the Bar again, and remember'd I saw him in the Lane just before. They then pulled the Cloak from off me, and I seeing the Light, and being eased of the Weight, I strained all my Strength and cried out, and then some Company came in, who are here to prove it; but seeing me all Blood and Dirt, they stood gazing on me a time, but at last took me up and carried me into the Sugar-Loaf, and from thence I was carried to my Lodging, where all the Company I left came to me, and a Surgeon was sent for, who is also here to prove his Knowledge of the Condition he found me in. And when they went away, they did not steal away as other Malefactors used to do, but clapt their Swords close to their Bodies, and went away laughing aloud; but as they were going, one of them said these Words, Now, you Dog, pray for, or pray again for the Soul of Captain Evans. Captain Evans was a Jesuit, and was executed at Cardiffe for being a Priest; and I have been informed by several Persons of good Quality, that when the Under Sheriff came to give him Notice that he had a Warrant for his speedy Execution, the said Evans being in a Game at Tennis, said, God damme, I will play out my Set first.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Arnold, I would know one thing: Will you undertake to swear positively that this Person was one of the Persons who stept before you? Will you take it upon your Oath, That that Person, the Prisoner at the Bar, went before you?

Mr. Arnold. I will take it upon my Oath, as far as a Man can do, for one Man, 'tis possible, may be like another both by his Voice and his Face; I can swear I believe he is the Man.

Mr. Thompson. You are satisfied upon the first sight that you had of him in the Country, that he was the Man.

Mr. Arnold. Yes, Sir; and he can tell you that by a very good Token, for I had like to have run him thro'.

Mr. Recorder. We must not expect that there can be exact and positive Proof; for Men that commit Offences of this impudent Nature don't usually call Witnesses to be present to see them done; therefore we would come as near as we can to Circumstances, whereby a Fact of such a Nature is to be proved. Mr. Arnold, do you believe that the Prisoner at the Bar was one of the Persons that went before you in Bell-Yard?

Mr. Arnold. Upon my Conscience I do believe he was the Man.

Mr. Recorder. What o'Clock was it?

Mr. Arnold. About eleven o'Clock, or between ten and eleven.

Mr. Recorder. When the Link came there, was there three? And do you believe by the Light you had by the Link, that that was one of the Persons that were there?

Mr. Arnold. I saw his Face and Habit, and believe he was.

Mr. Recorder. What Habit had he on?

Mr. Arnold. He had a grey Cloak, a Campaign Cloak, and a Coat, I think lin'd with Red. It is impossible to give an Account of every Particular under those Circumstances I was in.

Mr. Recorder. It is not to be expected that a Man under your Circumstances should be extraordinary precise in Circumstances; therefore it is I asked you, that according to the best of your Apprehension, you might acquaint the Court with those Circumstances that may be remember'd by the Jury, that they may see there be no Injury done to the Prisoner at the Bar, but that Right be done on both Sides, and that in every Circumstance.

Mr. Holt. Now, Sir, we will call Mr. Phillips, with whom he had this Discourse the next Day.

Mr. Recorder. Will the Prisoner ask him any Questions?

Prisoner. Truly Mr. Arnold knew me in Monmouthshire, and knew me as well as any Man in the City.

Mr. Recorder. Did you not very well know him?

Mr. Arnold. It is very possible I might see him, and often at Assizes and Sessions, but not to know him; nor did ever know whether his Name were Giles, or what it was. Your Lordship sees many Persons here, and often, and it's possible do not know them; he lives I think a dozen Miles from me.

Pris. That's a Wonder; if it please you, Sir, my Wife is a near Relation to you, both by Father and Mother, and I have spoken with you in your Chamber.

Mr. Arnold. 'Tis possible she may, but I do not know it.

Stephen

Stephen Phillips.

Mr. Holt. Pray, Mr. Phillips, give an Account of what Discourse you had with Giles the Day after the Business was done.

Mr. Phillips. We went to the Tavern, and drank two or three Bottles of Wine, and we had some Discourse concerning Mr. Arnold; it was about Eight or Nine o'Clock in the Evening the next Day, some Discourse happened concerning his miserable Condition, and how he was hurt, and of that Nature.

Mr. Recorder. How many was there in Company?

Mr. Phillips. One or two more.

Mr. Recorder. What House?

Mr. Phillips. At the Crown Tavern in New-Street, in Covent-Garden; and among the rest, Mr. Giles was talking of it, and said he, God damn him, God rot him, he had Armour on; the Word was, God damn him, or, God rot him, he had Armour on, they say.

Mr. Holt. What time of Night was that?

Mr. Phillips. As near as I can remember, it was about eight or nine the next Day in the Evening.

Mr. Thompson. The very Words that Mr. Arnold swears when they went to cut his Throat.

Pris. My Lord, if you please, there was Mr. Phillips and another; and I spake nothing but what I heard as News, that they had killed him if he had not had Armour on.

Mr. Recorder. For that Matter, Mr. Giles, you shall have your Time, and you may call up other Witnesses, but the Gentleman positively swears you said these Words; and if so, I'll assure you it does not look as if you were a-kin to him, or your Wife either.

Walter Watkins.

Mr. Holt. Mr. Watkins, What did you hear that Giles should say in Gloucestershire about this Business?

Mr. Thompson. What said he about this Business of Mr. Arnold?

Mr. Watkins. My Lord, all I can say is this: I being at the stating some Accounts between Mr. John Giles and Mr. Richmond, I asked Mr. Giles for some Horsehair to make a Fishing-Line: Mr. Giles replied, That he had left very good Hair for me at a Farrier's in Gloucester; for he and Mr. Herbert Jones made such Hastle through the Town of Gloucester, that they did not call for the Horsehair. I asked Mr. Giles what was the occasion of his Hastle? Said he, For fear we should be stopp'd in our Journey, as suspected to be concern'd in Mr. Arnold's Business.

Mr. Recorder. What time was that?

Mr. Watkins. About the 5th of May.

George Richmond.

Mr. Holt. Mr. Richmond, what can you say concerning this Thing?

Mr. Richmond. I desired Mr. Giles to meet me, that we might even our Accounts; and upon the 5th of May last he met me, and I desired Mr. Watkins to be present as a Witness.

Mr. Recorder. Where was it?

Mr. Richmond. At Uske. And as we were making up the Account, said Mr. Watkins to Mr. Giles, Where is the Horsehair you promised me to make Fishing-lines? Giles replied, He left very good Horsehair at a Farrier's in Gloucester: And he asked him, Why he left it? He said, He made Hastle for fear of being taken and stopp'd for Mr. Arnold's Business. I cannot say whether he called him Esq; Arnold, or Mr. Arnold, or what; he seldom used to give him so good Words.

Walter Powel.

Mr. Holt. What do you know concerning Giles his being at the Cutler's?

Mr. Powel. If it please you, Sir, I was at the Cutler's.

Mr. Recorder. Name the Time when, and the Place where.

Powel. The 5th of May, at a Place called Uske in Monmouthshire, Mr. Giles and I we came there; and Mr. Giles asked Peter Darcy, Whether he would mend him that Sword or no? But Mr. Darcy had some Business that he could not get Time to mend it that Morning, but would do it in the Afternoon. Says Darcy, Where have you been? You have been hot at it. What, have you been fighting with the Devil? No, said he, with damn'd Arnold.

Mr. Recorder. What did you say when the Cutler asked him, Whether he had been fighting with the Devil? And he said again, No, not with the Devil, but with damn'd Arnold?

Powel. Peter Darcy said he must not speak such Words; and Giles's Wife pluck'd him by the Coat, and bid him hold his Tongue.

Mr. Darnal. Who was by?

Powel. There was one Peter Darcy.

Mr. Darnal. Was one John Jones there?

Powel. I think there was another indeed by, the Apprentice.

Mr. Recorder. There was the Apprentice, but he does not know his Name, and Darcy, and Giles and his Wife.

William Richmond.

Mr. Holt. What did you hear Giles say about the Rapier?

W. Richmond. He asked me in the Afternoon before Mr. Arnold was hurt, where he might buy a very good Rapier? I told him I could not tell. He then had a good Back-Sword in the House.

Mr. Gibbs. Tell the Court what Acquaintance Giles had with Father Lewis the Jesuit, since executed.

W. Richmond. My Lord, he told me he would go to the Executioner, and persuade him not to execute Mr. Lewis, but I had the Executioner lock'd up, and I would not suffer him; but I did see him very active at the Execution, dipping Cloths in Lewis's Blood.

Mr. Thompson. What do you say as to his coming to his Lodging?

W. Richmond. We went to several Places that Day, and at eight or nine, or between eight and nine, we came to the King's-Arms in St. Martin's-Lane, and I left him at the Kitchen Fire, and went up into the Chamber, and drank a considerable Quantity of Drink; and as near as I can guess, it was between twelve and one o'Clock before he came to his Bed; for after I was going to Bed, about one of the Clock I heard John Giles come up the Stairs, and bid me good Night; he called at my Door just as I was pulling off my Breeches to go into Bed.

Mr. Recorder. What time was this?

W. Richmond. As near as I can guess, it was between twelve and one, or very near one.

Mr. Recorder. At what House was it?

W. Richmond. The King's-Arms in St. Martin's-Lane.

Mr. Recorder. What did you say when the Maid was making the Bed?

W. Richmond. I asked her who it was for? And she said, for a Man that was not willing to lie with any body.

Mr. Recorder. What time did you come to the House?

W. Richmond. About nine.

Mr. Recorder. Did you stay in that House till that Time?

W. Richmond. I lay in the House, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. You were not out of the House the while?

W. Richmond. No, Sir, I was not out of it.

Mr. Recorder. And you are sure that you did not see him again till he came to your Door going to Bed?

W. Richmond. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. What Time was that?

W. Richmond. Nigh one.

Mr. Thompson. You see the Contradiction between this, and what this Fellow says upon his Examination; where he says he was a-bed at Nine o'Clock.

Mr. Recorder. Where did you go at that time?

W. Richmond. We went to Long-Lane, to one Philpot's; and she told us her Husband was gone to Exercise at the next Church; I do not know the Church's Name, and there we went and looked upon the Soldiers, but did not see him; we came back to his House again; and the Gentlewoman gave us a Tankard of Beer or Ale. And after that we went back, and we had a mind to make Sport with a Country-Fellow we had with us, and went into Whetstone's-Park, from thence we went to the Helmet in Drury-Lane.

Mr. Recorder. You went to Whetstone's-Park, and what did you spend there?

W. Richmond. Six-pence, and he paid it.

Mr. Recorder. Whither did you go from thence?

W. Richmond. Into Drury-Lane.

Mr. Recorder. How long did you stay in Drury-Lane?

W. Richmond. It was not long, Sir, about an Hour.

Mr. Recorder. Where after that?

W. Richmond. From thence to the Peacock, and staid till eight or nine.

Mr. Recorder. Who did you meet withal between your going from the Helmet in Drury-Lane to the Peacock?

W. Richmond. We met with one Powel, and another, and one Elizabeth Edwards.

Mr. Recorder. What did you drink there?

W. Richmond. We did drink both Ale and Brandy.

Mr. Recorder. Well said: How long did you stay there?

W. Richmond. We staid there a pretty while, an Hour or more, or two Hours.

Mr. Recorder. What time of Night was it that you went from thence?

W. Richmond. About eight or nine.

Mr. Recorder. And then you went to your Lodgings?

W. Richmond. Yes.

Mr. Recorder. Did you drink at the King's-Arms?

W. Richmond. No, we drank not all together.

Mr. Recorder. And there you staid till twelve or one o'Clock?

W. Richmond. Yes.

Mr. Recorder. But can you remember, as near as you can guess, what time was it you saw this Maid making of the Bed?

W. Richmond. I cannot say positively, but I judge it was about twelve o'Clock.

Mr. Thompson. As to that Circumstance of his coming home at twelve at Night, desire Mr. Arnold to give an Account of his Examination, what time of Night he came to his Lodging.

Mr. Holt. Do you believe that is John Giles's Hand?

Mr. Recorder. That is a Copy.

Mr. Recorder. He did confess it before a Justice of the Peace, that he was at his Lodging at ten o'Clock: This I heard him say, and I believe he won't deny it; and I heard him own this Examination, my Man will prove it.

Giles. Deny it? Yes, I will deny it, there was no such word said: I did say, Mr. Arnold, I went to Bed then.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Jury must take Notice of this; that Sir Creswel upon his Examination he says, he came home by nine; Levinz. which is before the Thing was done: But by Proof he did not come in till Twelve, which was after the Thing was done.

Mr. Holt. Who will give you now, Gentlemen, an Account of this Man's Principles.

Mr. Recorder. This is the Business: Richmond says, they came together to their Lodging before Night, but he left him at the Kitchen Fire, and went into another Room to drink with some Company; and this Mr. Richmond says, his Bed was not made till Twelve o'Clock, and that he himself went to Bed about one of the Clock, and that he heard the Prisoner at the Bar, while he was pulling off his Breeches, call to him, and therefore he took Notice of that as a Circumstance, that he does particularly remember he did not go to Bed till that Time; and he says he did not stir from that Place after nine o'Clock.

Mr. Thompson. There is a Contradiction in that.

Mr. Recorder. There is no Contradiction: The other Witness says, that he came along with him at Nine o'Clock.

Mr. Thompson. I will tell you where this is a Contradiction.

Mr. Att. Gen. He says he came to the House at nine o'Clock, but he came not to Bed till after one.

Mr. Recorder. The Evidence does not go so far: Richmond says they came to the King's-Arms, and left him in the Kitchen at nine o'Clock, and he went into his Chamber and staid up till one, and all that time he did not come to Bed.

Mr. Thompson. So far it lies upon him to give an Account where he was between nine and twelve.

Bridges.

Mr. Holt. Hark you, Sir, have you had any Discourse with Giles concerning the Plot, and concerning the Lords in the Tower? And what did he say to you?

Mr. Bridges.

Gentlemen, the next is now to consider how far this Man at the Bar is guilty of it; and for that, Gentlemen, we will give you Evidence of several Sorts:

1. The positive Proof of Mr. Arnold himself, who, as Mr. Holt has observ'd before, almost by a Miracle, discover'd the Defendant's Face; for a Light accidentally coming out of one of the neighbouring Houses, and the Defendant looking at Mr. Arnold to see whether he was the Man they wanted, immediately upon that he was assaulted and carried into Jackanapes-Lane, and was wounded in several Places. This, Gentlemen, is plain, and will be positively prov'd; and then when this Man was taken up on Suspicion, and was carried before a Justice of the Peace, and Mr. Arnold was sent for, though Mr. Arnold had no private Intimation, no kind of Knowledge before-hand of Giles's being taken; and there were several Men stood beside this Man, yet though he had never seen him before, but at the time when the Fact was done, Mr. Arnold immediately charged him with the Fact, and as soon as he heard him speak he knew his Voice. This was so plain upon Giles, that he had not the Power, though he might have had the Confidence, at that time to deny it: But instead of a Denial said, The Matter could but amount to an Assault and Battery. In the next Place we have Evidence from the Defendant's own Mouth, which in a Case of this Nature ought to weigh as much as can be, and I think is as much as the Nature of the Thing is capable of. This Man the very next Day after Mr. Arnold had been thus assaulted, discoursing with one Phillips by Name, and relating the Business which happened to Mr. Arnold, and before he could know he had Armour on, as we will prove from the Circumstance of the Time (what does Giles say?) Says he, Damn him, rot him, Mr. Arnold, said he, had Armour on. And this, Gentlemen, could not be known by him at that time, if he had not been a Party in this base Attempt. And there is a Circumstance that goes yet beyond this, which I would have you observe, that when Mr. Arnold was assassinated, when they made their Attempt, in the very Act were these Words used, Damn him, rot him, he has Armour on. These very Words were spoken then, and upon that they fell to cut his Throat. We have this Circumstance more; he had broken his Sword, and went to a Cutler, one Darcy by Name; this Man was a Papist, and says he, Where hast thou been Giles, fighting with the Devil? No, it was with damn'd Arnold. This we will prove to you: These are Evidences that are positive.

Some other Witnesses we have, that will be very material to prove to you what sort of Man the Defendant is: That he has declared there is no Plot; that those that believe it are Rogues; and if ever any of the Lords in the Tower should suffer, this Nation should feel a bloodier War than ever it had done; by which you may see his bloody Nature. Gentlemen, besides this we shall prove (according to their Custom of Shamming) that he has from time to time pretended as if Mr. Arnold had done this Business himself, or some of his Friends, to revive the Plot. A very fine Contrivance indeed! for a Person to stab himself, and cut his own Throat, to revive the Plot. These Things we will make out clearly to you: And I must tell you it is a notorious Crime, such a Fact as has no Precedent: There's no Remembrance in History, that I know of, of such barbarous Attempts, except in the Case of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, who was most barbarously murdered by this sort of Men. And this Case, Gentlemen, differs from from that only in this, that there they accomplish'd their Villainy upon him: But the Providence of God saved Mr. Arnold's Life, and I hope to as good Purpose: For as Providence ordered That to confirm the Truth of the Popish Plot; so this Assassination of Mr. Arnold must convince all Mankind (not concerned in the Plot it self) that this damn'd Popish Plot still continues, and that 'tis high Time for all honest Men, as much as in them lies, to endeavour to suppress it. You, Gentlemen, will do your Duty in finding this Man guilty (if the Evidence we give satisfies your Consciences that he is so, else God forbid), and then I doubt not but the Court will do their Duty, in putting such an Exemplary Punishment upon this Villain, that may deter the like barbarous and bloody Attempts for the future.

Mr. Arnold sworn.

Mr. Thompson. Pray, Mr. Arnold, give an Account of this Business.

Mr. Arnold. My Lord, I was ordered by the King and Council to attend upon them the next Day after this Villainy befel me. I was upon the 15th Day of April in my Chamber in the Afternoon, and my Lord Chandos and several other Persons came to my Chamber, and one Evans, one of the Messengers belonging to the Council, came to give me Notice that my Hearing (which I was inform'd was to be at Four in the Afternoon) was ordered to be at Ten in the Morning, which was the Reason I sent my Servants out to give Notice of this Alteration to my Witnesses and Council. And though I had resolv'd not to stir out that Night, I went out with the Company to the Devil-Tavern, where we were, and staid till about Ten, or past; and just as we were breaking up, I recollected that I had some Business with Mr. Phillips, who is a Counsellor at Law, and lives near the End of Bell-Yard. I desired the Company to stay, and I would come to them in a Moment. I went to the Room where several Servants were, and called to some of them to go with me; For several of my Friends and Neighbours being in Town, I very often took their Servants with me, when mine were busy or out of the way. As I went cross Fleet-Street, I did see Two Men in Campaign-Cloaks follow me, and I thought them to be Servants belonging to some of my Company, who had followed me on my Calling; and as I came into Bell-Yard, one of them went faster than I went, and got before me, and turned and looked earnestly in my Face, and I went by him, when a Woman standing in a Door about the middle of Bell-Yard, with a Candle in her Hand, I looked in his Face, and that Person was the Prisoner at the Bar; and when his Companion or Companions came up to him, I heard them laugh aloud; I took no Notice, but went on, and went as far as to that House.

* Sir George Mr. Recorder. *. You knew him before, Mr. Arnold?

Jeffries. Mr. Arnold. I did not know him so well before as to know his Face. At the Kennel at the End of Jackanapes-Lane, I looking down to find the Kennel, a Cloak was thrown over my Head, then I found very rough Hands upon my Shoulders, and they ran me into Jackanapes-Lane, just cross the Lane, against the opposite Wall, and they run my Head so hard I think they broke it; I drew my Sword before, but before I could use it, I was struck, and immediately upon that, one of them struck me; then I apprehended what it was, but could not turn to make any Defence. I received a second Blow and fell, and the first thing I was sensible of was a very sharp quick Thrust in my Side, and the Point at that Thrust ran into my Belly; then I recovering began to make what Defence I could. With a broad Sword I was run through my Arm, and with a small Weapon I was run through in another Place of my Arm. I had several other Wounds; one of them set his Foot hard upon my Breast, and kept me down, and he was, as I conceive, run into the Leg by one of his Companions; for I heard him say, Damme, thou hast spoiled my Leg. They laughed all the while, and were exceeding merry. I had then on a Pair of Bodice of Whalebone, notwithstanding which I had four or five Wounds in my Body through them, for they were not Proof, but they imagin'd they were, finding their Swords double sometimes, and then said one of them, Damme, he has Armour on, cut his Throat. Immediately one kneeled down, and gave me several Cuts in the lower Part of the Face, and I did what I could to defend my self, but they have given me some indelible Marks, Characters that will never be obliterated while I live, and I am afraid I shall never be my self again, by Reason of the Bruises in my Head and Breast. By a Candle in a Window, I conceive in Sir Thomas Baldwin's House, and some Women in his Yard, gave them the first Disturbance, and a Boy coming by with a Link the same time, I both saw the Face of the Prisoner at the Bar again, and remember'd I saw him in the Lane just before. They then pulled the Cloak from off me, and I seeing the Light, and being eased of the Weight, I strained all my Strength and cried out, and then some Company came in, who are here to prove it; but seeing me all Blood and Dirt, they stood gazing on me a time, but at last took me up and carried me into the Sugar-Loaf, and from thence I was carried to my Lodging, where all the Company I left came to me, and a Surgeon was sent for, who is also here to prove his Knowledge of the Condition he found me in. And when they went away, they did not steal away as other Malefactors used to do, but clapt their Swords close to their Bodies, and went away laughing aloud; but as they were going, one of them said these Words, Now, you Dog, pray for, or pray again for the Soul of Captain Evans. Captain Evans was a Jesuit, and was executed at Cardiffe for being a Priest; and I have been informed by several Persons of good Quality, that when the Under Sheriff came to give him Notice that he had a Warrant for his speedy Execution, the said Evans being in a Game at Tennis, said, God damme, I will play out my Set first.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Arnold, I would know one thing: Will you undertake to swear positively that this Person was one of the Persons who stood before you? Will you take it upon your Oath, That that Person, the Prisoner at the Bar, went before you?

Mr. Arnold. I will take it upon my Oath, as far as a Man can do, for one Man, 'tis possible, may be like another both by his Voice and his Face; I can swear I believe he is the Man.

Mr. Thompson. You are satisfied upon the first sight that you had of him in the Country, that he was the Man.

Mr. Arnold. Yes, Sir; and he can tell you that by a very good Token, for I had like to have run him thro'.

Mr. Recorder. We must not expect that there can be exact and positive Proof; for Men that commit Offences of this impudent Nature don't usually call Witnesses to be present to see them done; therefore we would come as near as we can to Circumstances, whereby a Fact of such a Nature is to be proved. Mr. Arnold, do you believe that the Prisoner at the Bar was one of the Persons that went before you in Bell-Yard?

Mr. Arnold. Upon my Conscience I do believe he was the Man.

Mr. Recorder. What o'Clock was it?

Mr. Arnold. About eleven o'Clock, or between ten and eleven.

Mr. Recorder. When the Link came there, was there three? And do you believe by the Light you had by the Link, that that was one of the Persons that were there?

Mr. Arnold. I saw his Face and Habit, and believe he was.

Mr. Recorder. What Habit had he on?

Mr. Arnold. He had a grey Cloak, a Campaign Cloak, and a Coat, I think lin'd with Red. It is impossible to give an Account of every Particular under those Circumstances I was in.

Mr. Recorder. It is not to be expected that a Man under your Circumstances should be extraordinary precise in Circumstances; therefore it is I asked you, that according to the best of your Apprehension, you might acquaint the Court with those Circumstances that may be remember'd by the Jury, that they may see there be no Injury done to the Prisoner at the Bar, but that Right be done on both Sides, and that in every Circumstance.

Mr. Holt. Now, Sir, we will call Mr. Phillips, with whom he had this Discourse the next Day.

Mr. Recorder. Will the Prisoner ask him any Questions?

Prisoner. Truly Mr. Arnold knew me in Monmouthshire, and knew me as well as any Man in the City.

Mr. Recorder. Did you not very well know him?

Mr. Arnold. It is very possible I might see him, and often at Assizes and Sessions, but not to know him; nor did ever know whether his Name were Giles, or what it was. Your Lordship sees many Persons here, and often, and it's possible do not know them; he lives I think a dozen Miles from me.

Prif. That's a Wonder; if it please you, Sir, my Wife is a near Relation to you, both by Father and Mother, and I have spoken with you in your Chamber.

Mr. Arnold. 'Tis possible she may, but I do not know it.

Stephen

Stephen Phillips.

Mr. Holt. Pray, Mr. Phillips, give an Account of what Discourse you had with Giles the Day after the Business was done.

Mr. Phillips. We went to the Tavern, and drank two or three Bottles of Wine, and we had some Discourse concerning Mr. Arnold; it was about Eight or Nine o'Clock in the Evening the next Day, some Discourse happened concerning his miserable Condition, and how he was hurt, and of that Nature.

Mr. Recorder. How many was there in Company?

Mr. Phillips. One or two more.

Mr. Recorder. What House?

Mr. Phillips. At the Crown Tavern in New-Street, in Covent-Garden; and among the rest, Mr. Giles was talking of it, and said he, God damn him, God rot him, he had Armour on; the Word was, God damn him, or, God rot him, he had Armour on, they say.

Mr. Holt. What time of Night was that?

Mr. Phillips. As near as I can remember, it was about eight or nine the next Day in the Evening.

Mr. Thompson. The very Words that Mr. Arnold swears when they went to cut his Throat.

Pris. My Lord, if you please, there was Mr. Phillips and another; and I spake nothing but what I heard as News, that they had killed him if he had not had Armour on.

Mr. Recorder. For that Matter, Mr. Giles, you shall have your Time, and you may call up other Witnesses, but the Gentleman positively swears you said these Words; and if so, I'll assure you it does not look as if you were a-kin to him, or your Wife either.

Walter Watkins.

Mr. Holt. Mr. Watkins, What did you hear that Giles should say in Gloucestershire about this Business?

Mr. Thompson. What said he about this Business of Mr. Arnold?

Mr. Watkins. My Lord, all I can say is this: I being at the stating some Accounts between Mr. John Giles and Mr. Richmond, I asked Mr. Giles for some Horsehair to make a Fishing-Line: Mr. Giles replied, That he had left very good Hair for me at a Farrier's in Gloucester; for he and Mr. Herbert Jones made such Haste through the Town of Gloucester, that they did not call for the Horsehair. I asked Mr. Giles what was the occasion of his Haste? Said he, For fear we should be stopp'd in our Journey, as suspected to be concern'd in Mr. Arnold's Business.

Mr. Recorder. What time was that?

Mr. Watkins. About the 5th of May.

George Richmond.

Mr. Holt. Mr. Richmond, what can you say concerning this Thing?

Mr. Richmond. I desired Mr. Giles to meet me, that we might even our Accounts; and upon the 5th of May last he met me, and I desired Mr. Watkins to be present as a Witness.

Mr. Recorder. Where was it?

Mr. Richmond. At Uffe. And as we were making up the Account, said Mr. Watkins to Mr. Giles, Where is the Horsehair you promised me to make Fishing-lines? Giles replied, He left very good Horsehair at a Farrier's in Gloucester: And he asked him, Why he left it? He said, He made Haste for fear of being taken and stopp'd for Mr. Arnold's Business. I cannot say whether he called him Esq; Arnold, or Mr. Arnold, or what; he seldom used to give him so good Words.

Walter Powell.

Mr. Holt. What do you know concerning Giles his being at the Cutler's?

Mr. Powell. If it please you, Sir, I was at the Cutler's.

Mr. Recorder. Name the Time when, and the Place where.

Powell. The 5th of May, at a Place called Uffe in Monmouthshire, Mr. Giles and I we came there; and Mr. Giles asked Peter Darcy, Whether he would mend him that Sword or no? But Mr. Darcy had some Business that he could not get Time to mend it that Morning, but would do it in the Afternoon. Says Darcy, Where have you been? You have been hot at it. What, have you been fighting with the Devil? No, said he, with damn'd Arnold.

Mr. Recorder. What did you say when the Cutler asked him, Whether he had been fighting with the Devil? And he said again, No, not with the Devil, but with damn'd Arnold?

Powell. Peter Darcy said he must not speak such Words; and Giles's Wife pluck'd him by the Coat, and bid him hold his Tongue.

Mr. Darnal. Who was by?

Powell. There was one Peter Darcy.

Mr. Darnal. Was one John Jones there?

Powell. I think there was another indeed by, the Apprentice.

Mr. Recorder. There was the Apprentice, but he does not know his Name, and Darcy, and Giles and his Wife.

William Richmond.

Mr. Holt. What did you hear Giles say about the Rapier?

W. Richmond. He asked me in the Afternoon before Mr. Arnold was hurt, where he might buy a very good Rapier? I told him I could not tell. He then had a good Back-Sword in the House.

Mr. Gibbs. Tell the Court what Acquaintance Giles had with Father Lewis the Jesuit, since executed.

W. Richmond. My Lord, he told me he would go to the Executioner, and persuade him not to execute Mr. Lewis, but I had the Executioner lock'd up, and I would not suffer him; but I did see him very active at the Execution, dipping Cloths in Lewis's Blood.

Mr. Thompson. What do you say as to his coming to his Lodging?

W. Richmond. We went to several Places that Day, and at eight or nine, or between eight and nine, we came to the King's-Arms in St. Martin's-Lane, and I left him at the Kitchen Fire, and went up into the Chamber, and drank a considerable Quantity of Drink; and as near as I can guess, it was between twelve and one o'Clock before he came to his Bed; for after I was going to Bed, about one of the Clock I heard John Giles come up the Stairs, and bid me good Night; he called at my Door just as I was pulling off my Breeches to go into Bed.

Mr. Recorder. What time was this?

W. Richmond. As near as I can guess, it was between twelve and one, or very near one.

Mr. Recorder. At what House was it?

W. Richmond. The King's-Arms in St. Martin's-Lane.

Mr. Recorder. What did you say when the Maid was making the Bed?

W. Richmond. I asked her who it was for? And she said, for a Man that was not willing to lie with any body.

Mr. Recorder. What time did you come to the House?

W. Richmond. About nine.

Mr. Recorder. Did you stay in that House till that Time?

W. Richmond. I lay in the House, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. You were not out of the House the while?

W. Richmond. No, Sir, I was not out of it.

Mr. Recorder. And you are sure that you did not see him again till he came to your Door going to Bed?

W. Richmond. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. What Time was that?

W. Richmond. Nigh one.

Mr. Thompson. You see the Contradiction between this, and what this Fellow says upon his Examination; where he says he was a-bed at Nine o'Clock.

Mr. Recorder. Where did you go at that time?

W. Richmond. We went to Long-Lane, to one Philpot's; and she told us her Husband was gone to Exercise at the next Church; I do not know the Church's Name, and there we went and looked upon the Soldiers, but did not see him; we came back to his House again, and the Gentlewoman gave us a Tankard of Beer or Ale. And after that we went back, and we had a mind to make Sport with a Country-Fellow we had with us, and went into Whetstone's-Park, from thence we went to the Helmet in Drury-Lane.

Mr. Recorder. You went to Whetstone's-Park, and what did you spend there?

W. Richmond. Six-pence, and he paid it.

Mr. Recorder. Whither did you go from thence?

W. Richmond. Into Drury-Lane.

Mr. Recorder. How long did you stay in Drury-Lane?

W. Richmond. It was not long, Sir, about an Hour.

Mr. Recorder. Where after that?

W. Richmond. From thence to the Peacock, and staid till eight or nine.

Mr. Recorder. Who did you meet withal between your going from the Helmet in Drury-Lane to the Peacock?

W. Richmond. We met with one Powel, and another, and one Elizabeth Edwards.

Mr. Recorder. What did you drink there?

W. Richmond. We did drink both Ale and Brandy.

Mr. Recorder. Well said: How long did you stay there?

W. Richmond. We staid there a pretty while, an Hour or more, or two Hours.

Mr. Recorder. What time of Night was it that you went from thence?

W. Richmond. About eight or nine.

Mr. Recorder. And then you went to your Lodgings?

W. Richmond. Yes.

Mr. Recorder. Did you drink at the King's-Arms?

W. Richmond. No, we drank not all together.

Mr. Recorder. And there you staid till twelve or one o'Clock?

W. Richmond. Yes.

Mr. Recorder. But can you remember, as near as you can guess, what time was it you saw this Maid making of the Bed?

W. Richmond. I cannot say positively, but I judge it was about twelve o'Clock.

Mr. Thompson. As to that Circumstance of his coming home at twelve at Night, desire Mr. Arnold to give an Account of his Examination, what time of Night he came to his Lodging.

Mr. Holt. Do you believe that is John Giles's Hand?

Mr. Recorder. That is a Copy.

Mr. Recorder. He did confess it before a Justice of the Peace, that he was at his Lodging at ten o'Clock: This I heard him say, and I believe he won't deny it; and I heard him own this Examination, my Man will prove it.

Giles. Deny it? Yes, I will deny it, there was no such word said: I did say, Mr. Arnold, I went to Bed then.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Jury must take Notice of this; that Sir Creswel upon his Examination he says, he came home by nine; Levinz. which is before the Thing was done: But by Proof he did not come in till Twelve, which was after the Thing was done.

Mr. Holt. Who will give you now, Gentlemen, an Account of this Man's Principles.

Mr. Recorder. This is the Business: Richmond says, they came together to their Lodging before Night, but he left him at the Kitchen Fire, and went into another Room to drink with some Company; and this Mr. Richmond says, his Bed was not made till Twelve o'Clock, and that he himself went to Bed about one of the Clock, and that he heard the Prisoner at the Bar, while he was pulling off his Breeches, call to him, and therefore he took Notice of that as a Circumstance, that he does particularly remember he did not go to Bed till that Time; and he says he did not stir from that Place after nine o'Clock.

Mr. Thompson. There is a Contradiction in that.

Mr. Recorder. There is no Contradiction: The other Witness says, that he came along with him at Nine o'Clock.

Mr. Thompson. I will tell you where this is a Contradiction.

Mr. Att. Gen. He says he came to the House at nine o'Clock, but he came not to Bed till after one.

Mr. Recorder. The Evidence does not go so far: Richmond says they came to the King's-Arms, and left him in the Kitchen at nine o'Clock, and he went into his Chamber and staid up till one, and all that time he did not come to Bed.

Mr. Thompson. So far it lies upon him to give an Account where he was between nine and twelve.

Bridges.

Mr. Holt. Hark you, Sir, have you had any Discourse with Giles concerning the Plot, and concerning the Lords in the Tower? And what did he say to you?

Mr. Bridges.

Mr. Bridges. I had some Discourse with him concerning the Papists; he that said that it was the best Religion, and those that were not of that Religion should be damn'd: I alledg'd against him, and told him the contrary: I thought not. Can it be such a Religion, said I, that will act such Things against the King and the Government? Says he, If any says there is such a Plot against the King or the Government, he is a Rogue and a Thief.

Mr. Holt. What did he say of the Lords in the Tower?

Bridges. Nothing more.

Giles. How along ago was this?

Mr. Recorder. When was this?

Bridges. This was, my Lord, about a Twelve-month ago.

Mr. Thompson. Did he speak any thing to you further concerning the Plot?

Bridges. Not further.

Giles. My Lord, I beseech you I may speak to this Man. Do you hear, Sir, Were not these the Words that I said when you charged me to be a Papist, that I knew of no Popish Plot, and they that said I was a Papist, or knew any thing of the Plot, were Rogues or Whores, or worse?

Bridges. You said thus, that the Papists were the best Religion, and that those that were not of that Religion were damn'd.

Giles. Have not you been a Papist, Sir?

Bridges. I am not now.

Giles. Will you say that I am a Papist?

Bridges. I say you defended it so much, I thought you were. Said I, I wonder, it being such a good Religion, that they would offer to act such a thing against the King and Government. Said he, He that says this Plot is acted by the Papists, is a Rogue and a Thief.

Giles. How long ago is this?

Bridges. A Twelve-month ago; you remember it well enough; you remember when you sent for me to the George.

Walter Moor.

Mr. Holt. What Discourse have you had with him concerning the Plot?

Mr. Thompson. What has he said about it?

Moor. He said, if the Lords in the Tower were executed, there would be a greater War than ever was in England, and swore that if these Lords were put to Death, it would cost more Blood than ever was spilt. And I asked him again, Why they should not be put to Death, if they should deserve it? For if a poor Man had done such a Fault, he would be hanged out of the Way presently. He said again, they did not deserve it, for there was no Plot at all.

Giles. Pray, Sir, Who was with you when you say I said these Words?

Moor. I was at George Taylor's House.

Giles. Did not you say that George Taylor discoursed this with you?

Mr. Thompson. Is this the Man that spake it, upon your Oath?

Moor. Yes, this was the Man.

Giles. What did Taylor say to you? Do you think, my Lord, I would say such a Thing to such a Man as this is?

Mr. Recorder. Do you hear, Mr. Giles, for that Matter is not the Question; the Man has sworn it; except the Jury know of their own Knowledge that the Man is perjured, he is not so as to me.

Moor. It is the first time that I ever took an Oath.

Mr. Reynold.

Mr. Holt. Mr. Reynold, What have you heard Giles say concerning Mr. Arnold?

Reynold. Sir, I was in Company with John Giles and another, and we had Discourse concerning one Arnold, and John Giles said—

Mr. Recorder. What was that?

Reynold. I being in Company with him, we fell in Discourse about Justice Arnold, how he was wounded.

Mr. Recorder. Where was it?

Reynold. In Monmouthshire, at Langoone, the second Day of May: John Giles answered us, that he could not see but he wounded himself.

Mr. Recorder. What Day did you say?

Reynold. The second Day of May.

Mr. Recorder. He did discourse the 5th Day of May at Uske, I would fain know when he came through Gloucester.

Mr. Thompson. What did he say about Mr. Arnold?

Reynold. He thought that he wounded himself. Says his Wife, How could he wound himself in his Arms? Said he, It was himself, or some of his Friends.

Mr. Recorder. Or some of his Relations.

Reynold. Some of his Friends.

Mr. Hobbs.

Mr. Thompson. Mr. Hobbs, Pray tell how you found Mr. Arnold when he was wounded.

Mr. Hobbs. I found Mr. Arnold bleeding.

Mr. Thompson. Tell what Wounds they were.

Mr. Hobbs. Two in his Arm, two others upon the Face, another upon the Throat, which bled very much; another two upon the Breast, and one in the Belly.

Mr. Thompson. What Depth might that be?

Mr. Hobbs. Two Inches and a Half long.

Mr. Thompson. Where else?

Mr. Hobbs. There was another upon his Breast.

Mr. Thompson. What Depth?

Mr. Hobbs. They were not very deep, but there was one upon the Belly six Inches and an Half; there were two through his Arm, and a Wound and several Bruises in his Head.

Mr. Thompson. This is likely to be a fine Contrivance, that he should do it himself, as likely as that Sir Edmundbury Godfrey put his own Sword through his own Body after his Neck was broke. A great Shout given.

Lord Mayor. Do you believe a Man could wound himself so?

Mr. Hobbs. No, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. I believe a Man could do it, but I believe a Man would not do it himself.

Fifteen or Sixteen Witnesses more for the King, that were attending in the Court were not examin'd, the Court being in some haste, and the King's Council not pressing to have them examin'd, there being so full Evidence: Nor was there one word replied to the Prisoner's Witnesses, they being all either frivolous or contradictory.

Mr. Darnal. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council for Giles, the Prisoner at the Bar, and I must needs say there has been a strong Evidence given against him; and if I were sure he was concern'd in this barbarous Attempt upon Mr. Arnold, I would not open my Mouth in this Cause: But if my Brief be true, I make no Question but to satisfy your Lordship and the Jury, nay and Mr. Arnold himself, that he had no Hand in this bloody Action.

And first, my Lord, in Answer to the Evidence that hath been given, there have been sworn among others, Mr. Richmond, Mr. Phillips, and one Powel. First, as to Phillips's Evidence, or what passed in Discourse at the Crown Tavern in Covent-Garden; we have a Witness here who was present at the same Time, that will give you an Account of the whole Discourse, and that there were no such Words said by Giles in relation to Mr. Arnold, as Damn him, he had Armour on; and as to the Evidence given by Watkins, of what passed at Uske, about Mr. Herbert Jones's and the Prisoner's making such Speed through Gloucester, we have Witnesses here, my Lord, that will satisfy your Lordship and the Jury, that when they came to Gloucester, though it was at the time of the General Quarter Sessions, yet they staid there four or five Hours, at a Publick-House, without the least Sign of their Apprehension of any Pursuit; which shews the Improbability of any such Discourse at Uske: and, my Lord, as to the Evidence of Powel of what was said in Darcy's the Cutler's Shop at Uske; we have, my Lord, a Witness here that was present at that time, who will give your Lordship and the Jury an Account, that the Words said then by the Prisoner did much differ from what Mr. Powel swears; besides the Improbability that any Man should be so weak to publish himself guilty of such a Crime as this in this manner; after his Majesty's Proclamation out, with the Promise of so great a Reward to any Man that would make a Discovery of this horrid Action: So far, my Lord, we shall answer the Evidence that hath been given; but to satisfy your Lordship and the Jury, that it was impossible the Prisoner at the Bar could be concern'd in this foul Action, we shall prove to your Lordship, that upon the 15th of April, upon the Evening of which Day this bloody Attempt was made upon Mr. Arnold, the Prisoner at the Bar came first to Town; and we shall prove that he came to Town but at one a Clock that Day. We shall prove further, if my Brief be true, by five or six substantial Witnesses, against whom there can be no Exception, how and where he employ'd himself all that Day, from the Minute that he came to Town: And that when he return'd to his Inn, about nine o'Clock at Night, the Maid of the Inn lock'd his Chamber-Door, after he was a-bed, and kept the Key of the Chamber all Night. And, my Lord, if all this be clearly prov'd, I make no doubt but your Lordship and the Jury, and all Persons here, will be satisfied that the Prisoner at the Bar is not guilty of this Indictment. My Lord, we will first begin with Mr. Philpot.

Mr. Philpot.

Mr. Darnal. Mr. Philpot, Pray do you acquaint my Lord, and the Jury, what Discourse pass'd between you and Giles at the Crown Tavern in Covent-Garden.

Mr. Philpot. We drank one Bottle of Claret, Mr. Phillips came in when the Bottle was almost ended. But by and by some Friends came in, and they asked him what News, Sir? Said he, I hear of no News but a cruel Assassination upon Mr. Arnold, but for my part I am sorry for it: But, said he, if any Thing should be upon Mr. Arnold, it is a very strange Thing.

Mr. Darnal. Were you there all the time, Sir?

Mr. Philpot. Yes, Sir, all the time.

Mr. Darnal. And you heard no other Discourse?

Mr. Philpot. No, he did not say damn him nor sink him, for I hate such Company.

Mr. Holt. Mr. John Philpot, Where do you live?

Mr. Philpot. In Long-Lane.

Mr. Holt. What Sign do you live at?

Mr. Philpot. At the Crown.

Mr. Holt. What Trade are you?

Mr. Philpot. A Salesman.

Mr. Darnal. Now we will go on to the Discourse at Uske, about their passing with such Speed through Gloucester.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Darnal, they do not pretend you were in great Fear, but they say you said so. It is not the Question, Whether you did stay long at Gloucester, or no? But the Question is, Whether you told this Man so? Because the Man asked you, Why you would leave the Hair at the Farrier's, in order to a Fishing-line? Truly I was in great Haste, for fear I should be taken up about the Business of Mr. Arnold.

Mr. Darnal. It is very true, and therefore we bring this Evidence to shew the Improbability that we should say any such Thing, when it was false, and especially when it was to accuse our selves of a Crime.

Herbert Jones, Mayor of Monmouth.

Mr. Darnal. Mr. Jones, Pray give an Account to the Jury of your passing through Gloucester, and how long you staid there.

Mr. Jones. My Lord, I came with the Prisoner.

Mr. Recorder. What Day did you come through Gloucester?

Mr. Jones. I cannot positively tell you the Day: We went out of Town upon Friday, we came to Gloucester either Wednesday or Friday, and there we went to the Old Bear in Gloucester, and there staid an Hour before we went to Dinner; it was a publick time, the Quarterly Sessions, and several People came to us to hear the News; we told them, and were as sorry for it as any Persons could be, and did confess it a very ill Thing. We went from the Old Bear after we had dined to the New Bear, and drank several Pints of Cyder. I believe, by the Oath I have taken, we were several Hours in the Town.

Mr. Milbourn. Do you know Mr. Arnold is acquainted with Mr. Giles?

Mr. Jones. I do believe Mr. Arnold has great reason to be acquainted with Giles.

Mr. Thompson. Yes, now he has.

Mr. Milbourn. Was he chief Constable?

Mr. Jones. Yes, he was; and certainly Mr. Arnold in Reason would take Notice of the chief Constable.

Mr. Milbourn. Mr. Herbert Jones, I am informed that you know this Gentleman goes to Church and receives the Sacrament. Give an Account what Religion he is of.

Mr. Jones.

Mr. Jones. Always a Protestant; I saw him at Church within this half Year.

Giles. I can shew a Certificate of my going to Church since I came to Town.

Mr. Recorder. There are many People that can go to Church to serve their Turn.

Giles. And, my Lord, I have taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy.

Mr. Thompson. An excellent Protestant to discourse so of the Plot, I must needs say that.

John Jones, the Cutler's Apprentice.

Mr. Recorder. How old are you?

Jones. Between fifteen and sixteen.

Mr. Recorder. Hark you, do you know the Danger of forswearing yourself?

Jones. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. What is it?

Jones. I am in Danger of everlasting Fire.

Mr. Recorder. Very well.

Mr. Darnal. My Lord, this is the Apprentice to the Cutler, in whose Shop Powel says we had such Discourse: Jones, pray tell my Lord and the Jury, Whether you were by when one Walter Powell came into your Master's Shop, when he and Giles were talking about Giles's Sword?

Jones. Sir, John Giles came in the Morning and brought a Sword, my Master was not within; and he told me, Give this Sword to your Master to be mended; so I took the Sword and laid it up till my Master came in: When he came in, I told my Master of it; and when he came again, this Walter Powell was in the Shop: Said Giles to my Master, Did you mend my Sword? says he: Says my Master, Mr. Giles, How came your Sword broke? Have you been fighting with the Devil? No, says he, for I never met with Arnold.

People. His 'm, his.

Mr. Recorder. It does not become the Decency and Gravity of a Court of Justice, to be humming and hissing when Facts are trying of this great Concernment..

Mr. Milburn. It was the common Discourse there that Mr. Arnold had been assaulted.

Mr. Recorder. You have been in a great Combat; have you been fighting with the Devil? What did he say to that?

Jones. He never met with Arnold; my Master asked him, Mr. Giles, Have you been in some Battle or other? Have you been fighting with the Devil? No, Sir, for I never met with Arnold.

Mr. Recorder. You did not hear his Wife bid him hold his Tongue?

Jones. No, Sir.

Mr. Thompson. Did he tell you how he did break his Sword?

Jones. No, Sir.

Giles. My Lord, here is Mr. Philpot can tell, that I was sitting down in a Chair, and broke off a Piece of the Guard.

Mr. Thompson. You will do well to prove it, Sir.

Mr. Milburn. Was there any Discourse in the Country about Mr. Arnold?

Mr. Recorder. Did they not talk any Thing about killing the Devil?

Jones. No, Sir.

Mr. Darnal. If your Lordship pleases, we will call Witnesses to give an Account when we came to Town, and where we were all that Day; and we will call the Maid that locked the Chamber-Door after we were in Bed, on the same Night when this Fact was committed.

John Howel.

Mr. Darnal. John Howel, Pray tell my Lord and the Jury when Giles came to Town?

Howel. If it please you, my Lord, I came to Town, and John Giles together.

Mr. Recorder. What time of Day was it?

Howel. It was twelve o'Clock.

Mr. Recorder. Who is thy Master?

Howel. William Richmond.

Mr. Darnal. What time of Night was it, Friend, when you heard him call to your Master, and bid him Good-night?

Howel. About eleven or twelve o'Clock.

Mr. Milburn. You say about nine you were at your Lodging with him? Did your Party company with him?

Howel. Yes, Sir, we did.

Mr. Thompson. Where did you go at that Time?

Howel. We went into the Chamber, and drank two Pints of Brandy.

Mr. Thompson. What time of Night was that?

Mr. Recorder. After two Pints of Brandy, I wonder how he can remember any thing.

Ann Beron.

Mr. Milburn. Tell what time of the Night Giles came in; where you were in his Company; what time of Night it was?

Mr. Recorder. Speak as loud as thou would'st do if thou wer't at Home: When was this?

Ann. The Thursday after Easter.

Mr. Recorder. The Thursday in Easter-Week, or the Thursday in the next Week?

Ann. The Thursday in Easter-Week; we were never out of Company; when he came home to his Lodging I believe it was near ten o'Clock.

Mr. Recorder. Where was your Lodging, at the King's-Arms?

Ann. At the King's Arms.

Mr. Recorder. Good Woman, Did you go with him to Whetstone's-Park?

Ann. No, not I.

Mr. Recorder. Were you with him at the Artillery-Ground?

Ann. No, not I.

Mr. Recorder. Were you with him in Drury-Lane?

Ann. No, not I.

Mr. Recorder. He did not go out of your Company at all?

Ann. Yes, about ten o'Clock.

Mr. Recorder. Woman, you must be mistaken; he came to Town at twelve or one, and might be in thy Company: But it is plain he went to a Broker's in Long-lane, and so to the Artillery-Ground at Cripplegate, for I guess it might be so; then they went to Whetstone's-Park, and spent Six-pence, and after that they went into Drury-Lane.

Pris. My Lord, she don't say she was with us all the while; but we came to an House where she was, and several other People our Neighbours.

Mr. Recorder. She says you did go out some time: Now see whether I mistake you.

VOL. III.

Ann. Yes, you do mistake me.

Mr. Recorder. He went out, did he?

Ann. Yes, he went out after he came into the City, he and some others; and then they came back to me again in two or three Hours.

Mr. Recorder. Then you were two or three Hours at Dinner. Now I ask you, after they came back, was you with him all the while?

Ann. Yes, that I was.

Mr. Recorder. Where was it?

Ann. At the Peacock.

Mr. Recorder. That is the Place in Drury-Lane.

Ann. No, indeed, it is in Covent-Garden.

Mr. Darnal. When did he go to bed? Do you know that, upon your Oath?

Ann. We were in the Inn between nine and ten o'Clock, nearer ten than nine, and I saw him sitting taking a Pipe of Tobacco.

Mr. Darnal. What time was that?

Ann. A little after Ten, I believe.

Mr. Thompson. He sat there till he was called away to do his Business,

Elizabeth Crook.

Mr. Darnal. Elizabeth Crook, Pray do you tell my Lord and the Jury about what time Giles went to Bed?

Crook. Indeed, Sir, he went to Bed between Ten and Eleven.

Mr. Darnal. How long was it that he came to his Lodging before that? Can you say how long he was in the House before he went to Bed?

Crook. I asked him if I should take away his Candle; he said he would put his Candle out, but I might lock him in and take the Key, but I did not do it.

Mr. Thompson. Did he go to Bed as soon as he came in?

Crook. No, I think he did not.

Mr. Recorder. You made the Bed, did not you?

Crook. I did.

Mr. Recorder. Upon your Oath, what Time of Night was it?

Crook. I think it was nearer Eleven than Ten.

Mr. Recorder. Did you make the Bed after he went into it? What Time did you make the Bed, upon your Oath?

Crook. I made the Bed about Ten o'Clock.

Mr. Recorder. I ask you, Do you remember Richmond came in to you, and asked you any Thing about making the Bed? Do you remember he was in the Chamber?

Crook. In whose Chamber?

Mr. Recorder. Did Richmond come in when you were making the Bed?

Crook. He was not there, as I knew of.

Richmond. Was not I in the Chamber when you made the Bed?

Crook. No, I don't remember you.

Richmond. My Lord, when this Maid went to make the Bed, I went into the Room after her, and had some Discourse with her; we leaned together upon the Window, and I told her I was in love with her; I told her, if she liked of it, I would marry her the next Morning; I did it to make merry, for indeed I am a married Man.

Mr. Recorder. What Time of Night was it?

Richmond. About Twelve o'Clock.

Mr. Recorder. If you forget your other Sweethearts, can you remember this? Do you remember now he was there?

Crook. I remember he was there.

Pris. Mr. Arnold, pray do not laugh at my Witnesses, and make May-games at them; it is not the Part of a Gentleman.

Richmond. And she told me that he would lie by himself, though the House was very full.

Mr. Recorder. Do you remember any such Discourse?

Crook. I do remember that Mr. Richmond did come in.

King's-Council. What Time of Night was it that he was making Love to you?

Crook. I think about Ten o'Clock.

King's Council. Time passed merrily away with you, then.

Richmond. It was Twelve o'Clock.

Crook. Why do you say so? Our House was all quiet presently after Eleven.

Richmond. Why will you say so? Were not we singing and roaring together?

Mr. Recorder. Come, don't be angry, you were not angry when you were making Love together.

Richmond. I am not angry indeed, Sir.

Edward James.

Mr. Milburn. Tell my Lord what Time of Night Giles came into his Lodging, and where it was?

James. It was in Easter-Week he came in, and so were drinking at the King's-Arms in St. Martin's-Lane, and from Dinner, and from Nine o'Clock.

Mr. Recorder. How! You did not dine there, you dined at the Peacock.

James. Yes, we dined there, but from Nine o'Clock we were there till Twelve.

Mr. Recorder. How do you know?

James. I was there with him.

Mr. Recorder. After Twelve o'Clock you say you left him?

James. Yes.

Mr. Recorder. Where did you leave him?

James. In the Kitchen.

Mr. Recorder. Are you sure?

James. Yes, my Lord, I am sure of it.

Mr. Recorder. I ask you, because I have an unhappy Memory: You are sure it was Twelve o'Clock when you saw him in the Kitchen, and here is a Maid saw him go to Bed at Eleven.

Mr. Recorder. Have you any more? You know the Matter that was the Occasion of the Dispute t'other Day: I would not by any Means, that in a Cause of this publick Concern, there should be any Pretence for any to say they were surprized; therefore call as many Witnesses as you please.

Robin Gibbon.

Mr. Milburn. What can you say, when Mr. Giles came into his Lodging? Gibbon. It was about Ten o'Clock. I gave his Horse about half a Peck of Oats.

Mr. Milburn. Where?

Gibbon. At the King's-Arms in St. Martin's-Lane.

Mr. Milburn. Do you know how long he staid before he went to Bed?

Gibbon. No, Sir, I cannot tell.

Mr. Thompson. He speaks honestly, this Man.

L

Mr. Recorder.

Mr. Recorder. Have you any more?

Giles. There is another, a Translator, my Council knows his Name.

John Chadwick.

Mr. Recorder. What is your Name, Sir?

Chadwick. John Chadwick.

Mr. Recorder. Go on.

Chadwick. I say, this John Giles was at my House between eight and nine o'Clock.

Mr. Recorder. Where is your House?

Chadwick. My House is—

Mr. Recorder. Can you say any more to it?

Mr. Chadwick. No.

Elizabeth Crook.

Mr. Recorder. What have you to say?

Crook. Sir, I went with Mr. Giles Home, and it was between nine and ten o'Clock, and I saw him in his Lodging, and I saw him in the Morning.

Mr. Recorder. Are you sure he went to Bed when you made it?

Crook. It was between ten and eleven o'Clock.

Mr. Thompson. You see how they contradict one another.

Mr. Recorder. Is your Name James?

James. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. You say, you are certain you left him in the Kitchen at twelve?

James. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. But here is one that says he went to Bed by eleven.

James. O Lord, no, Sir.

Mr. Holt. These are your own Witnesses, Mr. Giles.

Mr. Thompson. You see how they contradict one another.

Peter Powel.

Powel. My Lord, I met some of my Country-men about an Hour before Night.

Mr. Thompson. What Day?

Powel. About Thursday, Sir.

Mr. Thompson. What Week was it in?

Powel. I believe in Easter Week, and I heard them say that Mr. Arnold was come to Town, and Mr. Herbert and he was to have an Hearing the next Day.

Mr. Recorder. How long was you in his Company?

Powel. I had been in my Friend's Company about an Hour before he came, and we staid till near nine or thereabouts, and then we parted, and I never saw him afterwards till last Monday was seven-night.

Roger How.

Mr. Recorder. What say you?

How. Mr. Giles was in my Company, and staid till about nine o'Clock, or thereabouts, and then we went away, and I saw him no more for that Night.

Mr. Recorder. Have you any more?

Giles. No.

Then Sir George Jefferies the Recorder gave Directions to the Jury to this Effect:

Gentlemen of the Jury, the Evidence has been very long, and I know you have taken particular Care to write down and take Notice of all the Circumstances that have been offered to you in this Case: According to the best of my Memory, I shall refresh yours with such of them as I apprehend to be most material in this Cause; and if any Thing happen to be omitted, others will supply it.

In the first Place I am to take Notice, and I think I am bound to do it in Discharge of my own Conscience, and of my Duty to the Court, that certainly if the Prisoner at the Bar be guilty of the Offence of which he now stands indicted, the Punishment that we can inflict upon him, cannot be proportionable to the Offence: For the Offence is too great for any Punishment that the Law can inflict, for Men are not presumed to be guilty of such Actions as this; and therefore the Law has not proportioned Punishments to them, because it presumes no Man to be guilty of so base and barbarous an Action as this; and because it never could be presumed that any Man would be guilty of such Offences, therefore the Law has not provided Punishment proportionable to them. But this is not your Question, the Question before you is, Whether this Man be guilty or not guilty? That there was a Popish Plot, no Man sure doubts at this Time of Day. Certainly there can be none here under so strange an Infatuation, as in the least to doubt but that there was a Plot, especially when so many Persons, upon full and clear Evidence and Trials, have been convicted as Instruments in that bloody Tragedy. But you are not to make Use of these Things by way of Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar: But only in the general to premise some Things by way of Introduction to their particular Evidence; and I must plainly tell you (for it is fit it should be mentioned), that if any Villainy can come near that horrid Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, this does; and I am sorry with all my Heart, that within the Government of the City of London, or so near it, there should be such a barbarous Attempt as this made and concealed so long. It would not be strange to hear of such Villainies committed in other Popish Countries: But for the Honour and Credit of that Religion which I hope we shall maintain with our Lives, that is, the Protestant Religion, I say in a Protestant Country, where the Protestant Religion is professed, I never heard of such a barbarous Act committed before this one; because our Principles of our Religion will not allow us to commit such Villainies by any Dispensation whatsoever. Justice and Truth, and Righteousness, are the Things that our Religion teaches us. God Almighty, and our blessed Saviour Jesus Christ, by whom alone all Mankind must be saved, have commanded the contrary.

Their Religion may dispense with such villainous Actions; but this I can say in Vindication of ours, ours cannot do it; nay, it would be no Religion if it could.

In the next Place, Gentlemen, all Circumstances of Time and Place, of Men and Things, should be taken Notice of; for dark Cases must be made appear by Circumstances: For as I hinted before, no body calls Witnesses when they do such Facts and Works of Darkness, the Works of the Devil, that is the Father of all such Works. I do not mean the Devil, Mr. Arnold, but I mean they are the Works of the Devil: Beliezebut himself, the Prince of Devils, can be only an Instrument and an Agent in Affairs of this Nature.

Another Thing that is fit to be taken Notice of by you, is this, that by Way of Circumstance, whatever has been said one Way or another, relating to the Plot, relating to the Business of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, is not to be taken Notice of as Evidence against the Prisoner. You shall have a faithful Account of what has been said by every Witness, both for and against him; for Right is to be done. Our Law comes even to a Proverb, We must give the Devil his Due; we must give every body Right. You know that this Business was deferred, that the Prisoner at the Bar might be left without all Manner of Excuse; for if innocent, all Mankind would be glad to have him cleared; if guilty, every honest Man would have him convicted. Now this being premised, the Evidences against the Prisoner are several, and I will, as far as I can, give you an Account of them. And

First of all, It is not doubted but Mr. Arnold has behaved himself like an honest Man, and as every honest Man ought to do for the Interest of his Religion; for there is no Man can do too much, if he does it legally, for the Preservation of his Religion; of that Religion which he is bound to rely upon for the Salvation of his immortal Soul. Now, says Mr. Arnold, in the first Place he gives an honest Account of his being one Night, one Thursday Night in Easter Week, at the Devil-Tavern, about nine or ten o'Clock, with some Friends, and he went out between ten and eleven o'Clock, and his own Servant not being there, he did intend to call some other Servants by; but as it happened, he went away without them, and he perceived two Men in Campaign-Cloaks follow him into Bell-Yard. He does take it upon his Oath, that about the Middle of the Lane, there happened to be a Candle coming out, and one of these two, that he did so observe to dog him, having a Campaign-Cloak upon him, and likewise a Coat lined with red, he did observe came before him; and he doth take it upon his Oath, that he does believe the Prisoner at the Bar to be that very Man that so came before him; he does say that he had a perfect Sight of him, and he does say, that the Reason why he should believe him to be the Man, is, that he does remember his Face, and knew his Voice. He tells you likewise that there were Persons cast a Cloak over his Head, ran him into Jackanapes-Lane, fell upon him, bruised his Head, and wounded him in several Places; particularly he mentions, that there was at the same Time said by one of them, Pray for the Soul of Captain Evans; and at the same Time, which is a wonderful Circumstance, Damn the Dog, he has got Armour on, cut his Throat. He says that one Man held him up by the Chin, having several Passes made at him, and he says he had something or other to preserve him; but notwithstanding that, he was run into the Side; there were three Men, he does tell you, and that one overtook him in Bell-Yard, and he continues to swear it was the Prisoner at the Bar, according to the best of his Understanding and Conscience; he says it was he, and he discovered him by the Sight of a Candle. Besides this, which is a material Circumstance, some other Persons being brought to Mr. Arnold about it, Mr. Arnold did not tax them, but did positively tax that Person to be one of the Persons. But he tells you he suffered by Passion, as I cannot blame any Man for being in a Passion at such a Time. But his Witnesses determine the Thing, that that is the Man, and he did positively say it, his Memory being better settled than he could at first pretend to; but however, he gives that for another Evidence, that he was not deceived in the Person. This is the Substance, as I remember, I would not do any Injury to the Prisoner, by repeating any thing that has not been said; nor would I do any Injury to the Evidence for the King, in omitting any Thing that occurs to me. The next is one Philip, and he tells you that the next Day, being Friday, about six or seven o'Clock at Night, he happened to be in Company with him at an House in Covent-Garden, and having some Discourse concerning Arnold, and concerning that bloody, base, and foul Attempt that was made upon him, and was so far from having the Bowels of an Englishman, or any Thing of Christianity in him, that he does say he broke out into this extravagant Expression, Damn him, rot him, he had Armour on: Damn him, rot him, he had Armour on: I speak it twice over, because Mr. Arnold tells you that the Persons during the Fact was committing, said, Damne, cut his Throat, he has Armour on. The next Person comes and tell you, at a certain Place in Monmouthshire, upon the 5th of May following, that he went with one of the Richmonds to this Giles, and had some Discourse: Says he, How chance you have not been as good as your Word, about providing me Horse-hair to make Fishing Lines, and you promised to leave it at the Furrier's in Gloucester? How chance it was not so? He immediately adds, We were in such extraordinary Haste, because we thought we were pursued about the Business of Arnold. And that he gives as the Reason why he did not stay at Gloucester. If in Case it had not been so, why should he come and tell him he could not stay about the Business of the Hair, because he was like to be pursued about the Business of Arnold? The next Thing, Gentlemen, is concerning one Powel; Powel, he tells you, that he being at one Darcy's House, a Roman Catholick, that is a Sword-Cutler, that lives, I think, likewise at Uske: And it seems the Prisoner at the Bar came to him to have his Sword mended. By the Way, I should have told you that the Prisoner at the Bar, before the Fact was done, did enquire at a Place where he might have a good Rapier: That was before the Fact was done. The Witness spake of it last, which was the Occasion that I did not give it you in order. He asked where he might have a good Rapier?

But now to come to Darcy: Darcy having been very familiar with him, enquir'd, Wherefore, having had his Sword so lately, he should have it to mend already? Have you, said he, been fighting with the Devil? Immediately upon that he swears the Prisoner returned, No, but with damned Arnold. And upon that his Wife plucked him by the Coat, and bid him hold his Tongue. I think that is the Substance of what he swears. He says there were by at that Time the Prisoner at the Bar, the Apprentice to this Darcy, and a Woman that is the Prisoner's Wife.

William Richmond, he comes and gives you a further Account, that he being in his Company, he tells you, they went to some Place in the City to enquire after their Friends, and afterwards went to the Artillery to see the Exercise, then to Long-Lane, from thence to Whetstone's-Park, and afterwards to Drury-Lane; and that about nine o'Clock at Night they came to their Inn, and he left Giles taking a Pipe of Tobacco in the Kitchen, and went went up into his Chamber with some other People, drinking and making merry; and he does positively say, that between eleven and twelve o'Clock at Night, he saw the Servant Maid come up into the Room, and did see she was making the Bed; that he seem'd to be a little surprized that any body should make a Bed at that time of Night, which occasioned him to go in to her, and ask her the Question. The Answer that he had was very material, that she said, There is a Gentleman below that I must make this Bed for, he does not desire to have any body lie with him. That was the Answer the Maid gave. There was, he says, some little Talk of Love between him and the Maid, and that he positively says was near upon twelve o'Clock. He says that after this, he went into his own Chamber, and continued in his own Chamber till nigh One; and about One being pulling off his Breeches, the Prisoner at the Bar came and knocked at his Chamber-door, and spake to him, and that was near One o'clock at Night. But it is plain, during that Time, the Prisoner was not in his Chamber, if you believe him; nor indeed is there any Account given of the Prisoner from Nine o'Clock till near One, till he knocked at his Door, as he was pulling off his Breeches and going to Bed. As to the Answers that are given by the Witnesses of the other Side, I shall give you them when I descend to give the Testimonies of the other Side.

To give you yet this further Testimony, say they, We do not only give you this Testimony that he is guilty of this Fact, but we do give you an Account of him, that he is very likely to do such a Thing; for he is an ill Man in himself. As on the other Side, no Man can give a better Testimony to himself in Matters that are dark and obscure, than the Testimony of his Conversation, that he is upright in his Conversation, and therefore cannot be thought guilty of so base an Action: So they think they give a good Evidence against him, and that he is an ill Man in himself; and therefore because he is an ill Man, he may be guilty of such a Thing. And to prove that, they call up these Witnesses.

First of all, one Bridges comes and gives you an Account, that discoursing with him concerning the Papists, he damn'd the Plot, and said that all were Rascals that were not Papists; and if in case that the Lords that were in the Tower should happen to suffer, it would be a bloody Day, and it would make a bloodier Work in England than ever was known: Which shews he is a bloody ill Man. The Prisoner ask'd him, If he were not a Papist? It's likely he was a Papist before, or he would not have trusted him so. And this is one Circumstance to prove that he is an ill Man, that he hath given out such and such Expressions.

There is another, one Reynolds, who comes and gives you an Account of his having some Discourse with him afterwards about this Business of Mr. Arnold, that the Prisoner talked slightly of it, and said that he might do it himself.

This, Gentlemen, I take in general to be the Substance of what has been offer'd for the King. If there be any thing else that does not occur to my Memory, if it doth to yours, you will do well to consider of it.

Say the Council for the Defendant, and that every Man of the Long Robe ought to say, that if the Person, which is the Prisoner at the Bar, were guilty of such a barbarous thing as this, no Man would offer to open his Mouth. And therefore they offer Evidence for their Client as they are instructed to offer to you, and you are to try whether their Client be guilty.

Say they, You first call one Philips to give an Account; and as to what Philips says about the Business in Covent-Garden, about Damn him, and rot him, they bring one that was there all the Time, and says he, I was by all the Time, and I heard no such Words. So far was he from making any particular Reflections upon Mr. Arnold, that he cried it was a very horrible, a very barbarous Thing. Nay, says he, to give Credit to this Testimony of his, I never use to keep company with them that use such Words, as Damn him, and rot him, as he says.

The next Witness is Mr. Herbert Jones; he comes and tells you, I went with him from London, I went with him to Gloucester, I staid at an Inn call'd the Old-Bear, and staid and dined with him there. I went after that to the New-Bear, we went thither and drank Cyder together; and this was very publick: For several Persons that liv'd in the Town, came to us and enquired after the Business of Arnold; and if in case we had been under any such Jealousy as that was, we would not have staid so long, as, says he, we did. Say they on the other side, We do not say that you did not stay in Gloucester; but, say they, by way of Objection against the Prisoner at the Bar, we say that you yourself, on the fifth of May, said, in answer to the Person that came to ask you, Why you had not brought the Hair, that he might go a Fishing? You said, We durst not stay for fear of Pursuit upon the Account of Mr. Arnold. This you yourself said, and by saying so, you have contracted that Guilt in point of Circumstance, which is objected by us against you. This is the Answer given to that that Mr. Jones says.

The next Person that comes to give you an Account is one John Jones, who is the Apprentice: Says he, you bring a Witness against me that I said such a thing at Uske, at Darcy's the Sword-Cutler's, and you say the Apprentice was by: And he gives you this Evidence: Says he, I was by at such a Time as the Man speaks of, and being by at that Time, I do very well remember, that there was a Discourse concerning some great Conflict that Mr. Giles had been in, and that Giles's Wife was by, and so was the other Person that gave the Evidence, that such a Discourse there was of fighting with the Devil; but now he inverts the Saying of the other Man, and says that he should say, He never met with Arnold the Devil. The one answers, when the thing was asked him, Whether he had been fighting with the Devil? No, not with the Devil, but with Arnold; the other swears, He did not meet with the Devil Arnold. He tells you likewise, his Wife did not pull him by the Clothes, and bid him hold his Tongue.

The next Witness is Powel; and he gives you an Account that he came with him to Town: He gives you an Account how he staid with him, and came along with him till Nine o'Clock at Night; for he does not pretend to give you an Account after Nine.

Then comes Crook: And Crook, that is the Maid Servant, she says, I cannot positively tell you when he came in, but will positively say, that I made his Bed about ten, and before eleven I asked him about his Candle; he bid me lock the Door, and he would put out the Candle himself, and she went away and left the Candle. And that is very material; for the Time this Fact was committed was between ten and eleven; this is what the Maid says: Now there is this Answer to what she swears. She first of all forgot that ever Richmond, that speaks concerning the Breeches and other Circumstances, that ever he was there at all; but you hear he has refreshed her Memory with a Love Story, that he was in the Room, and she does agree in these very Circumstances he speaks of; so that that gives Credit to the Testimony of Richmond, and puts a Disparagement upon her Testimony, since she could be so exceeding forgetful, as not to remember such a Circumstance.

The next is an old Woman: And she swears point blank she was with him most part of the Day; and that she was with him at Dinner, and was with him till Nine of the Clock at Night, and then went to Bed. And though she seemed to differ and blunder in some part of her Testimony, because she knew nothing of his going into Long-Lane, and other Places; however, she gives an Account about the time of Nine o'Clock, that she left him in the Kitchen, and then she went to bed.

The next Witness is James: And James doth positively swear, that he was drinking with him in the Kitchen till past Twelve o'Clock at Night; but that cannot be true, if the Wench that made the Bed swear true; for she swears she made the Bed before Ten, and he went to Bed before Eleven; so that he could not be a Bed before Eleven, if he swears true; and he could not be in the Kitchen at twelve o'Clock, if she swears true.

Gentlemen, Richmond's Man he gives you no farther an Account than what runs square to his Master's Testimony; that he left him at nine o'Clock at Night, and he heard him call at his Master's Chamber about Twelve, and so they punctually agree. But he gives no manner of Account where he was between Nine and Twelve, between which Hours this Fact was done.

Next, Gentlemen, there have been some more Witnesses called for the Prisoner at the Bar, who gave you an Account where he was before such time as he came to his Lodging. Now it is not denied on either Side, but that he might be till within Night at that House they speak of; but the Account that is desired to be given of this Matter, is to know where he was between nine o'Clock and twelve, when this Fact was committed.

These, Gentlemen, according as it occurs to me, are the substantial parts of Evidence, both on the one side and the other. The Matter therefore resolves itself within this narrow Compass: If upon what you have heard from Mr. Arnold, attended with the rest of the Circumstances that you have heard sworn by the Witnesses, you do believe the Prisoner at the Bar is guilty; for he might be at his Lodging at nine o'Clock, and he might be at his Lodging at Twelve or One, and he might do this Fact: For it is certain it was not a sudden Matter, for it was a thing done preparedly; and therefore you must not expect that Men that are guilty of such barbarous Designs as this, will lay their Designs open. To be sure, whoever it was did this Fact upon Mr. Arnold, they would do it so as to make themselves appear as innocent as could be. It is not a matter to be relied on, that because this Man was innocent in St. Martin's-Lane, therefore he did not do this Thing in Bell-Yard.

There is another Circumstance against the Prisoner at the Bar; that he should imagine, notwithstanding all this, that Mr. Arnold had wounded himself: But when he found that that was not very probable, that a Man could wound himself so, by reason of several Places that he received his Wounds in; he would have it, that though he did not do it himself, yet some of his Friends might. Indeed if he be guilty, some of his Relations might do it, but certainly he was no Friend that did it. It is against Nature for any Man to believe that any Person should put himself to so much Trouble; if he had a Mind to dispatch himself, he might have done it with much more ease, and not have put himself to that trouble; for Men, when they have a mind to do the Business, they do not use to take such a deal of Pains to stab themselves here and there.

Thus, Gentlemen, the Evidence being very long, and the Circumstances very many, Things may occur to you that do not at present to me. Yet I must tell you again, in a matter of publick Example, the Proof ought to be very great, to convict a Man of such an Offence; but you must not expect it should be so clear, as in a matter of Right between Man and Man, and of Things that are done in the Face of the Sun. It was done in the Dark: The Devil that set 'em a-work, does fill them with Cunning enough to keep this Attempt as concealed as may be: And therefore Circumstances of this Nature must be wonderfully considered; an Account of which Mr. Arnold himself gives you, and he does believe in his Conscience the Prisoner at the Bar to be the Man.

The Jury withdrew, and having debated together about half an Hour, returned, and brought the Prisoner in Guilty. Which done, the Court adjourned till the Saturday following, the 17th of July: At which time the Court being sat, John Giles was brought to the Bar; to whom the Right Worshipful Sir George Jeffries delivered himself to this Effect:

Mr. Recorder. You the Prisoner at the Bar, you have been indicted for a very vile Offence; an Offence in its Nature that deserves a greater Punishment than the Law can inflict upon any such Offences. There is a Jury has convicted you of this Crime, against whom, had you had any Objection, you might have made your Challenge. And now you stand convicted here, it is only the Duty of the Court to pronounce that Judgment against you, which they think may be reasonable to inflict upon such an Offender. For I must needs say, it was one of the basest and most barbarous Actions that Mankind could possibly be guilty of: An Action of so much Filth and Baseness, that the Law could not foresee any Man could be guilty of, and therefore hath not made Provision for a Punishment proportionable to it. But inasmuch as we understand by Mr. Arnold you have a Charge of Children, therefore the Court takes some Consideration: Not that they think to extend any Mercy to you for your own Sake, but a Regard they think they are bound to have for those that have not offended. But we ought to have a care to let the World know, we do not intend only a Punishment to the Offender, but by that to terrify all other People from being guilty of such extraordinary Villanies. And because cause they will have Regard to your Posterity, therefore they do not think fit to put so great a Fine upon you as this Fact does deserve. But on the other Side, they have thought fit you should be made an Example of, and that you should suffer as great a Corporal Punishment as the Law will allow. And therefore in the Name of the Court I do pronounce this to be your Sentence:

That you be put in the Pillory towards Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, as near the Place where this barbarous Fact was committed as may be: And there you are to stand from the Hour of twelve till one, one Day, at Noon-day. And on another Day, from the Hour of twelve till one, over-against Gray's-Inn in Holbourn. And another Day, between the same Hours, just by the May-Pole in the Strand. These three several Days you are to stand in the Pillory, and to have a Paper put upon your Hat, whereby it shall be signified, the Offence of which you stand convicted. And next, to deter all others from committing the like, the Court does think fit likewise to award, That you should pay to the King the Sum of five hundred Pounds; and that you be committed in Execution, till such Time as you pay that Money. And because it is both to be a Punishment to you, and a Terror to all other such Villains, you are to find Sureties for your good Behaviour during Life.

Sentence being pronounced, and the Prisoner removed from the Bar, Richard Cavenaugh was brought to the Bar, and prayed to be discharged: But was by Mr. Arnold charged with threatening one Philip Staneright, one of the King's Witnesses: For which Reason, and for that also a new Evidence was come in against the said Cavenaugh, with some farther Charge relating to Mr. Arnold's Business, the Court thought fit, for want of Bail, to continue him a Prisoner.

Then Mr. Herbert appeared, and prayed to be discharged from his Recognizance to appear at the Old-Bailey: But being accused by a Woman for calling her Whore, Jade, and very ill Names, and holding up his Staff at her, and threatening to beat her for being a Witness against his Friend

Giles; as also for taking away her Horse as she was going to the Mill; and the Reason was, because she was to be a Witness in London against Giles. But she being a married Woman, and none appearing that would be bound to prosecute him for it, he was not bound over to answer it, till another Complaint came in against him, which was immediately made by Mr. Ballard, and another Gentleman; who charged Mr. Herbert, that in Whitsun Week last, upon a Discourse for chusing Knights of the Shire for Monmouth, and the saying of one in the Company, that it was thought Mr. Arnold would stand for it; Mr. Herbert should make Answer, I will circumsise the other Side of his Cheek first; or, he must have the other Side of his Cheek circumsised first. Upon which the Court ordered he should not be discharged, but remain bound upon the former Recognizance to appear there next Sessions. And the Recorder gave him several sharp Reprehensions for his malicious and unmanly Words and Proceedings: This being the second of the King's Witnesses, and a Woman that he had barbarously treated; still passionately giving the Reason, that they were Witnesses against his Friend John Giles, as it was proved on Oath before the Court by several Witnesses.

Then Sir Thomas Allen acquainted the Court, that a Gentleman had informed him the Day before, that Mr. Herbert told him, that Mr. Arnold wounded himself and cut his own Throat; which the Court looked upon as an high Effect of a malicious Ingratitude; Mr. Arnold having befought his Majesty, when Mr. Herbert was in Newgate to have his Release. Mr. Arnold replied, that Mr. Herbert had been more ungrateful to his Majesty, who had graciously pardoned him greater Offences, and lately; for he had spoken worse of his Majesty's Person and Government, than he had done of him, as it had been proved before his Majesty, and of which he believed his Majesty was well satisfied. The Court told Mr. Herbert, he was a Shame to all Englishmen; and bound him by Recognizance to appear and answer this Offence at the King's-Bench Bar the first Day of the next Term.

C. The Trial of THOMAS THWING and MARY PRESSICKS, at York Assizes for High-Treason, July 24. 1680, 32 Car. II.

Cl. of Assize. Thomas Thwing, late of Heworth, in the County of York, Clerk, and Mary Pressicks, Wife of Thomas Pressicks, late of the Parish of Barwick in Elmet, Gent. stand indicted; for that they, as false Traitors against the most illustrious and most excellent Prince, King Charles the Second, that now is, their Natural Lord; God before their Eyes not having, nor their due Allegiance weighing, but by the Instigation of the Devil being seduced and moved, the cordial Love, and true and natural Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King towards his said Majesty ought to bear, altogether withdrawing; and imagining, and with all their Strengths intending the Peace and common Tranquility of his Kingdom of England to disturb, and his said Majesty that now is to Death and final Destruction to bring and put, and the true Worship of God in this Kingdom of England established and used, to alter to the Superstition of the Church of Rome, and War against his said Majesty in this Kingdom of England to move and raise, and the Government of this Kingdom of England to subvert; the 30th Day of May, in the 31st Year of his Majesty's Reign that now is, at the Parish of Barwick in Elmet aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, with divers other false Traitors to the Jurors unknown, did traiterously compass, imagine and intend, and every of them did compass, imagine and intend the Death and final Destruction of his said Majesty, and the ancient Government of this Realm of England to change, alter, and utterly subvert, and his said Majesty of the Crown and Rule of this Kingdom to depose and wholly to deprive, and the true Protestant Religion to extirpate: And to effect and accomplish their said wicked Treasons, and traiterous Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid, the said Thomas Thwing and Mary Pressicks, and other false Traitors to the Jurors unknown, the said 30th Day of May, in the 31st Year aforesaid, with Force and Arms at the Parish of Barwick in Elmet aforesaid, advisedly, devilishly, maliciously and traiterously did assemble and gather themselves together, and then and there did devilishly, advisedly, maliciously, subtilly, and traiterously consult and agree, and every of them did then and there traiterously consult and agree to bring to Death and final Destruction our said Sovereign Lord the King, and to depose and deprive him of his Crown and Rule aforesaid, and the Religion of the Church of Rome into this Kingdom to introduce and establish: And the sooner to fulfill and effect the said wicked Treasons and traiterous Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid, the said Thomas Thwing and Mary Pressicks, and other false Traitors to the Jurors unknown, did then and there pay and expend, and every of them did then and there pay and expend divers Sums of Money of divers other Traitors to the Jurors unknown, to carry on the Treasons aforesaid; and then and there the said Thomas Thwing and Mary Pressicks did subscribe, and either of them did subscribe a certain Note in writing for the Payment of divers Sums of Money for making a Contribution for compleating their traiterous Purposes aforesaid, against the Duty of their Allegiance, and against the King's Peace, his Crown and Dignity, and also against the Statute in that Case made and provided.

To this Indictment having pleaded Not Guilty, and put themselves upon their Country for Trial,

Upon the 29th of July, Sir Thomas Daniel, High Sheriff of the County, having returned many Gentlemen for Jurors; the Trial proceeded thus: After the Jury called, Thomas Thwing and Mary Pressicks being brought to the Bar,

Cl. of Assize. Thomas Thwing, hold up thy Hand. Mary Pressicks, hold up thy Hand. [Which being done.]

Cl. of Assize. This understand ye, that these Gentlemen that are now to be sworn, are returned by the Sheriff of this County, to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you for your Lives: therefore if you will challenge any of them, you are to challenge them as they come to be sworn, and before they be sworn.

Cl. of Assize. Sir David Fowles, Bart. Thwing. I challenge him.

And so as they were called challenged these twenty-five Gentlemen following, viz.

John Eastoft, Esq;	Roger Fretwel, Gent.	Nathan. Harrison, Gent.
William Bethel, Esq;	Simon Warrenner, Gent.	John Tomlinson, Gent.
Townes Drisfield, Esq;	Edward Carvil, Gent.	Thomas Riccaby, Gent.
Will. Oshaldeston, Esq;	John Coates, Gent.	John Ullishorne, Gent.
Marm. Trueman, Gent.	Hugh Savil, Gent.	Thomas Hincks, Gent.
Robert Bell, Gent.	Nivian Collins, Gent.	William Mastin, Gent.
Thomas Fletcher, Gent.	Thomas Green, Gent.	George Ellis, Gent.
Thomas Wood, Gent.	Nathaniel Elliotson, Gent.	Thomas Whaley, Gent.
Thomas Fairfside, Gent.

In the calling of the Jury, after several Challenges made, and some of the Jury sworn, Thwing spoke thus:

Thwing. My Lord, I shall willingly stand to the other Jury.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What Jury?

Thwing. My Lady Tempest's Jury.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Oh, your Servant; you either are very foolish, or take me to be so.

The Jury being Sworn.

Cl. of Assize. Cryer, count these.

Sir George Cook, Bar.	} Jur'	Hen. Pinckney, Gent.
Thomas Worsley, Esq;		John. Blackston, Gent.
William Caky, Esq;		Will. Harcastle, Gent.
Roger Lee, Gent.		Nicholas Stone, Gent.
John Dixon, Gent.		Geo. Westorby, Gent.
George Wray, Gent.		Charles Tucker, Gent.

Cryer. Twelve good Men and true, stand together and hear your Evidence.

Cl. of Assize. Thomas Thwing, hold up thy Hand, [which he did] Mary Pressicks, hold up thy Hand [which she did]. Gentlemen, you of the Jury that are sworn, look upon the Prisoners, and hearken to their Charge: You shall understand that they stand indicted by the Names of Thomas Thwing, &c. and Mary Pressicks, &c. Prout in the Indictment. Upon this Indictment they have been arraigned, and thereunto pleaded Not Guilty; and for their Trial have put themselves upon the Country, which Country you are, &c.

Then Proclamation was made for Evidence, and the Indictment being opened, and the Treasons therein aggravated by the King's Council; Mr. Baron Atkyns came into the Court to assist in the Trial.

The Witnesses were called; Robert Bolron was first sworn.

Bolron. My Lord, in the Year 1674, I came to live with Sir Thomas Gascoigne, and was Steward of his Coal-pits; and in 1675 I turned Papist; and about January, 1676, Mr. Thwing, Father Rushton, and several others came to my House at Shippon, and did there examine me how I stood affected to the Roman Catholick Religion, and whether I was resolved to venture my Life and Estate in it, if there were any Occasion; to which I agreed, and was resolved to obey my Ghostly Father in all Things.

Mr. Justice Dolben taking Notice of a Gentleman near the Prisoners, demanded, What is that Gentleman? We are all beset; he was one of the Jury Yesterday: He being removed, Bolron proceeded.

Bolron. Father Rushton my Confessor gave me the Oath of Secrecy; and in the Year 1677, Sir Thomas Gascoigne, Sir Miles Stapleton, Mr. Thwing the Prisoner, and several other Persons, met at Barmbow-Hall, Sir Thomas Gascoigne's House; and there they agreed, That in hopes the Plot of killing the King would take Effect, they would erect a Nunnery at Dolebank; but the real Intention was to have it at Heworth, within a Mile of York, after the King was killed; and to avoid Suspicion, my Lady Tempest told them she would let them have Broughton for the present.

It was there agreed, that the King should be killed: And Mr. Thwing said, that if they missed this Opportunity, they should never have the like again, and the effecting of it would be very beneficial to the Church of Rome.

Mr. Bar. Atkins. Repeat it in the same Words.

Bolron. He said, if we miss this Opportunity of killing the King, we shall never have the like again; and Mr. Thwing was to be the Confessor of the Nunnery for the present.

Mr. Bar. Atkins. Where were these Words spoken?

Mr. Bolron. In the old Dining-Room.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Who were present?

Mr. Bolron. Sir Miles Stapleton, Sir Thomas Gascoigne, my Lady Tempest, Mr. Thwing, Mr. Rushton, and some others.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Was it agreed that the King should be killed?

Mr. Bolron. It was, my Lord.

Mr. Bar. Atkins. Consider seriously, you speak in the Presence of God, and of a great Assembly; and that a Person's Life is at Stake: Tell it again, what were the Words?

Mr. Bolron. It was agreed that the King should be killed, and that it was for the Good of the Catholick Religion; and I paid 10*l.* to Mr. Rushton in Mr. Thwing's Presence, towards killing the King, and saw a List in Mr. Rushton's and Mr. Thwing's Hands, of the Names of several that engaged for promoting the Roman Catholick Religion; which was to be by killing the King.

Mr. Bar. Atkins. Was it a List of those that were to kill the King?

Mr. Bolron. The List I saw was of Money raised to kill the King.

Mr. Bar. Atkins. What was the Title of that List?

Mr. Bolron. A List of the Names of the Actors and Contributors, engaged in the Design of promoting the Roman Catholick Religion, and also of establishing a Nunnery; which was raising Money for the killing of the King. And besides the 10*l.* I paid towards it, I paid 5*l.* to have my Soul prayed for. Thwing told me afterwards at my House, that in York-shire, Lancashire, and Derbyshire, 30,000*l.* was raised for the killing of the King; and that the List was sent beyond Sea.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What can you say against the Woman?

Mr. Bolron. Mrs. Preficks told me, That in 1678, presently after the Plot was discovered, she being in London, did hear a Woman cry after her, Stop the Papist; stop the Plotter; but she got away, and afterwards durst not appear publicly in London. I had Discourse with her at my House about the Plot; and she told me, that Father Harcourt was her Confessor, and first engaged her in it; and that Pickering told her, that he was to have killed the King, and she said she was sorry he did not do it; and that Oates and Bedloe were two Rogues, and the Plot had not been discovered but for them, who were the Cause of so much Mischief. And she further told me, that the Gun wherewith he was to have killed the King, was found with Pickering, and she did believe that was the Cause of his losing his Life: And she said, The King was an A*s.*, and not fit to govern; that what Money the Parliament gave him he spent upon Whores and Concubines.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Well, is this all you have against her?

Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolben. He hath done; you may cross-examine him, if you will.

Thwing. Who was at your House when I was there?

Mr. Bolron. Father Rushton.

Thwing. How often was I there?

Mr. Bolron. Several Times, I know not how often.

Thwing. When was it you accused me first of the Plot?

Mr. Bolron. When I went to the Council I accused him.

Thwing. He did not accuse me of the Plot in several Months.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Come, Mr. Mowbray, tell your Knowledge.

Mr. Mowbray was sworn.

Mr. Mowbray. My Lord, what I have to say is only against Mr. Thwing. At an Assembly of divers Priests at Barmbow-Hall, amongst the rest, there were Father Rushton and Mr. Thwing; and there they determined to kill the King.

Mr. Bar. Atkins. When was this?

Mr. Mowbray. This was near Michaelmas 1676, and they declared it was not only lawful, but meritorious to do it: They also declared, That London and York were to be fired; and that Force was to be made use of against the King, and all other Hereticks that should oppose the Advancement of their Religion: And Mr. Thwing and Rushton declared, the King was an Heretick, and excommunicated by the Pope, and hadn't kept his Promise with the Jesuits to bring in their Religion, and therefore deserved to be killed, and it was not only lawful but meritorious so to do.

Mr. Belwood, of Council for the King. Was there not a List?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, a List of those engaged in the Design of killing the King, and of promoting the Catholick Religion: And it was declared the King should be killed, because he hadn't kept his Promise made to the Jesuits when he was beyond Sea.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Did the Prisoner declare it?

Mr. Mowbray. Mr. Thwing declared it, and Rushton and he managed it.

Thwing. Who was there?

Mr. Mowbray. It was at Father Rushton's Chamber that I saw you, and there was another Thwing there; and also Addison a Priest.

Thwing. I went once or twice a Year to Sir Thomas Gascoigne's, and thought it my Duty to wait on him; and that I might without Offence do it, he being my Uncle.

Mr. Just. Dolben. No, the Offence is Plotting.

Sir Thomas Stringer. Mr. Thwing, do you know Rushton?

Thwing. Yes; but I had no great Acquaintance with him.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Mr. Mowbray, how came you to be intrusted in so great a Business?

Mr. Mowbray. I assisted Father Rushton at the Altar at Maf*s.*; and so came into great Favour with him, and was permitted to be in his Chamber when the Priests were in private with him.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Mr. Mowbray, did you take an Oath of Secrecy?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, I took it from Father Rushton.

Thwing. How long since did you change your Religion?

Mr. Mowbray. Presently after the Plot broke out.

Thwing. Who were you examined before first of all?

Mr. Mowbray. Before Mr. Lowther, and Mr. Tindal.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Did you at the first accuse him?

Mr. Mowbray. I only charged Sir Thomas Gascoigne, Esq; Gascoigne, my Lady Tempest, Sir Miles Stapleton, and Father Rushton in my first; and in my second Deposition I accused Mr. Thwing; and that was before Justice Warcup.

Mr. Bar. Atkins. Did Thwing abscond at the first?

Mr. Mowbray. He was apprehended at the same Time Sir Thomas Gascoigne was apprehended, and at his House.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Well, what say you to Mary Preficks?

Mr. Mowbray. My Lord, I have nothing to say against her.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Mr. Thwing, you have heard the Evidence, what do you say for yourself?

Thwing. I shall produce Witnesses I was never with him at Barmbow: First, I shall shew he never mentioned me when he first mentioned the Plot; and he never said any Thing against me, when he accused Sir Thomas Gascoigne before Mr. Lowther and Mr. Tindal.

But Mr. Bonithen, of Counsel for the King, offering other Witnesses for the King against Mrs. Preficks, they were called, viz. Mrs. Bolron sen. Mrs. Bolron jun. and John Hutchinson.

Mrs. Bolron sen. sworn.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What do you know of Preficks, the Prisoner at the Bar?

Mrs. Bolron sen. My Lord, she said she knew of the Plot, and that Pickering was to have killed the King.

Mr. Bonithen. Do you mean shoot the King?

Mrs. Bolron sen. Yes, I do.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Where did she tell you this?

Mrs. Bolron sen. At Shippon, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolben. At his House?

[pointing to Mr. Bolron.

Mrs. Bolron sen. Yes, and she said that she was very sorry that Pickering did not do it, and that he had done it if it had not been for Oates, and Bedloe.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Was this the very same Time that Mr. Bolron speaks of?

Mrs. Bolron sen. Yes, my Lord; and she said there would never be Quiet in England until the Roman Catholics had got the upper Hand, and there was not a Protestant left in England: And she said, The King spent his Money amongst his Concubines, and his other Women, so that he was not worthy to be King, and she hoped an Army of Catholics would be raised to set up Popery.

Mr. Just. Dolben. That is, indeed, the Principle of the Papists, and according to it; within forty Years past they murdered 20,000 innocent Protestants in Ireland. Did she say it often?

Mrs. Bolron sen. Yes, several Times, more than once or twice.

Mrs. Bolron jun. was then sworn and examined.

Mrs. Bolron jun. I heard her say, There was a Conspiracy carrying on about altering the Government, and establishing the Roman Catholick Religion.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Where heard you this?

Mrs. Bolron jun. In my Husband's House.

Mr. Bar. Atkins. And what were her Hopes in the Conspiracy?

Mrs. Bolron jun. My Lord, I cannot tell.

Mrs. Preficks. I ask Mr. Bolron when we had this Discourse?

Mr. Bolron. At several Times; about Candlemas 1678, and at Easter and Whitsuntide, and several Times after the Plot was discovered, we discoursed it several Times at the Porch at my House.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Who was present?

Mr. Bolron. My Grandmother.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Where was it, old Woman, that you heard these Words?

Mrs. Bolron sen. At Shippon, in the Hall-porch, my Lord.

Mrs. Preficks. Had we any Discourse about Sir Thomas?

Mrs. Bolron sen. None.

John Hutchinson was then sworn.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Do you know any Thing concerning Mrs. Preficks? Hutchinson. May it please you, my Lord, I came to Mr. Bolron's House, and Mrs. Preficks asked me what News in our Country, and what became of the Papists? I told her some had given Bond, and some were gone to Prison: Then she said, We shall never be at Peace until we're all of the Roman Catholick Religion; for the King is an Heretick, and spends more Money upon his Whores than upon his Queen, and we shall never be at Quiet until the Duke of York is King.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What say you to this? You have seen him?

Mrs. Preficks. I never saw him but twice there.

† Note, That upon Sir Thomas Gascoigne's Trial it appeared in his Almanack, that he had made this Memorial there with his own Hand (viz.) The 15th of Apr. 1676, Memorand. acquaint Mr. T. Thwing with the whole Design.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Where was she when she said this?
Hutchinson. She first talked with me in the Kitchen, and at the Hall-door, as she was just going into the Parlour: she told me, That we should never be at quiet until the Duke of York was made King.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. Mr. Bolron, when came she to your House?
 Mr. Bolron. She came to our House about Christmas, and staid about six Months there.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. Six Months in your House! Then you are well enough acquainted with her?
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. Did you charge Mr. Thwing before the Justice?
 Mr. Bolron. My Lord, I gave Justice Tindal only a short Note, that Sir Tho. Gascoigne promised me 1000*l.* to kill the King: But what I had to say against Thwing, I gave to the King and Council.
 Thwing. My Lord, this is Malice to Sir Tho. Gascoigne's Family, to which I am related, it is out of Revenge.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. It was a Family-Quarrel, then?
 Thwing. Yes, my Lord, this I can prove by several Witnesses.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. Call your Witnesses then.
 Thwing. Nathaniel Wilson.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. Mr. Babington, why don't you appear? We know well enough that you are Solicitor in the Cause; call your Witnesses.

Then Nathaniel Wilson was examined.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Come, what is it you have to say?
 Wilson. I went to Bolron to look on a Cow that he had gifted for his Cousin Bargues, and desired to have the Cow away, but he would not let me have her without paying for her Gift; so I tender'd him his Money, and we went to talk in the House, and Bolron sent for a Groat's-worth of Ale, and asked me if I could tell any thing of Father Rashton, and I told him I could not; and he bid me keep his Secrets, and he would give me more than I could addle (that is, earn) in seven Years: And he said, unless he could shed the Blood of some of them, he should get nothing.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. When was this?
 Wilson. This was about next Michaelmas a twelve-month.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. This is quite other than you told yesterday.
 [Wilson was a Witness the Day before for the Lady Tempest.]
 Wilson. I had not Time.
 Thwing. I desire to know, Whether Bolron named me to Mr. Lowther as a Plotter.

Then Mr. Lowther was called.

Mr. Lowther. I do not remember that Mr. Bolron named Mr. Thwing to me when he was before me.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. When did he come to make the Discovery to you? Give an Account of it.
 Mr. Lowther. I think it was the 24th or 25th of June 1679, that he came to me; and he told me he had some Secrets to impart to me: And he began to tell me a Story of the Jesuits and Priests, what they design'd against the Government, because the King did not keep his Word with them when he was beyond Sea: And then I called for my Man and a Bible to take his Examination, and said, Pray, Friend, be very careful what you do, for here your own Concern is at stake, as well as the Lives and Fortunes of the Gentlemen you speak against; and upon that he began to be very fearful and timorous, and looked pale: Whereupon I asked him, What that Fear was for? It is, said he, because I have concealed it so long; and if that were upon you, it may be you would be as fearful as I am. Then I was going to take his Information, and he said, I have done it before to Mr. Tindal. Why came you to me, then? said I. He said, Mr. Tindal desired it: Well, said I, Mr. Tindal and I are to meet to-morrow, and we will do it jointly.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. Did he say he told you all he knew?
 Mr. Lowther. He did not name Thwing, but said he would recollect more, and would go to London and give it in to the King and Council: And then I said, Why may not we take it here as well as trouble them at London?
 Mr. Just. Dolben. It may be, he thought it better to do it there.
 Mrs. Preficks. He did not accuse me before Mr. Lowther.
 Mr. Bolron. Yes, my Lord, I did, and had a Warrant to take her.
 Mr. Lowther. She was taken the same Day Sir Tho. Gascoigne was taken.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. We will be just between you.

Then the Prisoner called Obadiah Moor.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Come, tell your Knowledge in this Business.
 Moor. I say, that Mr. Bolron said, That Sir Tho. Gascoigne was not concerned in the Plot, nor none of his Family; and that he believed there was no Plot.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. When was this?
 Moor. This was about Candlemas was twelve months.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. He was then a Papist: But did he not tell you otherwise afterwards?
 Moor. In August after he told me he had but equivocated with me in what he said before, and that there was a real Plot; and if he had sworn a thousand Lies, he could have been forgiven them.

Then Stephen Thompson was called and examined.

Thompson. Mr. Bolron was Servant to Sir Tho. Gascoigne, and being in his Debt, Sir Thomas did arrest him, and he agreed with Sir Thomas to give him 60*l.* and got me to be bound with him: And when the Plot came out, I thought Bolron being his Servant, might know whether Sir Thomas had any hand in it; and if so, that we were in no danger of being sued; and I enquired of Bolron, and he said, Sir Thomas was as sinless of it as the Child that was unborn. And on Holy Thursday I went to him, and got him out on the backside to Sir Thomas's, and all along he told me, if he sued him he would do him a greater Mischief: And I pleaded earnestly with Sir Thomas not to sue the Bond, and he said he would have his Money, but would stay a Fortnight; and I prevailed with him to give three Weeks time, that Bolron might go to sell his House at Newcastle, and in that Time he went to London and accused him of Treason: And as to Mrs. Preficks, I ask'd his Grandmother what she could say against her, and she said, Alas, alas, I can say nothing to it, but Bolron said she must say so and so.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What mean you, Friend, by so and so?
 Thompson. It was about Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, and that the King was an Whoremaster, and such Things.

Then Zachary Thorpe was called and examined.

Thorpe. I met with Mr. Bolron in Long-Acre before the last Assizes, and asked him concerning Sir Tho. Gascoigne my Countryman, and he said he was cleared, but, God damn the Jury, they were Rogues. Then he asked me if I had read Harris's Intelligence of that Day, and I told him Yes; and he then asked me if I had seen his Wife's Name in it? He then told me, that he was going down to the Affizes at York against my Lady Tempest, and said, God damn me, I will ruin 'em; if one thing will not do it, another shall.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What are you? God damn me comes very nimbly out of your Mouth.

Thorpe. I live at the White-Hart in Charterhouse-Lane, with the Gentleman of the House; I married his Daughter.

Mr. Just. Dolben. And draw Pots of Ale, that's your Trade? How comes Bolron to talk thus to you? Is he so mad a Fellow to talk thus to every one? This is not likely that he should thus accuse himself to you: Your Father-in-law is a poor Ale-housekeeper?

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. Are not you a Papist?

Thorpe. No, my Lord, a Protestant of the Church of England.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Have you never been in Newgate? Your Lane is full of such People, and your House suspected.

Thorpe. No, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Come, have you done?

Thorpe. Bolron came to my Lodgings at the Plough on Holbourn-Hill before the last Assizes, and told me, if I would swear that Peter Shipton knew no harm by Bolron, he would do any thing for me.

Mr. Just. Dolben. This is a Fable, for Bolron bound Shipton over at the Sessions before the last Assizes.

Bolron. Yes, my Lord, it was for scandalous Words against his Majesty.

Thorpe. He asked me what Shipton was. I answered, he is an honest Man for aught that I know: I have taken his own Bond, said Bolron, but I will have him from Court to Court, I will teach him to meddle with me.

Mr. Just. Dolben. How came he to speak to thee?

Thorpe. I know not why, but it was his Discourse to me.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. What Acquaintance was there between you?

Thorpe. I have seen him several times in Yorkshire.

Mr. Just. Dolben. You live in Charterhouse-Lane, How came you together in Long-Acre?

Thorpe. I met him accidentally in the Street.

Mr. Just. Dolben. It is a wonderful thing, that he should meet one in the Street with whom he had very small Acquaintance, and discover such things to him, as he did to you.

Then William Hardwick was examined.

Hardwick. I was to carry Mrs. Preficks before Justice Lowther, and Bolron's Wife said she was sorry for it, for she believed her to be an honest Woman, and had been a good Neighbour amongst them.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. Who was sorry?

Hardwick. Mrs. Bolron.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. What did Bolron himself say?

Hardwick. He said nothing to me, he was in another Room with his Grandmother.

Mr. Justice Dolben taking Notice of Thwing's speaking to Mr. Hobart, demanded what he said.

Hobart. My Lord, he ask'd me, whether Bolron did not say that Sir Tho. Gascoigne offer'd him 1000*l.* I only say that he swore at Sir Thomas Gascoigne's Trial.

Mr. Just. Dolben. How doth it appear what he swore there?

Bolron. I acquainted Mr. Lowther and Mr. Tindal with it.

Mary Walker was called.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Mary Walker, what do you say?

Mary Walker. Robert Bolron came after Mr. Thwing was taken Prisoner, to my Mistress's.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Who is your Mistress?

Mary Walker. Mrs. Laffell; and he ask'd me if I knew Mr. Thwing to be a Priest, and I told him, No, my Lord; he told me that if I would swear that he was a Priest, he would give me 10*l.* for he would be reveng'd of him for Sir Thomas Gascoigne's Cause; for he was near of kin to him, and he proffer'd me 10*l.* again.

Bolron. Where were you, you were not here yesterday?

Mary Walker. I was in the Court yesterday.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Where spoke he this?

Mary Walker. At Mrs. Laffell's.

Sir Tho. Stringer. My Lord, he was then searching for Priests at that House, and it is improbable that he should endeavour at that Time to suborn Thwing's Sister's Servant.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. Is Mrs. Laffell of kin to Mr. Thwing?

Walker. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Who can believe he would come to Thwing's Sister's House, to suborn her Servant to be a Witness against Mr. Thwing?

Walker. Yes, my Lord, I have Witness of it, both a Man and a Woman.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Where are they?

Walker. In Town.

Mr. Just. Dolben. That makes it more improbable that he would offer you 10*l.* in the Presence of two Witnesses to swear that Mr. Thwing was a Priest.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Let us ask her a Question: Whether are you a Papist or no?

Walker. Yes, I am a Catholick.

Sir Tho.

Sir Thomas Stringer. Since it must be probable, that he would ask you such a Thing, and knew you to be a Papist; is Thwing a Priest or no?

Walker. No, marry, is he not.

Sir Thomas Stringer. Have you not heard him say Mass?

Walker. No, if I were to die.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Indeed you are an excellent Witness.

Mr. Legget, one of the King's Messengers, produced as a Witness by the Prisoners, was next examined.

Mr. Legget. In August last, Mr. Bolron told me, he would call his Grandmother in, and examine her before me; and he then asked her, if she did not say, that she knew such and such Things? And she said she could not tell, but if she did, 'twas true.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. What was it he asked her?

Legget. About Harcourt, and I know not what; I took little Notice of it, it seemed to be a Thing so idle, that I went away: And meeting me afterwards, said, You thought my Grandmother knew nothing, but at the Bar, when Sir Thomas Gascoigne was tried, they said they never heard one swear a Thing more plainly.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Legget, did not you desire Money Yesterday of the Clerk of the Assizes as a Witness for the King?

Legget. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Did you so? You are a fine Fellow.

Then one William Bacchus was examined.

Bacchus. All that I can say, is, That I served a Warrant upon Mrs. Bolron to go before Squire Lowther, and Bolron's Wife and Grandmother said, they could say nothing against Sir Thomas Gascoigne, nor any of the Family.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Well, they say nothing against them now, but what did she say against Mrs. Preficks?

Bacchus. She said that Mary Preficks should say that the King was an Whoremaster, and maintained his Whores better than he did the Queen.

Cuthbert Hamsworth was then called.

Hamsworth being produced as a Witness for Sir Thomas Gascoigne, owned that he had been a Papist.

Hamsworth. My Lord, Robert Bolron did swear Revenge against my Lady Tempest, for prosecuting a Suit against him.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What is that to the Matter in Hand? Do you know that he swore Revenge against Thwing and Preficks?

Hamsworth. No, my Lord.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns (to the Prisoners). What have you more to say?

Thwing. My Lord, he saith, I was at Barmbow-Hall, 1677, I have Witnesses to prove otherwise.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. Call them then.

George Twisley, Groom to Sir Thomas Gascoigne.

Twisley. Mr. Thwing was never at our House above a Night or two in the Year.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Whose House is yours?

Twisley. Sir Thomas Gascoigne's.

Mr. Just. Dolben. He was there but a Night or two at a Time?

Twisley. No, and please your Lordship.

Mr. Just. Dolben. But was he there in 1677?

Twisley. About a Year or two since, I saw him there.

Mr. Just. Dolben. But how often in a Twelve-month's Time?

Twisley. Not above once or twice.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. Did you never go out of your Master's House in 1677?

Twisley. I have, my Lord, but I was there both Night and Morning.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. How do you know but he might be there in the time that you were not there?

Bolron. And please your Lordship, this Man was but the Groom.

Twisley. I was the Groom, my Lord, and took the Horses.

Mr. Just. Dolben. But were you never absent?

Twisley. No, my Lord, and he was not there above once or twice in the Year.

Thwing. Ask him what Company was then there?

Twisley. No Company at all, my Lord, when he was there.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Was not he there about Easter?

Twisley. No, not that I know of.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What time of the Year was he there?

Twisley. About Michaelmas, not Easter.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. How came you to take such particular Notice at what time Men come? Did you take an Account of all the Gentlemen that came to Sir Thomas's House, how often there, and when they came?

Twisley. There were none that stayed any time when they came thither.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. What Time of the Year was he there?

Twisley. It was a Month before Michaelmas.

Mr. Just. Dolben. You bring Witnesses to stretch Things even to Impossibilities.

Bolron. He was Drunk, my Lord, at Leeds the same Night the Conflict was.

Sir Thomas Stringer. Will you speak Truth before Almighty God?

Twisley. Yes.

Sir Thomas Stringer. Pray, then, are you a Papist?

Twisley. No.

Sir Thomas Stringer. Were you never a Papist?

Twisley. Yes.

Sir Thomas Stringer. Have you heard Mass at Sir Thomas Gascoigne's when you were a Papist?

Twisley. No.

Sir Thomas Stringer. That's very strange, that you lived there and never heard Mass, and yet were a Papist.

Twisley. Yes; I heard Mass in his House, but not by this Man.

Sir Thomas Stringer. How long have you been turned Protestant?

Twisley. About two Years.

Thwing. Thomas Areton. Did you ever see me at Barmbow-Hall?

Areton. I have nothing for nor against him, I never saw him before in my Life.

Thwing. Mr. Mowbray hath declared he never knew any Thing of the Plot.

Mr. Just. Dolben. To whom did he declare it?

Thwing. There is Witness of it, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Call them.

Thwing. He accused not me of the Plot.

Mr. Just. Dolben. He was no Protestant then.

Thwing. I never knew any Thing of the Plot till I came from London.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Well, if you have any more Witnesses, call them.

Thwing. Mr. Cooper.

Joseph Cooper. I have nothing to say in this Business about this Gentleman, it is concerning Sir Thomas Gascoigne.

Thwing. Yes, he declared before these Witnesses he knew nothing of the Plot.

Cooper. We were coming from Atherton Fair, and my Father began to discourse with Mr. Mowbray, and asked him if he knew any thing of the Plot that Sir Thomas was called to London for; he said, he knew nothing of the Plot, and he thought Sir Thomas was guilty of no such thing; for, if he had, he should have known it as soon as Bolron, and he was a Rogue and a Knave for saying any such thing.

Mr. Just. Dolben. When was this?

Cooper. It was about this Time Twelve-month.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Were you upon the Road then?

Cooper. Yes.

Sir Thomas Stringer. Had Mowbray then made any Discovery of the Plot?

Cooper. Yes, that was the Reason we asked him about it.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Yesterday (upon Lady Tempest's Trial) you said, that Mowbray had not then made any Discovery.

Cooper. Yes, my Lord, I mean Bolron.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Really, methinks, you that are Priests should be more dextrous; my Lady Tempest managed her Business much better, and had her Witnesses in more readiness.

Thwing. My Lord, I call upon the Witnesses, and they will not come in, I cannot help it.

Edward Cooper, Senior, was then called.

Edward Cooper. I know nothing; I met Mr. Mowbray coming from Atherton Fair, and he said, he thought Sir Thomas was not guilty of the Plot.

Thwing. Mr. Mowbray declared for eight or ten Months together in 77, he knew nothing of the Plot. Call Mr. Hobart.

Hobart. I know nothing of it.

Thwing. I am innocent, I know nothing, as I hope for Salvation.

Then Isabel Heyward, a Girl that lived with Bolron as a Servant, was called.

Isabel Heyward. My Master and Mistress fell out about going to London, and she said, she would not go, and he said he would make her go; and she said, if he did, she would swear that what he had sworn against Mrs. Preficks was out of Malice.

Alice Dawson was next examined.

Alice Dawson. The Day after New Year's-Day was twelve Months, Mrs. Bolron said, she was sorry for nothing, but that her Husband had meddled with Mrs. Preficks.

Then Mrs. Preficks called for John Pepper.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What do you say to him, Mistress?

Preficks. I ask about my going to Parlinton at Whitsonide.

Mr. Just. Dolben. No, it was at Candlemas, and they said it was cold Weather to fit in the Hall-Porch.

Preficks. It was also said at Whitsonide.

John Pepper. About Whitson Monday (my Lord) I went to Barmbow, and met there with Mr. Preficks and Mrs. Preficks; and he desired me to tarry and carry his Wife to Mrs. Harrison's, at Parlinton, and she and I went down to Shipton, and carried her from Bolron's on Whitson-Monday, and staid till Thursday.

Mr. Just. Dolben. And what is all this to the Purpose? She was, however, as it was sworn against her, at Shipton at Whitsonide.

Pepper. This is all I can say, my Lord.

Zachary Thorpe was again called by Thwing.

Thorpe. Bolron said, he was going to swear against my Lady Tempest, and if one thing would not do, another should, and would have had me to give Evidence against Shipton.

Mrs. Baynes (Mother to Mr. Bolron) called.

Mr. Bar. Atkyns. What do you say, Mrs. Baynes?

Mrs. Baynes. Indeed, my Lord, I know nothing of this, I know not Thorpe, Shipton I know, and he told me; that if he had not fallen into my Lord of Shrewsbury's Service, he and Thorpe would have turned Highwaymen.

Mr. Babbington called by Preficks.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Can you say any thing for Mrs. Preficks?

Babbington. I can say nothing, but what I said Yesterday concerning Sir Thomas Gascoigne.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Can you say any thing for Preficks?

Babbington. No, my Lord, I can say nothing for Mrs. Preficks; yes, thus much I must say, that when I came to have the Writings sealed by Bolron, his Wife refused to seal them without delivering up of the Bonds. I told her, it would be an additional Security to Sir Thomas Gascoigne; he said he did believe, that Mr. Preficks and his Wife were his Enemies, and that they did instigate Sir Thomas to sue him.

Mr. Just. Dolben (to Thwing). Come, what have you more to say?

Thwing. I have no Witnesses to call, but I hope it will be considered what Kind of Witnesses these are, what Lives they have led; they bring me in amongst the rest, we are all of a Family; I hope, my Lord, you will consider that those ill Men that will, may take away an honest Man's Life unjustly.

Mr. Just. Dolben. I hear no Body speak against their Lives; and this I must tell you, till Men be convicted of some Crime that may disable them, you cannot take away their Testimony.

Thwing.

Thwing. My Lord, Witnesses should be Men of Credit and Reputation.

Mr. Just. Dolben. The Jury is to consider of that.

Look you, Gentlemen, these two Prisoners stand indicted of High-Treason, and it is for conspiring the Death of the King, and other heinous Crimes; as designing the subverting the Government, and bringing in the Popish Religion.

Now the Witnesses that have been produced against Mr. Thwing, are Bolron and Mowbray; and against Preflicks, Mr. Bolron, Mrs. Bolron sen. and jun. and one Hutchinson; and the Evidence against Thwing is one Thing, and against the Woman quite another; there is no Evidence against her but what they heard her say others were to do; there is no Evidence of any Action of hers, or that she was present at any Consultation, nor acting any thing there, but that she said so and so. Now Mr. Bolron and his Grandmother do both say, that she said Pickering was to have killed the King, and that she was sorry that he did not do it. That the Gun with which he should have done it was found, and she was afraid that was the Cause of his Death; and they all say she said, that it would never be well with England, till the Catholics had got the upper Hand, and the Duke of York were King. Now I must tell you, that my Opinion is, that a bare saying of this doth not amount to High-Treason, unless you do believe from these words, that she knew otherwise than by Hearsay, that Pickering was to have killed the King, and that she was privy and consenting to the Design of killing the King, then she is guilty of Treason; but if she only knew it by Hearsay, the bare Knowledge and concealing of it will make her guilty of Misprision of Treason; but knowing of it barely by Report doth not make her guilty of High-Treason: My Brother will tell you his Opinion herein. Now for Mr. Thwing, the Evidence against him is very home, for they both swear against him, one to one Meeting, and the other to another, that he was present at their Consultation to kill the King, subvert the Government, and to bring in the Popish Religion; that he did agree at the Meeting to the killing of the King, they do both swear, and this they say was at Sir Thomas Gascoigne's, and that at the several Meetings there was a List produced; but Bolron saith, that the List when he was present was a List of those that were engaged towards the carrying on of the Nunnery; that which the other speaks of, was a List of those that were engaged about the killing the King, about the whole Design which was to be effected by killing the King, this he swears, that Thwing did produce this List; and Mowbray saith, that three or four Priests were present at that Time, and that Thwing said the King was an Heretick, and excommunicated by the Pope, and that it was not only lawful but meritorious to kill him. So that admitting this Evidence be true, it is a full Evidence of High-Treason against him; here is an imagining the Death of the King, and here is an Overt-Act, here is a setting Hands to it; so that if this be true, Thwing is guilty of High-Treason. Now against this they have produced many Witnesses, and none of them doth go about to prove this impossible, but only improbable; but one that is a Groom of Sir Thomas Gascoigne's, who saith, he was but once or twice that Year there, and not at Easter, but about Michaelmas: Is that enough to answer the Testimony of these two Men, Gentlemen? For a Groom to take upon him to say two Years after, who was at his Master's House, and how often, and what Time of the Year, is to me a very strange Thing; unless it were one that never used to come there: But this Man, he saith, did use to come there—but that I must leave to you. The rest of the Witnesses were the same that were examined yesterday. First, they insist concerning Mr. Lowther, they say, that when Mr. Bolron first went to Mr. Lowther, he said nothing of Mr. Thwing, but it appears, he said then, that afterwards he might remember more; then the Man was under a great Consternation, and told him the great and dangerous Consequences of having so long concealed it, was the occasion of that Disorder upon him; but he said he should remember more afterwards, and so he did: The rest of the Witnesses do all go to this Purpose, that either Bolron or Mowbray should tell them at one time or other, they did know nothing of the Plot, nor against Sir Thomas Gascoigne; and some of them say, that it is out of Malice to Sir Thomas's Family; for so Thwing would have it, he being his Nephew, that the Malice should reach to Mr. Thwing, that they would have it; and something to the same Purpose they do offer against Mr. Mowbray. Now here is one Walker, that swears, that Bolron asked her if she knew Thwing to be a Priest, and offer'd her 10*l.* to swear him a Priest; she is a Servant of one Mrs. Lassell, Mr. Thwing's Sister, he came to Mrs. Lassell's, to search for Priests; it is something strange, that he should offer to persuade her to swear against Thwing, who was Servant to his own Sister, and at the Time when he came to search for Priests; the Truth of it is, the thing doth depend purely upon the Credit of Witnesses. The King's Witnesses are upon their Oaths; but, on the other Hand, the others are not on their Oaths; but Credit is to be given to what they say, if you consider their Evidence, and do find a Clearness in their Testimony, which you must weigh; for certainly he that solemnly, in the Presence of God, will say a false Thing, will also dare to swear it; how far their Principles will carry them I know not, I can see nothing but Bolron and Mowbray are good Witnesses; I do not see but what they say is coherent, and that they speak the Truth; and if you believe what they say to be true, then Thwing is guilty of High-Treason: But if you do not believe what they say is true, but out of Malice, you must acquit him. They do object the other Juries did not believe Bolron and Mowbray; the Case with the Prisoners at the Bar is not the same with theirs; but you are to give your Verdict according to the Evidence that you have heard, and according to your Consciences.

Mr. Bar. Atkins. Gentlemen of the Jury, I shall be very short. The Crimes that are laid in this Indictment, and charged upon these Persons, are, the designing to take away the King's Life, subverting the Government, and introducing Popery; you observe the Nature of the Evidence which hath been given against the Prisoners. And first, I shall speak but one word concerning Mary Preflicks: I do fully agree with what my Brother hath said; you do take Notice, that the Evidence that hath been given against her, hath been what came out of her own Mouth; the Witnesses are Mr. Bolron and his Grandmother, and likewise one Hutchinson:

Mr. Bolron saith she did tell him, that Harbours was her Confessor, and that he had engaged her in the Plot; she likewise told him, that Pickering was to kill the King, that the Gun was found with him, and was the Cause of his Death: This is some Evidence of High-Treason, I must leave it to you of what Weight it is, and how far by this you will conclude her privy to the Plot; it is true, were she an Actor in it, it is plain she is guilty of High-Treason. As to what Hutchinson said, that she told him we should never be at Peace till we were all of the Roman Catholic Religion, and the Duke of York was made King, that will not amount to High-Treason: This I take to be the Sum of the Evidence against her. Then as to Mr. Thwing, there are two Witnesses that have sworn against him, that is Mr. Bolron and Mr. Mowbray: Bolron tells you, that in 1677, there came to him several Priests; to his House at Shipton; and amongst the rest Thwing the Prisoner, who asked him, how he stood affected to the Roman Catholic Religion? And he then express'd his Zeal for it, and they thought him a Person fit to impart their Secrets to: Then he saith, that in 1677, there was a Meeting at Barmbow-Hall, which is Sir Thomas Gascoigne's House, and at that Meeting there were Sir Thomas Gascoigne, Esq. Gascoigne, Sir Miles Stapleton, and amongst the rest this Prisoner Thwing; and that there was a Consult held at that Time, and Design of killing the King; and that this Person did agree to it, and declared that if they should miss that Opportunity, they should never have such another; and that it was for the Good of the Roman Catholic Religion. The next was Mowbray; and he saith to the same Effect: That in 1676, Thwing and others declared they did design to kill the King, for he was a Heretick, and excommunicated, and had not kept his Word with the Jesuits, and therefore they thought it not only lawful, but a meritorious Act: And this is what both Bolron and Mowbray do testify, this they swear positively against the Prisoner; if you believe what they have sworn to be true, I must declare that it will amount to High-Treason. You are likewise to consider the Evidence he hath produced for himself: The Law, 'tis true, does not allow us to give them an Oath; yet if they be Persons of Credit and Honesty, it is Evidence which you are to consider of. The Prisoner hath call'd several Witnesses: The first was Nat. Wilson; I shall not repeat what he saith, being of no Import. Thwing saith, Mr. Bolron was before Mr. Lowther and Mr. Tindal, two Justices of Peace, who did take his Oath; and then he said he did not accuse him of the Plot at that Time, and by that would infer, that he would have said what he had against him, as well then as now, if he had any thing whereof to accuse him: But Bolron answers, he did declare to these two Gentlemen, he was not able at that time to recollect his whole Knowledge, but gave it in afterwards to the King and Council. The next are Moor and Thorpe: The Effect of their Evidence is to strike at the Reputation of Bolron, that it was an Act of Malice and Revenge: For they say, that Bolron told them, that Sir Thomas was innocent, and knew nothing of the Plot. Thorpe saith, he met with Bolron in Long-Acre, and that he told him, that though Sir Thomas were acquitted, he would ruin some of them. I say, these Things, if true, are some Evidence of a malicious Prosecution: But it seems something improbable, that Bolron should so openly make a Discovery of himself, when it appears he was not greatly acquainted with them, especially with Thorpe. There are several other Witnesses that speak much to the same Purpose. Gentlemen, in Matters of Fact, which depend upon the Testimony of Witnesses, the Credit of the Witnesses is greatly to be considered; if you believe what Bolron and Mowbray have both positively sworn, the Treason is plain; you must take all the Parts of your Evidence together, you must weigh all the Circumstances, you must, as I said before, consider the Credit of the Witnesses of the one Side and of the other, and by these Steps you will be the better guided in giving of your Verdict. I must leave it to you, and I pray God direct you therein.

The Jury having withdrawn, after some Consultation together, brought in their Verdict, that Thomas Thwing was Guilty, and Mary Preflicks Not Guilty.

August the 2d, 1680, Thomas Thwing being brought to the Bar, the Clerk spoke thus:

Clerk. Thomas Thwing, hold up thy Hand: Thou hast been indicted, that thou as a false Traitor didst conspire the Death of the King, &c. and thereof hast been found guilty: What canst thou say wherefore Judgment of Death should not be pronounced against thee?

Thwing. My Lord, as I am now upon my Life, I know nothing of these Things, in the least, that these Men have sworn against me: And on the other Side, I say, that before Sir Thomas Gascoigne had his Trial, these Men said nothing against me; so I hope your Lordship will take it into Consideration.

Mr. Just. Dolben. For your Innocency, the Gentlemen of the Jury are Judges of that, and they have found you guilty, so that it is not in my Power either to acquit or condemn you; I am only to pass Sentence according to that Conviction. If you have any thing to say wherefore Judgment should not be pronounced, I am ready to hear you.

Thwing. All that I can say is to declare my Innocency, and that these Men are of no Credit and Reputation. It is very hard I only should be guilty, and none of the rest, who were arraigned for the same Crimes.

Mr. Just. Dolben. No, it is not impossible; it is possible you may be guilty, and the rest innocent.

Thwing. For my part, I told your Lordship that I was but once or twice in a Year at Sir Thomas Gascoigne's, being my Uncle, and I do protest I know nothing of the Consult these Men do charge me with.

Mr. Just. Dolben. You say one Thing, they swear another, and for aught I know they are honest Men; they are lawful Men, and not convicted in the main; for I do believe there were many great and dangerous Consults held at Sir Thomas Gascoigne's by several Persons, and that there have been many horrid and treasonable Things acted there. You have been indicted for High-Treason, the highest Treason that ever any Subject was guilty of, for attempting to kill the King, for resolving so to do upon deliberate Advice and Consultation; and this for no other End or Purpose, but that you might have your Religion set up, for that was your Design, to change this Religion here, and to settle Popery in England; and the better to bring that to pass, you thought to take away the King's Life, knowing you could not otherwise accomplish it. You are, I am satisfied, a Priest of the Romish Church; therefore all that I can say to you in reference to your future State you will not value; for you account me an Heretick as you do the King, and I am content to be so esteemed in so good Company, therefore I shall wave it. As you are a Gentleman, I will give some Respect to you, and will not pass Sentence on you among the rest of the Prisoners that are found guilty of Felony and Murder, but will do it by your self.

The Law doth command the Court, and the Court doth award, That you be carried from hence to the Place from whence you came, that is, the Prison, and from thence you are to be drawn to the Place of Execution: you are there to be hanged by the Neck, you are to be cut down before you are dead, and your Entrails are to be taken out of your Body, and thrown into the Fire before your Face, and your Head is to be parted from your Body, and your Body separated in four Quarters, and your Head and your Quarters are to be disposed according to the King's Pleasure. And the Lord have Mercy on your Soul.

Thwing. Innocens ego sum.

A Reprieve being obtained for him, he remained Condemned in the Castle of York till the 23d of October, when, according to the Sentence, he was drawn, hanged and quartered at York, having first protested his Innocence of all that was sworn against him, but gloried that he was a Priest, and had performed the priestly Function about fifteen Years; and desiring all true Catholics, if any such were there, to pray for him; and begging God to bless and preserve the King, his Queen, the Duke of York, and all other good Christians, he yielded himself to the Executioner *.

CI. The Trial of ELIZABETH CELLIER at the Old-Bailey, for writing and publishing a Libel, September, 1680. 32 Car. II.

Cl. of Cr. MR S. Cellier, look to your Challenges; for the Jury that is to be sworn is to pass upon you.

Cellier. Am I for my Life?

Cl. of Cr. No, but look to your Challenges.

Lord Mayor. But if you Challenge, you must give a Reason for it, Mrs. Cellier.

Cl. of Cr. Swear John Ainger.

[Which was done.]

Cl. of Cr. Swear Richard Boys.

Cellier. I Challenge him.

Lord Mayor. Mrs. Cellier, you must shew a Cause for your Challenge.

Cellier. I did not know that, my Lord.

Mr. Bar. Weston. You can Challenge none in this Case without a Cause.

Cellier. My Lord, I did not know that: Then I agree he shall be sworn.

[Which was done.]

Then the rest of the Jury, without any more Challenges, were sworn; and they were all as follows:

John Ainger,	} Jur.	Richard Liveing,
Richard Boys,		John Coggs,
John Stephens,		Henry Hodsden,
Thomas Phelps,		John Barnard,
Gilbert Urwin,		Edward Low,
Edward Allanson,		James Southern.

Then Proclamation was made in common Form for Information; and the Clerk charged the Jury thus:

Cl. of Cr. You Gentlemen that are sworn, Elizabeth Cellier stands indicted by the Name of Elizabeth Cellier, Wife of Peter Cellier, of the Parish of St. Clement-Danes, in the County of Middlesex, Gent. For that she being of the Popish Religion, not having the Fear of God before her Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, falsely and maliciously endeavouring and intending our Sovereign Lord King Charles the Second that now is, and the Government of this Kingdom of England, as also the true Protestant Religion, within this Kingdom of England by Law established, to bring to Hatred and Contempt; and also to bring Scandal and Infamy upon divers Persons produced as Witnesses, that gave Evidence on the Part and Behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, against her the said Elizabeth Cellier, and other Persons indicted of High-Treason; the first of September, in the Thirty Second Year of our Sovereign Lord King Charles the Second that now is, at the Parish of St. Clement-Danes, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, falsely, maliciously and seditiously did write and publish, and did cause to be writ, imprinted and published a scandalous Libel, entitled, Malice Defeated: Or, a brief Relation of the Accusation and Deliverance of Elizabeth Cellier: Wherein her Proceedings, both before and during her Confinement, are particularly related, and the Mystery of the Meal-Tub fully discovered: Together with an Abstract of her Arraignment and Trial: Written by her self for the Satisfaction of all Lovers of undisguised Truth. In which said Libel are contained these false, feigned, scandalous Words and Figures following, to wit: 'I hope it will not seem strange to any honest and loyal Person of what Way or Religion soever, that I being born and bred up under Protestant Parents, should now openly profess my self of another Church (meaning the Church of Rome); for my Education being in those Times, when my own Parents and Relations, for their constant and faithful Affection to the King and Royal Family, were persecuted, the King himself murdered, the Bishops and Church destroyed, the whole loyal Party, merely for being so, oppressed and ruined; and all, as was pretended by the Authors of these Villainies, for their being Papists and Idolaters, the constant Character given by them to the King and his Friends to make them odious, they assuming to themselves only the Name of Protestants, and making that the glorious Title by which they pretended Right to all Things: These sorts of proceeding, as I grew in Understanding, produced in me more and more Horror of the Party that committed them, and put me on enquiry into that Religion to which they pretended the greatest Antipathy; wherein, I thank God, my innate Loyalty not only confirmed, but encouraged me. And let Calumny say what it will, I never heard from any Papists, as they call them, Priest nor Layman, but that they and I, and all true Catholics owe our Lives to the Defence of our lawful King, which our present Sovereign Charles II. is, whom God long and happily preserve so. These sorts of Doctrines agreeing to my publick Morals, and no way, as ever I was taught, contradicting my private ones, commending at the same time to me Charity and Devotion; I without any Scruple have hitherto followed, glorying to my self to be in Communion with those who were the humble Instruments of his Majesty's happy Preservation from the fatal Battle at Worcester; and who, though poor, no Temptation could invite to betray him to those who by a pretended Protestant Principle sought his innocent Blood. These Truths, I hope, may satisfy an indifferent Person in my first Change; nor can they wonder at my Continuance therein, that notwithstanding the horrid Crimes of Treason and Murder laid to the Charge of some Persons, considerable for their Quality and Fortunes in that Party: For, when I reflected who were the Witnesses, and what unlikely Things they deposed, and observed that many of the chiefest Sticklers for the Plot were those, or the Sons of those, that acted the principal Parts in the last Tragedy, which History told me too had the Prologue of a pretended Popish Plot; I say, these Things made me doubtful of the whole; and the more I searched for Truth, the more I doubted that the old Enemies of the Crown were again at work for it's Destruction. I being fully confirmed in this, thought it my Duty through all sorts of Hazards, to relieve the poor imprisoned Catholics, who in great Numbers were lock'd up in Goals, starving for want of Bread: And this I did some Months before I ever saw the Countess of Powis, or any of those honourable Persons that were accused, or receiving of one Penny of their Money directly or indirectly, till about the latter end of January (78.) And in another Part of the said Libel are contained these false, feigned and scandalous Words and Figures following; to wit, 'About this time I went daily to the Prisons to perform those Offices of Charity I was obliged to; and on Thursday, January the 9th (78.) I dined in Newgate in the Room call'd the Castle, on the Master's Side Debtors, and about four in the Afternoon I came down into the Lodge with Five Women, of which three were Protestants, and we all heard terrible Groans and Squeaks, which came out of the Dungeon call'd the Condemn'd Hole. I ask'd Harris the Turnkey what doleful Cry it was; he said it was a Woman in Labour. I bid him put us into the Room to her, and we would help her. But he drove us away very rudely, both out of the Lodge and from the Door. We went behind the Gate and there listened, and soon found that it was the Voice of a strong Man in Torture, and heard as we thought between his Groans the winding up of some Engine. These Cries stopp'd the Passengers under the Gate, and we fix went to the Turner's Shop without the Gate, and stood there amazed with the Horror and Dread of what we heard; when one of the Officers of the Prison came out in great Haste, seeming to run from the Noise. One of us catch'd hold of him, saying, Oh! What are they doing in the Prison? Officer. I dare not tell you, Mistress. 'Tis a Man upon the Rack: I'll lay my Life on't. Officer. It is something like it. Cellier. Who is it, Prance? Officer. Pray, Madam, do not ask me, for I dare not tell you. But it is that I am not able to hear any longer. Pray let me go. With that he ran away towards Holbourn as fast as he could. We heard these Groans perfectly to the end of the Old-Bailey. They continued till near seven of the Clock, and then a Person in the Habit of a Minister, of middle Stature, Grey-hair'd, accompanied with two other Men, went into the Lodge. The Prisoners were lock'd up, and the outward Door of the Lodge also, at which I set a Person to stand, and observe what she could, and a Prisoner loaded with Irons was brought into the Lodge, and examined a long time. And the Prisoners, that came down as low as they could, heard the Person examined with great Vehemency say often, I know nothing of it, I am innocent, he forced me to bely my self. What would you have me say? Will you murder me because I will not bely my self and others? Several other such like Expressions they heard spoken as by one in great Agony. About four of the Clock next Morning, the Prisoners that lay in a Place above the Hole heard the same Cry again two Hours, and on Saturday Morning again; and about eight o'Clock that Morning a Person I employ'd to spy out the Truth of that Affair, did see the Turnkeys carrying a Bed into the Hole. She asked who it was for; they told her it was for Prance who was gone mad, and had tore his Bed in Pieces. That Night the Examiners came again, and after an Hour's Conference Prance was led away to the Press-Yard. This, and many Things of the like Nature, made me very inquisitive to know what pass'd in the Prison. Soon after this Francis Corral a Coachman, that had been put in Newgate upon Suspicion of carrying away Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's Body, and lay there thirteen Weeks and three Days in great Misery, got out. I went to see him, and found him a sad Spectacle, having the Flesh worn away, and great Holes in both his Legs by the Weight of his Irons, and having been chained so long double, that he could not stand upright; he told me much of his hard and cruel Usage, as that he had been squeez'd and hasped into a thing like a Trough, in a Dungeon under Ground; which put him to inexpressible Torment, inasmuch that he swooned, and that a Person in the Habit of a Minister stood by all the while. That a Duke beat him, pull'd him by the Hair, and set his drawn Sword to his Breast three times, and swore he would run him through; and another great Lord laid down a heap of Gold, and told him it was Five hundred Pounds, and that he should have it all, and be taken into the aforesaid Duke's House, if he would confess what they would have him; and one F. a Vintner, that lives at the Sign of the Half-Moon in Ch-fi by whose Contrivance he was accused, took him aside, and bid him name some Person, and say, they employed him to take up the dead Body in Somerset-Yard, and gave him Money for so doing; that if he would do this, both F. and he should have Money enough. He also told me, that he was kept from Thursday till Sunday without Victuals or Drink, having his Hands every Night chain'd behind him, and being all this time lock'd to a Staple which was driven into the Floor, with a Chain not above a Yard long: That in this great Extremity he was forced to drink his own Water; and that the Jailor beat his Wife because she brought Victuals, and prayed that he might have it, and threw Milk on the Ground, and bid her be gone, and not look at him. And in another Part of the said Libel is contained (amongst other Things) these false, feigned, and scandalous Words and Figures following, to wit, My Arraignment (which in Confidence of my own Innocency, I continually press'd for) not but that I knew the Danger, as to this Life, of encountering the Devil in the worst of his Instruments, which are Perjurors encouraged to that Degree as that profligate Wretch (meaning Thomas Dangerfield produced as a Witness against her for High-Treason) was, and hath been since his being expos'd to the World in his true Colour, both at mine and another's Trial. And in another part of the said Libel are contained these false, feigned and scandalous Words and Figures following. Nor have I since received any thing towards my Losses, or the least Civility from any of them, whilst Dangerfield (meaning the said Thomas Dangerfield) when made a Prisoner for apparent recorded Rogueries, was visited by, and from Persons of considerable Quality, with great Sums of Gold and Silver, to encourage him in the new Villainies he had undertaken, not against me alone, but Persons in whose Safety all good Men, as well Protestants as others in the three Kingdoms, are concerned. And in another part of the said Libel called, 'A Postscript to the impartial Readers,' are contained these false, feigned, and scandalous Words following, to wit, And whensoever his Majesty pleases to make it as safe and honourable, as it is apparent it hath been gainful and meritorious to do the contrary; there will not want Witnesses to testify the Truth of more than I have written, and Persons that are above being made the Hangman's Hounds for weekly Pensions, or any other Considerations whatsoever; to the evil and dangerous Example of all others in the like Case offending, and against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. Upon this Indictment she hath been Arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded, Not Guilty, and for her Trial hath put her self upon the Country, which Country you are; so your Issue is to try whether she be guilty of this Offence in Manner and Form wherein she stands indicted, or Not Guilty. If you find her Guilty, you are to say so; and if you find her Not Guilty, you are to say so, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Then Robert Dormer, Esq; of Lincoln's-Inn, opened the Indictment thus:

Mr. Dormer. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: Elizabeth Cellier, the Gentlewoman at the Bar, the Wife of Peter Cellier of the Parish of St. Clement-Danes in the County of Middlesex, Gentleman, stands indicted of being the Author and Publisher of a Libel, entituled, Malice defeated, or a brief Relation of the Accusation and Deliverance of Elizabeth Cellier. You have heard the Indictment read, wherein some Clauses of this Libel are recited in the Words they were written, and in Mrs. Cellier's own Words, and in other Words I will not undertake to repeat them to you.

Gentlemen, this is a Libel so complicated and general, that within this Book are contained as many Libels of several Natures, and against different Persons and Orders of Men, as there are Paragraphs; his Majesty, the Protestant Religion, our Laws, Government, Magistrates, Counsellors of State, Courts of Judicature, the King's Evidence, and the public Justice of this Kingdom are all aspersed and defamed, by the Virulency and Malice of this Woman's Pen.

She hath charged upon the Principles of our Religion, the Murder of his late Majesty, and the greatest Impieties that ever were committed.

She accuseth all that have done their Duties, or been active in the Discovery of the present Popish Plot, to be Enemies of the Crown, and to be acting over again the Tragedy of our late Civil War.

She chargeth our Laws with Cruelties, as inhuman as they are false, in permitting Prisoners to starve under their Confinement, in admitting of Racks and Tortures to be used, and that for the worst Purposes, thereby to extort Perjuries and false Evidences against the Innocent; to which she would make Persons of the best Quality of our Nobility, Magistracy, and Clergy, Privies and Parties.

She libels the King's Evidences under the Characters of the Devil's Instruments, and the Hangman's Hounds; and defames his Majesty's Government, in saying, it is not safe to speak Truth, but meritorious and gainful to do the contrary.

She will appear to you to be so criminal, that nothing can aggravate her Offences, unless the Impudence of the Delinquent, who hath set her Name to almost every Page of this scandalous Libel; and since the Indictment hath been depending, owned, published, and put a Value on her self for being the Author of so excellent a Book.

To the Indictment she hath pleaded Not Guilty; if the King's Evidence prove the Charge, you are to find her Guilty.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Gentlemen, the Charge is but this: First, She is charged with the setting forth this Book; in the next Place, there are several Clauses in that Book which she is particularly charged with. Now that which the Evidence will prove, must be, first, that the Book was owned by her, and published by her; and then, that these Particulars charged in the Indictment were in the Book; and then you will receive the Directions of the Court, of what Nature the Proofs are. Go on to the Evidence, that is your Work, fall to your Proof.

Mr. Dormer. My Lord, we will call our Witnesses. William Downing, John Penny, and Robert Stevens. [Who appeared and were Sworn.]

Mr. Dormer. Will. Downing, Do you tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of the Printing of this Libel (show him the Libel), and who brought the Sheets to the Press.

Mr. Downing. My Lord, about the 22d or 23d of August—

Mr. Bar. Weston. Begin with Penny first. Pray what say you to that Book?

Mr. Penny. My Lord, I was bid to buy a Book of that Gentlewoman, and I did so. I asked for her by her Name.

Mr. Bar. Weston. By what Name?

Mr. Penny. Mrs. Cellier.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Is that the Gentlewoman?

Mr. Penny. Yes, that is the Gentlewoman. And she came out to me, and asked what my Errand was? I told her it was to have a Book: That you may have, said she, if you please. Madam, said I, What is the Price? Two Shillings, said she. Cannot I have them cheaper, said I? No, said she, I sell them to Shopkeepers for 18 Shillings a Dozen, and I must not sell them under here. With that she fetched me a Book, and I gave her two Shillings, and when she had done, she gave me another little Paper.

Mr. Bar. Weston. That is not in Issue, nor your Question now. Did you ask her for the Book she published and set out?

Mr. Penny. Yes; and she did acknowledge that was her Book.

Mr. Bar. Weston. What! She did own the Book she sold to you to be hers?

Mr. Penny. This is the Book I have in my Hand, and I marked every Sheet of it; and she told me there was another little Sheet to be added to it; and if any Gentleman pleased to send it into the Country, that might be put up in a Letter to send by the Post.

Cellier. May I ask him a Question?

Mr. Bar. Weston. Tell me your Question, and I'll ask it.

Cellier. I desire to know if I said any more, than you may have a Book, or there is a Book. And who asked for a Book?

Mr. Bar. Weston. Did she say any more than, You may have a Book, or, This is the Book that I have published?

Mr. Penny. When I got the Book and paid for it, I turned about again and asked her if it was her own? She told me it was; and more than that, if occasion were, she could have put more in it.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Why, Mrs. Cellier, you did not deny this Book yesterday; for you may remember when you did say you wanted your Witnesses, and if you could but have time to bring them, you would prove the Truth of it: We told you you had nothing to prove on this Issue of Not Guilty, but that somebody else did publish the Book, and you did not. You owned you writ it your self every Word with your own Hand.

Cellier. My Lord, if I was a foolish vain Woman, and did seem to speak some vain Words about my self which I did not understand the Consequence of, I hope a Word vainly spoke by me shall not be brought against me to convict me of a Crime.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Mrs. Cellier, you do not seem so negligent about your self, that we may not believe what you say of your self.

Cellier. But vain foolish Words spoke in that Nature, I hope shall be no Evidence against me.

Mr. Bar. Weston. But, however, it is proved against you.

Cellier. Did I say I writ it?

Mr. Penny. You told me that was your Book.

Cellier. I told you? Pray, my Lord, put one Question to him upon the Oath he hath taken: Did I say any more, than it was mine and I sold it? not that I writ it, or was the Author of it?

Mr. Bar. Weston. Mrs. Cellier, this is a Book that is intitled with your Name, and sold by your self. Now in any one's Judgment, this is both an owning of the Book, and publishing of the Book. When you sold it, you gave it out as your Book, and it hath in the Title Page your Name as the Author of it.

Cellier. My Lord, if I could have produced my Witnesses, I could have made my Defence; they have been at several Places for them, they have been all about Town, and several ways, at Sir Joseph Sheldons, and a great many other Places, and can find none of them.

Mr. Bar. Weston. To what Purpose should your Witnesses come?

Cellier. I should wish them have made my Defence.

Mr. Bar. Weston. If you would have said to us yesterday, that you had Witnesses to prove that any one else writ the Book, we would have put off the Trial. But you said you writ it every Word of it your self, and so owned the Issue: But now you pretend you want Witnesses; to what Purpose would you have them come?

Cellier. 'Tis not the Honour of the Bench, my Lord, to give Evidence; and I hope you won't take that Advantage of my vain Words.

Mr. Bar. Weston. 'Tis the Honour of the Bench to repeat what you say; when you ask Time to put off your Trial, and the Court gives you Direction to what Purpose Witnesses may be used, and you renounce that, and take the Fact upon your self.

Cellier. But I hope that is no Evidence.

Mr. Bar. Weston. It was spoke openly in the Court, every body heard it.

Cellier. I am surprized, and have no Witnesses.

Mr. Bar. Weston. 'Tis easy to pretend that you want Witnesses; but to what Purpose would you have them?

Cellier. My Lord, I hope you will please to remember he swears, I only said it was mine, not that I was the Author.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you sold it, that is a publishing in Law, and is within the Indictment.

Cellier. But he did not say I writ it.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Pray, Mrs. Cellier, don't trust your self upon that: For he said, after he had it, he asked you, Is this your Book? You said, Yes, it is my Book; and if I had been aware, I could have put a great deal more in it than I have done.

Cellier. But I did not say I writ it.

Mr. Penny. You said, if it were to be writ again, you could put more in it.

Cellier.

Cellier. I said it was my Book; and so it was, because it was in my Possession; but not that I writ it. This is my Fan, but it does not follow that I made it.

Mr. Bar. Weston. But the Question was concerning the Author of the Book.

Cellier. He did ask me no such Question. Did you ask me if I was the Authro?

Mr. Penny. No, I did not.

Mr. Bar. Weston. But what did you ask her?

Mr. Penny. I asked her, Whether it were her Book?

Mr. Bar. Weston. And did she own it?

Mr. Penny. Yes, she did.

Cellier. So it was mine in possession.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Did you mean by your Question, Whether that Book was her's in Property, or she were the Author and Publisher of it?

Mr. Penny. I would know whether it was her's or no.

Mr. Bar. Weston. But what was your Intention in asking? Was it whether she, or any other Person made it?

Mr. Penny. I don't know who made it, she told me it was her's.

Mr. Bar. Weston. But what was your Meaning in it?

Mr. Penny. My intention was, for fear she should have given me some other Book, to know whether it was writ by her or no.

Cellier. My Lord, I am not to be judged by his Meaning; but by his Question and my Answer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did she tell you she sold more of them?

Mr. Penny. I turned about when I had the Book, and said I, Can I have, if Occasion be, any more? She said she had but four or five hundred left, and in a few Days she should have more.

Mr. Att. Gen. You told us, she told you what she sold them for by the Dozen.

Mr. Penny. Yes, eighteen Shillings the Dozen to the Shopkeepers.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Then set up Downing. [Which was done.]

Pray look upon that Book and the Title of it. [Which he did.]

Have you examined that Book?

Mr. Downing. Sir, I printed part of it.

Mr. Bar. Weston. But have you examined that very Pamphlet?

Mr. Downing. Yes, I know it very well.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Did you print part of it?

Mr. Downing. Yes, I did.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Who brought it to you to be printed?

Mr. Downing. Mrs. Cellier.

Mr. Bar. Weston. She her self?

Mr. Downing. My Lord, about the 22d of August, a Messenger came to me from Mrs. Cellier, to tell me she had something to be printed; and she sent for me to her House, and I went to her House in Arundel Buildings. She told me she had a Book to print, and it was her own Case. I told her I was a Stranger to her Concerns; if there was nothing in it that was offensive, I would print it. She told me there was nothing but the Truth, and I might safely do it. She said, she had been publicly and wrongfully abused, and was resolved to publish her Case, and would make the World sensible of the Wrong she had sustained. I was apt, upon the Plausibleness of her Discourse, to believe her; and so I agreed with her to have ten Shillings a Ream for printing, and I was to print four Ream of every Sheet. And having printed half the Book, the Messenger found it a-printing at my House; and having thus found out the Press, he carried it before the Secretary Sir Leoline Jenkins, who granted a Warrant to bring us both before him; and having taken our Examinations, we were bound to appear before the Privy Council as soon as Notice should be given us of it: And being discharged by the Council, we were bound to appear the first Day of next Term in the King's-Bench: Since which Time she hath printed t'other half of her Book at some other Place. And whereas she promised to indemnify me from all Trouble and Charge, when I came to pay the Clerk of the Council his Fees, she refused to pay them for me, and told me I had betray'd her; and so notwithstanding her Promise, I was obliged to pay the Fees my self at the Council.

Mr. Dormer. Pray, Sir, who was it corrected the Sheets?

Mr. Downing. Sir, they were brought to her.

Mr. Dormer. Did she read them and correct them?

Mr. Downing. Yes, she looked over them.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Pray tell me how far it was you printed of the Book?

Mr. Downing. It was to Folio 22.

Mr. Bar. Weston. All the Clauses in the Indictment are contained in those Pages.

Mr. Clare. All but the last in the Postscript.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Have you read it over since?

Mr. Downing. So far, my Lord, I did print.

Mr. Bar. Weston. You take it upon your Oath, That to the 22d Folio of that Book that was given in Evidence, was printed by you by her Direction.

Mr. Downing. Yes, I do.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Then set up Stevens. [Which was done.]

Mr. Stevens. May it please your Lordship, I saw this Book a Printing at Mr. Downing's, and reading some Passages in it, I asked him, Mr. Downing, do you know what you do? He said, It is a Truth: Then I asked him who he did it for; he said he did it for Mrs. Cellier. I bid him have a Care that he did no more than what he could justify: He desired me that I would not hurt him, and I was loth to do a poor Man wrong, but away I went to the Secretary; but I asked him before, what was become of the Sheets? He said he carried them to Mrs. Cellier; said I, Did she bring you the Copy? Said he, She sent it sometimes by one Messenger, sometimes by another, for she sent several: And when I came to her, she did tell me it was her Book, and that she kept a Man to write it, and she dictated it to another that sat by her; and she often owned it was her Book, and she the Author of it.

Cellier. I never said so in my Life.

Mr. Stevens. Mrs. Cellier, by the same Token, when you sent for Bail you had occasion to write a Note, and I saw you write it, and said, I now find 'tis none of your Hand-writing; by the Difference between the Note and the Copy: Said she, I know that well enough; but I keep a Man in the House to write it, and I dictated to him, and he wrote. And I have seen there one Grange and one Sing; but Grange hath come to me several times about her's and other Business, and she did tell me, she did dictate the Book to that Man, and paid him for writing it. Says she, I am up very early every Morning, and preparing and dictating Things for the Press. She hath put out two Sheets since, and this Day at one o'clock she hath invited the Mercuries and the Hawkers to come and receive a New Pamphlet.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Do you know her Hand-writing?

Mr. Stevens. I have not that Note by me.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Did you see the Copy?

Mr. Stevens. Some part of it I did see.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Was any part of it her Hand-writing?

Mr. Stevens. No, I believe it was none of her Hand.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Was it several Hands?

Mr. Stevens. I saw but one part of the Copy, and that was all of one Hand, but not her's, I believe. She said she kept a Man to write it, and she had several other Things to write to be printed.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Did she ever before affirm her self to be the Author of the Book?

Mr. Stevens. She did (if it please you) before the Secretary, and before the Council; and said she would answer it. And I have seen her likewise sell several of them several Days.

Mr. Dormer. Did she deliver any of these Books that you know of?

Mr. Stevens. I have seen her deliver them out several times before me my self, she can't deny it.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Compare the Book with the Indictment.

Mr. Dormer. Swear Mr. Fowler. [Which was done.]

Mr. Bar. Weston. What is that Fowler?

Mr. Dormer. Shew him the Book, if you please. [Which was done.]

Did you buy any of those Books of Mrs. Cellier?

Mr. Fowler. I bought two of them. I went to her House, and told her I had a Letter from a Friend out of Oxfordshire, that desired me to buy two of her Books.

Mr. Dormer. Is that the same in your Hand?

Mr. Fowler. 'Tis the same, as I believe. Some Friends came to my House, and told me they had seen me notoriously in Print; so I came to her, and told her I had a Letter out of Oxfordshire for a Book or two of her's. Sir, says she, I'll fetch you one presently; she comes again with them. Madam, says I, I believe you have forgotten me.

Cellier. I know you not; I never saw you in my Life before.

Mr. Fowler. No, I believe not; but yet you could put me in your Book.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Why, What is your Name?

Mr. Fowler. My Name is Fowler.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Where do you live?

Mr. Fowler. At the Half-Moon Tavern in Cheapside, when I am at Home.

Cellier. Your Name is not in the Book.

Mr. Clare. There is one F. that keeps the Half-Moon Tavern in Cheapside.

Mr. Bar. Weston. You swear you had two Books of her?

Mr. Fowler. Yes. Madam, says I, I see you are full of Business; so I paid her Four Shillings for them, and away I came.

Mr. Dormer. Then you had no Discourse with her farther who was the Author, had you?

Mr. Fowler. No, not a Syllable farther. I had only occasion to get a Couple of Books; for some Persons of Quality had been at my House, and told me my Name was in it, and were pleased to joke with me about it, as particularly Mr. Henry Killigrew came one Day to my House, and called me into the Room, says he, you are notoriously in Print, and known to be Company for a great Duke, and great Lords; you shall drink a Glass of Wine now with me, and so tell me the Story; and thereupon I went to her House to buy a couple of Books.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are the Man meant by the (F.)

Mr. Fowler. I keep the Half-Moon in Cheapside.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is something supposed in this Book to be done by you at your going to a Man in Prison, is that true?

Mr. Fowler. That I suppose is cleared by an Oath from Corral the Coachman; but withal, I gave my Oath for it before my Lord-Mayor my self.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, for the Satisfaction of People, tell us what you know of the Matter.

Mr. Fowler. The Substance of my Oath before my Lord-Mayor was this: That I never was with any great People, as they tax me, in my Life, with any great Duke or Lord: That I never did see any of the Things that they say there, that the Duke should draw his Sword, and a Lord proffer 500*l.* or I whisper to the Coachman, That he should Name some great Persons, and then he and I should have Money enough.

Mr. Bar. Weston. But I come nearer to you with a Question, Mr. Fowler.

Mr. Fowler. Yes, my Lord, if you please.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Was one Corral a Coachman apprehended for carrying away the dead Body of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, at your Motion and Accusation?

Mr. Fowler. As to that, I will tell you the occasion of all our Discourse, if it may not be too tedious. Upon the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, a Coachman was one day called to carry some Gentlemen that were in my House; but they staying a little longer than ordinary, he went away, and, as they say, dropp'd them; thereupon another Coachman was called, which was this Corral mentioned in this Libel, and he went up to the Gentlemen into the Room, and they, to engage him to stay, secured his Whip; he comes down and begs a Pipe of Tobacco of my Wife in the Bar: Ay, said she, thou lookest like a good honest Fellow, and I believe thou hast no hand in the Plot (a casual Word that was passant at that time); whereupon he begins to tell her, it was very well for him, for he had escaped that Danger: Four of them meeting him against St. Clement's Church-Wall, and swearing damn them he should stand, and do as they would have him; and he saw four, and he saw Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's Body in a Sedan, and he sham'd upon them that he could not carry him, for that the Axletree of his Coach was broke. I was in a Room by the Bar, and I overheard the Fellow talk after this rate. I came out, and asked him, said I, are you sure of this? Then he tells me the same Story over again; wherefore I began to ask him, if he were Master for himself, or drove for another; the Fellow being sensible he had been too lavish in his Discourse, pretends to light his Pipe in haste, and to run out to see whether the Seats of his Coach were not stolen out, and I took a Candle Candle with me, and went after him to take the Number of his Coach: By that time I got to the Door, he was driving away, tho' he had left his Whip with the Gentleman as Security for his Stay. I came in, set down the Number of his Coach in my Book, and drew up the Substance of their Discourse that happen'd between my Wife and him; and I was saying to my Wife, I had a mind to stop this Fellow at the Gate; but it rained, and so I did not, only kept the Number of his Coach. The next Day Captain Richardson and the Secondary of the Compter were drinking a Glass of Wine at my House, where I told them the Story, and they blamed me that I had not stopped him. Whereupon Captain Richardson took the Number of his Coach, and the next Day sent his Janizaries abroad, and secured him, and kept him in Custody for two or three Days.

Mr. Bar. Weston. When was this?

Mr. Fowler. Two or three Days after the Murder was publickly known of: I think it was Tuesday Night that this Fellow told me the Story, to the best of my Remembrance; and the next Day I told the Captain and the Secondary.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Was that the next Tuesday after the Murder, or the Tuesday seven-night?

Mr. Fowler. It was the Tuesday seven-night after. They blamed me very much that I did not stop the Fellow: I told them how the thing was, and the Captain sent his People abroad, and took the Coachman up by what Marks I gave of him. The next Day I was ordered to wait upon the Lords at Wallingford-House, where was the Duke of Buckingham, my Lord Shaftesbury, the Marquis of Winchester, two other Lords, and Major Wildman the Secretary; where they examined me upon this thing, and what I have declared to your Lordships, I declared then. And they brought the Fellow in face to face; and there he does confess the whole Matter, and made a great Whining and Clutter, that John Such-a-one, a Coachman, and Mrs. Such-a-one, a Strong-water Woman, told him this, and that, and t'other. The Lords sent for two of the Persons he named, and both of them being brought before them, the Lords were very well satisfied, in that one of them keeps a Victualling-House, and they were both of good Reputation, they were satisfied it was only a Sham, and that he only named them as the first Persons that came into his Mind. Getting nothing out of him, my Lord Duke of Buckingham told him, Sirrah, if you will confess, there shall be nothing of what the King hath promised but it shall be made good to you; you shall be sure of it, and you shall be protected. My Lord Shaftesbury told him the same; but withal, if he would not confess, and tell him who set him on Work, then nothing should be severe enough for him; or Words to that effect.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Upon this Accusation was he sent to Prison?

Mr. Fowler. He was re-ordered to Prison, and there continued several Months.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Where? To what Prison?

Mr. Fowler. To Newgate.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Were you ever in Newgate, and saw him?

Mr. Fowler. Never, not I.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Did you never see him but at this Chamber with the Lords, and at your own Tavern?

Mr. Fowler. Never.

Mr. Bar. Weston. And you never were in Newgate in your Life with him?

Mr. Fowler. No, not I.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Were you ever in Newgate with him with my Lord Duke of Buckingham, or my Lord Shaftesbury, or any other Lord?

Mr. Fowler. No.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Or any other Duke whatsoever?

Mr. Fowler. No.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Or any Lord or Nobleman whatsoever?

Mr. Fowler. No, except four Years ago with my Lord Petre.

Mr. Bar. Weston. There is no Danger of him. But as to this Affair, Were you ever with any?

Mr. Fowler. No.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Did you see any Sword drawn, or Money offered?

Mr. Fowler. There was never a Sword drawn, nor Money offered.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever see 500*l.* laid down upon a Table?

Mr. Fowler. There was never any Sword drawn, nor Money laid down.

Mr. Bar. Weston. He answers that very fully; for he says he was never in Newgate with any Nobleman, but once with my Lord Petre four Years ago; and if he was with any Nobleman, he is accused to be there in the Presence of a Duke, and another great Earl; and that the Duke drew his Sword, and the other Nobleman laid down a great deal of Gold, which he said did amount to 500*l.* and told him it should be his, and that if he would accuse some other Persons, they would maintain him; and then he did draw the Fellow aside and tell him, Can't you name somebody? Then you and I may have Money enough. This is the Accusation of the Book: But now 'tis denied that ever he was in Newgate with any such Persons, which is consequently a Denial of the whole Charge.

Cellier. I did not write that this was true, but I writ that the Fellow told me so.

Mr. Bar. Weston. We will see that in the Book in the first Place. We have examined this thing by the by, and tho' 'tis a little out of the way, yet it may be satisfactory: Read the Book.

Cl. of Cr. Malice defeated, &c.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Compare it with the Record, for she shall have a fair Trial, by the Grace of God.

Then the several Clauses recited in the Indictment were read over again by the Clerk out of the Book, and compared by the Judge with the Record.

Mr. Bar. Weston. These are the Clauses in the Book that are proved exactly upon you. Now I must tell you, because this Book doth cast a very great Infamy upon our Religion, and on the whole Government, it ought to be taken Notice of: For in the first Place, to contrive to get a Man into Prison, and by Tortures to compel him even to commit Perjury: Then to hale another Man to Prison, and have him thus barbarously used, as to have Nobles to come to him, one with a Sword drawn, another with Money in his Hand laying it down as a Temptation, and to force him to discover what he was not willing to confess; and then to lay Accusation upon the King that he makes it a Thing of Safety to be the Hangman's Hounds, and to be Accusers for Pensions; and shall aver, that when it is as free for her to speak Truth, as it is meritorious for them to do otherwise, she will discover such and such Things; is a Slander that ought to receive a publick Rebuke: And to satisfy the World of the Untruth of it, I would have you prove, if Prance be here and the Coachman, what Usage they received, to avert that publick Calumny that it cast upon the Nation. For let Mrs. Cellier know, she hath insinuated, as tho' the Murder of the late King was a sufficient Ground to pervert her from Protestantism, which avowed such Practices: When all the World knows, that at that time there were Protestants that were far better Subjects, and more loyal, than ever any Papist was in the World, and as great Sufferers for their Opposition to that dreadful Villainy, nay; far more than the Papists can boast of for their Loyalty; whereas 'tis known there were Villains under-hand all the while, and those that did encourage all that Roguery, and set that Faction on foot which brought Things to that ill Period they came to. Therefore you have set a fair Outside upon a damnable Lie. And that the arrantest rebellious Rogues that ever lived under Heaven, are great Saints in comparison of Protestants, no honest Man will believe.

Cellier. I say, they called themselves Protestants. I know the Protestants were great Sufferers for the King, and I myself felt it; our Family, which were Protestants, were several times stript and plundered for their Loyalty. I grant all this.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Do you? Then you are an impudent lying Woman; or you had a villainous lying Priest that instructed you to begin your Book with such a base Insinuation against the best of Religions. But I have no more to say to that, for that is such a visible notorious Falsity to the Knowledge of all Englishmen, and People of Understanding, that it needs no greater Conviction than the particular Knowledge of those Men that lived in that time. Therefore for that Lie, let it go upon the publick Infamy that attends on your Party, who are notorious Liars, and among whom Falshood does so much abound.

Call Corral and Prance.

Mr. Att. Gen. We will give that Satisfaction to the People: But the Jury are to know, that it does not at all concern the Matter in Issue: For when all that can be said by them is declared, I must say, in point of Law, the publishing of a Libel, tho' it be true, yet is a Crime, and deserves Punishment.

Mr. Bar. Weston. I told you so. But, Mr. Attorney, we are to set a Fine; and to instruct us for the setting of the Fine, it will be a Satisfaction to the Court to disprove the Things she alledges, if you have the Witnesses ready; but if you are not ready with your Proof, let it alone.

Mr. Att. Gen. They are ordered to be here. I only speak that by the way. Swear Mr. Prance. [Which was done.]

Mr. Bar. Weston. Mr. Prance, Pray, were you tortured in Prison?

Mr. Prance. No, I never saw any such thing there in my Life.

Mr. Bar. Weston. How were you used?

Mr. Prance. Very well; I had every thing that was fitting, Captain Richardson did take great care of me.

Mr. Bar. Weston. The Truth is, the very Book itself implies a Contradiction. It says, there was one tortured in the Prison, and the Roarings that they heard were like the Roarings of a strong Man in Torture: And yet presently after it says, that the Prisoner comes up in Irons and is examined. Now could any one having been so lately on the Rack, be able to walk and come to be examined? Any Man that knows what the Nature of a Rack is, knows also, that one that has been tortured there, would not be able to heave the Irons upon his Legs, nor be able to stir or walk; But that is a Thing not used amongst us, it was some impudent lying Priest that durst venture to broach such a Calumny.

Cellier. I don't say it was, but it was reported.

Mr. Prance. Dr. Lloyd was with me many times for half an Hour together, and if any such thing had been, he would have seen it.

Then Francis Corral was called, but he did not appear.

Capt. Richardson. Corral they have got away; for I had him last Night, and he was ordered to be here to Day, but here is his Wife.

[Who was sworn.]

Mr. Bar. Weston. Good Woman, were you ever with your Husband in Prison?

Mrs. Corral. I was not suffered to come near him when he was of the Master's-side.

Mr. Bar. Weston. But when he was out of Prison, How did he tell you he was used? Did he tell you he was compelled to drink his own Piss?

Mrs. Corral. Sunday Morning it was before I saw him; nay, I did not see him then, but I was called to bring him Victuals, or he would have starved; nay, they say he would be dead before I brought him. So I carried him Bread and Things, and I did not see him then till almost a Fortnight after; and when I saw him he had great Fetters on, and I was amazed at them. They put in some Charcoal there to warm him, it being very cold; and, said I, Lord, what have you done? You have murdered somebody, sure? But they said, they put on those Things to keep his Legs warm.

Cellier. Were you ever beaten at any time for bringing your Husband Victuals?

Mrs. Corral. No, indeed, I was never beaten, but they would not suffer me to see him on the Master's-side.

Lord-Mayor. Her Husband hath deny'd all upon Oath before me.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Was he ever hurt with Screws, or any such Thing?

Cellier. Had he not Holes in his Legs?

Mrs. Corral. Yes, he had a great many; I did see Holes in his Legs.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Did you?

Mrs. Corral. I did see one, and I can bring them that brought Salve to heal it.

Captain Richardson. There is never an Iron in the House that I keep, that weighs twelve Pound.

Mr. Bar. Weston. They say you have Irons called Sheers, that weigh forty Pound.

Captain Richardson. If there be one, I'll be hang'd for it before I go hence.

Cellier.

Cellier. I hope I shall be allow'd to make my Defence, and call my Witnesses.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Yes, to be sure.

Cellier. Did not you hear your Husband tell me how heavily he was fettered and used? That he was chained to the Floor with a Chain not above a Yard long? and was forced to drink his own Water?

Mrs. Corral. Madam, he is not sensible many Times what he does say.

Cellier. But did not you hear him tell me so?

Mrs. Corral. I can't remember.

Cellier. Did not you tell me, that Captain Richardson drove you away, and would not let you give Victuals to your Husband?

Mr. Bar. Weston. All this is but over and above; for the great Matter that sticks upon your Part is, the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, and you are pinch'd there with Prance's Evidence; and so you would make the World believe that he was tortur'd into his Confession, and was mad when he did it, that you may the better turn it off from your own Party, on somebody else, on whom I don't know.

Cellier. Pray, my Lord, hear me one Word: As to your saying, I do it to defend a Party, I profess I stand singly and alone; I have been so barbarously used by those you call that Party, that the Protestants have been abundantly more kind to me than they. And I would not tell the least Lye to do them any good Turn.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Then you are an happy Woman indeed, that are belov'd by both Parties; you have not been serviceable alike to both, I am sure, but that is no great Matter; if so be the Protestants were so kind, you have requited them ill by such a base Libel.

Cellier. I say nothing against them.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Can you say any Thing that you did not make this Pamphlet?

Cellier. My Lord, I ben't bound to accuse myself, I desire it may be prov'd.

Mr. Bar. Weston. I think it is fully prov'd.

Cellier. I cannot say any thing without my Witnesses, I desire I may call them.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Call whom you will.

Cellier. I desire George Grange may be call'd.

[Who was sworn.

Mr. Bar. Weston. What can you say for Mrs. Cellier? Tell me what Questions you will ask him.

Cellier. I desire to know whether I did not send him to find Witnesses? Who he went for? What Answers they return'd? And where they be?

Mr. Bar. Weston. Well, what Witnesses were you sent to look for?

Grange. I went to look for one Mrs. Sheldon, that lives in Sir Joseph Sheldon's House, and they told me she was in Essex. I went to the Coach to send for her.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Why, Scoggin looked for his Knife on the House-top.

Mr. Stevens. This Man did see her sell these Books.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Who did you look for besides?

Grange. One Mr. Curtis. And his Wife said, she had not seen him since yesterday Morning.

Mr. Bar. Weston. What were they to prove?

Grange. Truly, my Lord, I don't know.

Mr. Dormer. By the Oath you have taken, Do you know she hath sold any of these Books?

Grange. Yes, I do know that she hath sold some of them.

Lord-Mayor. There your own Witness, Mrs. Cellier, proves it against you.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Who would you have else?

Cellier. I desire that Mary Smith may be called (Which was done, but she appeared not then). I desire John Clarke may be sent for from the Goal.

Captain Richardson. He is in Execution.

Mr. Bar. Weston. For what?

Captain Richardson. For Debt.

Mr. Bar. Weston. 'Tis not out of the Rules of the Prison; you may bring him hither, and 'tis no Escape.

Captain Richardson. If your Lordship orders it so, I will bring him.

Lord Mayor. She should have brought an Habeas Corpus, if she would have had him.

Mr. Att. Gen. He must bring him through some Part, I suppose, that is not within the Rules, and then it will be an Escape.

Cellier. I pray an Habeas Corpus to fetch him.

Mr. Bar. Weston. You might have had one before.

Cellier. This is all because I had no Time to prepare for my Defence.

Mr. Bar. Weston. You might have moved the Court for it; they granted you a Copy of your Indictment.

Cellier. I had it not till Nine o'Clock to Day, and my Council could not inspect it, nor speak a Word with me about it.

Lord-Mayor. At what Time shall we have done, if we dally after this Rate?

Mr. Bar. Weston. Have you any blank Habeas Corpus?

Cl. of Peace. It could not be seal'd, and besides, they should fetch it out of the Crown-Office.

Cellier. I desire to have him come, in order to the Defence of something in my Book.

Mr. Bar. Weston. What would he prove?

Cellier. That I have not belied the Government.

Mr. Bar. Weston. In what?

Cellier. That he was shear'd with long Sheers, and unreasonable Irons.

Mr. Collins. You cannot do yourself greater Wrong than by such Talk as this.

Lord-Mayor. You are not indicted for your whole Book, but for some part of it.

Crier. Here is Mrs. Smith now. [Who was sworn.

Cellier. What have you heard Corral the Coachman say, about his Usage in Prison?

Mr. Dormer. I think that Question is not to be admitted.

Mr. Bar. Weston. What is it you would have her asked?

VOL. III.

Cellier. What she heard the Coachman say, for I only say he told me so.

Mr. Dormer. I am in your Lordship's Judgment, I think it is not Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. She keeps the Coachman away, and now will tell you what he said.

Mr. Bar. Weston. That is no Evidence, for the Coachman might have been here, if you had not sent him away.

Cellier. Let his Wife speak that, because she can testify I did not send him away.

Captain Richardson. She gave them Money before, and told them she would maintain them.

Cellier. You are not an Evidence against me, you are not sworn.

Captain Richardson. But this that I say is sworn.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Call her.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ask her a proper Question to the Issue.

Cellier. I would know of her, whether I kept her Husband away?

Mr. Att. Gen. It may be, you did it without her Knowledge?

Cellier. Have I seen her Husband without her Knowledge?

Mr. Bar. Weston. Go on with your Witnesses.

Cellier. I desire Mary Johnson may be call'd.

Mr. Bar. Weston. For what? What will she prove?

Cellier. That she was to see for Witnesses in order to my Defence.

Mr. Bar. Weston. But if they are not come, what signifies that?

Cellier. I have done then, my Lord; for not having Time to get my Witnesses, I cannot make my Defence so fully, as else I should have done: Only I desire you to consider I am a poor ignorant Woman, and have erred out of Ignorance: I thought nothing, but that I might publish what others had said and told me; and so I have offended in Ignorance, if I have offended.

Mr. Bar. Weston. I do verily believe there are more Wits than yours concerned in this Book; though you bear the Name, yet the Book is not the Effect of your Wit only, but you acknowledge enough. And you are to take Notice, that the King hath set out a Proclamation, that no Books shall be printed without a License.

Cellier. I never heard it. I was under close Confinement when the King set it out.

Mr. Bar. Weston. No, I deny that; for you were enlarged the first Day of Trinity-Term, and the Proclamation came out towards the End.

Mr. Att. Gen. She now does confess she knows of it, because she speaks of the Time, and that was before her Book was written.

Cellier. May not my Council speak for me? I desire you would hear him.

Mr. Collins. I have nothing to say for her.

Mr. Bar. Weston. He says, he hath nothing to say for you.

Mr. Collins. And if you had said less for yourself, it had been better.

Mr. Bar. Weston. The Question is but Guilty or Not Guilty? Whether you published this Libel or not? And if the Matter of the Indictment be proved, what can Council say, except you can disprove the Witnesses, that you did not the Fact?

Cellier. Well, my Lord, then I beseech you consider me, I am a Woman, and deal with me in Mercy, as well as Justice.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Mrs. Cellier, I have not been noted to be a Person that use any great Severity towards any body, no not towards any of your Party; but when I see so much Malice as is comprized in your Book, and have reason to suspect that this is not acted only by you, though you bear the Name of it, but some of your wicked Priests are the Authors of it, as I am sure they are; then I think it is not severe, that you, who stand at the Stake for all, must bear the Blame of all. If you will tell us who it was that set you on Work, and assisted you in this wicked Business, that will be something towards the Mitigation of your Fine; but if you will take it on yourself, you must suffer the Consequence.

Cellier. I beseech you, my Lord, have some Compassion; His Majesty acknowledged before the Council, that I had suffered for him; I ventured my Life through a Sea and an Army to serve him; I lost my Father and my Brother both in a Day for him; and if you have no Compassion for me, have some Commiseration for my Loyal Parents that lost their Estates for him.

Mr. Bar. Weston. If you have done Service for his Majesty, and thereby deserved any Thing of him, His Majesty hath been so bountiful in the Dispensation of his Favour, that he would not fail to recompense you for it; but we are to proceed according to the Rules of Law.

Cellier. But pray have some Mercy in your Justice.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Gentlemen of the Jury, This Gentlewoman the Prisoner stands Indicted—

Jury. We have not heard one Word that hath been said.

Mr. Bar. Weston. No! That is strange; I will acquaint you with as much of the Evidence as falls under my Information: It had been well if you had told us this before: The Business is this, She stands indicted here for Writing and Publishing of a very scandalous Libel. But pray did not you hear Penny prove that she sold it?

Jury. We heard the three first Witnesses.

Mr. Att. Gen. There was the Proof of the Fact.

Mr. Bar. Weston. The rest of the Evidence was but a Comparison of the Clauses in the Book with those in the Indictment, which you are to have Direction from the Court in, that they do: She stands indicted for publishing a Libel, and the Title of the Libel is, Malice Defeated, or, a brief Relation of the Accusation and deliverance of Elizabeth Cellier. Now this Libel branches it self out into several Parts; the first whereof is a very fine Insinuation, as though her leaving the Protestant Religion was, because those that murdered the King, and made that very great Subversion that was made in the Government by the late Long Parliament, and the Army that succeeded them, were Protestants—

Cellier. Pray, my Lord, I say, called Protestants.

Mr. Bar. Weston. By your Favour, she pretends it was by those that were called Protestants; but if they were only those that were called Protestants, and not Protestants, what Reason had she to go off from the Protestant Religion, to turn Papist, when there was such a Body

is apparent it hath been gainful and meritorious to do the contrary, their Villainy will not want Witnesses to testify the Truth of more than she had written.

So that she supposes, that the King, by the Countenancing of Lies, and giving Pensions to Liars, choaks the Truth, and makes it dangerous for those that know the Truth, to divulge it to the World; which is a very vile Scandal upon the King and the Government. These are the Matters of the Libel, and the Things in Proof have been sworn by three Witnesses; one proves, that he went to her to buy one of her Books, and he asked her for one, and she gave him a Book which bears that Title-page that you hear in the Indictment, superscribed with her Name, and she gives it as her Book. Now she would evade it thus, that she gave it as her's, not as though she were the Author, but as if it were her's only in Property: But can any such thing be thought the Meaning of her Words? Or can there be any greater Evidence that she is the Author of the Book, than her publishing of it with her Name to it? But the Fellow goes further, and tells you, when he had the Book, he turned about, and asked her, if it were her Book? Yes, she said, it was: And, said she, I could have writ a great deal more, if I would; so that her saying she could have writ more, implies, that she writ that; and (more) is a Word of Comparison which always supposes the positive Proposition. The next is the Printer, who tells you, that he printed the first twenty-two Folios, within which the greatest Part of this Charge, except only that last about the King, is contained. He tells you, that she sent for him, and employed him to print it as her's; agreed with him for ten Shillings a Ream for the Printing, and that he did print the first twenty-two Leaves at her Request, and as employed by her: Fowler tells you, he bought two of the Books of her; and these are the Witnesses of the Publication of this Book. I must tell you this, the Clauses in the Libel are truly set down in the Indictment, for I did examine them one by one. Now whether or no you can doubt she was the Author of the Book, when in a Manner she did own it at the Publication, by selling it as her's, I leave to you; though I must tell you plainly, I leave it as that which is to me under the Notion of express Evidence; but I must leave it to you as Judges of the Fact, and expect your Verdict in the Case.

Mr. Att. Gen. There are three Things in the Indictment; first, That she writ it; secondly, That she caused it to be printed; and thirdly, That she caused it to be published. Now if you find any one of these, she is guilty of so much at least, though I think you have heard Evidence enough for all. She told me it was her's, and said, she could have put more in; and the selling the Book is a Publication. So that if you be not satisfied she was the Author, yet if you are satisfied she caused it to be printed; or if you are not satisfied in that, yet if you are satisfied she caused it to be published, you are to find her guilty of so much.

Cellier. The Printer does not say I writ it.

Mr. Att. Gen. But he does say you gave it him as your's, and to you the Sheets were sent to be corrected.

Then the Jury desired they might have the Book with them.

Mr. Clare. My Lord, the Jury wants the Book that was sworn to.

Mr. Bar. Weston. They can have no Papers without Agreement, neither the Books, nor any Paper else.

Mr. Att. Gen. Not unless she will consent to it. Mrs. Cellier, Will you consent that they shall have the Book out with them?

[To which, after some Pause, she answered, No.

Mr. Bar. Weston. Then they cannot have it by Law.

Then the Jury withdrew for a little, and returned.

Cl. of Cr. How say you, is Elizabeth Cellier Guilty of the writing, printing, and publishing of the Libel for which she stands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty. (At which there was a great Shout.) And the Verdict was recorded.

Mr. Bar. Weston. She must stand committed to receive the Judgment of the Court.

Cellier. Will you give me Leave to speak a Word now?

Mr. Bar. Weston. I cannot give you any Judgment, for by the Custom of the City, that is to be done by the Recorder or his Deputy; and so, what you will say to the Court, you must say to them; that will be on Monday when the Sessions is done.

Cellier. What I would say is only this, That I am a Woman, and wherein I offended, I offended out of Ignorance, and did not know it was an Offence; and if the Offence be mine, let not others suffer for me. Have Mercy in Judgment; and consider my loyal Parents and Relations, and the Services they did his Majesty; and let this Fault be wiped out by that Service and Duty I and they paid him; or at least-wife, let the Punishment of this Offence be mitigated, in Consideration that all my Life, ever since I had the first Use of Reason, I have been a loyal Subject.

Mr. Bar. Weston. These are Things that will be considered on Monday, but we can't take Consideration of it now.

Cellier. I will go away then, and come again on Monday.

Mr. Bar. Weston. No, you are to be committed till then.

And so the Keeper carried her back to Newgate; from whence on Monday the thirteenth of September, she was brought to the Bar to receive her Judgment, which Mr. Recorder gave thus:

Mr. Recorder *. Mrs. Cellier, the Court doth think fit, * Sir George for Example Sake, that a Fine of One Thousand Pounds be <sup>Jefferies.</sup> put upon you; that you be committed in Execution till that Thousand Pounds be paid: And because a pecuniary Mulct is not a sufficient Recompence to Justice, which you have offended, the Court doth likewise pronounce against you, That you be put on the Pillory three several Days, in three several publick Places: In the first place, in regard her braided Ware received its first Impression and Vent at her own House, it is thought fit that she stand (as near her own House as conveniently can be) between the Hours of Twelve and One, for an Hour's Space, at the May-pole in the Strand, on the most notorious Day; I think there is a Market near that Place, let it be on that Day. At another Time, that she stand in Covent-Garden on a publick Day the like Space of Time; a third Time, that she stand at Charing-Cross on the most publick Day, for the Space of an Hour. And in the next Place, that she find Sureties for her good Behaviour during her Life; and in every Place where she shall stand on the Pillory, some Parcels of her Books shall, in her own View, be burnt by the Hands of the common Hangman, and a Paper of the Cause to be put upon the Pillory.

Then the Court charged the Sheriff, That he take Care in every Place for a sufficient Guard, that the Peace may be kept; and she was returned to the Goal.

CII. The Trial of WILLIAM Viscount STAFFORD *, before the Lords at Westminster, upon an Impeachment for High-Treason, November 30, 1680, 32 Car. II.

THE FIRST DAY.

WILLIAM Earl of Powis, William Viscount Stafford, Henry Lord Arundel of Wardour, William Lord Petre, and John Lord Bellasis, having been formerly impeached in the House of Lords, of High-Treason, and other high Crimes and Offences, by the House of Commons, in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of England:

And the House of Commons having sent a Message to the Lords, to acquaint them with the Resolution of that House, to proceed to the Trial of those Lords, then in the Tower, and forthwith to begin with the said Viscount Stafford, and to desire their Lordships to appoint a convenient Day for the Trial of the said Viscount Stafford: Their Lordships did thereupon appoint the 30th Day of November 1680, for his Trial. And a Place in Westminster-Hall having been for that Purpose erected, the same was as followeth: viz. Therein were both Seats and Wool-packs, correspondent in all Points to those in the House of Lords; as also a State placed at the upper End thereof, with a Cabinet for the King, and whom his Majesty should think fit to attend him there, on the right Hand the State; and the like on the left Hand, for the Queen and her Followers; as also Galleries over Head for Ambassadors and others.

And to the End that the Commons might be fitted with Seats upon this great Occasion, there were erected for them on each Side, divers Benches, on several Degrees, extending to the utmost Walls of the Hall.

At the lower End, the Bar whereunto the Prisoners were to be brought being placed, on the right Hand thereof was a Place raised about five Foot, wherein the Witnesses were to stand; and on the left Hand a convenient Room for those particular Members of the House of Commons who were to manage the Evidence.

And the Right Honourable Heneage Lord Finch, Baron of Daventry, Lord High Chancellor of England, being by his Majesty's special Letters Patent, bearing Date the 30th of November 1680, constituted Lord High Steward for that present Occasion; upon Tuesday the said 30th of November, the Lord High Steward was honourably attended from his House in Queen-Street by all the Judges of his Majesty's Courts in Westminster-Hall, in their Robes; as also by Garter Principal King of Arms, in his Majesty's Coat of Arms, and the Gentleman-Usher of the Black-Rod, unto whom his Majesty had before delivered the White Wand, to be carried before his Lordship: and about nine of the Clock in the Morning set forward in his Coach towards Westminster, sitting at the hinder End thereof, Garter and the Gentleman who bore the Great Seal sitting both uncovered at the other End; one of the Serjeants at Arms, with his Mace, being placed on the right Side the Coach, and the Usher of the Black Rod, carrying the White Wand, on the left Side; the Judges and his Lordship's Gentlemen in several Coaches following after.

Being thus come to the Stairs-foot, ascending to the House of Peers, the Judges went up two and two together (the Juniors first); next the Lord High Steward's Gentlemen; after them the Serjeant at Arms with his Mace, and the Seal-Bearer; and lastly, the Gentleman-Usher of the Black Rod, bearing the White Wand; Garter Principal King of Arms going on his Right Hand.

Then his Lordship alone, his Train borne by one of his Gentlemen. In this Manner entering the House of Peers, he found all the Lords in their scarlet Robes, also the Bishops in their Rochets, and took his Place upon the uppermost Wool-Sack.

This done, and Prayers ended, his Commission for Lord High Steward was read; and then the Bishops receded, and the Lords adjourned themselves into the new erected Court in Westminster-Hall.

All Things being thus in readiness, and a large Door-place broken through the upper End of Westminster-Hall, into that Room which was heretofore The Court of Wards:

Their Lordships passed from their House first into the Painted Chamber, then through that called The Court of Requests; thence, turning on the left Hand, into that called The Court of Wards; then entered at the Door, so broke down as aforesaid, into Westminster-Hall, and passed through a long Gallery, placed between the King's-Bench and Chancery Courts, into this new erected Court in Westminster-Hall, and proceeded after this Manner, viz.

First, the Assistants to the Clerk of the Parliament.

Then the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and Clerk of the Parliament; after them the Masters in Chancery two and two, and the King's Attorney-General alone.

Then the Judges of all the Courts in Westminster-Hall, by two and two.

Next to them the Noblemen's eldest Sons.

After them four Serjeants at Arms, bearing their Maces.

Next the Gentleman-Usher of the Black-Rod.

Then all the Noblemen, according to their respective Degrees, the Juniors first, viz. Barons, Viscounts, Earls.

Great Officer, viz. Lord Chamberlain of the Household.

Marquisses, Dukes.

Great Officers, Lord Privy Seal, Lord President of the Council.

Then four more Serjeants at Arms, bearing their Maces.

After them, the Gentleman carrying the Great Seal.

Then one of his Majesty's Gentlemen Ushers, daily Waiters, carrying the White Wand; Garter Principal King of Arms, going on his right Hand.

Then the Lord High Steward alone, having his Train borne; and after him his Highness Rupert Duke of Cumberland, a Prince of the Blood.

This done, and the whole House of Peers having taken their Places according to their Degrees, the Commons being also seated on each Side, and the Managers in the Rooms appointed for them; the Commons being all bare, the Lord High Steward, after Obeisance made towards the State, took his Place upon the uppermost Wool-sack, and thereupon receiving the White Wand from Garter and the Gentleman Usher upon their Knees, delivered it to the Usher of the Black Rod, who held it during the Time of sitting there. Having so done, his Lordship said, Cryer, make Proclamation of Silence. Then the Cryer, a Serjeant at Arms, made Proclamation thus: All Manner of Persons are straitly commanded to keep Silence upon Pain of Imprisonment. God save the King.

Lord High Steward. Make Proclamation for the Lieutenant of the Tower to bring the Prisoner to the Bar.

Cryer. Oyes! O yes! O yes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth thy Prisoner William Viscount Stafford, upon Pain and Peril shall fall thereon. God save the King.

Whereupon the Lieutenant of the Tower brought the Prisoner to the Bar.

Usher of the Black Rod. My Lord Stafford must kneel; which he did.

L. H. S. Rise, my Lord.

Then he arose and stood at the Bar, and the Lord High Steward spake to him as followeth:

My Lord Viscount Stafford,

THE Commons of England assembled in Parliament have impeached your Lordship of High-Treason; and you are brought this Day to the Bar to be tried upon that Impeachment: You are not tried upon the Indictment of Treason found by the Grand Jury, though there be that too in the Case; but you are prosecuted and pursued by the loud and dreadful Complaints of the Commons; and are to be tried upon the Presentment which hath been made by the Grand Inquest of the whole Nation.

In this so great and weighty Cause, you are to be judged by the whole Body of the House of Peers, the highest and the noblest Court in this, or perhaps in any other part of the Christian World.

Here you may be sure no false Weights or Measures ever will or can be found: Here the Balance will be exactly kept, and all the Grains of Allowance, which your Case will bear, will certainly be put into the Scales.

But as it is impossible for my Lords to condemn the Innocent, so it is equally impossible that they should clear the Guilty.

If therefore you have been agitated by a restless Zeal, to promote that which you call the Catholic Cause; if this Zeal have engaged you in such deep and black Designs as you are charged with, and this Charge shall be fully proved, then you must expect to reap what you have sown; for every Work must and ought to receive the Wages that are due to it.

Hear therefore with Patience what shall be said against you, for you shall have full Time and Scope to answer it; and when you come to make your Defence, you shall have a very fair and equal Hearing.

In the mean Time the best Entrance upon this Service will be to begin with the reading of the Charge.

L. H. S. My Lord, if your Lordship find yourself infirm and unable to stand, your Lordship may have a Chair to ease yourself whilst your Charge is reading. And a Chair was brought accordingly, and his Lordship sat thereon. Clerk of the Parliament read the Charge.

ARTICLES of Impeachment of High Treason, and other High Crimes and Offences, against William Earl of Powis, William Viscount Stafford, and Henry Lord Arundel of Wardour, William Lord Petre, and John Lord Bellasis, now Prisoners in the Tower of London.

1. THAT for many Years now last past, there hath been contrived and carried on by Papists, a traitorous and execrable Conspiracy and Plot within this Kingdom of England, and other Places, to alter, change, and subvert the ancient Government of the Laws of this Kingdom and Nation, and to suppress the true Religion therein established, and to extirpate and destroy the Professors thereof; which said Plot and Conspiracy was contrived and carried on in divers Places, and by several Ways and Means, and by a great Number of Persons of several Qualities and Degrees who acted therein, and intended thereby to execute and accomplish the aforesaid wicked and traitorous Designs and Purposes.

2. That the said William Earl of Powis, William Viscount Stafford, Henry Lord Arundel of Wardour, William Lord Petre, and John Lord Bellasis, together with Philip Howard, commonly called Cardinal of Norfolk; Thomas White, alias Whitebread, commonly called Provincial of the Jesuits in England; Richard Strange, lately called Provincial of the Jesuits in England; ——— Vincent, commonly called Provincial of the Dominicans in England; James Carter, commonly called President of the Benedictines; Sir John Warner, alias Clare, Baronet; William Harcourt, John Kenis, Nicholas Blundell, — Edward Mico, Thomas Bedingfield, alias Benefield, Basil Lanworth, Charles Peters, Richard Peters, John Conyers, Sir George Wakeman, Thomas Fenwick, Dominick Kelly, Fitz-gerald, Evers, Sir Thomas Preston, William Lovel, Jesuits; Lord Baltimore, John Carrel, John Townley, Richard Langhorn, William Fogarty, Thomas Penny, Matthew Medbourn, Edward Coleman, William Ireland, John Grove, Thomas Pickering, John Smith, and divers other Jesuits, Priests, Friars, and other Persons, as false Traitors to his Majesty and this Kingdom, within the time aforesaid, have traiterously consulted, contrived, and acted to and for the accomplishing of the said wicked, pernicious, and traiterous Designs; and for that end did most wickedly and traiterously agree, conspire, and resolve to imprison, depose, and murder his sacred Majesty, and to deprive him of his Royal State, Crown and Dignity; and by malicious and advised Speaking, Writing, and otherwise, declared such their Purposes and Intentions.

And also to subject this Kingdom and Nation to the Pope, and to his tyrannical Government.

And to seize and share among themselves the Estates and Inheritances of his Majesty's Protestant Subjects.

And to erect and restore Abbeyes, Monasteries, and other Convents and Societies, which have been long since, by the Laws of this Kingdom, suppressed for their Superstition and Idolatry; and to deliver up and restore to them the Lands and Possessions now vested in his Majesty and his Subjects by the Laws and Statutes of this Realm: And also to found and erect new Monasteries and Convents, and to remove and deprive all Protestant Bishops, and other Ecclesiastical Persons from their Offices, Benefices, and Preferment.

And by this means to destroy his Majesty's Person, extirpate the Protestant Religion, overthrow the Rights, Liberties, and Properties of all his Majesty's good Subjects, subvert the lawful Government of this Kingdom, and subject the same to the Tyranny of the See of Rome.

3. That the said Conspirators, and their Complices and Confederates, traiterously had and held several Meetings, Assemblies, and Consultations, wherein it was contrived and designed among them, what Means should be used, and what Persons and Instruments should be employed, to murder his Majesty; and did then and there resolve to effect it by poisoning, shooting, stabbing, or some such-like Ways and Means; and offered Rewards and Promises of Advantage to several Persons to execute the same, and hired and employed several wicked Persons to go to Windsor, and other Places where his Majesty did reside, to murder and destroy his Majesty; which said Persons or some of them accepted such Rewards, and undertook the perpetrating thereof, and did actually go to the said Places for that End and Purpose.

4. That the said Conspirators, the better to compass their traiterous Designs, have consulted to raise, and have procured and raised Men, Money, Horses, Arms and Ammunition; and also have made Application to, and treated and corresponded with the Pope, his Cardinals, Nuncios, and Agents, and with other Foreign Ministers and Persons, to raise and obtain Supplies of Men, Money, Arms, and Ammunition, therewith to make, levy, and raise War, Rebellion, and Tumults within this Kingdom, and to invade the same with foreign Forces, and to surprize, seize and destroy his Majesty's Navy, Forts, Magazines, and Places of Strength within this Kingdom; whereupon the Calamities of War, Murders of innocent Subjects, Men, Women and Children, Burnings, Rapines, Devastations, and other dreadful Miseries and Mischiefs must inevitably have ensued, to the Ruin and Destruction of this Nation.

6. That in order to encourage themselves in prosecuting their said wicked Plots, Conspiracies and Treasons, and to hide and hinder the Discovery of the same, and to secure themselves from Justice and Punishment, the Conspirators aforesaid, their Complices and Confederates, have used many wicked and diabolical Practices; viz. They did cause their Priests to administer to the said Conspirators an Oath of Secrecy, together with their Sacrament; and also did cause their said Priests, upon Confessions, to give their Absolutions, upon condition that they should conceal the said Conspiracy.

And when about the Month of September last, Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, a Justice of Peace, had, according to the Duty of his Oath and Office, taken several Examinations and Informations concerning the said Conspiracy and Plot; the said Conspirators, or some of them, by Advice, Assent, Counsel, and Instigation of the rest, did incite and procure divers Persons to lie in wait and pursue the said Sir Edmundbury Godfrey divers Days, with an Intent to murder him; which at last was perpetrated and effected by them: (for which said horrid Crimes and Offences, Robert Green, Henry Berry, and Lawrence Hill have since been attainted; and Dominick Kelly, and — Girald, and others are fled for the same.) After which Murder, and before the Body was found, or the Murder known to any but the Complices therein, the said Persons falsely gave out, that he was alive and privately married; and after the Body was found, dispersed a false and malicious Report that he had murdered himself.

Which said Murder was committed with Design to stifle and suppress the Evidence he had taken and had Knowledge of, and discourage and deter Magistrates and others from acting in further Discovery of the said Conspiracy and Plot: For which End also the said Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, while he was alive, was by them, their Complices and Favourers, threatened and discouraged in his Proceedings about the same.

7. And of their further Malice, they have wickedly contrived, by many false Suggestions, to lay the Imputation and Guilt of the aforesaid horrid and detestable Crime upon the Protestants; that so thereby they might escape the Punishments they have justly deserved, and expose the Protestants to great Scandal, and subject them to Persecution and Oppression, in all Kingdoms and Countries where the Romish Religion is received and professed.

All which Treasons, Crimes, and Offences above-mentioned, were contrived, committed, perpetrated, acted and done by the said William Earl of Powis, William Viscount Stafford, William Lord Petre, Henry Lord Arundel of Wardour, and John Lord Bellasis, and other the Conspirators aforesaid, against our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Laws and Statutes of this Kingdom.

Of all which Treasons, Crimes, and Offences, the Knights, Citizens and Burgesses, in Parliament assembled, do, in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of England, impeach the said William Earl of Powis, William Viscount Stafford, William Lord Petre, Henry Lord Arundel of Wardour, and John Lord Bellasis, and every of them.

And the said Commons by Protestation, saving to themselves the Liberty of exhibiting at any Time hereafter, any other Accusations or Impeachments against the said William Earl of Powis, William Viscount Stafford, William Lord Petre, Henry Lord Arundel of Wardour, and John Lord Bellasis, and every of them: And also of replying to the Answers which they, and every of them, shall make to the Premises, or any of them; or to any other Accusation or Impeachment which shall be by them exhibited, (as the Cause, according to Course and Proceedings of Parliament, shall require) do pray, that the said William Earl of Powis, William Visc. Stafford, William Lord Petre, Henry Lord Arundel of Wardour, and John Lord Bellasis, and every of them, be put to answer all and every the Premises: And that such Proceedings, Examinations, Trials and Judgments, may be upon them, and every of them, had and used, as shall be agreeable to Law and Justice; and Course of Parliament.

The Humble Answer of William Viscount of Stafford, now Prisoner in his Majesty's Tower of London, to the Impeachment of High-Treason and other High Crimes and Misdemeanors exhibited against him and others, to the Right Honourable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament, by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses, in Parliament assembled, in the Name of themselves, and of the Commons of England.

THE said Viscount, saving to himself all Advantage and Benefit of Exceptions to the Generality, Incertainty, and Insufficiency of the said Impeachment, most humbly beseeching their Lordships thereof to take due Notice, and thereunto at all Times to have a just Regard: He answereth and saith, That he is Not Guilty of all, or any of the Offences charged against him by the said Impeachment; and for his Trial humbly and willingly putteth himself upon his Peers; no ways doubting, but that by the Grace of God, and their Lordships impartial Justice, he shall make his Innocence appear. All which he most humbly submitteth unto their Lordships further Consideration.

STAFFORD.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, be pleased to proceed. Then Mr. Serjeant Maynard, one of the Committee appointed to manage the Evidence, began as followeth:

My Lords,

MAY it please your Lordships; by the Command of the House of Commons, who have imposed upon us this Task, we are here to prosecute this great Charge against the Prisoner, the Lord at the Bar. My Lords, there are two Parts that are in this great Charge; there is a General, which is the Subversion of the whole Nation, the King himself to be murdered, the Protestant Religion to be suppressed, War to be introduced, and those other Things that are expressed in the Articles. This General is charged in particular upon this Lord; and, my Lords, it was in Consideration, how far it was fit to meddle with this General at this particular Trial: For if this Lord be guilty of such Crimes, it will prove well enough that there was such a Plot. But, my Lords, withal we did consider when the first Discovery of this Plot was made, how afterwards it took cold, how Rumours were raised against it, how there were Endeavours to suppress the Belief of it; and therefore, my Lords, we do conceive that it is fit we should first settle that, that there was a General Plot, a Plot of such a Nature as the Articles express.

Some Objections we thought there might be raised, because it hath been so long in the World, some Years now since the Discovery of it, some Persons, that is, some ten or eleven, prosecuted and attainted for it, and therefore that might have been Satisfaction enough that such a Plot there was; besides, that there have been public Declarations of the Particulars of it to the World. But being now to proceed before your Lordships in a judicial Way, we did think fit, and we hope your Lordships will approve of it, to spend some Time in the Proof of the General Plot, which we hope will be to the Satisfaction of your Lordships and the whole World; for we do not think that England only looks into this Day's Trial, but the whole World one Way or other, the whole Christian World is concerned in it. My Lords, after the Publication of these Things (which were not judicial), how far your Lordships will believe them, as Judges, we know not; we will prove it now, that their Policies and Contrivances may be laid open to the World. And first we offer it to your Lordships, because we have made it Part of the Charge. And secondly, we shall do it, because we think your Lordships are not obliged to believe Things that are in Print, till we prove them by Witnesses judicially before you. But the main Reason why we do it, is, because we would touch upon those Endeavours that have been used to make this seem as if it were a kind of State-Plot, I know not what to call it, Chimæra, an Imagination, and not a real Thing. This they laboured many Ways to effect, but we shall prove that it is a very real and a very true one.

When that Oates first made a Discovery, it seems it had not that weight that we think now it will clearly have with your Lordships; and had not the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey followed in the neck of it; the World, as it was asleep, would have lain so; but that awaked us.

My Lords, it fell out in this Case, as it did in another: When Catiline the traitor was a great way off Rome, and four other Lords with him, Cicero, Cethegus, and others, five in all; it came to pass, that, as the great Orator that was at that time said, Many were so ignorant that they would not think it; many were so unwise they would not believe it; some so ill that they would not favour it; and some so much worse that they did foster it; but all of them in not believing it, gave strength to the Conspiracy and the Treason. And so it did here, for we look not upon ourselves as discharged from the Treason when discover'd, but when prevented.

My Lords, another Reason to induce us into the Plot of the Main Plot is this: We do not look upon it as a particular Offence, if one Lord was only to be question'd, and appear before your Lordships judicially for it; he is indeed only before you at this time to receive a Trial, and your Judgment: But, my Lords, This is a Treason of a Faction, and of a general Party in the Nation; 'tis not this or that Lord, but a great Number: 'tis not this or that Lord that is mention'd in the Articles, but the Conspiracy is of a great Faction. This do we think, and this makes us so earnest to press the General before your Lordships, that we may give Satisfaction to your Lordships and the World what this Plot hath been, and how carried on every where.

My Lords, the Consequence of that is very great: For, my Lords, if there were a general Design, and a general Plot, as clearly there was; some were to act in Spain, and some in France, some in other Places, some in Ireland, Scotland, and England, and a great Number of Jesuits (we have a matter of Thirty in chase about this Business); I say, my Lords, if it be so, if one Action be in one Place, and another in another; yet if there be a common Consent to accomplish this Plot, then what the one does is the Act of all, and the Act of all is the Act of every one.

My Lords, the Persons were many, and the Places and Times many they acted in, and the Designs which they were to accomplish, and the Means wherewith they were to accomplish them, were many too. Great and wicked were their Designs, to destroy our King, to take him out of the World; and why? Upon hopes of better Times to them under him that should succeed him. Another part of the Design was, to destroy, not that Man that stood in their Way, but the whole Body of the Protestants here in England; not a Murder, but a Massacre and a Slaughter of all, wherever they were that came near them, and none were to escape; for many meant to flee, they would be sure to cut them off: nay, not only to destroy our King, though that be the greatest Offence that our Law can take hold of, but to destroy our Religion, and to destroy us because our Religion.

To accomplish this, that we may open the Generals of it, Arms were to be provided, Men to be raised, an Army was formed in effect; and who to lead, and who to command, and who to pay. But, my Lords, not only were Arms to be had here among ourselves, but a French Aid must be fetched in; Assistance from France must be too: Intelligences and Letters are written, and Correspondencies had, and Aids promised by the Ministers from thence.

My Lords, 'Tis a strange Thing that Englishmen should contrive to have an Invasion of Strangers upon their own Country; and surely they are the worst Rogues in the World that were so zealous to destroy their own Nation: and they were not wise sure to think, that if the French did come in, they should continue great Lords or great Men; and yet thus it was in general. It is very strange that it should enter into the Heart of any Man to destroy so many Persons. But, my Lords, if we look upon what did encourage them, and what confirmed them in this Design, and what they have published to the World about their Religion, we shall not wonder at it; since they tell us 'tis lawful to kill a Heretick King, and the King of England is an Heretick, they say, and so declared, so that whoever would kill him did a lawful and pious piece of Service to God: nay, not only so, but a meritorious and glorious one too, for which they may be canoniz'd for Saints.

My Lords, We find it is no new thing: Look into all the Nations where the Pope hath any Power, or a possibility of hope to gain a Power, nothing hath been able to stand in their way, but they have broken thro' all the Bonds of Nature, and other Obligations to attain their Ends. Look into Spain, King Philip there removed his own Son, by what Means the Story tells us; he was Heir apparent, but he was a Protestant; and there also the Father puts fire to his own Daughter, because she was a Protestant; there a Spaniard goes from Spain into Germany to murder, and did murder his Brother for no other cause but because he was a Protestant. Leave Spain, and go into France; what Massacres have been committed here under the Colour of a Marriage in Queen Elizabeth's time! And before that, how many hundred Albigenses and Waldenses have been put to the Sword for Religion! Consider your own Country, and look into England, what hath been done here, when Queen Elizabeth had a Successor of another Religion, how many Attempts were there made upon her Person to bring that Successor in! When King James came to the Crown, let us remember the Gunpowder-Treason, wherein all the Nation was to be destroy'd; King, Lords, and Commons together; and in Parliament assembled, were then to be a Sacrifice, a Burnt-Offering, though they might all be a Peace Offering; for these Gentlemen are for Sacrifices of Blood to Peace Offerings, to reconcile us to the Pope. If this be made out, we think their Principles having produced these Fruits in other Ages, we may believe they would do so now.

What has been said as History of former Times, is not offered as Evidence of Fact to the present Case, but induces a Probability that what hath been done by such Persons may be done by them again. But, my Lords, we shall make it clear, and bring it home to this Lord, that he hath had a Head, his Tongue, his Hand, his Heart and his Purse in this damnable and horrible Contrivance and Treason for the destroying of the King, the Government, our Religion and our Nation. We shall bring it home to him; but my part is only to open the general Conspiracy: And indeed, my Lords, it is an heavy Burden on my aged Shoulders, considering that the Winter of Infirmary and Age is growing so fast upon me.

VOL. III.

My Lords, The Particulars concerning this noble Lord, because the Credit of it rests on the Testimony of one Man, viz. Mr. Oates, whose Testimony being taken by Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, Justice of Peace, and kept in Writing by him, when Sir Edmundbury Godfrey was way-laid, and murder'd by Men of the Popish Religion, thereby to suppress the Examination that he had taken.

This startled and opened the Eyes of the World to look about us for farther Discovery, lest we should be led as Oxen to the Slaughter, not knowing whither we went.

Afterward it pleased God to bring some of their Religion and Party to make further Discovery: whereupon several Jesuits, guilty of the Plot, were therefore prosecuted and brought to Judgment and Death.

After the Murder of Godfrey, several Fables were spread abroad, as if he were alive and married; as was declared to several Lords: others of the Party reported he had murder'd himself; but his Body being found; it was hard for the Party to invent or tell, whether he first strangled himself, and then run himself through, or first run himself through, and then strangled himself: That was a Dilemma to disprove their Fables touching Godfrey's Murder.

It then fell out, that Mr. Bedlow came as a second Discoverer, whose Testimony concurred with Oates; and then there being two Witnesses, as is necessary in Case of Treason, the Design was to take off Bedlow, that there should remain but one, a single Witness: In order to which, Reading tempts Bedlow with Rewards to lessen his former Testimony, and qualifies that which he had deposed positively was but Matter of Hearing; for which Reading, the Instrument in that Design and Attempt, was indicted and convicted by Three Witnesses, and suffered accordingly.

But then this Attempt upon Bedlow failing, the next Attempt was to take off Oates's Testimony, by charging him with an infamous Offence: for which purpose one Knox is employ'd, who suborns Lane and Osborn, and they swore it against Oates; but on Re-examination confesses the Subornation and Falshood of their Design, and Knox and Lane are therefore indicted and found guilty.

Thus when the Treason was discover'd, the Murder of an Officer of Justice is made the Means to hide it; and then false and infamous Stories set on Foot of that Officer to hide that Murder, and Perjury and Subornation the Means to blast the Discoverers.

These wicked and ill Practices we take to be a second Proof of the Plot, both in general and particular, the Records of which Convictions are here before your Lordships ready to be proved: For, cui bono, none would do such wicked Practices, but to hide a greater Sin; and worse Designs if possible will be opened, and proved by one to whom that is particularly appointed.

My Lords, We speak this that the World may receive Satisfaction; we will let our Evidence be all open and publick in the Face of the Sun, and shew, we go not about by private Subornations, though there are Endeavours to encounter us by such.

My Lords, if we make out these things, here is matter enough for the Satisfaction of the World, as to the general Contrivance. But, my Lords, as you sit here as Judges of this Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar, we must bring it down to particular Persons, and we shall do it even to him, that those things which were mention'd in general were his Contrivance at least-wise, as a Man highly, deeply guilty of conspiring the King's Death; and in order to that, of raising an Army, and the other Things that have been open'd.

My Lords, I beseech you to pardon me, if I have troubled you too long: The Particulars are many, I have had little help to prepare it from any body but my self; but I submit my self to your Lordships, and hope that what is wanting in me, will be supply'd by others that follow: and I also hope you will find no defect in our Evidence at all, whatsoever may have been in the opening of it.

Then Sir Francis Winnington, another of the Committee appointed for the Management of the Evidence, spoke as followeth.

My Lords,

I SHALL begin where Mr. Serjeant Maynard ended, and confine myself to this Case, as it stands before you, and to open the particular Evidence relating to the Lord, the now Prisoner at the Bar.

My Lords, I look upon the Cause of this Day to be the Cause of the Protestant Religion; and I doubt not but that Plot, which has alarmed all Christendom, will be so clearly made out in this Trial, that the most malicious of our Enemies will henceforth want Confidence to deny it.

That the Religion of the Papists does countenance and encourage the murdering of Princes, the massacring of such as they mis-call Hereticks, and the committing of all sorts of Impiety, in order to promote their Superstitions and Idolatries, has been mention'd by the Gentleman who spoke before me; and I should mispend time to say more of a Truth so well known, in so great and so learned a Presence: I will therefore directly apply myself to the Business of the Day, to represent to your Lordships our Evidence of the Plot in general, and of the Guilt of this Lord at the Bar in particular.

In order to which, I shall crave your Lordships leave that I may use this Method.

First, to shew what advantageous Opportunities the Papists had to enter into, and undertake this great and detestable Conspiracy.

Secondly, to prove the Reality of the Plot in general, which I look upon as a very easy Undertaking.

Thirdly, to state the particular Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar, by which he will appear to have been one of the principal Conspirators in this horrid Design to murder our Sovereign, (whom God preserve) to extirpate the Protestant Religion, and to subvert totally the Government and fundamental Laws of this Kingdom.

My Lords, to shew what extraordinary Advantages the Papists had to enter upon this Conspiracy, will very naturally lead us into our Proof of it; and therefore I shall speak somewhat to that in the first place.

It is not unknown to your Lordships, or to any others who have in the least degree enquired into Affairs, that his Majesty has been so unhappy as that (unawares to him) some Ministers, who have been Papists at the bottom, and others that have drove on their Interest, have crept into his Councils, and thereby gave great Opportunities to advance Popery.

P

'Tis

'Tis most true, that as soon as the ill Ministers were detected, and their ill Designs discovered, his Majesty did discharge them: But to the Misfortune of the King and his People, as ill Ministers have been recommended to succeed them, and came into their Places.

In the next Place, my Lords, there did appear in some Men too easy and favourable a Disposition towards the Papists. They were grown strangely moderate towards these old Enemies of our Church and State. New Projects of reconciling us were set on Foot, and Books were written to distinguish the Church of Rome from the Court of Rome. One of those Books, which was printed in the Year before the Discovery of the Plot, pretends, that there ought to be a Difference made between Papists of loyal and disloyal Principles. This Book, as it was written more artificially than the rest, and published in so critical and dangerous a Juncture, deserves, and I doubt not in time will have, a particular Consideration. 'Tis easy to believe how great Encouragement this must give to the Romanists, to see how very willing Men were to meet them, and how freely the Pen was drawn in their Favour.

Another great Encouragement, my Lords, which the Papists had, was, That by the means of those Ministers who were secretly of their Faction, whenever his Majesty was pleased to command the Laws made against them in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth and King James to be put in due Execution, his good Intentions were frustrated, and the Severity of those Laws was turned upon the Protestant Dissenters. This was a Master-piece of Rome, not only to divert from themselves the Edge of those Laws which were designed against them, but to turn them upon the Protestants, and to make them useful to advance the Romish Interest: And when they had thus divided and distracted us, then was the fairest time for them to attempt to destroy us utterly, and to make sharp their Weapons in order to a Massacre.

But, my Lords, that which gave the Papists the greatest Encouragement to enter into this detestable Conspiracy, was, that they had (to the great Unhappiness of this Kingdom, and the Protestant Religion) the Expectation and Hopes of a Popish Successor. This was an Opportunity not to be lost. They had abundant Experience of his Majesty's Firmness in the Protestant Religion, both during his Exile, and since his happy Restoration, and how resolutely he had kept that Promise which he made in his Letter from Breda, That neither the Unkindness of some Protestants, nor the Civilities of some Papists, should in the least Degree startle him, or make him swerve from his Religion.

They therefore could have no Hopes of arriving at their Point, the Re-establishment of their Church, whilst the King lived; and it was too great a Hazard to expect his Majesty's Death by the Course of Nature: And therefore, like true Papists, that would stick at no Wickedness to accomplish their Designs, they threw off all Bonds of Loyalty and Allegiance, and resolved to destroy our Sovereign, whose Life was the only Obstacle in their Way. This was the last and most wicked Part of their Plot, which, though it consisted of very many Parts, yet this was the principal; and our Evidence against the Lord at the Bar will chiefly run to this Part of the Design.

I have only mentioned some of those Encouragements which the World plainly saw the Papists had, before the Plot was detected: But since the Discovery, it has been abundantly proved, that it had been carrying on for many Years, and that so universally, that it is a wonderful thing it appeared no sooner.

My Lords, I come now to our Evidence: And though it may seem unnecessary to prove to your Lordships a general Plot of the Papists, who are so well satisfied of it already, and have more than once declared so to the World; yet because it is the most natural Method for us, first to prove that there was a Conspiracy, before we attempt to prove this Lord to have been one of the Conspirators, we shall beg your Leave as to that particular. And as we shall be careful not to take up too much of your Time, so we well know your Lordships will allow us all the Time necessary to give our Evidence.

We have many Records, Things reduced to Judgment, whereby the Plot is most undoubtedly proved, and which are legal Evidences before your Lordships: The Attainders of several Jesuits and Priests, the Attainder of Langborn and of Coleman, whom I should have named in the first Place. We have also the Conviction of those that were prosecuted for the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey; and there is a Conviction, though not for the Murder, yet for cutting the Throat of Mr. Arnold. 'Tis true he is not dead, yet as to the Publick, I count him murdered by the Papists, though he be alive in the World. My Lords, we have Convictions not only of Treasons, Murders, and cutting of Throats, but of almost all other Villanies whatsoever: As of Attempts to suborn Witnesses, and to scandalize the King's Evidence; and to that we shall produce the Records concerning Reading's Attempt upon Bedlow; that concerning the suborning of Knox and Lane to swear Buggery against Dr. Oates; and the Conviction of Tashborough and Price to corrupt Dugdale, a principal Witness as to this Plot.

I only mention these Particulars, my Lords; and certainly as you are a great Court of Record, you will take Notice of them. It would be a hard Thing, perhaps, to spend the time in reading all, since all of them are made known to the World already; but we shall in the Course of our Evidence produce them, and you may read such of them as you please. All the Use we make of them, is for the Proof of the general Plot, which is requisite to be done; for it will be hard to believe the Prisoner guilty of the Plot, if there was no such Plot at all.

My Lords, We shall make appear to you things which have not yet been brought into Judgment. In the Year 76, I shall prove by a Witness that was then abroad, and discoursed with Andrew Champion, Green, and several other Priests and Jesuits, that they did acquaint him that there would be great Alteration in England ere long; that the King was a Heretick, and excommunicated, and might be destroyed; and this Doctrine they continually and industriously preached. And they further said, if once the King were removed (who alone stood in the Way), their Religion must needs flourish; for this Reason, as the Witnesses will speak, that the Duke of York was on their Side.

My Lords, We shall prove, that they had in England Men no less industrious amongst them, some whereof have been executed: Gavan by Name, who made this Business to go up and down in several Counties of this Kingdom, to prove by Scripture, Councils, and Examples, That it was a lawful Undertaking to kill his Majesty. These things I name, as necessary in order to introduce our particular Evidence; I am unwilling to dwell longer upon this Point of the general Plot. I shall produce the Records, and produce our several Witnesses, Mr. Oates and others, that will give you a full and plain Account of it.

My Lords, Having done with the general Plot, I come now to open the particular Evidence against my Lord the Prisoner at the Bar. As to him, my Lords, our Evidence stands not upon Conjectures, or upon mere Probability, because this Lord is (as we well know) a zealous Papist, and hath owned himself so; but we have express particular Proofs against his Person. My Lords, we have one Witness to produce to your Lordships, who will prove, that in September 78, there was a Consult of some Priests and other Conspirators, at Tixal in Staffordshire, my Lord Aston's House, for killing the King, where my Lord Stafford was present. And by a Discourse in the same Month, we shall prove what Reason this Lord did give, why their Party undertook the murdering of the King; because, he said, that he and many Catholick Families had no Recompence for their Loyalty; but if any thing fell, it was disposed of to Rebels and Traitors. Thus he repented deeply; but above all, the Obligation of his Conscience, and of his Religion, persuaded him to do it, and confirmed him in his Resolution to go on in this horrid Design.

My Lords, We will go further, and prove, that this Lord offered 500*l.* out of his own Purse to carry on the Plot, and particularly this Part of it, for killing the King. We shall produce to your Lordships a Witness to whom he made this Offer, as looking upon him to be a faithful Man, and having received so great a Character of him from one Evers a Priest, that he thought he might safely communicate the Matter to him; and the Argument he urged to persuade the Witness, besides the 500*l.* which he said upon his Application to Harcourt and Ireland they should pay him, was this, That others as well as he were employed in the same Design; that it was the only Way to establish the Roman Religion in England; that he would lay an everlasting Obligation upon all the Persons of that Persuasion, and that he should not only have his Pardon, but be canonized for it.

My Lords, This is the Substance of the Testimony of the first Witness which we shall produce against my Lord Stafford; and that is so express, as I think it can hardly be answered.

My Lords, Our next Witness says thus (for I shall but open the Substance of what they say): In June or July, 1678, there were several Letters from this Lord at the Bar to the Jesuits in London, in which his Lordship did declare his Readiness to serve them in their great Design: And in June (78) the latter End of the Month, my Lord Stafford came to Mr. Fenwick's Chamber in Drury-Lane (he went not then by the Name of my Lord Stafford, but by the Name of Mr. Howard of Effingham), and there he did receive a Commission from Fenwick to be Paymaster-General of the Army which was to be raised for the carrying on the Plot. His Lordship told them he was then going into the Country, but he hoped he should soon hear from them, that they had done the Business, at least that it would be done before his Lordship did return. To which Fenwick made answer, that his Lordship must look after the Business as well as other Persons; and there will be need of some to countenance it in Town: Thereupon the Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar, said, That they had been often deceived by this Prince, and been patient with him, but they would bear no longer, but were now resolved to do the Work without Delay, for their Patience was worn out. Several other particular Circumstances the Witness will acquaint your Lordships withal, which I shall not take up your time with.

My Lords, We have a third Witness as considerable and particular as any of the rest, one that lived three Years in the Lady Powis's House, had his Education there, and was persuaded by that Lady, and by one Morgan a Jesuit, to become a Friar, and to that End was sent to Doway; but not liking to continue at Doway (he will tell you the Reason why) he escaped to France, and at Paris came to his Brother, a Benedictine Monk there, who advised him to go for England. But whilst he staid at Paris, this Gentleman, by the means of his Brother and other Priests, grew into a great Familiarity with my Lord Stafford, who was then in France, and who at last came to have such a great Confidence in him, that his Lordship could not hold, but told him, that though he had obliged all his Friends by going away from Doway, yet he had something to propose to him, which would be a means to reconcile him to his Friends, and bring him into Preferment, and into the Friendship of all good Catholicks, whom he would oblige by it. The Gentleman was willing to embrace so happy an Opportunity, and desired to know what it was could procure him so great a Good. My Lord Stafford, the Prisoner at the Bar, told him, It was a Thing of very great Importance, and after having required from him all possible Obligations of Secrecy, he told him plainly, that great Benefits should accrue to himself, and what Advantage to the Catholick Cause, if he would make himself and the Nation happy, by undertaking to kill the King of England, who was an Heretick, and consequently a Rebel to God Almighty. My Lord Stafford did believe the Witness did embrace this Proposal warmly, and therefore directed him to prepare to go for England, and to go before-hand from Paris to Diep, where he would meet him, and go over with him. But it seems my Lord Stafford met with some Diversion, for he did not keep his Word with him in coming; and so this Gentleman being disappointed, went over without him: But fearing to be called upon to the French Service, he returned back again suddenly, and went into the French Army.

My Lords, We shall produce these Witnesses against the Lord at the Bar; and when they have proved to your Lordships what I have opened, any one who was not acquainted with the Popish Party, would believe they would be at a Loss how to acquit themselves from this Charge. All manner of foul and indirect Practices have been used by them to terrify to corrupt, and to scandalize our Witnesses, all manner of Objections have been made to our Evidence. If the Witness does not come up and speak directly to every Point, we are told, he says nothing at all, if he speaks directly, they cry, he is not to be believed. Thus they are ready Answer to every Witness that has been or ever shall be produced, either that he says nothing material, or that nothing that he says ought to have any Credit.

But we doubt not by this Trial before your Lordships, if we cannot stop their Mouths, at least to convince all the World besides of the Reality of this Plot.

It will be no wonder if their Confidence goes on still to frame Cavils: They are us'd to scandalize the Government, and they cannot give it over. How often has his Majesty under his Great Seal published and declared this Conspiracy! How often has he press'd his Parliaments to go on to bring the Conspirators to Punishment! And at the Opening of this very Parliament he says plainly, That he does not believe himself safe from their Designs. Your Lordships also have voted the unquestionable Truth of the Plot, and so have the Commons; yet these Men are so hardy as still to deny the plainest Truth, so confirmed as this hath been.

Nay, my Lords, their Malice goes yet farther, for they have been so bold as to whisper up and down, and industriously to spread Reports, before the Trial, as if this Lord at the Bar, and the rest who are impeached, should certainly be acquitted. We do hope to be able to detect the Authors of this great Scandal; and the Commons doubt not of your Lordships Concurrence to assist them in bringing them to their deserved Punishment. This is sure the first time that ever any sort of Men presum'd to reflect upon the Justice of this High and Noble Court. Your Ancestors, my Lords, did by their Honour, Courage and Justice, preserve our Ancestors; the Advantages of which, we, who are descended from them, do now enjoy; and we shall never have occasion to doubt in the least, but that your Lordships will tread in their Steps. You have in your Hands a great Opportunity to make your Zeal for Truth and for the Protestant Religion famous to Posterity. No Artifice or Malice can create the least Jealousy in us, that ever your Lordships should shew any Partiality or Injustice to the Commons of England. To your Judgment this Cause is submitted; and we have your Judgment, we doubt not but we shall drive Popery out of this English World.

My Lords, I shall go on to the Proof of our Cause; and I hope this will be a happy Day to us and the whole Protestant Interest.

Then Mr. Treby, also one of the Committee appointed for the Management of the Evidence, spoke as followeth:

My Lords, THESE two learned Gentlemen have fully discharged their Province. I shall proceed to call our Witnesses to give their Testimony.

But before we produce them your Lordships will be pleas'd to take notice, that our Evidence will consist of two Parts, General and Particular; the General, to shew the Universal Conspiracy; the Particular, to shew what special Part this noble Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar, had in it.

And though in the first Part my Lord Stafford may not be particularly nam'd, yet that Evidence will be pertinent and proper for us to give in this Trial of my Lord Stafford, for we charge him not with the private Treason, wherein he with his immediate Complices only might be concerned, but it is a Treason of the Popish Faction, or at least the principal and active Papists.

We lay it in our Articles of Impeachment, That there was an execrable Plot contriv'd and carried on by Papists, and that the Conspirators acted in divers Parts, and in divers Places, beyond Sea as well as here. It was a Treason that did bestride two Lands: England indeed was the Thing aim'd at; the Destruction of the Religion, Government, and Liberty of England, was the End; but the Means and Instruments were not collected here only, but part of them were to be brought in from Abroad.

This is an Enterprize too extensive to be entirely managed by a single Nobleman: And though we look upon my Lord Stafford as a great Malefactor, yet we cannot think him so great a Man, as to be able within his own Sphere to compass this whole Design.

Should we not take this Course of Evidence, first to prove the general Plot, it might be a great and just Objection in my Lord's Mouth to say, You charge me with a Design of subverting the Kingdom, how is that possible to be undertaken by me, and those I have had opportunity to converse and confederate with? A mighty Part of the Catholic World had need to be engaged for such a Purpose.

My Lords, If this would be a material Objection from this Lord, then will it be requisite for us to obviate and prevent this Objection, by shewing, first, that there was such a grand and universal Design of Papists, in which this Lord was to co-operate for his distinct Share; though perhaps when we defend to our particular Evidence, it will appear, that his Part hath been great, and manag'd with Malice as great as any.

My Lords, We shall begin with a Witness, a Gentleman whose Education has given him the Opportunity of knowing the Inside of their Affairs; and we presume he will give you a satisfactory Account: His Name is Mr. John Smith.

L. H. S. What do you call him to, Gentlemen?

Mr. Treby. To the general Plot, my Lords.

Lord Stafford. May it please your Lordships, I know not who he is, nor his Name; I humbly beseech your Lordships, that this Witness, whoever he be, and all the rest that have any thing to witness against me, may look upon me face to face, according to the Words of the Statute. I humbly beseech your Lordships to grant me this, which I take to be according to Law; and that each may give his Evidence alone, and that both against me, and for me, one may not know what the other says.

L. H. S. My Lord, you shall have all the fair Proceedings that can be.

L. Staff. The Law says, my Accusers must look me face to face. I desire to have the Words read.

L. H. S. Your Lordship may see him where he stands up.

Then Mr. Smith turned, and looked upon my Lord Stafford.

L. Staff. I do see him, but I don't know him.

L. H. S. Swear him.

Clerk. The Evidence that you shall give in the Trial of William Viscount Stafford, shall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth; so help you God, and the Contents of this Book.

L. H. S. Your Lordship observes he is not brought as a particular Witness against your Lordship, but to prove the general Design of your Party.

L. Staff. 'Tis still concerning me.

L. H. S. Look upon my Lord Stafford (which he did), and now tell your Evidence.

Mr. Treby. This is Mr. Smith, my Lords. And that which we would examine this Witness to, is, the general Design of the Plot; what Knowledge he hath had of it here or beyond Sea; the Gentleman is able to understand the general Question.

Mr. Smith. My Lords, I remember very well when I went first into France, I came acquainted with Abbot Montague, Father Gascoigne, and several other Popish Priests and Jesuits, who often discours'd with me, and told me, if I would make myself a Catholic, I should have an Employment amongst them there, and afterwards in England; for they did not doubt but the Popish Religion would come in very soon. Upon which I ask'd this Lordship the Abbot one Day, what reason he had to believe it? He told me two Reasons; first, that they did not doubt but to procure a Toleration of Religion, by which they should bring it in without Noise; and secondly, that the Gentry that went abroad did observe the Novelty of their own Religion, and the Antiquity of theirs, and the Advantages that were to be had by it. These Reasons Abbot Montague gave me. There was one Father Bennet and others that told me, the chief Reason was, their Party was very strong in England, and in a few Years they would bring it in, right or wrong. All this would nor prevail upon me to turn Papist, and I liv'd among them several Years. At last I had a Design to go to Rome; and as I went I had a Design to go to Provence (and so into Italy), where there was one Cardinal Grimaldi coming through the Town, and the Jesuits having a great School there, I was curious to go to the School, and they were very desirous I should tarry for some time in the Town: I did, and they made much of me, and told me much to the same Substance, what Assurances they had of their Religion coming into England. At last they had a desire I should discourse with the Cardinal; which I did; and he made much of me, and he it was that perverted me to the Romish Religion. Upon this, the Cardinal shew'd me a Pair of Hangings that were in his House, which he said did belong to the Queen-Mother, and were bought in Paris; and he told me he was acquainted with many of the Nobility in England, and that he had great Assurance the Popish Religion would prevail; and he told me there was but one in the way, and though that Man was a good-natur'd Man, yet they could not so far prevail upon him, but that to accomplish their Designs they must take him out of the way. But at last I left this Place, and went to Rome, where I liv'd some Years in the English Jesuits College there; and when I had liv'd there five Years, I came to be Prefect of several Rooms there, which are the Scholars Lodgings and Places of Study. I have heard it there often disputed in their own College, both preach'd and privately exhorted, that the King of England was an Heretick, and that there was no King really reigning, and whoever took him out of the way would do a meritorious Action.

L. H. S. Who was that that said so?

Mr. Treby. Name the Person.

Mr. Smith. Father Anderton, Rector of the College, who was a very good Scholar, Father Mumford, and one Father Campion; but chiefly one Father Southwell, one of the chief of the Jesuits. And I doubting of the Truth of that Opinion, they did shew me several of their Books there, and directed me to some Passages of Mariana, Vasquez, and Bellarmine, which I have since publish'd to the World, wherein they did assert it as a true Doctrine, and as Christian Doctrine, what the Fathers told me; and this was never condemn'd at Rome. Besides, my Lords, when I was coming from Rome, with my Faculty and License sign'd by Cardinal Barberino, who generally conducts, or causes to be conducted, all Papists to take their Leave of the Pope; and before we came away (for there were five or six of us together) for a whole Month these Fathers were exhorting of us, That we were not obliged to obey the King of England, and that in all private Confessions we were to instruct all Persons that we thought were capable of any Design, that they should use all their Endeavours for promoting the Popish Religion. I, coming into England, made my Application to Dr. Perrot, who belonged to the Portuguese Ambassador, and was Chief of the Popish Clergy in England. I was kept there some Months to say Mass in his Chapel; and afterwards I was sent into the North, where there were abundance of Jesuits and Friars, to one Mr. Jenison's House; where knowing the Principles of these People, I made it my Business to rout these Jesuits away, especially out of Mr. Jenison's House, who had a Kinsman of his own that was a Jesuit, and us'd to serve him in his House, and great Complaint was made against me: And there was one Mr. Smith, otherwise Serjeant, in the North, who gave me Intimation of it, and to whom I wrote to satisfy him and the Clergy of the Grounds and Reasons why I routed them away; which, if he be in England now, he can justify. Upon this, I received a smart Letter, as a kind of Reprimand for my doing so; and he told me, that tho' they did agree with me in Doctrine, yet they would endeavour that they could bring in the Popish Religion, and tax'd me sharply for appearing against it. I told him how the Jesuits perverted the Duke of York; and that by that means they would be the chief Men in England, though there were none of their Order till Queen Elizabeth's Time. Besides, my Lords, in Rome I saw Coleman's Letters, and read them once a Month, as I believe; wherein he gave us Intelligence of several Passages that happened in Court; how the Duke, and the Queen, and the chief of the Nobility were of their side; how they carried Matters several times; the Ways my Lord Clifford did use, and Sir William Godolphin, to effect the Work; and that they did not question but they should get my Lord-Treasurer Danby on their Side too. This was in Coleman's Letters; and he had so much Allowance for his Intelligence. These Letters of his I read several times in the College. My Lords, afterwards, when I came from Rome, I saw Abbot Montague again, and he said he was very glad to see me, and that I was a Priest. Well, but, said I, what am I the better? Where is the Employment you promis'd me when I should come into England? He told me I should have it very soon, and he was glad that I had not made myself a Jesuit; and he recommended me to Dr. Goffe, Confessor to the Queen-Mother, who said he would do any thing in the World for me, and he did not doubt but he should get a Preferment for me; which Dr. Goffe is now living. Truly when I came into England, I found all the Popish Clergy of England, that I discours'd with, of the same Opinion, that they did not doubt but the Romish Religion would soon come in. And besides, in the North there was gathering of Money, in which I was order'd to be one of the chief Men; but I was against it. I told them I would do nothing in it; I thought it was illegal to send any Money beyond Sea: They told me it was Charity, only to repair the College at Down. I told told them it was strange that there should be so much Money raised only to repair one College, which would serve three or four Colleges; and I persuaded Mr. Jenison, and all other Persons I had to do with, not to meddle with it. As to this raising of the Money, I conceive it may be inferred, it was for some other private Business, and I believe was for the carrying on the Design. As for the Gentleman at the Bar, my Lord Stafford, I know nothing of my own particular Knowledge, but only this; There was one Thomas Smith, Sir Edward Smith's Brother, that lived at a Place not far off the Place where I lived, who was one that contributed in paying the Money that was then collecting: He was the Man that writ a Letter up to my Lord Stafford, to complain of two or three Justices of the Peace that were active against Popery; upon which there was one that was turn'd out, that I think is now of the Honourable House of Commons—

Mr. Treby. Name him.

Mr. Smith. Sir Henry Calverly. The other was not turn'd out. So I ask'd Smith, when I was lately in the Country, about it; for I heard a Rumour, that there was a Letter of this Mr. Smith's found in my Lord Stafford's Chamber, and I was told by a Parliament-Man, one Colonel Tempest. So, said I to him, now you will be concerned in the Plot. No, said he, I care not for that Letter, it will signify nothing; for my Lord won't keep by him any thing of any Moment. I asked him what he knew about my Lord. He told me he writ another Letter to my Lord, to know whether he would make a Conveyance of his Estate away, and whether apprehended they were in Danger: And he told me his Lordship's Answer was, That several did so, but he would not; for he expected some sudden Change or Alteration. I asked him what Change or Alteration he understood by it. Sir, said he, what can be understood by it, but an Alteration of the Government and Religion? I am sure, said he, my Lord is so wise a Man, that he would not write so without some Ground. This is all I can say to the Gentleman at the Bar; and this is true, by the Oath I have taken.

Mr. Treby. My Lords, I observe Mr. Smith in the beginning of his Testimony (speaking of the Discourse he had at Rome) said, they told him there was one in the way; I presume 'tis not uneasy to conjecture who was that one.

L. H. S. It was surely the King.

Mr. Treby. But we would rather have it explained by himself.

Mr. Smith. Father Anderton and Father Southwell did say that the King was a good Man, but he was not for their turn, and he was the only Man that stood in the way.

Mr. Treby. Did they name the King?

Mr. Smith. Yes, it was the common Discourse over the Country.

Mr. Treby. My Lords, I desire Mr. Smith in the next place may give an account of the Methods they were to use to accomplish the Design, the firing of the City, and the rest.

Mr. Smith. As to the burning of London, I heard nothing beyond what was at all but this; it was discoursed that the Papists did it, and the Protestants, but they denied it, and they said it came accidentally in a Baker's House: But this I have often heard them say, that it was no great Matter if it had been all burnt.

L. H. S. Will you ask him any more Questions yet?

Mr. Treby. No, we have done with him.

L. H. S. Have you concluded your Evidence, Sir?

Mr. Smith. Yes.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, will your Lordship ask him any Questions?

L. Stafford. I desire to know how long ago it was, my Lord, since he was made a Priest.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, with your Lordships Leave, no Man is bound to answer a Question whereby he shall accuse himself; therefore under favour the Question is somewhat harsh, and we demand your Judgment in it.

L. H. S. What is the Question your Lordship would have asked him?

L. Staff. I will not ask it, since 'tis an Offence; but did not he say he said Mass? Pray how long ago was that?

L. H. S. I will ask him a Question. Are not you a Protestant?

Mr. Smith. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. S. How long have you been so?

Mr. Smith. I have been a Protestant near upon two Years.

L. H. S. How long ago before were you perverted?

Mr. Smith. Some six or seven Years.

L. H. S. That is nine Years. That was, I suppose, about 71.

Mr. Smith. I was always bred a Protestant, and was so abroad till I went towards Rome.

L. H. S. It is not criminal to have been a Priest, if he have conform'd.

L. Staff. I have no more to say to him.

L. H. S. Have you any more Questions to ask him?

L. Staff. No; I never saw him before; he may be as honest a Gentleman for aught I know as any one here.

Mr. Treby. Then, if your Lordships have no more Questions to ask him, he may withdraw. My Lords, the next Witness we produce is to the General still, and that is Mr. Stephen Dugdale.

L. Staff. Is he only to speak to the General, or to me?

Mr. Treby. To the General; we shall tell your Lordship when we come to the Particular.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, with your Lordships Favour, we have opened our Case, First, that we would go on with the General; while we are upon that Head, we will only call those that speak to the General, but it may happen that one Witness may speak to both; but we shall divide his Testimony when we come to observe upon it.

Mr. Treby. My Lords, I take Leave to acquaint your Lordships, that Mr. Dugdale hath but a low Voice, and your Lordships will not hear him without a Command of Silence: which was done by Proclamation, and Mr. Dugdale sworn.

Mr. Treby. Mr. Dugdale, take Notice, we call you now only to the general part of the Plot, what Discourses you have heard from Priests in general concerning any part of the Plot: And you are not to give your particular Evidence against this noble Lord, my Lord Stafford, till we call you thereunto.

L. H. S. What say you, Sir?

Mr. Dugdale. About fifteen or sixteen Years I have been acquainted, that there was a Design carrying on for the bringing in the Romish Religion.

I have at several times, by the means of my ghostly Father, that was Mr. Evers, been acquainted that there were several Lords and several Priests in several Places in England that were to carry it on; that is, they were to have Money and Arms ready for those that wanted, against the Death of the King. I have seen several Letters which have come from Paris, Rome, and St. Omers, all relating to this, to encourage Mr. Evers, and that he should go on to encourage the rest that were engaged. For that purpose I read some of 'em, and intercepted them, because they were all directed to me. Mr. Evers hath sent me upon Messages, sometimes by Letters, and sometimes by Word of Mouth, and all tended for the introducing of their Religion, and that all should be ready with Money and Arms against the King's Death: For I did hear nothing till of late about the killing of the King. In particular, there came one Letter to Evers from my Lord Stafford, to shew that things went on well beyond Sea, and hoped they did so here. I saw another time some Letters which were also transmitted to my Hands by a Messenger that came from Boscobel, which did come from Paris, and so to St. Omers, from whence they came to Harcourt, and Harcourt had delivered the Letters to have the Opinion of some Lords; all which contained Advice which they had received from Paris, which they counted extraordinary good. The Purport of these Letters were to shew there was no way could be more likely to do their Work, than if any sudden Death should happen to the King, then to throw it upon the Presbyterians, who had killed the old King, and were likeliest to be thought to have done this; and so they might easily get the Protestants, those of the Church of England, to join with the Papists against the Presbyterians, who would by that become odious, and so should weaken the Party, the more easily to accomplish their Design. I have of late several times been in Company with Priests and other Gentlemen in the Country, when they have had Consultations both for the introducing of their own Religion, and taking away the King's Life, which they always intend to be about November, December, or January 78. It is late in the Year; but all that Year (78) this was their Consultation. I have been sent to the Jesuits, some of them, particularly to Mr. Vavasor, Mr. Govan, for some Monies, for there was a general Collection, and there was the Sum of five hundred Pounds at one time, which I received, and gave to Mr. Evers, and he returned it to London, for the carrying on this Design, and for discharging an Account of Arms and Things received from beyond Sea. And it was agreed that my Lord Aston, Sir James Symonds, and others, should go in October 1678, to dispose of the Arms which they had so received, some here, and some beyond Sea, to the Value, I heard say, of 30000*l*. Moreover, I did hear that they were to have Men raised there, as well as here. So I have heard from Mr. Evers, and Mr. Govan and others, and I have been also by when it hath been discoursed that the King of France was acquainted with all these Designs, and that he would furnish us with Men, and should not be wanting with all other Aid and Assistance, if there should be any Alteration, if the King should die or be taken away, or to the Purpose. I have been several times put upon to make Foot-Races to draw People together, that they might the better have Discourses together without Suspicion. I was likewise put in trust by the Jesuits all the while the Plot was carrying on, and particularly, for two Years, all the Letters relating to the Plot came to my Hand, some of which I opened, and some I kept in my own Hands; and particularly I had one that came to my Hands, which was about the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey; for when I carried it to Mr. Evers, he said, There was one of our Enemies taken out of the way: and it was contained in the Letter, This Night Sir Edmundbury Godfrey is dispatch'd; which by the Date of it was the 12th of October 1678. I told him that that would prove a Discouragement to us, and would be the Ruin of all the Design: he said, Not so, it would rather prove otherwise; for he was one that was active in punishing lewd and debauched Persons, and it would rather be put upon them than us, as done out of Revenge.

Mr. Treby. Pray, Sir, speak the particular time when that Letter came into Staffordshire.

Mr. Dugd. The 14th of October 1678, which was Monday.

Mr. Treby. The Date of it pray tell us.

Mr. Dugd. The 12th of October 1678.

Mr. Treby. The very Night that it was done.

Mr. Dugd. Likewise when I did hear there was like to be an Alteration in the Government, and having such fair Promises, I was encouraged to it, and was very willing to contribute to the Design; and I did then make over an Estate which I had of four hundred Pound Value for that Purpose, and for the praying for my Soul. And when my Lord Aston and I should come to account, as there was Money over and above due to me, I did likewise promise, because I saw Money would be wanting; I would give them a hundred Pound more. There were several other Gentlemen, as Mr. Hewingham, Sir James Symonds, my Lord Aston, Mr. Draycott, Mr. Howard, and Mr. Gerard, who did to my Knowledge contribute towards the carrying on of this Charge, for defraying of Money and raising Arms, and paying for them. And I have seen Letters from beyond Sea, that have been to Mr. Evers, that all things have been ready as to the Arms, and there only wanted Orders how they should be disposed of; and I have been several times brought to the Oath of Secrecy for fear I should disclose it; and particularly that time that I went away from my Lord Aston's, which was on a Monday Morning, Mr. Evers gave it me, about the 18th or 19th of November 1678. And I did then promise by all the Promises I could make, and upon the Sacrament, in his Chamber, that I would not disclose it; but having others to advise me in it, such as could better do it, that told me such Oaths were better broken than kept: and thereupon I came to discover the thing, which I have done to the best of my Knowledge. I am very loth to charge my Memory in particular, about Times, or how many were in Company, but those that I am sure of; but there hath been in Company at the Consultation several times, Mr. Hewingham, Sir James Symonds, Mr. Vavasor, Mr. Patre, Mr. Howard, and my Lord Aston himself; when there hath been a Speech about the Design, for the introducing of Religion, and for taking Order about Money to buy Arms, and particularly when my Lord Stafford was by about the Death of the King, and that was about September 1678.

Mr. Treby. Mr. Dugdale, you speak of levying Arms, and of the Oath of Secrecy that was given you; were there not other spiritual Weapons used? Was there not an Indulgence, or such a Thing?

Mr. Dugd. There was an Indulgence about 78, or thereabout, which came through Ireland's Hands, transmitted from beyond Sea, and so to Mr. Evers, and Mr. Gowan was put on to publish it, which he did one Time at Boscobel. And it was likewise at all private Chapels, That who-soever was active for the introducing the Romish Religion, or killing the King, should have a free Pardon of all his Sins.

Mr. Foley. Pray declare what Arguments have been used by your Priests, to induce you to this Design?

L. H. S. Raise your Voice, that we may hear what you ask.

Mr. Foley. We would know what Arguments have been used to persuade to this Design?

Mr. Dugd. They have told me in their Meetings, the King was an excommunicated Heretick, and he was out of the Pale of the Church, therefore it was lawful to kill him, and it was no more than the killing of a Dog.

Sir John Trevor. My Lords, I desire to ask him one Question farther, what he hath heard about a Massacre that was intended?

L. H. S. Have you heard of any Massacre that was to be?

Mr. Dugd. I have heard that about the Time the King should be killed, several should be provided with Arms, and such Instruments, and rise all of a sudden at an Hour's Warning, and so come in upon the Protestants, and cut their Throats; that was one Proposal: And if any did escape, there should be an Army to cut them off in their Flight.

Mr. Treby. My Lords, I desire to ask him one Question further, Whether he ever knew or heard of Mr. Oates and Bedloe till the Plot was detected?

Mr. Dugd. I have heard of them from Priests, as Messengers entrusted by them, but no otherwise.

L. H. S. When did you hear that?

Mr. Dugd. I have formerly declared it.

Mr. Treby. Ay, when?

L. H. S. Before the Discovery, or after?

Mr. Dugd. Before the Discovery.

Mr. Treby. My Lords, the Reason of the Question, and the Use we make of it is this; we charge the Papists with the Conspiracy of a Plot, and they charge our Witnesses with a Conspiracy to accuse: Now it appears, that Mr. Dugdale had not any Knowledge of the other Witnesses, and only had heard of them as Persons concerned; so it could not possibly be a joint Contrivance amongst them.

Sir John Trevor. My Lords, I desire to ask this Question, Whether Mr. Dugdale hath seen any Letters from Whitebread to Evers, and what Instructions were in those Letters to Evers about the Persons to be concerned, and what kind of Creatures he was to employ in this great Design of theirs?

Mr. Dugd. I saw a Letter from Whitebread, to give Mr. Evers a Caution who he did employ or trust in the Design; for he told him there had been good Care taken therein hitherto; and it were no Matter whether they were Gentlemen of Quality or not, so they were stout and trusty, or to that Purpose.

L. H. S. What should they be trusty for?

Mr. Dugd. For the killing the King.

L. H. S. Was that said plainly in the Letter?

Mr. Dugd. To the best of my Remembrance, in those very Words.

L. H. S. Was there no Cypher or Character?

Mr. Dugd. There was no Cypher or Character that I know of, nothing but two Letters for his Name.

Mr. Treby. My Lords, I desire Mr. Dugdale may give an Account of those Papers he speaks of; what became of them, and tell us the Reason why they were not produced?

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, when I was by the Instruction of Mr. Evers to take my Flight, I conveyed all my Papers, that either belonged to him or myself, for the carrying on of the Plot, and carried them to an House not far remote from my Lord Aston's, and by the Help of two Maids—

Mr. Treby. Name them.

Mr. Dugd. Elizabeth Eld, and Anne Eld. And they two did prepare a Fire in their Chamber for that Purpose, and they assisted me to burn them: I was in a great Consternation, and great Fear, in regard I must fly and abscond myself, and indeed I did it with Tears in my Eyes. And whilst we were burning of the Papers, one of them spied a little Paper-Book, by Chance, and she asked me, whether that should be burnt; I told her, No; burn not that, for there is no Treason in it. With that one of them asked me, Is there any Treason in the rest? And I put them off, to the best of my Knowledge, and would not give them a direct Answer.

Sir John Trevor. Why did you consent to burn them?

Mr. Dugd. Because I knew they would discover me, and others that were concerned in the Plot.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Your Lordship will be pleased to observe, the burning of the Letters was before he discovered the Plot, or any Thing.

Mr. Sacheverell. My Lords, We desire he may be asked one Question; he told your Lordships of the Letter that came into Staffordshire about the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, but he hath not told you the Reason why he was to be taken away. We desire he will let your Lordships know what Reasons they gave for it.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I was desirous to know how Things went, being concerned as well as Mr. Evers; and I asked what the Reason was they took away his Life? Mr. Evers told me, that there was a Message sent to Mr. Coleman, to desire him that he would not reveal what he knew concerning the Plot, or any Thing of that Nature.

Mr. Sacheverell. From whom was that Message sent?

Mr. Dugd. From the Duke of York. And Coleman did send Word back again, What was it the nearer? for he had been so foolish as to reveal all to Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, who had promised to keep it all as a Secret. But upon the Examination of Oates, before Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, as a Justice of Peace, he was afraid he would come in an Evidence against him; and had shewn himself a little too eager, which made Coleman afraid he would witness against him. And the Duke of York did send Word back again, That if he would take care not to reveal, but conceal it, he should not come in against him, or to that Purpose: And the next News we heard was the Letter that he was dispatched.

Mr. Foley. I desire he may give an Account what Assistance the Pope gave for the carrying on of this Design?

Mr. Dugd. I heard the Pope had out of his Revenue promised several Sums of Money for the carrying on this Plot; and particularly that he would assist the poor distressed Irish with both Men and Money; and there should not be any Thing wanting on his Part.

VOL. III.

L. H. S. Have you done with him, Gentlemen?

Mr. Treby. Yes, I think we have done with him as to the general.

L. Staff. I desire to ask him, then, what Sums of Money did the Pope contribute to it?

L. H. S. What Sums of Money did the Pope contribute to this Design?

Mr. Dugd. I have heard of several Sums in general that he was to contribute for the carrying on of the Plot.

L. H. S. Did you hear of any Sum certain?

Mr. Dugd. I do not know, but I think I heard sometimes of ten thousand Pound, or some such Sum. I have been told by a Servant that formerly belonged to my Lord Stafford, That the Pope's daily Income was twenty-four thousand Pounds a Day; and that if he would do as he had promised, he was able to do very much.

L. H. S. They told you so, you do not know it otherwise.

Mr. Treby. We have done then with him: We call Mr. Prance next. [Who was sworn.]

Mr. Treby. My Lords, I desire Mr. Prance would give us an Account of what Discourse he had with one Mr. Singleton a Priest, and when.

Mr. Prance. I went to one Mr. Singleton a Priest, at one Hall's, in the Year 78; and he told me, That he did not fear but in a little Time to be a Priest in a Parish-Church; and that he would make no more to stab forty Parliament Men, than to eat his Dinner, which he was at, at that very Time.

L. H. S. Where was that?

Mr. Prance. At one Hall's, a Cook in Ivy-Lane.

L. H. S. Will you ask him any Questions, my Lord?

L. Staff. No, my Lord.

Mr. Treby. Then call Dr. Oates. [Who was sworn.]

L. H. S. Do you examine Mr. Oates upon the general Plot, or the particular?

Mr. Treby. Only to the general now; and we desire him to take Notice he is to speak, and to confine himself to that at present.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, in the Year 76, I was admitted into the Service of the Duke of Norfolk, as Chaplain in his House, and there I came acquainted with one Bing, that was a Priest in the House. And being acquainted with him, there came one Kemish very often to visit him, and one Singleton, who told me, that I should find that the Protestant Religion was upon it's last Legs, and that it would become me, and all Men of my Coat (for then I professed myself a Minister of the Church of England), to hasten betimes Home to the Church of Rome. My Lords, having had strong Suspicions for some Years before, of the great and apparent Growth of Popery; to satisfy my Curiosity, I pretended some Doubts in my Mind. My Lords, after some Time had passed over, and I had had some Conversation with these Men, I found they were not Men for my turn, because being regular Men, they were not Men that had any great Degree of Learning. Afterwards, my Lords, I met with one Hutchinsin; I found him a saint-like Man, or one that was religious for Religion sake; and him I found not for my turn neither: For, my Lords, my Design was to deal with their Casuists; that is, those of the Society. After that I had obtained the Favour from him, to have some Conference with one of the Society, I found they were the Men for my turn, because I found they were the cunning politick Men, and the Men that could satisfy me. After that I had had some Discourse with them, I pretended to be convinced by their Arguments. And, my Lords, after that I had thus acknowledged my Conviction, I desired to be reconciled; and accordingly on Ash-Wednesday, 1677, I was reconciled. And soon after my Reconciliation, Strange, who was then Provincial of the Society, did tell me much after this way: Mr. Oates, you are now reconciled to the Church of Rome, and you must lay down your Ministry, for your Ordination is invalid, and you must look upon yourself as no more than a Layman: Pray, says he, now, what Course do you think to take? I told him, I did desire to be one of their Society, and to be admitted a Novice into their Order. He said, it was a very honest Request, and a very honest Desire; and he said, he would take some Time to consider of it, and he would take till the Saturday following. Saturday following I was sent for by one Fenwick: I lodged then in Barbican, and Fenwick came to me, and told me, the Fathers were met at Wild-house, and would speak with me: And he also told me they had granted my Request, and I should be admitted. After I was admitted, they told me, I had some Years upon me, and I could not undergo those Burdens they put upon younger Men; but what did I think of travelling, and going beyond Sea to do their Business? I did agree to it, and in April 77, I went aboard one Luke Roch, Master of the Bilboa-Merchant, bound for Bilbao, having their Letters of Recommendation. After I arrived there, which was on a Sunday in May or June, I can't tell which, I went the Friday following for Valladolid in Castile, and I got thither the Tuesday following; but by the Way I opened certain Letters, wherein was made mention of a Disturbance designed in Scotland. And the Letters did express what Hopes they had to effect their Design in England, for the carrying on (as they worded it) the Catholick Cause, and for the Advancement of the Interest of the Bishop of Rome. My Lords, after I had arrived at Valladolid, there were Letters there got before me, which were dated in May, wherein was expressed News, that the King was dispatched, which was the Cause of great Joy to the Fathers there; and afterwards Letters dated in May too (but towards the latter End of May) came, that they were mistaken, and desired the Fathers there to stifle that News. My Lords, there came Letters dated in June, wherein they did give an Account, That they had procured one Beddingfield to be Confessor to the Duke of York; which Beddingfield by his Interest might prevail much with the Duke, in order to this Design. Letters came also in June from St. Omers, which gave them an account, that Father Beddingfield had assured them of the Duke's Willingness to comply with them for the Advancement of the Catholick Religion. My Lords, after I had stayed some Time there, and had passed through the Country for the Business of the Society, I found that in the Court of Spain some Ministers of that Court had been very ready to advance Money, which Money was returned for England; and that the Father Provincial of the Jesuits of Castile, by his Care and Industry, had advanced ten thousand Pound, which was promised to be paid in June following, within a twelvemonth after.

Q

My

My Lords, in July I received Letters out of England, wherein an Account was given there, to the Fathers in Spain, that they were sending them a Mission of twelve Students, four whereof were to go to Madrid, and eight to Valladolid: The Conductors of these twelve Students were one Father Crosse, that was his true Name, and one Father Mumford, whose true Name was Armstrong. These Missioners arrived in December, where they had a Sermon preached at their coming by this same Armstrong, wherein the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy were declared to be antichristian, heretical, and devilish; in which the King's Legitimacy was vilified and abused; and that his Religion did entitle him to nothing but sudden Death and Destruction, in that he appeared an Enemy both to God and Man. These were the Contents of that Sermon, as near as I remember. My Lords, after the meeting with several Letters there, in July, August, and September, in the Kingdom of Spain, it was ordered I should return for England; and in the Month of November I came for England, at which Time I had Letters from the Provincial of Cassile, called by the Name of Padre de Hieronimo de Corduba, who did in his Letter assure the Provincial in England and the Fathers here, that the ten thousand Pounds should be paid (as I said before) in June following. When I came for England, at London I was lodged at one Grigson's, that lived in Drury-Lane, near the Sign of the Red-Lion, and there I lay till I went to St. Omers; and by the Provincial and Consultors of the Province I was order'd a Maintenance, and it was paid to this Man for entertaining of me. I went and brought these Letters to this Strange, and there was Father Keins lying ill upon Strange's Bed; and Keins was saying, he was mighty sorry for honest William (so they called the Ruffian that was to kill the King), that he had missed in his Enterprize. But, my Lords, this I think good to tell your Lordships, they were not so zealous for the Destruction of the King; till the King had refused Coleman the dissolving of the Long Parliament. Then they were more intent upon it, though they had several Times attempted it ever since the Fire of London; but when Coleman was refused the Dissolution of the Long Parliament, then were they more zealous for the Destruction of the King: But the Design for the introducing the Popish Religion, they have been carrying on some Years before the Fire, by those Instruments, some of whom are yet alive. My Lords, I left England in November O. S. and December N. S. for when I came to St. Omers, it was (as near as I can remember) the 9th or 10th of December, according to the Stile of the Place. I carried with me a Packet of Letters from Strange the Provincial, and other Fathers that were of the Consult for the Province of England, to the Fathers at St. Omers, wherein Strange did tell them, that they had great Hopes of their Design taking effect the next Year, but as yet it would not be effected: He said, therefore they at London thought fit to suspend it till they saw what the Parliament would do. And he did in the same Letter declare, That the Parliament would be about a long Bill that had been brought into the Commons House some Sessions before, but he did not question but that the Catholick Party would evade that Bill. And, my Lords, in that Year, some Time after, we had a Letter from our new Provincial, whose true Name was Whitebread, and his counterfeit Name White. This Father writes to the Fathers at St. Omers, and therein he does order one Conyers to preach upon St. Thomas of Canterbury's Day; and he did therein also tell them, that he would be as zealous for the carrying on of the Design as his Predecessor had been: And a Sermon was accordingly preached at the Sodality Church, wherein after he had commended the Saint, whose Day they celebrated, for his great Virtues, declaring how unworthily he was sacrificed, he did inveigh against the Tyranny (as he called it) of temporal Princes, and particularly of the King of England; and when he came to speak of the Oath of Allegiance and Supremacy, he declared, that he looked upon them as antichristian and devilish, and that it was fit to destroy all such as would countenance them. We have done with the Year 77, and we come now to January 1678.

L. H. S. You speak of one Keins, who (lying upon Strange's Bed) said he was sorry honest Will had missed his Enterprize: You have not explain'd who that honest Will was; explain that.

Dr. Oates. It was Grove.

L. H. S. But about what did he say he was sorry for him?

Dr. Oates. That he had missed his Design.

Mr. Foley. What was that missing of his Design?

Dr. Oates. That he had not killed the King, my Lords, in January 78.

L. H. S. You mean according to the foreign Stile?

Dr. Oates. Yes, according to the foreign Stile, my Lords; we received Letters out of Ireland, and there, my Lords, we found by the Contents of those Letters, that they were as busy in Ireland as we were in England. We found there that the Talbots, and other Persons, were very zealous in raising of Forces, and were resolved to let in the French King, provided that the Parliament should urge the King to break with France. My Lords, likewise in January (as near as I can remember) Morgan was sent into Ireland as a Visitor, (which is something a better Place than a Provincial, but only it is but temporary for the Time he visits) and he returns in February or March, and gives us an Account how ready the Irish were to vindicate their Freedom and their Religion from the Oppression of the English, as they called it. My Lords, in February some were employed to go into some Parts of Germany, to Leige, and to some Parts of Flanders, to see how the Affairs there stood, and how their Correspondences stood, to see whether there was not an Interruption in the Correspondences. My Lords, upon their Return, they found that the Fathers at Ghent were inclined to take into this Business the secular Clergy; but the Fathers of St. Omers, together with the Provincial, did refuse the Motion, because the secular Clergy were more cowardly, and sought themselves, and not the Interest of the Church, or to that Purpose. My Lords, in March we received Letters, that there was a very shrewd Attempt made upon the Person of the King, and that the Flint of Pickering's Gun or Pistol was loose, and his Hand shaking, the King did then escape, for which he received a Discipline, and the other a severe Chiding.

L. H. S. You explain not the Meaning of what you say; that was not honest Will, for he, you say, was Grove.

Dr. Oates. I mean Pickering received the Discipline, and William was chid; for it was Pickering's Flint that was loose. My Lords, this was in March; and at the latter End of March there comes a Letter from London, in which there was a Summons to a Consult here in London; and being summon'd, there went over eight or nine from St. Omers, Leige, and Ghent, to this Consult, and I did attend them in their Journey.

L. H. S. When did that Summons come?

Dr. Oates. The latter End of March, or the Beginning of April, as I remember; they had Notice of it in England before, but we had Notice of it just when we were to come. I think it was in April, as near as I can remember; I cannot be certain in that, my Lord. We did come to Town in April, there the Consult was held; it begun at the White-Horse Tavern, where they did consult about some Things of the Society, and afterwards they did adjourn into particular Societies, where they did debate and resolve on the Death of the King, and that Grove should have fifteen hundred Pounds for his Pains, and the other being a religious Man, should have thirty thousand Masses said for him. My Lords, after staying in Town a while we returned to St. Omers; and after I had staid there some few Days, the new Provincial did begin to visit his Province, and comes over to St. Omers, where after staying some six Days, he goes over from thence to Wotton. But whilst he staid at St. Omers, I was ordered to go into England to attend the Affairs here, and for to do some other Services that they should employ me about. My Lords, accordingly I did come over, and it was on the 23d N. S. as near as I remember, I got to Calais; the 24th I got to Dever; on the 25th I got to Sittenburn, but between Dover and Sittenburn we had some Boxes seized: For at Dover we met with Fenwick, who is since executed, who went by the Name of Thompson, and carried a Box with him; and a little on this Side Canterbury it was seized by the Custom-House Officers, and several little Trinkets in it, which were seized as French Goods; and he did desire the Searcher to stand his Friend, and he would give him something for his Pains, and told him where he should write to him in London. There was a Superscription on the Box to one Blundel, but he should write to him by the Name of Thompson, at the Fountain Tavern near Charing-Cross. We arrived in Town the 17th of June, which is the 27th N. S.; it was upon a Monday; and there were Letters which did follow us, wherein were Proposals made to Sir George Wakeman for the poisoning of the King, and that the ten thousand Pounds which the Spaniards had promised in January before, and was accordingly paid in London at the Time, should be proposed to Wakeman to poison the King. I found that Coleman did look upon it as too little, and he thought fifteen thousand Pounds should be given to him: I found that Langham thought it too much, and that he ought to do so great a Piece of Service for nothing, and told us he was a narrow-spirited Man, if he would not engage in such a Thing. My Lords, there was five thousand Pounds, as the Books told me, paid; but I did not then see it paid, because I was then ill, and not fit to stir abroad. My Lords, we are now past June 78. In July Father Abby comes to Town, who did revive the Proposal to Sir George Wakeman; but being sick of the Gout, he hastened down to the Bath; and when he came there, as soon as he began to be well, he was advised by the Fathers to see how the Catholicks stood affected in Somersetshire; for they had an Account in March 78, by Letters from Berkshire, Oxfordshire, and Essex, that the Catholicks stood well affected; and Sir William Andrews did secure that the People of Essex should stand to their Points; and so several Men did secure that they would have them in Readiness. My Lords, in August (I cannot remember every Particular, but refer myself to the Records of the House), about the 26th of August, I find that Fenwick went to St. Omers, and there he was to attend the Provincial Home, and to give the Provincial an Account of the Proposal accepted by Sir George Wakeman; but in July (if your Lordships please to give me Leave to go back again) Strange comes to Town, and falling in Discourse about the Fire of London, and the Rebuilding of it, he very frankly told me how it was fired, and how many of those concerned were seiz'd; and amongst the rest, told me, that the Duke of York's Guard, as by his Order, did receive them, and were afterwards willing to discharge them; which I forgot to mention before; but upon review of my Papers, I do find that it was told me his Guard did release the Prisoners that were suspected about the Fire, and that all the Order they had for it, they pretended was from the Duke. But now, my Lords, we return to August again. Upon the 3d of August, I find Ireland did pretend to go to St. Omers, and a Letter came from him as directed from thence; but we find by his Trial and other Things since, that he went into Staffordshire; and about the 12th of August (as I remember) he was here in Town. The latter Part of July I communicated with Dr. Tongue, and gave him some particular Account of Affairs; I desired him to communicate it to some that might make it known to the King: The King had Notice the 13th of August, or the 14th, as I remember; and by the 3d of September I was betrayed, and was exposed to the Vengeance of those Men whose Contrivances I had thus discovered. So my Intelligence did cease wholly the 8th of September. Then was I forced to keep private; and upon my Examination, what Information I gave before the Lords and Commons, I refer myself to them.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, will you ask him any Questions?

L. Staff. No, my Lord; I am not at all concerned in his Evidence.

L. H. S. You say you were betrayed: Can you tell how, or which Way you were betrayed?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I will give this Honourable House what Light I can in it; but I desire then to be excused from my Oath, for I can't speak it of my own Knowledge.

Sir J. Trevor. Then the next Witness we desire may be called, is Mr. Bernard Dennis.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. This Witness we call now, is to confirm what Dr. Oates hath said, that he was at Valladolid and other Places in Spain; he will be short.

L. H. S. Call you Oates again?

Sir F. Win. No, my Lord, we call Dennis to confirm what Dr. Oates hath said. He hath given your Lordship an Account that he was in Spain; we now produce one that saw him when he was there, and so confirms the Evidence that was given by him.

[Then Mr. Dennis was sworn.]

Mr. Treby. Mr. Dennis, Do you give their Lordships an Account of your discoursing with Dr. Oates in Spain, or any where else Abroad, and where.

L. H. S. Stay a little; do you know Mr. Oates?

Mr. Dennis. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. S. How long have you known him?

Mr. Dennis. I knew him in the Year 77.

L. H. S. Where?

Mr. Dennis. At Valladolid.

L. H. S. Did you see him there? Was he a Student there?

Mr. Dennis. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. S. Was he known by the Name of Oates?

Mr. Dennis. Yes, my Lord, he was.

Sir Fr. Win. My Lord, we desire he may tell his Knowledge of Mr. Oates, what Conversation he had with him in Spain.

Mr. Dennis. My Lords, I was in Spain, in the City of Victoria; and leaving the City of Victoria in the Month of June, I took my course to Madrid, and passing through the City of Valladolid, going into the Convent of Dominicans, there came an Irish Man, a Priest of Ireland, out of the City to see me; and there he told me there was a Student of the Jesuits, by Name Mr. Oates, an Englishman; and I understanding this, went into the College of the Jesuits to see Mr. Oates, and there had Conversation with Mr. Oates; and in the Conversation I had with him there, he told me that he was a Vicar in Kent, and that he was Chaplain to a great Nobleman of England, by Name Howard; and that he went out of England by the Consent of the Jesuits in England, being converted by them to the Roman Catholick Faith, and that his going into Spain was to fit himself for the Society of the Jesuits. And understanding my Resolution was to go to Madrid, he did desire me to carry a Letter to the Archbishop of Tune, one James Lench an Irishman, who liv'd at Madrid. And further; he lent me four Pieces of Eight to defray my Journey to Madrid, and desired me to pay the Money to the Procurator of the Jesuits at Madrid. And in carrying this Letter to the Archbishop, when I came there, I got a Dominican Friar of Ireland, by Name Humphrey Delphin, to go with me and see the Archbishop at his Lodging; and going in, I deliver'd him the Letter in the Presence of the Dominican, and he perused it in my Presence, and in the Presence of a Priest that waited upon him; and finishing the Contents of the Letter, as I suppose, with a smiling Countenance he turned about, and said, Sirs, the Contents of this Letter is, that Mr. Oates is desirous to receive the Order of Priesthood from me, or at my Hands; and if it be so, it will be much in our Way, and this Man will be a fit Man for our Purpose: for, said he further, Dr. Oliver Plunket, Primate of Ireland, is resolv'd this Year, or with the next Convenience, to bring in a French Power into Ireland, thereby to support the Roman Catholicks in England and Ireland; and if it please God, I my self, without any delay, will go into Ireland to assist in that pious Work. All this Discourse between us and the Archbishop, and between Oates and me, was in July 77. And there I did speak and converse with Mr. Oates. All this I can testify for Truth on the behalf of Mr. Oates, who was then a Student in the College of Valladolid, and had no other Name nor Title.

Mr. Foley. I desire himself may tell your Lordship what Religion he is of.

L. H. S. What Religion are you of?

Mr. Dennis. I am a Dominican Frier, my Lord.

L. H. S. Are you?

Mr. Dennis. My Lords, I am.

L. H. S. At this Time?

Mr. Dennis. Yes, my Lords.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. He hath a Pardon, my Lords.

Mr. Treby. This hath been controverted, my Lords, whether Mr. Oates ever was in Spain; we desire to make it out plain to the World, for the Confirmation of his Evidence; therefore we ask him again, Do you know the Person of Mr. Oates?

Mr. Dennis. Yes, I do.

Mr. Treby. Is this Person that gave Evidence last before you, the same Person you saw at Valladolid?

Mr. Dennis. Yes, it is.

Mr. Sacheverell. My Lords, We desire to ask of him, why he had the four Pieces of Eight of Mr. Oates?

L. H. S. Why had you that Money of Oates?

Mr. Dennis. For to defray my Journey to Madrid.

L. H. S. Was that all you had?

Mr. Dennis. Yes, my Lords.

Mr. Sachev. We pray he may be ask'd how he came to be so needy?

Mr. Dennis. My Lords, I was not altogether needy; but it is very certain, religious Persons, especially of my Order, cannot carry any Money about them but what is requisite for their Journey, and that which may be remov'd from place to place.

Sir J. Trevor. I desire to ask him, did he see any more Money that Dr. Oates had?

Mr. Dennis. I did see Dr. Oates in his Chamber in the College at Valladolid, when he delivered me the four Pieces of Eight, to draw out a Drawer of a Table in his Chamber, and out of the Drawer he pull'd a Bag of Money, which was a very considerable Sum of Money, and I am certain he did not want Money there then.

Mr. Treby. My Lords, I think we have done with him; if my Lord please to ask him any Question, he may.

L. Staff. But only one Question, for I never saw the Man in my Life. I desire he may be asked, whether he be still of the Romish Religion.

Sir J. Trevor. My Lords, We have not yet done with him; the Question we would ask him is this, Whether he hath heard of any Money that was gathered in Ireland for the Support of this Plot?

L. H. S. The Question ask'd of you, Have you heard of any Money gather'd in Ireland for the Support of this Plot?

Mr. Dennis. I have both heard and seen of it.

L. H. S. When, and where?

Mr. Dennis. My Lords, In the Year 68, I entred into the Order of the Dominicans in Ireland; and in the same Year there arrived at Dublin a Franciscan Frier, Brother to the late Earl of Carlingford; and arriving there, he made several Collectors for the levying a competent Sum of Money out of every Convent and Religious House. My Lords, the Collectors were by Name John Reynolds, alias Landy, and John Berne; and arriving at the County of Sligoe, in the Month of May—

L. H. S. What Year?

Mr. Dennis. 68. And when the Collectors came to the Convent of our Friars in Sligoe, all the Friars gather'd together into a Room, and these Collectors coming in did read their Commission given them from one James Taaffe, as they said; and I was there personally present, though a Novice; and upon reading their Commissions, they said Forty Shillings was to be paid by the Prior, and the Friars of that Convent; and the Provincial of the Order of the Dominicans question'd the Power of the said Reynolds and Berne, and so did the Prior; and I ask'd why the Money was lev'y'd? They gave answer, That that Levy and several other Levies was to encourage the French King, in whose Kingdom were several Bishops of Ireland, Clergymen, and others, whose Business it was to provoke the King to bring an Army to invade Ireland, whenever Time should serve.

L. H. S. Have you done with him now?

Mr. Treby. Yes.

L. H. S. Will your Lordship ask him any Questions?

L. Staff. My Question is only, Whether he profess himself of the Church of Rome, or a Protestant?

Mr. Dennis. I am a Roman Catholick still, my Lord.

L. H. S. Are you?

Mr. Dennis. I am, my Lord.

L. Staff. Then I have no more to say.

Sir J. Trevor. Then we call Mr. Jenison. [Who was sworn.]

Mr. Treby. Mr. Jenison, you have been among the Papists, and you have had great Confidence among them; pray declare what you know of their Designs for the Destruction of the Protestant Religion, or the Means of doing it, whether by the Murder of the King, or what other Means, tell your whole Knowledge.

Mr. Jenison. My Lords, in the Beginning of the Year 78, I have heard Mr. Ireland and Mr. Thomas Jenison, both Jesuits, speak of a Design they had to gain a Toleration of Conscience for their Party in England: and the way then design'd to get it was, by procuring a great Sum of Money from their Party, and by bribing the then Parliament. I have heard them likewise discourse of procuring the Duke of York's Succession; and that (they told me) was to be done, by procuring of Commissions to be granted out to those of their Party, to be ready to rise upon the Death of the King. I likewise have heard them discourse of the Necessity and Usefulness to their Party of the Alteration of the Government establish'd, and that their Religion could never flourish till that was done, and this Kingdom altered according to the French Model. In the Month of June 78, I was at Mr. Ireland's Chamber; and there happening a Discourse, that the Roman Catholick Religion was like to come into England, Mr. Ireland did then say, there was but one who stood in the Way, and that it was an easy Thing to poison the King, and that Sir George Wakeman might easily and opportunely do it. I ask'd Mr. Ireland, whether Sir George Wakeman was the King's Physician? His Answer was, No, but he was the Queen's, and so might have an Opportunity to do it. In the Month of August the same Year, the Day that I came from Windsor, I went to Mr. Ireland's Chamber, and I found that he was newly come from Staffordshire, and was drawing off his Boots on the Frame of a Table; he ask'd me whence I was come? I told him from Windsor: He enquired of me about the Diversions of the Court. I told him, I understood his Majesty did take Delight in Hawking and Fishing, but chiefly in Fishing; and that he went accompanied only with two or three, early in the Morning. Then Mr. Ireland reply'd, He were easily taken off or remov'd. To which I answer'd, God forbid; being surpriz'd at that Time; Oh, said he, I say not that it is lawful. Then there happen'd some Interruption to our Discourse, about Staffordshire; then we fell into a Discourse of their Religion that he said was suddenly to come into England; and he ask'd me if I would be one of those that would go to Windsor to assist to take off the King. I told him, No; then he told me he would remit the 20*l.* I ow'd him, if I would go to Windsor to be one of those that were to take off the King. My Lords, I told him I would have no hand in any such Matter, and that I would not for twenty times 20*l.* have any hand in the Death of the King. Said he, Would you do nothing for the bringing in of our Religion? I told him, I thought it would never come in by Blood: I told him further, God forgive me, if the King were taken off so, well and good, but I would have nothing to do with it. He left not the Discourse there, but ask'd me, if I knew any Irishmen that were stout and courageous. I told him, Yes, I did, and nam'd Captain Levallian, Mr. Karney, Mr. Brogball, and Mr. Wilson, all Gentlemen of my Acquaintance about Gray's-Inn. When I nam'd these, he ask'd me if I would go along with him to Windsor, to assist them in taking off the King. I told him, I did not think any Man of Estate would engage in such a Matter; that I was Heir to an Estate, my Brother being a Priest, and that Captain Levallian was Heir to a very good Estate, and therefore I did believe he would not do such a thing, unless the Pique which he had to the King or Religion might move him to it. My Lords, he approved of these Persons, and said, he knew the first two of them, Levallian and Karney; and he set down, as I remember, the other two Names in Writing. He told me he was going to the Club, to Mr. Coleman, and Mr. Levallian, and Karney at that Time, and then ask'd me for the Money, the 20*l.* that I ow'd him. He told me, he wanted fourscore Pounds, and he desir'd me that I would return it as soon as I came into the Country. Now, my Lords, the same Day that I receiv'd this twenty Pound of Ireland, I went with Mr. Thomas Jenison, the Jesuit, to Harcourt's Chamber, to give the Fathers Thanks for the Loan of the Money; and there Mr. Jenison falling into Discourse on that common Topick of their Religion coming into England, he did then use that Expression which Dr. Oates hath in his Narrative, If C. R. would not be R. C. he should not be long C. R. And he did interpret it thus in Latin: Si Carolus Rex non esset Rex Catholicus, non foret diu Carolus Rex. And he did add, my Lords, upon the Discourse, that if the King were excommunicated or depos'd, he was not longer King, and it was no Sin, or no great Sin to take him off; and if it were discover'd who did it, two or three might perhaps suffer, but denying the Fact, the Matter soon would be blown over. My Lords, about two Months after the mustering the Forces upon Hounslow-Heath, Mr. Thomas Jenison did tell me he had a Matter of great Consequence to impart to me; that there was a Design on Foot so laid, as that it could not well be discover'd, and that the greatest Papists, the greatest Catholicks in England, were in the Design; that the Queen and the Duke were in it, and that several Lords, by Name my Lord Bellasis, my Lord Powis, my Lord Arundel of Wardour, and others: I believe my Lord Stafford was nam'd, but I cannot be positive in that. At that Time, my Lords, I did wish I had had a Commission in the new rais'd Levies that were muster'd on Hounslow-Heath. He told me he would procure me a Commission from the Duke of York, and that there was a new Army to be rais'd to bring in the Catholick Religion; but he did say he would tell me more Particulars after my receiving the Sacrament of Secrecy; and I did understand by him, that that Commission was not to be sent till the taking off the King was effected: But being I was surpriz'd at it, he would not tell me the whole Matter, but he desir'd me to come and receive the Sacrament at Sir Philip Tyrwhitt's in Bloomsbury, and then he would acquaint me with the whole Affair. My Lords, being in Berkshire about the Month of December 78, at Madam Hall's in Shinfield Parish, one Mr. Cuffil a Jesuit came into our Company. It was about the Trial of Coleman; and Mr. Cuffil did then say, that he thought Mr. Coleman was infatuated, upon the Discovery of the Plot, to give Notice to Mr.

Harcourt,

Harcourt, Mr. Ireland, and Mr. Fenwick, and the other Jesuits, to burn or secure their Papers, and yet not to secure his own. My Sister Hall was present at this Discourse; and Mr. Cuffil did then further say, that Bellarmine did draw a Sentence out of the Scripture, to favour the Pope's Authority of excommunicating, depriving, and deposing temporal Princes; and the Saying was this, Quod Papa habeat eandem potestatem super Reges, quam Jehoiada habuit super Ahaliam. And that there were other corroborating Testimonies among the Fathers for it.

Mr. Treby. My Lords, we desire to ask him, whether ever he heard of Mr. Oates being in the Plot, or being thought Trust-worthy among them.

Mr. Jen. Yes, my Lords, I did.

L. H. S. When did you hear it, and of whom?

Mr. Jen. Of my Brother Tho. Fenison the Jesuit.

L. H. S. When did he tell you so?

Mr. Jen. About the latter end of July 78, when there was a Discourse of a Design, and that the greatest Papists were in it, he said, Mr. Oates, a Parson newly come over to them, was in that Design: I answer'd, I did wonder that he would trust a reconcil'd Enemy. He answer'd, That being once reconcil'd, they were more zealous and trusty. I submitted to his Opinion, and instanc'd in Dr. Godwyn and Dr. Bayley, that were Protestants, and afterwards came over to the Church of Rome.

Mr. Treby. We have done with him, my Lord.

L. H. S. Will your Lordship ask him any Questions, my Lord Stafford?

L. Staff. No, my Lord.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, I would only observe the time when he says his Brother told him of the Design, that it was about the time of the mustering the Forces on Hounslow-heath; and that he was then told Mr. Oates was in the Plot: I only observe it now, for the end of the Case in point of Time.

L. H. S. He said it was in July.

Mr. Jen. It was two Months after the mustering of the Forces, about the latter end of July.

L. H. S. Before the Discovery?

Mr. Jen. Yes.

L. H. S. Did you know Oates at that time?

Mr. Jen. No, my Lords, I was not acquainted with him.

Sir J. Trevor. Did you not see him then?

Mr. Jen. Yes, I saw him at Ireland's Chamber.

Sir J. Trevor. When was that?

Mr. Jen. The latter end of April, or the beginning of May.

L. H. S. You say you did not know him in July; how then can you say you saw him before?

Mr. Jen. I did not know him; I only saw him come into Ireland's Chamber, and whisper for some time, two or three Minutes, and then they told me that that was Mr. Oates, a Parson newly come over to them, a brisk jolly Man, and worthy my Acquaintance.

L. H. S. Is this the same Man you saw there?

Mr. Jen. My Lords, I cannot remember his Face, for he was gone out when I was told of him.

L. H. S. Why, you know Mr. Oates now?

Mr. Fenison. Yes, I do.

L. H. S. Do you know him to be the same Man that you saw then?

Mr. Fenison. I can't tell that.

Sir J. Trevor. My Lords, He says, Mr. Oates only came in for three or four Minutes, and his Back was towards him, and his Brother told him when he was gone who it was.

Mr. Fenison. I only knew his Name from my Brother.

Mr. Treby. And I presume your Lordships will observe this was at the very Time of the Jesuits Consult.

Sir J. Trevor. We desire this Gentleman may tell your Lordships who his Brother is, and what Profession he is of.

Mr. Fenison. My Brother was a Jesuit brought up at St. Omers.

L. H. S. Your Brother is dead, and died in Newgate?

Mr. Fenison. Yes, he did so.

L. H. S. Pray recollect yourself again: When was it that you saw the Man they called Oates at the Jesuit's Chamber?

Mr. Fenison. My Lords, It was in the Year 78, the latter end of April, or the beginning of May. And I will tell you why I apprehend it to be that Time. My Brother being a Priest, liv'd with Sir Philip Tyrwhitt in Lincolnshire; and in that Year, in Lent, he came to Town with my Lady and that Family, and he and I used to dine together at the Fifth-Ordinary at Pedley's. And about three Weeks or a Month after that Time, when he came to Town, I was at Mr. Ireland's Chamber, and there was a Gentleman, whom they told me was Oates.

L. H. S. This you say was the latter end of April, or beginning of May 78; for the Time is material: Upon your Oath you say it?

Mr. Fenison. Yes, my Lords, I do.

L. H. S. You say it was at Ireland's Chamber?

Mr. Fenison. Yes, my Lords.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, Will you give us leave to ask him one short Question; because some of the Gentlemen doubt of it, we would ask it again: What his Brother was, whether he was a Jesuit or no?

Mr. Fenison. I have heard him own it, my Lords.

L. H. S. Whom do you call next, Gentlemen?

Mr. Treby. If it please your Lordships, we shall in the next place produce our Evidences that are Matters of Record; and we desire your Lordship's Advice and Direction how we are to minister the same, whether your Lordships will have them all read, or but a Word of them, and let them be left with your Lordships.

L. H. S. What Records are they?

Mr. Treby. They are the Records of the Attainder of Coleman, Ireland, and the other Conspirators.

L. H. S. The Fact is so notorious that they were attainted and executed, that the reading of a Word will serve the Turn.

Sir J. Trevor. Then we desire they may be produc'd here, and the Copies prov'd upon Oath; and then we shall leave them upon your Lordships Table. And, my Lords, we desire likewise at the same time, to save another Trouble, there may be deliver'd in the Convictions of Reading, Lane, Knox, and others.

Then Mr. Clare was sworn, and deliver'd in the Copies of the Records.

L. H. S. What Record is that?

Mr. Clare. It is the Record of the Attainder of Coleman for High-Treason.

L. H. S. Did you examine it?

Mr. Clare. I did examine it.

L. H. S. Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Clare. To the best of my Understanding, it is. Here is likewise a Copy of the Record of the Conviction of Ireland, Pickering, and Grove, for High-Treason.

L. H. S. Is there Judgment of Attainder entred upon Record?

Mr. Clare. Yes, my Lords, there is Judgment entred. Here is a Copy of the Indictment, Conviction, and Attainder of Whitbread, Fenwick, Harcourt, Gavan, and Turner for High-Treason. Here is a Copy of the Record of Attainder of Richard Langbarn for High-Treason. Here is a Copy of the Attainder of Green, Berry, and Hill, for the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey. Here is a Copy of the Conviction of Mr. Nathaniel Reading, for endeavouring to suborn Mr. Bedloe to retract his Evidence against some Lords in the Tower, and Sir Henry Tichburn.

L. H. S. What is the Judgment there?

Mr. Clare. The Judgment is entred upon it; and 'tis to pay 1000l. Fine, and to be put in and upon the Pillory in the Palace-Yard, Westminster, for an Hour, with a Paper upon his Head, written in great Letters, For endeavouring Subornation of Perjury. Here is a Copy of the Record of the Conviction of Tsbrough and Price, for endeavouring to suborn Mr. Dugdale, and Judgment entred upon it. And here is a Copy of the Record of Conviction of Knox and Lane, for conspiring to asperse Dr. Oates and Mr. Bedloe.

Here is the Record of the Conviction of John Giles, for barbarously attempting to assassinate John Arnold, Esq. one of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace; and the Judgment entred thereupon is, To stand three times on the Pillory, with a Paper on his Hat declaring his Offence; to pay 500l. to the King, to lie in Execution till the same be paid, and find Sureties for his good Behaviour during Life.

L. H. S. Deliver them all in. And if my Lords have occasion to doubt of any thing, being left in the Court, they will be there ready to be us'd. (All which were then deliver'd in.)

Mr. Treby. My Lords, we humbly desire that the Record of Coleman may be read, because there is more of special Matter in it than any of the rest, and your Lordships may dispose of the others as you please.

L. H. S. Read the Record of Coleman.

Then the Clerk read (in Latin) the Record of the Attainder of Edward Coleman, formerly executed for High-Treason, by him committed in this horrid Popish Plot, which is in English as followeth.

Of the Term of St. Michael, to the thirteenth Year of the Reign of King Charles the Second, &c.

Middlesex.

At another Time, to wit, on Wednesday next after eight Days of St. Martin this same Term, before our Lord the King at Westminster, by the Oath of twelve Jurors, honest and lawful Men of the County aforesaid, sworn and charged to enquire for our said Lord the King and the Body of the County aforesaid, it stands presented, That Edward Coleman, late of the Parish of St. Margaret, Westminster, in the County of Middlesex, Gent. as a false Traitor against the most illustrious, most serene, and most excellent Prince, our Lord Charles the Second, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. and his natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but by the Instigation of the Devil moved and seduced, the cordial Love, and the true, due and natural Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our said Lord the King towards him our said Lord the King ought and of right are bound to bear, utterly withdrawing; and devising, and with his whole Strength intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to disturb, and the true Worship of God within this Kingdom of England practised, and by Law established, to overthrow; and Sedition and Rebellion within this Realm of England to move, stir up, and procure; and the cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our said Lord the King towards him our said Lord the King should bear, and of right are bound to bear, utterly to withdraw, blot out, and extinguish, and our said Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to bring and put; the 29th Day of September, the 27th Year of the Reign of our Lord Charles the Second, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. at the Parish of St. Margaret, Westminster aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, subtilly and traitorously proposed, compassed, imagined and intended Sedition and Rebellion within this Realm of England to move, raise up and procure, and a miserable Slaughter among the Subjects of our said Lord the King to procure and cause; and our said Lord the King from his kingly State, Title, Power and Government of this Realm of England utterly to deprive, depose, deject and disinheret, and him our said Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to bring and put; and the Government of the same Realm, and the sincere Religion of God in this Kingdom, rightly, and by the Laws of this Realm established, for his Will and Pleasure to change and alter, and the State of this whole Kingdom in it's universal Parts well instituted and ordained, wholly to subvert and destroy, and War against our said Lord the King within this Realm of England to levy. And to accomplish and fulfil these his most wicked Treasons and traitorous Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid, the same Edward Coleman afterwards, to wit, the said 29th Day of September, in the above said 27th Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King, at the Parish of St. Margaret Westminster aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, falsely, subtilly and traitorously devised, composed, and writ two Letters to be sent to one Monsieur le Chaise, then Servant and Confessor of Lewis the French King, to desire, procure and obtain to the said Edward Coleman, and other false Traitors against our said Sovereign Lord the King, from the said French King, his Aid, Assistance and Adherence, to alter the true Religion in this Kingdom then and still established, to the Superstition of the Church of Rome, and to subvert the Government of this Kingdom of England: And afterwards, to wit, the said 29th Day of September, in the above said 27th Year of the Reign of our said Lord, now King of England, &c. at the aforesaid Parish of St. Margaret Westminster in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, falsely and traitorously devised, composed and writ two other Letters to be sent to one Monsf. le Chaise, then Servant and Confessor of the said French King, to the Intent that he the said Monsf. le Chaise should should intreat, procure and obtain to the said Edward Coleman, and other false Traitors against our said Sovereign Lord the King, from the aforesaid French King, his Aid, Assistance and Adherence to alter the true Religion in this Kingdom of England then and still establish'd, to the Superstition of the Church of Rome, and to subvert the Government of this Kingdom of England: And that the aforesaid Edward Coleman, in further Prosecution of his Treasons and traitorous Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid, afterwards, to wit, the same 29th Day of September, in the aforesaid 27th Year of the Reign of our said now Lord the King, the aforesaid several Letters from the said Parish of St. Margaret Westminster, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, falsely, subtilly and traitorously did send into Parts beyond the Seas, there to be delivered to the said Monsieur Le Chaise. And that the aforesaid Edward Coleman, afterwards, to wit, the 1st Day of December in the 27th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, now King of England, &c. at the aforesaid Parish of St. Margaret Westminster, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, one Letter from the aforesaid Monsieur Le Chaise (in answer to one of the said Letters, so by him the said Edward Coleman writ, and to the said Monsieur Le Chaise to be sent, first mentioned) falsely, subtilly and traitorously receiv'd; and that Letter so in Answer receiv'd, the Day and Year last aforesaid, at the aforesaid Parish of St. Margaret Westminster aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, falsely, subtilly and traitorously did inspect and read over; and that the aforesaid Edward Coleman, the Letter aforesaid so by him in answer received, in his Custody and Possession the Day and Year last aforesaid, at the aforesaid Parish of St. Margaret Westminster, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, falsely, subtilly and traitorously detained, concealed and kept; by which said Letter the said Monsieur Le Chaise, the Day and Year last aforesaid, at the aforesaid Parish of St. Margaret Westminster, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, signify'd and promised to the said Edward Coleman, to obtain for him the said Edward Coleman and other false Traitors against our said Lord the King, from the said French King, his Aid, Assistance and Adherence. And that the aforesaid Edward Coleman, afterwards, to wit, the 10th Day of December in the aforesaid 27th Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord Charles II. now King of England, &c. at the Parish of St. Margaret Westminster aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, subtilly and traitorously did relate and declare his traitorous Designs and Purposes aforesaid to one Monsieur Ruigni (then Envoy Extraordinary from the French King to our said most serene King, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, residing) to move and excite him the said Envoy Extraordinary with him the said Edward Coleman in his Treasons aforesaid to partake: And the sooner to fulfil and compleat those his most wicked Treasons and traitorous Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid, he the said Edward Coleman, afterwards, to wit, the 10th Day of December, in the aforesaid 27th Year of the Reign of our said Lord Charles the Second now King of England, &c. at the aforesaid Parish of St. Margaret Westminster, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, advisedly, maliciously, subtilly and traitorously did devise, compose, and write three other Letters to be sent to one Sir William Throgmorton, Kt. then a Subject of our now Lord the King, of this Kingdom of England, and residing in France in Parts beyond the Seas, to solicit him the aforesaid Monsieur Le Chaise to procure and obtain of the said French King his Aid, Assistance and Adherence aforesaid. And those Letters last mentioned, afterwards, to wit, the Day and Year last aforesaid, from the aforesaid Parish of St. Margaret Westminster, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, to the same Sir William Throgmorton in France aforesaid, falsely and traitorously did send, and cause to be delivered, against the Duty of his Allegiance, and against the Peace of our said now Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in such Case made and provided. Wherefore it was commanded the Sheriff of the County aforesaid, that he should not omit, &c. but that he should take him, if, &c. to answer, &c. And now, to wit, on Saturday next after eight Days of St. Martin, this same Term, before our Lord the King at Westminster, came the aforesaid Edward Coleman, under the Custody of William Richardson, Gent. Keeper of the Goal of our said Lord the King of Newgate, by virtue of the King's Writ of Habeas Corpus ad subjiciend', &c. (into whose Custody before then, for the Cause aforesaid, he was committed) to the Bar here brought in his proper Person, who is committed to the Marshal, &c. and presently of the Premises to him above imposed, being asked, How he will thereof be acquitted? saith, That he is in no wise thereof guilty, and thereof for Good and Evil doth put himself upon the Country. Therefore let a Jury thereupon come before our Lord the King at Westminster on Wednesday next after fifteen Days of St. Martin; and who, &c. to recognize, &c. because, &c. the same Day is given to the said Edward Coleman, &c. under the Custody of the said Keeper of the Goal of our said Lord the King, of Newgate aforesaid, in the mean time committed to be safely kept until, &c. At which Wednesday next after fifteen Days of St. Martin, before our Lord the King at Westminster, came the aforesaid Edward Coleman under Custody of the aforesaid Keeper of the King's Goal of Newgate aforesaid, by virtue of a Writ of our Lord the King of Habeas Corpus ad subjiciend', &c. to the Bar here brought in his proper Person, who is committed to the aforesaid Keeper of the King's Goal of Newgate aforesaid. And the Jurors of the Jury aforesaid, by the Sheriff of the County aforesaid hereunto impannell'd, being call'd, came; who being chosen, tried and sworn to speak the Truth upon the Premises, say upon their Oaths, That the aforesaid Edward Coleman is guilty of the High-Treason aforesaid, in the Indictment aforesaid specify'd, in manner and form as by the said Indictment above against him is supposed; and that the aforesaid Edward Coleman at the time of Perpetration of the High-Treason aforesaid, or at any time afterwards, had no Goods, Chattels, Lands or Tenements, to the Knowledge of the Jurors aforesaid. And the aforesaid Edward Coleman being asked if he hath any thing, or knows what to say for himself, why the Court here ought not to proceed to Judgment and Execution of him upon the Verdict aforesaid, saith nothing, but as before he had said: And hereupon instantly the Attorney-General of our said Lord the King, according to due Form of Law, demandeth against him the said Edward Coleman Judgment and Execution to be had upon the Verdict aforesaid, for our Lord the King. Whereupon all and singular the Premises being view'd, and by the Court here understood, it is considered, That the said Edward Coleman be led by the said Keeper of the Goal of Newgate aforesaid, unto Newgate aforesaid, and from thence directly be drawn to the Gallows of Tyburn, and upon those Gallows there be hanged, and be cut down alive to the Earth, and his Entrails be taken out of his Belly and be burned (he still living); and that the Head of him be cut off, and the Body of him be divided into four Parts; and that those Head and Quarters be put where our Lord the King will assign them, &c.

L. Staff. I do not hear one Word he says, my Lords.

L. H. S. My Lord, This does not concern your Lordship any further than as to the Generality of the Plot.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, We have now done with our Proofs for the first general Head that we open'd, which was to make it out, that there was a Plot in general. We now come to give our particular Evidence against this very Lord; and before we do begin, we think fit to acquaint your Lordships, that our Evidence will take up some time: If your Lordships will have the patience to hear it out now, we will give it; but if your Lordships will not sit so long till we can finish it, it may be some Inconvenience to us to break off in the middle: And therefore we humbly offer it to your Lordships Consideration, whether you will hear it now, or no.

L. H. S. If it cannot be all given and heard now, it were better all should be given to-morrow.

Sir Will. Jones. If your Lordships please, then, we will reserve it till to-morrow.

L. Staff. My Lords, I would only have your Directions, whether I shall answer this General first, or stay till all be said against me. That which I have to say to this General, will be very short.

L. H. S. My Lord, you are to make all your Answer entire, and that is best for you.

L. Staff. I am very well contented, that I may be the better prepared for it.

L. H. S. Is it your Lordships Pleasure that we should adjourn into the Parliament-Chamber?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. S. Then this House is adjourned into the Parliament-Chamber.

And the Lords went away in the same Order they came.

The Commons returned to their House, and Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair, and then the House adjourned to eight of the Clock the next Morning.

The SECOND DAY,

Wednesday, December 1, 1680.

A Message was sent from the Lords, by Sir Timothy Baldwin, and Sir Samuel Clark.

Mr. Speaker,

The Lords have sent us to acquaint this House, That they intend to proceed to the Trial of William Viscount Stafford, at ten of the Clock this Morning, in Westminster-Hall.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair, and the Commons came into Westminster-Hall in the new-erected Court.

And the Managers appointed by the Commons went into the Room prepared for them in that Court, to proceed to the particular Evidence against William Viscount Stafford.

About ten of the Clock in the Morning, the Lords came into the said Court in their former Order; and Proclamation being made of Silence, and for the Lieutenant of the Tower to bring his Prisoner to the Bar, they proceeded.

L. H. S. My Lords expect you should go on with your Evidence, and proceed in the Trial of this noble Lord.

L. Staff. My Lords, if your Lordships please, I humbly desire that my Council may be near me for the arguing of what is fit to them to speak to, as to Points of Law; for Points of Fact I do not desire it.

L. H. S. My Lord, You have an Order for your Council to attend, and they must and ought to attend.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. The Council must not suggest any thing to him while the Evidence is giving; they are not to be heard as to Matter of Fact.

L. H. S. It is not intended to make use of Council as to Matter of Fact, but they may stand by.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lords, They may stand within hearing, but not within prompting.

L. Staff. I assure you, if I had all the Council in the World, I would not make use of them for any Matter of Fact.

Mr. Treby. My Lords, will you please to order them to stand at a convenient Distance, that they may not prompt the Prisoner?

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, I hope your Lordships will consider, that a Man in a capital Cause ought not to have Council to Matter of Fact. 'Tis true, he may advise with his Council; I deny it not; but for him in the Face of the Court to communicate with his Council, and by them be told what he shall say, as to Matters of Fact, is that which (with Submission) is not to be allow'd. If your Lordships order they shall be within hearing, I do not oppose it; but then I desire they may stand at that Distance, that there may be no Means of Intercourse, unless Points in Law do rise.

L. H. S. You were best make that Exception when there is Cause for it; in the mean time go on with your Evidence.

Sir F. Win. We did perceive his Council came up towards the Bar, and very near him, and therefore we thought it our Duty to speak before any Inconvenience happened. This Lord being accused of High-Treason, the allowing of Council is not a Matter of Discretion. If Matters of Law arise, all our Books say, that Council ought to be allow'd: But we pray that there may be no Council to advise him in Matter of Fact, nor till your Lordships find some Question of Law to arise upon the Evidence.

L. H. S. When there is Cause, take the Exception; but they do not as yet misbehave themselves.

Mr. Treby. My Lords, We presume your Lordships did, from the Strength and Clearness of Yesterday's Evidence, receive full Satisfaction concerning the general Plot and Conspiracy of the Popish Party.

It being an Evidence apparently invincible, not out of the Mouths of two or three Witnesses only, but of twice that Number, or more, credible Persons.

Upon which we doubt not but your Lordships who hear, and Strangers and unborn Posterity when they shall hear, will justify this Prosecution of the Commons, and will allow that this Impeachment is the proper Voice of the Nation crying out, as when the Knife is at the Throat. By the Evidence dence already given, I say, it is manifest that there was a general grand Design to destroy our Religion, our King, and his Protestant Subjects. And 'tis even impossible that this Design, so big, could be conducted without the Concurrence of such Persons as this noble Lord at the Bar: It could not be carried on by less and lower Men.

And it were a Wonder, that a Person so fervently affected and addicted (as this Lord is) to that Party, should not be in at so general a Design of the Party.

But this indeed is but presumptive Evidence, which will induce a moral Persuasion.

We shall now produce such positive Evidence as will make a judicial Certainty; and will abundantly suffice to convince your Lordships, and convict this Lord.

The Particulars you will hear out of the Mouths of the Witnesses, whom we shall call: They will testify what Share this Lord had in (almost) all the Parts and Articles in our Charge; contriving and contracting for the Murder of the King, levying Arms, &c. And first we call Mr. Dugdale.

L. Staff. My Lords, I do conceive I have good ground to except against this Man for a Witness: For my own particular, I know myself as clear and free as any one here; but I will not except against him now, but reserve it against the time when I come to make my Defence, and therefore admit him to be sworn, provided, my Lords, that he look me full in Face.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, What is your Exception against this Man that he may not be a Witness?

L. Staff. I do admit him to be sworn, I say nothing now against him.

Mr. Treby. He is sworn already.

L. H. S. You swore him to give Evidence as to the general Plot; you did not swear him as to the Particulars against my Lord Stafford.

Sir John Trevor. We are content he shall be sworn again, we pray he may be sworn.

Sir Will. Jones. 'Tis true, my Lords, we did divide the Evidence into two Parts, but his Oath was not divided: If your Lordships please, you may swear them all over again, if it may be any Satisfaction, but I think it was never seen before.

Then Mr. Dugdale was sworn.

W. Dugdale.

L. H. S. There is Mr. Dugdale; come, Sir, what say you?

L. Staff. Really he is so changed I do not know him.

Mr. Dugd. My Lord, I have Witnesses to prove that you know me.

L. Staff. I beg your Lordships that he may look me in the Face, and give his Evidence, as the Law is.

Sir John Trevor. My Lords, if this noble Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar, will have this Witness to look him continually in the Face, the Court will not hear half his Evidence: We desire he may address himself, as the Law is, to your Lordships and the Judges.

L. Staff. I desire the Letter of the Law, which says, my Accuser shall come Face to Face.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I am willing to do as your Lordships shall order.

L. H. S. My Lord, you do see the Witness, that is enough for Face to Face; and you make no legal Exception against him, why he should not be heard.

L. Staff. Very well, my Lord, I submit.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I have for some Years past, whilst I was a Servant with my Lord Aston, been acquainted and frequently had Discourses with my Lord Stafford, before we came to discourse any thing concerning the Plot on foot. Lately, in 78, my Lord coming down into the Country, it was either in August or September, the latter end of August, or the beginning of September—

L. Staff. I beseech your Lordships he may name the times.

L. H. S. My Lord, if your Lordship please, do not interrupt the Witnesses; but wherein he is short, do you ask him the Question when it comes to your turn, I will bring it to as much Certainty as I can.

Mr. Dugd. There was a Meeting at Tixal, where there were several present—

L. H. S. When?

Mr. Dugd. It was in September, or the latter end of August.

L. H. S. What Year?

Mr. Dugd. 78. My Lords, I had by Mr. Evers's means Admittance to hear, because of my Encouragement, what the Discourse was at that time. It was to debate and determine upon the former Resolutions both beyond Sea and at London before, both to take away the Life of the King, and to introduce their Religion, of which I was then one. My Lord Stafford was there present, and did with the rest consent to it. Afterwards my Lord Stafford being at one Mr. Abnett's of Stafford one Sunday Morning in September, came to my Lord Aston's House to Mass: I met with my Lord Stafford at some Distance from the Gate, and my Lord speaking to me when he alighted off from his Horse, told me it was a very sad thing they could not say their Prayers but in an hidden manner, but ere long we should have our Religion established; which was much to my Joy at that time. After that time my Lord Stafford was sometimes at Stafford, and sometimes at Tixal, I will not be positive as to a Day, but I think it was about the middle of September. My Lord Stafford sent for me to his Lodging-Chamber, as he had several times before sent for me; and said, he had had great Commendations of me from Mr. Evers, that I was faithful and trusty.

L. Stafford. My Lords, I desire I may have Pen, Ink, and Paper, allowed me.

L. H. S. Ay, God forbid you should be denied that: Give my Lord Pen, Ink, and Paper. I hope your Lordship hath one to assist you that takes Notes for you; if you have not, you have lost a great deal of time already.

L. Staff. There was one all Day yesterday, my Lords; I desire he may speak his Evidence over again.

L. H. S. Let him begin his Evidence again, for my Lord had not Pen, Ink, nor Paper, which he ought to have to help his Memory.

Mr. Dugd. I may mis as to the Words, but the Matter of Fact I shall repeat: My Lords, I have been frequently acquainted whilst I was a Servant at my Lord Aston's with my Lord Stafford, coming to my Lord's House in the Country, and my Lord being several times where I came to that Intimacy by Mr. Evers's Means, that my Lord would frequently discourse with me. About the latter end of August, or some Day in September, my Lord Stafford, my Lord Aston, and several other Gentlemen, were in a Room in my Lord Aston's House, and by the means of Mr. Evers I was admitted to hear for my Encouragement; and there I heard them in that Debate at that time fully determine a Resolution upon all the Debates that had been beyond Sea and at London before, that it was the best way they could resolve on to take away the Life of the King, as the speediest Means to introduce their own Religion. After some time my Lord being at Stafford at Mr. Abnett's—

L. H. S. Was my Lord Stafford at that Meeting where they debated to kill the King?

Mr. Dugd. My Lord was there.

L. H. S. Was he consenting to that Resolution?

Mr. Dugd. Yes, I heard every one give their particular full Assent.

(At which there was a great Hum.)

L. H. S. What is the Meaning of this? For the Honour and Dignity of publick Justice, let us not carry it as if we were in a Theatre.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, some time in September, my Lord Stafford being at Mr. Abnett's House in Stafford, came once upon a Sunday Morning to hear Mass: I meeting him at the outward Gate of my Lord Aston's House when he alighted off his Horse, after some Discourse he turned to me, and told me, It was a sad thing we could not say our Prayers but in an hidden Manner; but ere long, if Things took Effect, we should have the Romish Religion established: and I at that time did seem to be, and really was as glad as any Person could be. After some time, I think it was about the 20th or 21st of September, my Lord Stafford sent for me into his Lodging-Room, I think it was by his Page, or him that waited upon him in his Chamber; and he told me I must come to my Lord; and I immediately went to his Lordship, he was just then arising and dressing; he sent his Man out, and told me, he had had a good Account from Mr. Evers and other Gentlemen, that I would be faithful and true to their Intentions about the introducing their Religion. He told me, he was likewise concerned himself, and that in a very high degree; and for taking away the Life of the King, he offered me at that time for my Charges and Encouragement 500*l.* and that I should go in October after to London with him (my Lord Stafford), and that I should be with him sometimes at London, and sometimes at an House of my Lord Aston's, about twenty-five Miles from London; and that I should be under the Care of him in London and Mr. Ireland, and in the Country of one Mr. Parsons that knew of the Design. I did then shew as much Resolution to be faithful to my Lord as I could, and that I would be true to what my Lord then engaged me. I after went to Mr. Evers, and communicated to him what my Lord Stafford said, and was something in Admiration at my Lord's offering me such a Sum of Money, for I doubted of my Lord's Ability to make good Payment. He told me, that I need not fear it, for Mr. Harcourt and Mr. Ireland had Money enough in their Hands to defray that and other Charges; and I should not want Money for the carrying it on. My Lords, I remember that at another time there was a Meeting, wherein there was a Debate about my going up, and other Business; my Lord Stafford was present, and there were several there besides, I did not know them all then; but in the first place they told me, I should be made equal with one Captain Adderley that is since dead, and that I should have a Reward in London. I understood that the Duke of York, my Lord Arundel, and my Lord Bellasis, and others, were to give it me; and speaking of the Rewards to those that were engaged, they said, there would be Land enough from the Protestants to satisfy all that acted in the Design. Another time my Lord Stafford discoursing in a Dining-Room in my Lord Aston's House, did express his great Zeal, and the Reason why he was such an Enemy against the King; he said, both he and my Lord Aston had been great Sufferers for the King, and for his Father, and that my Lord in particular, his Grandfather or his Father, had spent 30,000*l.* in the King's Service, and had no Recompence; that he had always shewed himself loyal to the King; but whenever there came any Place of Preferment to be disposed of, it was rather given to such as had been Traitors and Rebels to the old King, and likewise to the King himself, than to any that had been loyal. He said, this was his chief Motive, if there were not Religion in the Case, which was of an higher Nature, or to that Purpose.

L. H. S. When was this last Discourse?

Mr. Dugd. In September 78, as near as I remember, for we had several Discourses.

L. H. S. This was not the time you were at my Lord's Chamber?

Mr. Dugd. No, It was in my Lord Aston's Dining-Room.

L. H. S. No, nor when he sent for you to offer you the 500*l.*

Mr. Dugd. No, not at that time, it was another Time.

L. H. S. What Month and Year?

Mr. Dugd. September 78, my Lord.

Mr. Foley. I desire he may give your Lordships an Account what Assurance he had of Pardon, if he did succeed.

Mr. Dugd. I was told I need not fear; and particularly my Lord Stafford told me, I should have a free Pardon for it; for the King had been excommunicated, and was likewise a Traitor, and a Rebel, and an Enemy to Jesus Christ.

L. H. S. But how could you be pardon'd? From whom were you to have that Pardon?

Mr. Dugd. I was to be pardon'd by the Pope.

L. H. S. That was for your Sins.

Mr. Dugd. Yes; I expected no other, if I had gone on.

Mr. Treby. Were you promis'd nothing else but a Pardon from the Pope?

Mr. Dugd. Yes, I was to be fainted.

Sir W. Jones. Will his Lordship please to ask him any Questions? We ask him no more.

Mr. Foley. Yes, I desire another Question may be ask'd him: That he would give an account of the Letters my Lord Stafford writ to Evers about the Design.

L. H. S. What say you to that Question?

Mr. Dugd. There came a Letter to Evers from my Lord Stafford; I knew it to be my Lord's Hand: Some might counterfeit his Hand; but as near as a Man can swear to the Hand of another in a Paper he did not see written, that was my Lord's Hand: That Things went all well beyond Sea, and so he did hope they did here, for the carrying on of the Design: It was to this Purpose expressly.

Mr. Treby. We have done, my Lords, with him.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, will you ask him any Questions?

L. Staff.

L. Staff. My Lords, I have divers Questions to ask him, very many; but I humbly crave your Lordships Directions, if I ask him any Questions now, whether I may not ask him some afterwards?

L. H. S. My Lord, you may ask Questions of the Witnesses as often as you please, and whenever you find it useful to you: God forbid there should be any time to foreclose a Man from asking a Question that may save his Life.

L. Staff. I pray he may be ask'd how long before this time he knew of the Plot.

L. H. S. How long have you known this Plot?

Mr. Dugd. In general, for the introducing of the Popish Religion, and the Encouragement to it by the Duke of York's being Successor, I have known it fifteen or sixteen Years by the means of Mr. Evers.

L. Staff. My Lords, I understand him, he says he knew the Plot fifteen or sixteen Years ago; if I be not mistaken, he says so.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, if your Lordships please to give me leave to explain my self further, it was not for taking away the Life of the King, but for making ready against the King died, with Men and Arms.

L. Staff. My Lords, he says in the latter end of August, or beginning of September, I told him such and such things; I desire he may name the Day; that may be many Days, and I may prove I was not there; and I can prove for all August, and a good while in September; therefore I desire he may name the Day.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, I come thus near on purpose to serve your Lordship, that you may not strain your Voice too much; but I am not so happy as to apprehend what it is you say.

L. Staff. My Lords, I say, he speaks of the latter end of August, or the beginning of September; which is too great a Latitude, and I conceive more than ought to be given in such a Matter of Importance as this is to me; I desire he may name the Day, for he may name Days, perhaps, that I was not there.

L. H. S. Look you, Mr. Dugdale; my Lord does desire, if you can, you would be a little more particular than about the latter end of August, or the beginning of September; if you can remember the Day, tell it us.

Mr. Dugd. I cannot remember particular Days, it being a thing I then took no account of; only this I do remember by a remarkable Circumstance, that one time was either the 20th or 21st of September 78.

L. H. S. That was the time of your coming into his Chamber, and his offering you five hundred Pound?

Mr. Dugd. It was so; but other Meetings I dare not charge to a Day.

L. Staff. How then can I make my Defence?

Mr. Dugd. I will stand to that time.

L. Staff. How, my Lords, can I be able to give an Account of it? I shall prove to your Lordships, that he once said it was in August, now he says it was in August or September. I beseech you that he may positively stand to the Month, if not to the Day.

Mr. Dugd. I speak as near as I can.

L. Staff. But he says the 20th or 21st particularly.

Mr. Dugd. Thereabouts I am sure it was.

L. Staff. Look you, he will be positive in nothing.

Mr. Dugd. I will stand to that time.

L. Staff. If he swears false in one Thing, I hope, upon proof of that, your Lordships will believe he may be false in all. I pray he may be asked what Hour of the Day it was, whether it was Morning or Afternoon.

L. H. S. He is positive only to the 20th or 21st of September, the time when he says you called for him into your Chamber, and offered him five hundred Pound to kill the King: would your Lordship ask him whether it were in the Forenoon or the Afternoon?

L. Staff. Yes, my Lord, I would.

L. H. S. Was it in the Forenoon or in the Afternoon?

Mr. Dugd. It was in the Forenoon; for I did formerly speak of that, he was dressing himself when I came in.

L. H. S. Then that is answered positively.

L. Staff. My Lords, he says one Sunday Morning I came to my Lord Aston's to Mass, I desire you would please to ask him, whether ever he saw Mr. Evers and me in his Life alone together?

L. H. S. Have you seen my Lord Stafford and Mr. Evers ever together alone?

Mr. Dugd. Several times I have seen them walking together in the Garden, and in the Walks, at my Lord Aston's; and I have been with them myself when there hath been only them two besides.

L. H. S. That is answered fully; will your Lordship ask him any thing else?

L. Staff. He says he was to go to London in October with me, I stand not upon that till I come to make my Answer; but I take it, he says the 20th or 21st of September, when I offered him five hundred Pound, in my Chamber, to kill the King, that he went presently to Evers to speak with him about it.

L. H. S. As doubting the Payment of the Money, and he told him, that Harcourt and Ireland would pay it.

L. Staff. Was it the same Day? Pray ask him, my Lords.

Mr. Dugd. I do not say it was the same Day, but it was the next time I could come to speak with him.

L. H. S. He tells you, it was as soon as he could speak with him.

L. Staff. He said before, it was presently after he went from me. I desire your Lordships would take notice how he contradicts himself in every Circumstance.

L. H. S. What say you, did you go presently to Mr. Evers after my Lord Stafford had made the Offer, or was it the same Day, or the next Day?

Mr. Dugd. To the best of my remembrance, it was the same Day; I can't say positively.

L. Staff. My Lords, I have no other Questions with Dugdale.

Sir J. Trevor. Then, my Lords, we will call another Witness.

L. H. S. Have you no more to say to Dugdale, my Lord?

L. Staff. Not at present, till I come to make my Defence.

L. H. S. God forbid, but you should have leave to say all that you can for yourself.

Mr. Treby. Then set up Dr. Oates. Do your Lordships require that he should be sworn again?

L. Staff. I desire nothing, nor propose it, if he will declare upon his Oath that he took yesterday.

L. H. S. Hark you, Dr. Oates, this is but a Continuation of the Proceedings yesterday; you are upon the same Oath now that you were then, and what you say this Morning will be taken to be upon the same Oath.

Mr. Treby. Dr. Oates, upon the Oath you have taken yesterday—

L. H. S. Pray swear him again. (Which was done.)

Mr. Treby. Dr. Oates, pray speak your Knowledge of my Lord Stafford's being engaged in the Design.

Dr. Oates. I desire I may be left to my own Method.

L. H. S. Go on in your own Method.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, in the Year 67, there were divers Attempts upon the Life of the King, as the Jesuits told me; and in the Year 74, there was an Attempt upon the account of the King's withdrawing the Indulgence in 74 and 75: in the Year 1677, whilst I was in Spain, I met with several Letters signed Stafford, wherein my Lord Stafford did assure the Jesuits in Spain, that were of the Irish Nation, how zealous he should appear in the promoting of the Catholick Design. My Lords, in the Year 77, I went to St. Omers, and I came there in December. My Lords, in that Year I being order'd to look over the Papers, and put them in order, I found several Letters signed Stafford; wherein my Lord Stafford did intimate to the Fathers, that whereas there had been some Difference betwixt him and the Society for several Years, the Business was reconciled by one Signior Con, who came over into England in the Year 76, to reconcile the great Difference that was betwixt the Jesuits and the Secular Clergy, and between the Benedictine Monks and the Jesuits. My Lords, my Lord Stafford, upon the persuasion of this Signior Con, as he does intimate in his Letter, does assure the Jesuits of his Fidelity and his Zeal. My Lords, in the Year 78, I found Letters from my Lord Stafford, wherein he does blame Mr. Coleman's Openness, and his being too publick in the great Affair, and that Mr. Coleman was pleased to communicate several great Secrets to Men, of whose Fidelity his Lordship was not secure. My Lords, in 1678, in the Month of June, my Lord Stafford, the Prisoner at the Bar, came to Mr. Fenwick, and there received a Commission from him to pay an Army that was to be raised for the promoting of the Catholick Interest; and he did assure Mr. Fenwick that he was going down into Staffordshire, and there he did not question but he should have a good Account how the Catholicks stood affected; and he did not question but to give a good account how affairs stood in Staffordshire, Shropshire, and Lancashire: and this Commission to my Lord Stafford was, as near as I can remember, to be Pay-Master-General of the Army. My Lords, among other Discourses with my Lord at the Bar, he was discoursing about my Lord Duke of Norfolk, and my Lord Arundel his Son; and after several other Passages, he (Fenwick) was asking of him how my Lord Arundel came to have a Jesuit in his House. My Lord Stafford did say, that my Lord of Peterborough, his Father-in-Law, was instrumental in it, on purpose to oblige the Duke of York; for my Lord Arundel, as I have been told, kept Father Symonds in his House, who to my knowledge was a Jesuit. But, my Lords, he came to Mr. Fenwick's (my Lord Stafford did) by the Name of Mr. Howard of Effingham.

L. H. S. Were you at Fenwick's when my Lord Stafford came to his Chamber?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Look upon my Lord Stafford, is that the same Person?

Dr. Oates. It is the same Gentleman that came there by the Name of Howard of Effingham.

L. H. S. And he took the Commission?

Dr. Oates. Yes, he did so.

L. H. S. And he promised to effect it?

Dr. Oates. Yes, and he said that he was then going down into the Country, and he did not doubt but at his return Grove should do the Business.

L. H. S. Who said so, Fenwick?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord Stafford. And says Fenwick to my Lord Stafford again, Sir, 'tis fit that some should be here present, lest you fail of your Expectation; or to that purpose. 'Tis two Years since, and I cannot remember the Words, but my Lord Stafford did say, he was of necessity to go into the Country at that time. And there he did write a Letter to St. Omers, in which he did excuse himself about a young Man that was to be sent to the Jesuits College, whom he had taken care of another way. And he desired their excuse, but he would be as faithful to them as any body, for all that. And the same Hand that wrote that Letter, by all the comparing I could make in my Thoughts, wrote all the other Letters that I saw at St. Omers, and in Spain. My Lords, I saw my Lord Stafford at Dr. Perrott's, I think verily it was in June or July 78; it was before the rising of the Parliament that sat that Summer, and my Lord Stafford was discoursing of a Son he was to send over to Lisbon, and he went over by the Name of Sir John Stafford. And after this Discourse was over, they fell into a Discourse of the Affairs in hand, and my Lord was mighty glad there was so good a Correspondence and Concord, tho', my Lords, it was not very great; for the Jesuits had an irreconcilable Quarrel with the rest of the Clergy: But my Lord did hope that their fair Correspondence might tend highly to the advancing the Catholick Cause. But, my Lords, I have one thing more to speak as to the Discourse at Fenwick's Chamber; speaking of the King, he said, he hath deceived us a great while, and we can bear no longer.

L. H. S. Who said so?

Dr. Oates. My Lord Stafford, the Gentleman at the Bar.

L. H. S. When was that? At Dr. Perrott's?

Dr. Oates. No, I speak of a Passage at Fenwick's which I had forgot. My Lords, this is all I can remember at present.

Mr. Foley. My Lords, I desire he may give an account what Letters my Lord Stafford sent to Fenwick and Ireland to pay Money.

Dr. Oates. There was some Money returned, but it was no great Sum, and it was about private Business; Mr. Morgan was to receive it: I chanced to have the Money in my own keeping; Mr. Fenwick gave it me to pay to Mr. Morgan, and the Letter in which the Sum was mentioned did give them an account (for it was out of Staffordshire), that he found things stand in a very good state there. But I being not within, Mr. Morgan called on Mr. Fenwick for the Money, which I returned to him when he had paid it.

L. Staff. My Lords, I do, in the first place, desire to know where Mr. Fenwick lived.

L. H. S. Where did Mr. Fenwick live when you saw my Lord at his Chamber, and the Commission delivered?

Dr.

Dr. Oates. His Lordship, I suppose, knows very well where he lived; he lived in Drury-Lane.

L. Staff. I will submit to any Thing, if ever I saw the Man, or heard of him till the Discovery of the Plot.

Dr. Oates. He came to him by the Name of Thompson.

L. H. S. Your Lordship does not observe; your Lordship says that you never knew any Fenwick, but your Lordship knew one Thompson, and that Thompson was Fenwick.

L. Staff. I did know one Thompson, but that Thompson I knew was an English Merchant in Brussels, and not a Jesuit.

Dr. Oates. I can't say what my Lord knows, that he knew Fenwick to be a Jesuit, but he knew one Thompson, that was Fenwick the Jesuit.

L. Staff. I never heard of the Name till this Plot.

Dr. Oates. But, if your Lordship please, I will give you a Reason why I believe he knew him to be a Jesuit, because the Society was very often in their Mouths in their Discourses; which gives me a Ground to believe he knew him to be what he was: But, my Lord, he took his Commission from him.

L. Staff. I desire he may be asked—

L. H. S. Good my Lord, raise your Voice, for I am come half way to hear you.

L. Staff. Pray, my Lords, give me leave to ask him, whether Dr. Oates hath not said several times since I was first imprison'd, that he never saw me in his Life. I think I was imprison'd the 21st of October 78.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I never said any such thing.

L. Staff. I will willingly die, if ever I saw this Doctor in my Life.

Dr. Oates. I excuse my Lord for that, for I was in another Habit, and I went by another Name; and your Lordships do remember I came in another Habit to make the first Discovery.

L. Staff. My Lord, I never saw his Face, nor know him, nor Fenwick, or Thompson, otherwise than one Thompson, a Merchant at Brussels.

Dr. Oates. But, my Lords, I have one thing more to say of my Lord Stafford; my Lord Stafford went into France, I can't say the Year, but I believe it is within the Term of six or seven, but he went over to France; and it did appear by Letters from him, that Signior Con was made choice of to heal the Difference between the Regulars and the Seculars; and Signior Con did come over in the Year 76, and there did make a kind of a Peace among them, which lasted whilst Con stayed here, and Con did bring over Messages, to which my Lord Stafford (if he tells any Truth in his own Letter) did return Answers.

L. Staff. For the present, all I say to it is this, I never writ any one Letter this 25 Years, nor had any Correspondence with any Jesuit.

L. H. S. I beseech you, my Lord, make me capable of serving your Lordship, by letting me hear what you say.

L. Staff. My Lord, I have a great Cold, and can speak no louder; I desire to ask this Witness no more Questions at present, but I say, I never writ any Letters to any Priest this 25 Years.

Mr. Foley. Then, my Lords, if my Lord hath done, we will call another Witness, and that is Mr. Edward Turberville. (Who was sworn.)

L. H. S. Look upon the Prisoner. Do you know my Lord Stafford?

Mr. Tur. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. S. Raise your Voice, and speak deliberately.

Mr. Treby. Give an account of your Knowledge, and use your own Method.

Mr. Tur. My Lords, in the Year 1675 I was persuaded by my Lady Powis, and one Morgan that was Confessor to the Family, to go to Doway, in order to take upon me the Frier's Habit. When I came there, instead of Religion, I found nothing but Hypocrisy and Villainy among them, and quickly grew weary of staying there, and with much difficulty I escaped thence to go for England: When I came into England, I did think that my Friends would look unkindly upon me, because I refused to live in that Way that they proposed to me to live in. I used all the Means I could to have them reconcil'd, and made Application to them, that since I could not bear with the Life they would have had me lived in, they would contrive some Way for me, being a younger Brother, that I might live in the World; but they were so averse and inveterate against me, that they told me, instead of doing any thing for me, they would do me all the Mischief and Prejudice they could; and having lived all my Time among them, I thought the World would receive a Character of me from them who were my Relations, as they would please to represent it. So having no hopes in England, I took a Resolution to go into France, where I had a Brother that was a Benedictine Monk: And I hoped that he being in good Repute amongst them, might be able to do me some Service there. When I came to Paris, my Brother used all the Endeavours imaginable to get me to be of that Order; but I having so ill a Conceit and Opinion of the Order that I was in before, and thinking all the rest were the same, I was unwilling at all to enter into it. And after I staid there a while, I resolved to come over into England. My Brother used all the means he could for my Accommodation, and recommended me to this noble Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar, who lodged then at a Corner-House in a Street which, as I remember, bears the Name of La Rue de Beaufort, where I was several times with him, in order to come over with him in the Yacht for England. After I had been there for a Fortnight with this Lord, he understanding my Condition, by my Brother, and by the other Fathers of that Convent, and imagining I was a fit Instrument to be employ'd on such an Occasion, propos'd to me a Way, whereby, as he said, I might not only retrieve my Reputation with my Relations, but also make myself a very happy Man: And after having exacted from me all the Obligations of Secrecy which I could give him, he at length told me in direct Terms, it was to take away the Life of the King of England, who was an Heretick, and consequently a Rebel against God Almighty. I looked upon it as an extraordinary Attempt, and desired time to consider of it before I would undertake it. And I gave him this Answer, I would give him my Resolution at Diep, where we were to go on board for England. And when I came to take my leave of this noble Lord at the Bar, he was sitting upon the Bench, and he was troubled with the Gout in his Foot at that time. And he told me he had some Business to go to Versailles, and that he should not be in six or seven Days at Diep, where I was to wait for him. After a while, I received a Letter at Diep from his Lordship, wherein he writ me word, that he had altered his Resolution, and would go by the way of Calais, and that I should hasten to wait on his Lordship at London: I have one thing more to observe to your Lordships: When I got passage from Diep, in a Fisher-boat for England, I never came near my Lord Stafford, because being not willing to undertake his Proposal, I thought myself not safe, even from my own Relations; and therefore I made my Applications to the Duke of Monmouth, and his Grace was pleased by Letter to recommend me into the French Service, and by that means I avoided his Lordship's further Importunity.

L. H. S. You say, my Lord did propose to you the killing of the King; did he plainly make the Proposal in direct Terms to kill the King?

Mr. Tur. Yes, he did, my Lord.

L. H. S. What did he offer you to do it?

Mr. Tur. Nothing, for I would not accept of it. I told him it was a Matter of great Concernment, and I ought to consider of it; and I took time to think of it, and would give him my Answer at Diep, which he came not to; and so there was an end of it.

L. H. S. What Engagements of Secrecy had you given my Lord, before he open'd himself so plainly to you?

Mr. Tur. I gave my Lord my Word and my Promise, that I would not discover it to any Person directly or indirectly; my Lord had nothing of an Oath from me.

L. H. S. Will you ask him any more Questions, Gentlemen?

Sir Will. Jones. No, my Lords.

L. H. S. Will your Lordship ask him any Questions, my Lord Stafford?

L. Staff. My Lord, I never saw the Man before in my Life. I will ask him one Question, since he hath been pleased to swear against me.

Mr. Tur. My Lords, I had no Reason but the Truth to do it; for I never received any Injury from his Lordship in my Life.

L. Staff. It seems I had ill Luck to chuse this Man for an Attempt to kill the King, who was such a Coward he ran away from his Colours, and was to have been shot to death.

Mr. Tur. Ask the Duke of Monmouth what Character he received of me.

L. Staff. He says, in the Year 75 he went from London to Doway, and staid some time there, and then came back to England; I beseech your Lordships to ask him what time he went back to Paris.

L. H. S. What time was it you went back to Paris?

Mr. Tur. Truly, my Lord, I cannot be punctual to a Fortnight, but I believe it was the Beginning of June.

L. H. S. What Year?

Mr. Tur. 75.

L. Staff. My Lords, I would know who recommended him to me to go over with me into England?

L. H. S. Who recommended you to my Lord Stafford to go into England?

Mr. Tur. My Lords, it was Father Sherborn, who was then Prior of the Benedictine Monks in Paris, and father Nelson, Sub-Prior of those Monks, and my Brother, who is a Monk in the same Convent.

L. H. S. He says, that there were three Persons that recommended him to your Lordship.

L. Staff. I never saw them in my Life.

Mr. Tur. Your Lordship, that says I was a Coward, and run away from my Colours, will say any thing.

L. Staff. I not only say it, but will prove it by two Witnesses.

Mr. Tur. Do it if you can.

L. Staff. He says, in the beginning of June 75 he went into France. I desire to know of him, when was it he spoke to me?

Mr. Tur. In November 75.

L. Staff. He says in November.

Mr. Tur. Yes, my Lord, about the Beginning of November.

L. Staff. I beseech your Lordship, where was it he spoke to me?

L. H. S. Turberville, where was it you spoke to my Lord?

Mr. Tur. In Paris.

L. Staff. Whereabouts in Paris?

Mr. Tur. It was the Corner-House of the Street, which Street faces Luxembourg-House; the Prince of Conde lodges on the right hand in that Street, I take it to be so, and you lodged at the Corner-House; I think the Name of the Street was La Rue de Beaufort.

L. Staff. Which if the Prince of Conde did—I will say no more.

Mr. Tur. I cannot be upon my Oath in such Cafes, but I think he does, I take it so.

L. Staff. He says he was with me a Fortnight, what does he mean?

Mr. Tur. I came to my Lord several times in the Space of a Fortnight.

L. Staff. I desire to know who brought him to me?

Mr. Tur. Father Sherborn, Father Nelson, and my Brother Father Anthony Turberville; and sometimes I came alone.

L. H. S. He says, those three Fathers recommended him to your Lordship, and he came himself several times.

Mr. Tur. Yes, my Lords, it is true.

L. Staff. I beseech your Lordships, did he come directly to my Chamber, or where?

Mr. Tur. Sometimes to my Lord's Chamber, and at other times I met him in a lower Room.

L. Staff. It concerns me much, my Lords; and tho' they be foolish Questions, yet I hope your Lordships will pardon me if I ask them. Where was this Discourse about killing the King?

L. H. S. Was this Discourse in the Chamber, or in the lower Room?

Mr. Tur. In the lower Room.

L. Staff. He says, I think, that he hath been in my Chamber.

L. H. S. Have you been in my Lord's Chamber as well as in the lower Room?

Mr. Tur. Yes, my Lords, I have.

L. Staff. What kind of Room is it?

Mr. Tur. I can't remember that.

L. Staff. No, I dare swear you can't.

Mr. Tur. I cannot tell the Particulars; what Stools and Chairs were in the Room.

L. Staff. My Lords, I have no more to say to him at present.

L. H. S. Mr. Turberville, how long have you been in England?

Mr. Tur. I cannot answer punctually; I have been in England near four Years.

L. H. S. How came it to pass that you never discovered this sooner?

Mr. Tur.

Mr. Tur. I had no Faith to believe that I should be safe if I did it, but my Brains might be knocked out; and that kept me off from doing that Service which I might be better able to do, if I did defer it.

L. H. S. How come you to discover it now?

Mr. Tur. The King's Proclamation, and some Friends that have persuaded me that I may do it with Safety, who will give your Lordships an account of it.

L. Staff. I desire he may attend when I make my Defence.

Mr. Tur. Yes, I shall: But I am sorry his Lordship hath so ill a Memory as to what passed between us. I shall be very unwilling to do his Lordship or any Body else any Injury, but I must tell the Truth.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we shall call no more Witnesses, unless my Lord, the Prisoner, give us an Occasion. If he shall make any Objections to any of our Witnesses, I hope we shall have Liberty to call Witnesses to support them; but we give over at present, and expect his Lordship's Answer.

L. Staff. May it please your Lordships, I beseech your Lordships, before I say any thing, that I may know if they have any more Witnesses to examine.

L. H. S. They say they will call no more Evidence, unless your Lordship's Answer do give them Occasion to fortify their Witnesses you except against.

L. Staff. My Lords, It is now about two Years that I have had the Misfortune to be accused of this detestable Treason. I have been several times in these two Years a close Prisoner, that my Wife and Children were deny'd to come near me; and hardly a Servant permitted to ask how I did, but at the Door of my Prison. My Lords, this was a great and an heavy Affliction to me; and, my Lords, it was so great an Affliction to me, that truly I did not know how to bear it. 'Tis true, I had that Comfort, that I did hope I should soon come to my Trial, and before your Lordships make my Innocency appear. In order to which, I did all I could, having heard this Hall was provided for it; and I did expect in a very few Days to clear myself before your Lordships and all the World. When I had settled my Mind, and did not foresee any greater Affliction that could befall me, I had on the sudden, by some of my Friends, a sad Message sent me, That the House of Commons had impeached me of High Treason. My Lords, I looked upon the House of Commons then (as I do now) as the great Representative Body of the Commons of England; and I confess, my Lords, to be accused by them was a Load, especially being added to what lay before upon me, more especially to my weak Body and weaker Mind, that I was so afflicted with it, and have so continued, that I am scarce yet able to bear up under it: for I look upon the House of Commons as the great and worthy Patriots of this Kingdom; I ever held them so, and I hold them so still. My Lords, these Things being such great Afflictions to me, and some other Accidents, which I shall not trouble your Lordships with the telling you of, have so much disorder'd my Sense and Reason (which before was little), that I scarce know how to clear myself to your Lordships, as I ought to do; or which way to go about the doing of it; therefore I do with all Humility beg your Lordships' Pardon if I say any Thing that may give an Offence, or urge that which may not be to the Purpose. All which I desire you would be pleased to attribute to the true Cause, my want of Understanding, not of Innocency, or a Desire to make it appear.

My Lords, these Gentlemen the Managers of the House of Commons, who are great and able Men, some I am sure, if not all of them very well read, and have Understanding in the Law, have set forth to your Lordships Treason in an horrid Shape; but I confess, my Lords, if they had made it never so much worse, it cannot be so horrid as I have often fancied it myself: For, my Lords, I do, and did ever hold Treason to be the greatest Sin in the World, and I cannot use Words enough to express it; and therefore I hope you will give me leave to clear myself of it, and I shall give you one Notion of it, which I heard at your Lordships Bar some Years ago, where you were pleased to hear several People of several Persuasions give you some Reason why Liberty of Conscience should be allowed them. And I remember one of them, an Anabaptist, I think, did tell you, That they held Treason to be the Sin of Witchcraft, and so do I. And next to Treason, I hold Murder to be the worst Sin. But the Murder of the King I look'd upon to be so above all others, that it is not to be express'd by Words.

My Lords, I have heard very much of a thing that was nam'd by these Gentlemen of the House of Commons, and that very properly too, to wit, of the Gunpowder Treason. My Lords, I was not born then, but some Years after I heard very much Discourse of it, and very various Reports; and I made a particular Enquiry, perhaps more than any one Person did else, both of my Father who was alive then, and my Uncle, and others; and I am satisfied, and do clearly believe, by the Evidence I have received, that that Thing called the Gunpowder-Treason, was a wicked and horrid Design (among the rest) of some of the Jesuits: and I think the Malice of the Jesuits, or the Wit of Man, cannot offer an Excuse for it, it was so execrable a thing. Besides, my Lords, I was acquainted with one of them that was concerned in it, who had his Pardon, and lived many Years after: I discoursed with him about it, and he confessed it, and said, he was sorry for it then; and I here declare to your Lordships, that I never heard any one of the Church of Rome speak a good word of it: it was so horrid a thing, that it cannot be expressed or excused. And God Almighty shew'd his Judgments upon them for their Wickedness; for hardly any of the Persons, or their Posterity, are left, that were concerned in it, and even a very great Family too, that had collaterally something to do in it, is in the Male Line extinct totally; and I do think God Almighty always shews his Judgments upon such vile Actions. I have been told, all those Persons that were engaged in this wicked Act, were all heartily sorry for it, and repented of it before they died, without which I am sure there is no Salvation. And therefore I think it was not the Interest of Religion, but a private Interest put them upon it.

My Lords, as to the Doctrine of King-killing, and absolving Persons from their Allegiance, I cannot say the Church of Rome does not hold it; I never heard it did hold it; it may be it does, it may be not: I say not one Thing or other: But, my Lords, there was an English College of Priests at Rheims, that translated the Bible, and printed it with Authority, according to their Translation; and in their Annotations upon the 14th Chapter to the Romans, they do declare their Dislike and Detestation of that Opinion. They say, all Subjects ought to obey their Kings, as the primitive Christians did the Heathen Princes of the Empire; and the learned Doctors of the College at Sorbonne, did upon an Occasion administered to them about that Opinion, declare the Mistakes that were in it, and own'd it to be a damnable Principle. My Lords, I have an authentical Copy of that Decree of the Sorbonnists, whether it be here or no, I can't tell—Yes, here it is, which does declare that a damnable Position; and there is lately come out a Book, written by a Priest of the Church of Rome, tried for his Life for being in the Plot, but acquitted of that, in which he says, That that Opinion of killing Kings is damnable and heretical, and declar'd so by the Council of Trent.

My Lords, this gives me Occasion to believe that the Church of Rome holds it not. I do not say that it does not; but some particular Persons do abhor it, which are great in that Church, and which weighs far with me: but that which furthest of all confirms me in my ill Opinion of it, is the Words of our Saviour, when not only he commands us to give unto Caesar the Things that are Caesar's, but asserts our Obedience to our Governors in many other Passages of the Holy Scripture; and what I find there, the whole World is not able to alter my Opinion of.

I do assure your Lordships in the Presence of Almighty God, that I do extremely admire when I hear of any thing like it; and I did read with great Horror what I found the other Day in the Gazette, of some imprudent People in Scotland, and of their wicked Principles and Practices.

My Lords, I do in the Presence of Almighty God, who knows and sees all Things, and of his Angels which are continually about us, and of your Lordships who are my Peers and Judges, solemnly profess and declare, that I hate and detest any such Opinion, as I do Damnation to myself. And I cannot be more desirous of Salvation to my self, than I am cordial in hating this Opinion.

My Lords, I know no Person upon Earth, nor all the Persons in the World put together, nor all the Power they have, can in the least absolve me of my Allegiance. And I do acknowledge the King is my Sovereign, and I ought to obey him as far as the Law of the Land obliges any Subject of his to obey him: Whether I have taken the Oath of Allegiance, I appeal to your Lordships to be my Witnesses; and if I did not take it a thousand times for my Allegiance to the King, if required, I should think I deserved a thousand Deaths, and all the Torments in the World for refusing it.

My Lords, these Gentlemen here did begin their Charge (Serjeant Maynard, and Sir Francis Winnington) with telling your Lordships there was an horrid Design to murder the King, to alter the Government, and introduce the Popish Religion. This, they say, was engag'd in by the Roman Catholics; that all the Church of Rome were the Contrivers of it; for they tell your Lordships, the whole Body hath been engag'd in it, and they have given you many Proofs by Witnesses examined the first Day, of a general Plot: what Credit you will give to them, I leave to your Lordships in the end of the Case; but still they said it was the Body of the Roman Catholics in England, or the Papists, or what they call them, that were the Plotters in this Design. But I beseech your Lordships, how am I concerned in it? for I must say to your Lordships, they have not offer'd one Proof that I am of that Religion. So that tho' any of you should have seen me at the Exercises of that Religion, or otherwise know it of your selves, yet if there be no Proof judicially before you, you are not to take notice of it. I have heard, if a Man be accused of a Crime, and be to be tried, and no Evidence come in; if every Man of the Jury were sure that the Fact was done, yet they must go upon the Evidence produced to them, and not upon their own Knowledge. So then, no Evidence being produced before your Lordships, about my being a Papist, you are not to take me for such a one. But, my Lords, if I were of that Church, and that were never so well prov'd too, I hope I have an Advantage in it, that I have kept myself from being poison'd with so wicked a Principle, or engaged with the rest in so ill a Thing.

My Lords, I am here accused of having endeavoured to kill the King. I find by the Law, upon reading Sir Edward Coke, since my Imprisonment, That all Accusations of Treason ought to be accompanied with Circumstances antecedent, concomitant, and subsequent; but I conceive, my Lords, there is no Tittle of any such Thing prov'd against me. The whole Compass of my Life, from my Infancy, hath been clear otherwise. In the beginning of the late unhappy Times, the late King, of happy and glorious Memory, did me the honour to make me a Peer; and thinking that my Presence might rather prejudice him than serve him, my Wife and I settled at Antwerp when the War begun, where I might have liv'd, tho' obscurely, yet safely; but I was not satisfied in my Conscience to see my King in so much Disorder, and I not endeavour to serve him what I could, to free him from his Troubles. And I did come into England, and served his Majesty faithfully and loyally, as long as he lived. And some of your Lordships here know, whether I did not wait upon the now King in his Exile, from which he was happily restor'd; which shews I had no ill Intention then.

My Lords, I hope this I have said does shew, that my Life hath given no Countenance to this Accusation, but clear contrary to what these (I hope I may call them so, and I doubt not to prove them so) perjur'd Villains say against me.

My Lords, after I had this Misfortune to be thus accused, about a Month or six Weeks after, your Lordships were pleased to send two Members of this honourable Body to me, (I do not see them at present here) to examine me about the Plot: (they were my Lord of Bridgewater, and my Lord of Essex) if they be here, I appeal to them what I did say. These two, after they had examin'd me, told me, they did believe, and could almost assure me, that if I would confess my Fault, and let them know the Particulars of it, your Lordships would intercede with the King for my Pardon; but I then, as I ought, asserted my own Innocency. Not long after, the King, out of his Grace and Goodness to me, sent six of the Council to the Tower, to offer me, That tho' I was never so guilty, yet if I would confess, I should have my Pardon. I did then consider with myself; I could not imagine what Ground there was to believe your Lordships could have Evidence of what there was not, to bring me in guilty; and thereupon I was so far from being able to make a Discovery, that I could not invent any Thing that might save my Life, if I would.

S

My

My Lords, I was seven Days in the Country after I heard of the Plot; if I had known myself guilty, I should surely have run away. As I came to London, when I was at Litchfield, there met me two of my Lords; they told me, and so did a Gentleman of the House of Commons, how much there was in the Plot, which, if I had had a Hand in it, would certainly make me fly for it. I have ever heard, when a Man is accused or suspected of a Crime, Flight is a great Sign of Guilt; and that it is often asked of the Jury, though there be no certain positive Evidence of the Fact, whether a Man fled or no? As that is a Sign of Guilt, so remaining is a Sign of Innocency. If then after Notice I come to Town, and suffer myself to be taken; if after Imprisonment and Accusation, I refuse my Pardon, and yet had been guilty, I ought to die for my Folly as well as my Crime.

My Lords, 'Tis a great Offence to commit Treason, and a great Addition to continue obstinate, when upon Acknowledgment a Man can save his Life; nay, my Lords, if I should have refused these Offers, and yet known myself guilty, I had at the same time been guilty of one of the greatest Sins in the World, as being the Cause of my own Death. And as I hold, next to Treason, Murder the greatest Sin, so I hold of all Murders Self-murder to be the greatest; nay, I do not think any Man living can pardon that Sin of Murder. And I do profess to your Lordships, in the Presence of Almighty God, that if I could immediately, by the Death of this impudent Fellow Dugdale, who hath done me so much Wrong, make myself the greatest Man in the World that is or ever was, I profess before God I would not. I cannot say my Charity is so great, but that I should be glad to see him suffer those Punishments the Law can inflict upon him for his Crimes; but his Death I would not have. Blood is so great a Crime, and I know every Man is careful of giving his Voice in the Case of Blood, I should be very cautious myself; and if I were a Judge, I would rather save twenty Guilty, than condemn one Innocent. I bless God, I have not the least Desire of the Death of any Man, and would not for all the World have innocent Blood lie upon me.

I beg your Lordships Pardon that I have troubled you thus long: I shall now, as well as I can, apply myself to my particular Defence. I do, my Lords, before I can go on to it, desire I may have such Depositions as have been taken against me, and the Liberty to look upon your Journal-Book when I have Occasion. I do particularly desire the Depositions of Oates, upon which I was committed by my Lord Chief Justice; the two Depositions of Stephen Dugdale, taken at Stafford before two Justices of the Peace, Mr. Lane and Mr. Vernon; I desire the Depositions taken before, I think it was Mr. Warcup and Sir William Poultney, or some other two Justices, which was made by Turberville; and then I shall compare their Testimonies together, and I hope shall give you a clear Account that they are perjured Persons. How without these to go on to my just Defence, I cannot well tell.

L. H. S. What do you say to it, Gentlemen? You hear what my Lord prays.

Sir F. Win. The Witnesses are here, and have been heard viva voce: As we cannot use any of the Depositions of which he speaks, so no more can they be used by him.

L. H. S. If I understand my Lord aright, this is the Thing he desires: Says he, You have brought Witnesses against me viva voce; they have been examined here, and they have been examined elsewhere, and their Depositions are upon Record: I desire to confront what they have said here, with what they have said contrary in other Places.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. If there be any Thing expressed by my Lord, wherein they have contradicted themselves, and produce that Deposition, he may do that; but to desire to have all the Depositions that have been made by our Witnesses, is a strange Request. When there is Occasion to use them upon any particular Point, he may produce them if he can.

L. H. S. Can you object why my Lord should not have Copies of any Thing that is upon the Journal and Depositions that are sworn before a Magistrate, which may be of Use to him?

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, We do not object against it; but, my Lords, I think it is out of Time to desire it. What was sworn, and is entered in your Lordships Journal, was sworn above two Years since. My Lord, or any Man else, might repair to them; they are Matters of Record, and for aught we know were never denied to any, especially if they desired it in the House; but after two Years Time, and after three Weeks Time given to prepare for this Trial, when my Lord could not but know what Witnesses would be examined before your Lordships; for him to come now and desire such and such Depositions may be produced, which if by Law he might be allowed to do, he might have done before, is to no other Purpose, under Favour, but to gain Time, and cause our Evidence to be forgotten; and therefore we most humbly pray it may not be admitted: My Lords, I think it is an unusual Thing. My Lords, the Judges are near your Lordships, I suppose they will inform your Lordships. If a Man be tried at the Assizes, for him to desire a Copy of the Informations remaining in Court, by which he may except against the Witnesses, is what the Court does not use to grant. But if your Lordships Proceedings vary from the common Proceedings of other Courts, then I resort to what I said before, Whether your Lordships will think this a proper Time, when he might have had it in the Parliament that was first dissolved, and then in the Parliament that was last dissolved. Now to desire those Copies at this Time, is to put off the Cause for that which perhaps he cannot be furnished with in a Day or two.

Sir F. Win. I would add but one Word, if your Lordship please to give me Leave. My Lords, You have the learned Judges near you, who will inform you, whether ever, when a Man was accused of a capital Offence, and the Evidence against him had been fully heard by the Court and by himself, he was admitted to require from the Prosecutors the Copies of Examinations formerly taken before other Persons. Does my Lord intend to have time to peruse those Examinations, and to have the Copies of them, that he may consult in private with his Council to find out Exceptions, and with his Witnesses to make them good? My Lords, I must say, that in my short Experience (and I have attended a considerable Time upon the greatest Court for Trial of Offenders), I never heard such a Thing asked by a Prisoner, either at the Bar of the King's Bench, or at the Assizes. I speak with all the Tenderness imaginable, because we are in a Matter of Blood, and God forbid but the Lord at the Bar should have true and equal Justice done him! But if I take my Lord right, this seems but an Artifice to delay the Trial, of which it is our Duty to be very cautious. Indeed I have seen the Judges, upon Trial of a Criminal, call for the Depositions or Informations from the Clerk, or the Justice of the Peace who took them, and caused them to be read; but for a Prisoner to call for Examinations at the Bar from the Prosecutors, & ex debita Justitia, to demand them, is a Thing, which, as it never has been, so I think will not be admitted at this Time, especially when we are now almost at the End of the Cause. And with all Modesty and Submission to your Lordships, I look upon it as a very strange and unreasonable Demand.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, What is the Reason your Lordship had not all this while Copies of the Journal, which is that you now ask?

L. Staff. I shall not undertake that I am able to give your Lordships a Reason for it, because I think, wherein I have been mistaken as to Point of Time, your Lordships will not tie me up to that. But this Gentleman that spoke last is not acquainted with me, and does not know me; for I have no Desire to go back, or to put off this Trial: But if it cannot be done to Day, I am as guilty To-morrow as I am To-day; and I desire no more than what he says hath been done in the like Cases. I do desire, my Lord, the Informations and Depositions of Dugdale, Oates and Turberville may be produced and read, and I will make Observations upon them in my Defence. I desire those Affidavits may be brought.

L. H. S. Affidavits taken when and where?

L. Staff. Of Dr. Oates, that was read in your Lordships House; I heard it.

L. H. S. Let us understand your Lordship's Demands, that when my Lords are withdrawn, I may know what Questions to put to them, and acquaint them with your Desires: The one is the Journal of the Lords House, which is always before their Lordships, and you might have had Copies long since. The next Thing you ask is an Affidavit of Dugdale; if this Affidavit is entered into the Journal, that supplies your Demands; if it be not entered there, where shall we find it?

L. Staff. I do not know.

L. H. S. Does your Lordship think all this Matter must stay till we can find a loose Affidavit, that we know not where 'tis filed?

L. Staff. I know it was before the Council, and I believe my Accusers have it; I desire the Gentlemen of the House of Commons may produce it.

Sir J. Trevor. I have seen none, nor have none.

L. Staff. The one was taken the 24th of December this Time two Year, and the other the 29th.

L. H. S. My Lord, Will your Lordship give me Leave to tell you, you ought to be provided with some particular Exception, and not to make your Demand in general. If your Lordship will say, Dugdale did swear such and such Things, which are contrary to what he now affirms, we know what to make of it; but to hunt after an Affidavit that we know not where to find, to pick up something out of it, that I do not understand.

L. Staff. I appeal to my Lord Essex, and my Lord Bridgewater, whether they did not examine me the first Time upon one or two Affidavits of Dugdale.

L. H. S. Suppose it be not to be found, my Lord?

L. Staff. Then I must have Patience, and submit,

L. H. S. Can you tell wherein he swore quite blank contrary to what he swears now?

L. Staff. My Lord, I conceive it was never denied before; but your Lordships may do what you please.

L. H. S. Well, my Lord, let us go on to the next. The Affidavits of Dugdale, if they be entered on the Journal, may be ready; if not, then I shall acquaint their Lordships, and they will direct what is fit in the Case.

L. Staff. Then there is the Affidavit of Oates before my Lord Chief Justice, upon which I was committed; the next Day, which was Friday, it was read in your Lordships House.

L. H. S. I believe that it is entered upon the Journal, and so will be ready to be used.

L. Staff. I do hope to make it evidently appear thereby, that he is forsworn. I desire two Affidavits more, that were taken before the Justices of the Peace of Middlesex, who examined Mr. Turberville twice.

L. H. S. What Justices of the Peace?

L. Staff. Mr. Warcup, Sir William Poultney, and Sir Thomas Stringer. I desire I may not be misunderstood; I do not desire to have them to instruct my Council, or advise with them upon them, but I cannot make my Defence without them.

L. H. S. Those are voluntary extrajudicial Affidavits, that no body is bound to keep.

L. Staff. They were spoken of in the Votes of the House of Commons.

L. H. S. What say you, Gentlemen, to it?

Sir F. Win. My Lords, because my Lord at the Bar is pleased to insinuate, as if we knew where those Affidavits are which he seems to desire, and because your Lordship was pleased to say, that the Commons in Parliament are the Grand-Jury of the Kingdom, I desire to say one Thing, That certainly it will not be required from us to produce and publish the several Facts and Circumstances that induced us to impeach him, if it shall be demanded by the Prisoner at the Bar.

L. H. S. I wish you would answer the Question, and not argue upon it, whether those Affidavits of Turberville may not be produced; for 'tis my Lord's Exception against your Witness, that he swears several Ways; and by those Affidavits of Turberville, he intends to disprove him in what he hath said To-day.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, The House of Commons never administer an Oath; and therefore it is not to be said to us, but my Lord Stafford must go to the particular Offices where they are to be found.

L. H. S. I do not ask you where my Lord should find them, but whether if they can be found, you can object any Thing why they should not be produced and read?

Mr. Serj. Mayn. When they are produced, we will give Answer.

L. Staff. My Lords, I am informed this is the Substance of the Affidavit, That Turberville did swear before two Justices of the Peace, whether they be of the House of Commons, or no, I can't tell, That he spake with me at Doway, and in Paris, in the Years 73 and 76, and now he says says 72 and 75, I am informed, my Lords: And I appeal to the House of Commons, they are all Persons of Honour and Worth, (if my Information be mistaken, I beg their Pardon and yours for't) whether he did not mend it after he had sworn it.

L. H. S. Are these all you do demand?

L. Staff. Yes, my Lords. Whether this was true or no, I don't know; it is what I have been told; I appeal to the House of Commons, (who are all worthy Persons, I do not believe I have an Enemy among them,) they know whether I speak true or no.

L. H. S. When will your Lordship be ready to make your Defence?

L. Staff. As soon as ever I have them, I will not stay a Minute, a Moment, an Instant; I desire not to shew my Council, nor any one, for my Trial is a thing that I have long desired; therefore I would not be mistaken, as if I would put off the Cause. I am innocent, and shall be so while I live, and hope I shall make it appear so. I beg, if this be a Matter of Law, whether I may have them or not, that my Council be heard to it.

L. H. S. This is a Matter of Fact.

L. Staff. I insist upon it as things without which I cannot make my Defence: I am innocent, and I suppose not one of the House of Commons, nor one of your Lordships, will debar me of that by which I may make my Innocency appear.

L. H. S. You cannot know my Lords Pleasure till they are withdrawn.

Sir W. Jones. Before your Lordships withdraw, I hope you will please to hear us a few Words, which we think may be for the Service of this Court. My Lords, what Evidence is before your Lordships, 'tis in your Lordships Pleasure what of that you shall please to communicate to my Lord Stafford; but for this Evidence he speaks of, as remaining in our Hands, and which he takes upon himself to appeal to us for, admits of another Consideration. My Lords, if we were conscious of any thing in these Affidavits that were for my Lord's Advantage, and knew where they were, we would readily produce them; but for my self, I must answer, and I think my Companions will say so too, that we do not know where these Affidavits are, nor of any Variation in those Affidavits from what is now sworn; but whatever they were, they were taken for the Information of the House of Commons, who are the Prosecutors in this Cause, and who are no Judges. Now, if my Lord will bring any Witness that will say this Witness of ours did before a Justice of Peace depose so and so, and says the contrary now, there might be then just Reasons to look after these Affidavits, and to have them produced; but upon a bare Imagination that there is a Variance, where in truth there is none, and the Truth may otherwise be known; to desire that these Affidavits that never were before you should be produc'd, whether such a Suggestion is to be admitted, I humbly submit to your Lordships Consideration.

L. Staff. My Lords, if these Gentlemen that are the Managers for the House of Commons will aver to your Lordships, that there is no Variation in them, I will submit to them, and be quiet; if they will say it was not debated in the House, whether he should amend or no.

L. H. S. Look you, he puts it upon you so far, Gentlemen, that if you will take it upon you to aver that there is no Variation between those Affidavits upon which you grounded your Impeachment, and the Evidence you have given upon the Trial of your Impeachment, he will not give you the trouble.

L. Staff. I beseech you, let me say one Word: My Lords, I have been thus long a Prisoner; I was as far from being proceeded against now, as any of the rest of the Lords in the Tower, till Turberville came in with his Discovery; and I believe I am now called the sooner (which I am glad of, and I give the Gentlemen thanks for it) upon the Affidavit of Turberville; I desire that Affidavit. And though it be true, the House of Commons give no Oath, yet they appointed two Members of the House, that were Justices of the Peace of Middlesex, to take it upon Oath, and he desired the next Day to amend it; and I put my self upon them, whether this be not true.

L. H. S. What say you, Sir, to it?

Sir W. Jones. My Lord, I cannot answer, because I don't hear.

L. Staff. My Lords, I say this, I do observe that Mr. Turberville (whose Face I never saw in my Life that I know of, till to-day, nor never spoke a Word to him, and I shall prove that no Servant that ever I had see him) did depose (for the purpose) to-day, that he was in the Years 72 and 76 in such and such Places, and that he did speak with me at Doway and Paris; and to-morrow recollecting his Notes, he found he was mistaken in his Affidavit that he had made before, and desired to mend it, and brought it to the Years 72 and 75: There was some Debate in the House about it, whether they should permit him to mend it: I appeal to all the Gentlemen, whether it were not so.

L. H. S. Your Labour is to have two Affidavits; that you do presume will do your Business in order to the finding out a Variety of Time of his being at Doway or at Paris: That which does press your Lordship we know in Turberville's Evidence is, That at Paris, in the Room below your Lodging, you encourag'd him to kill the King, and you were to have met him at Diep to know his mind, but you came not, and he went away; if you have it in the Affidavit quite contrary to this, you say somewhat.

L. Staff. My Lords, I beseech you, it presses me and every Man in England, not to be run down by a Fellow that forswears himself: For him to swear one Thing to-day, and another Thing to-morrow, is Perjury.

L. H. S. What say you to it, Gentlemen?

Sir W. Jones. What was done in the House of Commons, it does not become any of us that are Members to disclose: But I have heard, and will admit it, that in the Depositions the Witness made before a Justice of Peace, there was a Year put down, which he going home, and upon sight of Letters and Papers finding it to be mistaken, he comes the next Day, and desires to alter it: If this be for my Lord's Service, we shall grant it.

L. H. S. What say you, my Lord, now?

L. Staff. I do say, my Lord, I am informed by what I have heard cursorily, (for I have not seen one of the House of Commons before the Day of my Trial) that though in his second Deposition he named the Years 72 and 75, yet I can prove him perjured as to what he hath sworn here to-day.

L. H. S. Since 'tis insisted upon, Gentlemen, that there is a Variety in the last Deposition from what he swore at first, what can you say why he should not have the Avail of his Exception?

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, whether your Lordships will think fit to consider by what Ways and Means the House of Commons inform'd themselves in order to Impeachments, I submit to you; and for those things that still remain in the Hands of the Commons, I suppose you will be pleased to consider how you can send for them to inform you. We would not be mistaken in the Matter; let not any one that hears us think that we are conscious there is the least Variation; nay, we are confident, if the thing were produced, it would turn to my Lord's Prejudice; but what is done in this Case may be a Precedent for the future, and therefore we cannot, without resorting to the House, consent to deliver any thing the House took for their Information. Therefore if your Lordships stand upon it, and incline to have it done, we must resort to the House to ask their Leave, whether we shall do it or no.

L. H. S. I cannot tell what my Lords will incline to do; but I desire, when you are gone back, you will consider how far it will make the Matter easy to my Lord.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we can give no Answer to that till we have attended our House.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. I desire your Lordships to consider what a Piece of Cunning he hath put upon both Houses, to pass by his vilifying our Witnesses, which I may say was not comely. But if he makes any Question, it must be put to the Houses upon Supposition to be a Question, and so he would bring things only to this Issue to put off the Cause for To-day. He ought to put that which might probably be something of a Question. Let him instance in Particulars, and make out his Evidence, not feign things to put off the Cause; for aught I see 'tis to no other End, and 'tis a Jesuitical Trick, I think.

L. Staff. I feign nothing; I have been told this that I speak here, and I desire it may be proved.

L. H. S. If you are bound up so that you cannot consent, I can't help it.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Let him put the Fact, my Lords, and not suppose and imagine Things, and then raise Questions.

L. H. S. It is usual in these Cases for the Gentlemen of the House of Commons to stay till the Lords are withdrawn, and expect their Lordships Resolution; perhaps they may so order it that you need not go back.

Sir Will. Jones. I desire before your Lordships withdraw, that it may be taken Notice of by your Lordships, that for the Matter of the Variation of the Year, we do admit it. My Lord is not pleas'd to mention any other particular Matter of the Affidavit, but only says in general, that it is contrary to what he says To-day: If my Lord would tell us wherein, perhaps we should admit it, or answer it, or take it into further Consideration. But to make so general an Allegation, and give your Lordships no particular Account, we submit whether such a Suggestion ought to be regarded.

L. H. S. Is there any further Variation, besides the Variation of the Year?

L. Staff. I cannot say there is, my Lord, I do not know it; but I do really believe in my Conscience there is, from what I have heard; but however, I insist upon it, and demand your Judgment.

Sir Fr. Win. My Lords, I humbly desire one Word as to the Objection that hath been made, that he hath prayed your Lordships to grant him the sight of such and such Papers. The Nature of this Cause, my Lords, we know is such, that there was never the like Number of Papers known, as to the general Plot; and my Lord that is the Prisoner at the Bar, may as well demand to-morrow such a particular Paper, and the next Day another, that he hath heard of in the general Plot; and where will the End of this be? So that if the thing be granted upon the Variation of the Time that it was immediately rectified, and he cannot produce any Grounds that may satisfy your Lordships why he should have that Paper, you may as well suffer him to demand any other Paper after, and so never end the Cause.

L. H. S. Your Lordship hath been told, and you shall find it, that you shall have as fair and equal an Hearing as is possible, and nothing shall be denied you that is just and reasonable to save your Life, or make your Defence. But pray, my Lord, for so much as is upon the Journal, which you may resort unto, you may easily know what Answer my Lords will give to that; but for this other Thing, if it be only the Variety you alledge of the Time and the Year, and you do desire it to look for other Exceptions, and you pray the Help of the Lords to see such a Paper, that you may make Enquiry after other Varieties, do you think they are to help you to find out Exceptions to the Witnesses?

L. Staff. I do not desire their Lordships to help me to find out Exceptions; but I have told your Lordships of one Exception to the Affidavit, which these Gentlemen acknowledge to be true; and the other Affidavit is, that he swears I spoke to him at Doway in the Year 72 or 73, which I can disprove; and then I say, he swearing several Things false, he is no credible Witness.

L. H. S. 'Tis admitted to your Lordship that he did mistake the Time.

L. Staff. It is admitted that he said he spoke to me at Doway.

L. H. S. How very easy a Matter were it to expedite this Process, by allowing the Prisoner his Demand in this Particular!

Sir Will. Jones. I never saw it, and a great many of the Managers say they never saw it.

L. Staff. These Gentlemen say, I did it to put off the Cause. I am far from it; for tho' I am in a Condition very unfit to manage my Defence, faint and weak with speaking so long, and hardly able to speak any more, yet I desire to finish this Night; and if I see it now, it will be enough, I shall not desire to have a Copy to advise with my Council or any body else.

L. H. S. Pray, Gentlemen of the House of Commons, will you observe, My Lord, as weary as he is, would make an end of the Matter presently, if you would but send for the Affidavit.

Mr. Foley. My Lords, it is not in our hands here; if the House of Commons will order it, it may be done; we cannot order it our selves.

Mr. Powle. My Lords, this is a Paper that does properly belong to the House; and I do think, that none of us here that are Managers for this Trial, will undertake it shall be deliver'd, without resorting to the House for their Opinion: For tho' I do verily believe, and am fully persuaded, that what this noble Lord at the Bar does object, will not appear to be so; for I think there is not any thing of my Lord Stafford's speaking with this Witness at Doway mentioned therein; yet how far the Precedents of this may reach in other Cases, I think is worthy the Consideration of the House. And we cannot presume to offer any thing in it to your Lordships, until you be pleased to give us leave to go and resort thither.

Then

Then the Lords withdrew, and after an Hour and an Half's Space returned, and Proclamation was made for Silence.

L. H. S. My Lord Viscount Stafford, my Lords have considered of the Demands you made, and my Lords upon the Debate of the Reasons of your Demands, are come to this Resolution: Your Lordship did demand in the first Place, that you might have a Sight of the Journal, and have the Papers lodged in the House of Peers; my Lords take Notice that this Demand which your Lordship now makes, is a Demand that was granted you long ago, about two Years since; you have an Order entered upon the Books, that your Lordship should have Copies of every Thing in that House; and if your Lordship have not taken out Copies, and if any Thing is missing to your Lordship that is yet there extant, 'tis your Lordship's Fault. However, my Lords will command their Journals to be brought hither, that your Lordship may make that use of them that may be of most Profit to you. For the other Demand touching the Affidavit supposed to be taken from Turberville by the Justices of the Peace, that my Lords, upon Consideration had, do find that there is no Obligation at all upon them as a Court, to concern themselves in that Matter. And therefore my Lords have made no order in that Point, but your Lordship must come provided as well as you can, and the Court can do no more to help you in it. For the rest, my Lords did take Notice that your Lordship said before they were withdrawn, that you found yourself very faint and weary, and that you were much spent in Discourse, and tired with what already you have done. My Lords are extremely willing to give your Lordship all the Favour and Accommodation possible, for the recollecting yourself; therefore my Lords will not now put you upon it, to go on to make your Defence, but will give you Time till To-morrow.

L. Staff. I humbly give your Lordships Thanks for your Kindness and Favour to me; but here I profess, and call Almighty God to witness, rather than I would have it thought I am willing to put it off, I would have sunk down dead at the Bar. But, my Lords, there was another Demand that I made: Your Lordships say, I shall have Copies of all the Journals, and that you cannot help me to the Affidavit of Turberville. I submit to it without saying one Word more: But I desire that I may have brought hither To-morrow the Journals, and other Papers in the Lords House; but I desire also the two Affidavits of Dugdale, taken the one on the 24th, the other the 29th of December following, which Depositions were taken before Mr. Lane and Mr. Vernon, in Stafford Town, when Dugdale was in Prison.

L. H. S. Look you, my Lord, this is all under the same Rule: What Evidence soever there is before the Court of Peers, that you shall have; whatsoever Evidence is not in that Court, you ought to come provided of: The Court is not to stay, nor to help you to Evidence.

L. Staff. My Lord, I beg your Pardon, Dugdale made an Affidavit then, and says the clean contrary now; I desire nothing but Justice, and I am sure I shall have all Justice from your Lordships.

L. H. S. Produce it; alledge what you will for yourself, it shall be heard.

L. Staff. How then shall I be able to make my Defence if I have not those Papers, which I humbly conceive by the Law ought to be brought? These Gentlemen of the House of Commons say, that I could not have Turberville's Affidavit, because it was in the House, and they could not give it without Consent of the House; but this was examined before a Justice of Peace, and returned to the Council: Sure I shall have that. I was examined by my Lord of Essex, and my Lord of Bridgewater, upon that Affidavit twice, I think, therefore that is material and necessary; and I know your Lordships would not have me come to defend myself without Weapons.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, I do beseech your Lordship to be a little better informed in your own Business. You have Leave to make Use of the Journal, and all Papers that are entered there; the Clerks say, Dugdale's Oath is entered there.

L. Staff. Is the 24th of December there?

Clerk. It is there.

L. H. S. Pray, my Lord, do not put the Court upon Interrogatories, but come provided as well as you can.

L. Staff. If it be entered on the Journal-Book, I desire not the Original, I am very well satisfied.

L. H. S. Will you be ready to go on To-morrow, my Lord?

L. Staff. I will with all my Heart.

L. H. S. 'Tis too late, Gentlemen, to go on To-night; we must adjourn till To-morrow.

L. Staff. My Lords, I had so much to write last Night, that I had very little Sleep; I desire I may not come till ten.

L. H. S. My Lord, I am not able to hear you; I take as much Pains to come near you as I can.

L. Staff. I had a great deal to write last Night, I say, and I want some Sleep; I desire I may not come till ten.

L. H. S. Will you be ready by ten o'Clock To-morrow.

L. Staff. I will be ready by ten.

L. H. S. I will move my Lords when they are withdrawn, to adjourn till ten To-morrow. But, my Lord Stafford, I do not know how your Lordship is provided, or how you look after your own Business. If you have not had Copies of the Journal all this while, 'tis you are in the Fault. A great deal of it is in Print, you may send your Solicitor to the Clerk of the Parliament, and take Copies of what you have need of. I give you Notice of it, that if you come unprovided, you may know it is your own Fault.

L. Staff. I do acknowledge I have Copies of the Journal-Book, I think of all; but I do not find any Thing of Dugdale's second Deposition there.

L. H. S. Here is that of the 24th of December, that you ask after; send your Solicitor, and then you shall have a Copy out of the Journal of it.

L. Staff. I assure your Lordship I will be ready To-morrow, if I can get those Copies.

L. H. S. My Lords will give you as much Ease, and all the Accommodations that are fit.

L. Staff. Then To-morrow I will be ready by ten o'Clock if your Lordships please; only I would desire your Lordships to take Notice, that these Gentlemen of the House of Commons do acknowledge that Turberville swore one Day to one Year, and the next Day to another.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, you say you can be ready To-morrow at ten o'Clock; are you sure you can be ready then?

L. Staff. I say, my Lords, this, I shall not be so ready as I shall be next Day; but I assure your Lordships, I will rather sink down in the Place where I am, if you think fit, than put off the Trial.

L. H. S. Look you, Gentlemen of the House of Commons, in a Case of this Consequence, and of this vital Importance to a Man as this is, where is the Inconvenience if there should be a Day's Respite, and the Court should adjourn till Friday, if my Lords be moved in it? I make no Direction, but what Inconvenience will be in it? Will it not be every Way as well?

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, your Lordships do not expect from us to give our Consent to put off the Trial.

L. H. S. I ask only, what Inconvenience it is?

Sir Will. Jones. Your Lordships are the Judges, and will do as you find it reasonable; but this I say, it is very unusual, and scarce to be precluded, that when the Prosecutors have given an Evidence, the Prisoner should have Time, a further considerable Time, to give his Answer to it. The Prisoner knows before-hand the general Scope and Drift of the Evidence; therefore for him to have Time till To-morrow, is a Favour; but to have more than that, even a whole Day to intervene, is very unusual.

L. H. S. If that be all, and the Matter depend upon what is usual, I do venture with my Lords leave to inform you, that my Lord of Stafford had two Days Time after the Prosecution, to give his Answer to what was said against him.

Sir Will. Jones. That was an Evidence of twenty-eight Articles, this but upon two Heads; and that was after a long Examination of many Days.

L. Staff. My Lords, I had prepared myself for my Trial as well as I could, and written down a few Things that I intended to say; and I profess before God, as I am a Man, and as I am a Christian, of all I intended to say: I have in a Manner made use of very few Words; but as to what I had to say upon Evidence, I was forced to lay all aside, because I wanted these Papers. I have not eaten To-day, and being forced to lay aside all that I had written, I shall need a whole Day to write; however, I submit myself to your Lordships in that Matter.

L. H. S. My Lord, if it will be equal to your Lordship, and your Lordship will be as ready To-morrow as another Day, this Court will be more ready.

L. Staff. I assure your Lordships, if your Lordships do give me another Day, I will not debate with my Council any one Thing upon the Papers I have asked.

L. H. S. Pray, my Lord, will you be pleased to make your Demand to my Lords, who are your Judges, by what Time you will be content to be foreclosed.

L. Staff. My Lords, if you will give me till Friday, I shall be ready to give my Evidence, and I will bring Witnesses sufficient, I hope, to prove my Innocency.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we do not presume at all to offer our Consent to what Time the Court shall be adjourned—

L. H. S. No, we do not ask your Consent.

Sir Will. Jones. And I hope your Lordships will not ask the Prisoner's Consent, nor do it by his Direction.

L. H. S. De morte hominis non est cunctatio longa.

Sir Will. Jones. But we must desire your Lordships, as we are entrusted by the House of Commons to manage this Trial, to take Notice, that as we do not expect your Lordships should take the Measures from our Desires, much less do we expect you should do it at the only Instance of the Prisoner. 'Tis a great Advantage to this Lord to chuse his own Time, when he will please to answer our Evidence. We do know very well, that in this Case there have been Attempts to suborn Witnesses, and that we shall prove in due Time, and Attempts to destroy Witnesses too; so that there hath been too much Time lost already, and I think To-morrow is a very convenient Time for him to make his Answer. And I must observe to your Lordships, that the Prisoner hath gained his End of not making his Answer this Day, by raising an Objection, which in my Thoughts carried no great Weight in it; though when it was made, your Lordships were pleased to adjourn upon it: But seeing he hath got his Point of deferring the making Answer till To-morrow, there can be no Reason he should gain a further Day, since the Depositions may be ready by To-morrow as well as by the next Day. And therefore we desire your Lordships will be pleased to go on in the Trial To-morrow.

L. H. S. You shall know their Lordships Pleasure when they are withdrawn. Is it your Lordships Pleasure that we should adjourn?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. S. This House is adjourned into the Parliament-Chamber.

So the Lords withdrew in their Order, and the Commons went back to their House, and Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

A Message was sent from the Lords by Sir Timothy Baldwin, and Sir Samuel Clark.

Mr. Speaker, The Lords have sent us to acquaint this House, that they have ordered the Prisoner William Viscount Stafford to be brought to the Bar in Westminster-Hall To-morrow Morning at Ten of the Clock.

And then the Commons adjourned to eight of the Clock next Morning. What that it doth not appear by the Lord's Journal of 1. Dec. 1680. that there was any The THIRD DAY. What on the 2. Dec. the Lord's Journal says, that the next day with the Trial contrary to his Lordship's request. Thursday, December 2, 1680.

At the Hour of ten in the Morning, the Lords adjourned into Westminster-Hall, and returned in their former Order into the Court there erected; and Mr. Speaker having left the Chair, the Commons were seated as before. The Court being sat, Proclamation for Silence was made, and the Lieutenant of the Tower commanded to bring his Prisoner to the Bar; which being done, the Lord High Steward spake to him as followeth:

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, this is the Time appointed to hear what your Lordship hath to say in your Defence, and to call your Witnesses.

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, Yesterday my Lord Viscount Stafford was pleased to make mention of an Affidavit of Mr. Turberville taken before two Justices of the Peace, wherein he was pleased to say there was some Amendment made; and so indeed we did then acknowledge there was. But he had a Desire to see it, notwithstanding our Acknowledgement, because he was informed that that which Turberville swore then, differed from what Turberville swore Yesterday. My Lords, at that Time we had not the Affidavit; nor was it proper for us to produce it, for indeed it remained in the Justice of Peace's Hands that took it: But now that his Lordship may have full Satisfaction, and not only his Lordship, but also all that are present at this Trial, I do inform his Lordship, that the Affidavit is in the Hands of a Member of the House of Commons, Sir Will. Poultny by Name; and if his Lordship please, he may have it produced, and make what Use he can of it.

L. H. S. It is extreme honourably and worthily done of the House of Commons; and my Lord hath no Manner of Exception left him.

L. Staff. My Lords, if I shall have Occasion to use it, I shall call for it; but I would first say something to your Lordships: My Lords, I first give your Lordships Thanks for granting me the Liberty to come so late To-day; I have had a little Sleep upon it. Your Lordships heard Yesterday, when you had Dr. Oates at the Bar, the first Thing that he said, as I remember, was, to desire you would be pleased to leave him to his own Method: I beg of your Lordships the same Favour, that I may begin with the one or the other Witnesses, or with Matter of Law, as I please.

L. H. S. God forbid but you should take your own Method in your Defence.

L. Staff. In order to which, I desire first Mr. Turberville may come to the Bar.

L. H. S. Do you call Turberville, my Lord?

L. Staff. Yes, my Lord, I do.

L. H. S. He is there, what say you to him?

L. Staff. My Lords, I will ask him but one Question, and I hope I shall have Occasion to ask him no more: When was the last time that he spoke with me?

L. H. S. Mr. Turberville, I think I hear right, I do not know: My Lord Stafford asks, when was the last time you spoke with his Lordship?

Mr. Tur. It was in November, 1675.

L. Staff. I have very much to say against his Evidence; but I hope your Lordships will not think him any Evidence at all against me, or any body else. But I desire your Judgment, whether I be not within the Compass of the Time limited by the Statute.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. Express yourself, my Lord, for we do not understand you.

L. Staff. I cannot say more than I do: The Time which the Statute limits, is six Months, but this is five Years; I desire the Statute may be read.

L. H. S. What Statute, my Lord?

L. Staff. The Statute of the 13th of this King.

L. H. S. If your Lordship pleases you shall have it read: But your Lordship does not observe, you are prosecuted and impeached of High-Treason upon the Statute of the 25th of Edward III. not upon the Statute of the 13th of this King, made for the Safety of the King's Person, which limits the Prosecution of some Offences to be within six Months; but the Prosecution for Treason may be at any time.

L. Staff. Does your Lordship say it may be at any time?

L. H. S. Yes, my Lord.

L. Staff. This truly does very much surprize me, though I am wholly ignorant in Matters of Law. My Lords, I have ever heard that no Man can be prosecuted by that Statute, but within so many Days, in one Part of it in thirty Days, in another six Months; and I desire your Lordships that the Statute may be read.

L. H. S. If your Lordship please the Statute shall be read; if your Lordship desires the Clause of the Statute of the 13th of this King, which limits the Prosecution to be within six Months, that shall be read. But I conceive your Lordship is not accused upon that Statute.

L. Staff. I beseech your Lordships I may know whether I am prosecuted upon the Statute of the 13th of this King, or upon what other Statute.

L. H. S. What say the worthy Gentlemen of the House of Commons: Is my Lord prosecuted upon the Statute of the 13th of this King?

Mr. Serj. Mayn. Not at all, my Lord; he is not prosecuted upon that Statute, but upon the Common Law, and the 25th of Edward III. which was only declarative of the Common Law.

L. Staff. This is a Point of Law.

Sir W. Jones. What is the Point of Law?

L. Staff. Whether I can be prosecuted after so many Days.

L. H. S. The Law is very clear. If you were prosecuted upon the 13th of this King for any less Offence than Treason, you could not be prosecuted after six Months; but if you be prosecuted for Treason either upon the 25th of Edward III. or the 13th of Car. II. there is no time limited, and God forbid there should.

L. Staff. I beseech your Lordships Judgment, whether there be not a Statute, I think 'tis in the Reign of Edward VI. that sets the time, after which no Man shall be prosecuted for any thing of Treason. I desire a Quarter of an Hour's time to look into the Statute.

L. H. S. What say you, Gentlemen?

L. Staff. Pray, my Lord, let me read the Statute of Edward VI.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. We know not of any such Statute.

L. Staff. I will not say there is, but I will say I cannot read if there be not.

L. H. S. Pray, Gentlemen of the House of Commons, my Lord does suppose he has some Kind of Objection in Law to make, which he cannot make out of himself; will it be amiss to let his Council make and propose the Question for him?

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, we rather would have my Lord propose the Objection; for your Lordships know, till a Matter of Law is proposed, he cannot be admitted to have Council. If he desires time to recollect himself about the Objection, we can't oppose it. But we desire that he may propose the Objection; and after, if it be any Doubt in Matter of Law, your Lordships will assign him Council to be heard to speak to it.

Sir F. Win. This would be a Way for a Prisoner to have the Advantage of Council, when they ought not to be allowed it; for 'tis but to say, he hath some Doubt which he cannot propose himself, and so let in his Council to make Objections for him. If any Question of Law do arise, and that Question is stated, you will allow the Prisoner Council to argue it: But at this Rate he may make the like Pretences in every Part of his Defence, and so obtain that Council shall manage his whole Defence for him.

L. H. S. I suppose my Lord does intend an Objection as to the Time of the Prosecution, but he does not know how to make it. He supposes, he is prosecuted after the six Months, which he thinks is the Time limited for the Prosecution. But I pray, my Lord Stafford, will your Lordship take time to recollect yourself, and make an Objection fit for Council to be heard upon, and you shall have it.

L. Staff. I beseech you I may have the Statute-Book with me, for I have none myself, my Lord.

Sir W. Jones. With all our Hearts, we do not oppose it:

Then my Lord withdrew into the Room provided for him, and within a Quarter of an Hour returned.

L. H. S. Say, my Lord:

L. Staff. My Lords, I do confess I have been very much mistaken ever since I was first committed to the Tower: For I did conceive that they would have proceeded, as I thought I was impeached, upon the Statute of the 13th of this King. I humbly desire your Lordships Judgment, whether I ought or no to be prosecuted upon that Statute?

L. H. S. The Gentlemen have told you already: They prosecuted you upon the Statute of 25 Ed. III. and upon the Common Law.

L. Staff. And they lay aside that Statute:

L. H. S. What Statute?

L. Staff. the 13th of this King:

L. H. S. What say you, Gentlemen, once more?

Sir F. Win. My Lords, we have declared already to his Lordship; and if my Lord had looked well upon the Articles of Impeachment, he could not have put that Question, but would have found himself impeached for Treason at the Common Law, declared by the 25th of Edward III.

L. Staff. So then they lay that aside of the 13th of this King?

Mr. Serj. Mayn. We do not mention any Statute, but we mention the Crime; and that Crime is against the Common Law, declared by the Statute, to wit, the attempting the King's Death, and the Subversion of the Government.

L. Staff. My Lords, there is no Doubt but the attempting the King's Death is a great and heinous Crime; but, my Lords, I do not find that in the Impeachment there is any Overt-Act at all. And whether I shall answer to a Treason not proved by any Overt-Act sworn by two Witnesses, I submit to your Lordships. But, my Lord, because your Lordships and the House of Commons may not think that I propose these Things out of a Desire of Delay; if your Lordships please it may be saved to me, with all other Points of Law; I will go on to my Proofs.

L. H. S. Yes, all these Things shall be saved to you; pray let us hear your Evidence.

L. Staff. Since your Lordships have granted me that, be pleased to give me Leave to go to my Evidence; and I begin with Stephen Dugdale:

L. H. S. Set up Dugdale.

L. Staff. Will your Lordships please I may have Pen, Ink, and Paper?

L. H. S. By all Means, my Lord. [Which was given him.]

L. Staff. May it please your Lordships, Stephen Dugdale said, if I understand him right (and I ask him again), that he knew something of the Plot fifteen or sixteen Years ago?

L. H. S. What say you, Mr. Dugdale, you hear the Question? Did not you say you knew of the Plot fifteen or sixteen Years ago?

Mr. Dugd. I did say it, and did explain my Meaning in it. I did say there was among us such a Preparation to be made against the King died, of Arms and Money, that neither should be wanting.

L. Staff. I beseech your Lordship to ask what Proportion of Arms was to be provided.

L. H. S. What Proportion of Arms was to be provided?

Mr. Dugd. I never heard it nominated how many absolutely. I have heard of some Numbers. I heard of late of 30,000 that were to be raised beyond Sea: What the whole Number in England was, I have forgot; but I think I have heard Mr. Gavan, and some of the Priests say, That if there was Occasion they should have at least 200,000 to assist them, that was of Men; and I suppose they had Arms as well as Men.

L. Staff. My Lords, if this were true which he says Mr. Gavan said, that they were 200,000, I desire to know what Men he meant, what Religion they must be of.

L. H. S. What Religion were they of that were to come in and help?

Mr. Dugd. He did not name them at that time; but I understood them, and so I apprehend the Company would, that they were Roman Catholics.

L. Staff. 'Tis a strange thing that there should be 200,000 Catholics raised, when there are not 20,000 in England that can bear Arms.

L. H. S. Good my Lord, they might come from beyond Sea, and so they might be so many Roman Catholics, tho' there were not so many in England.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. And he says not they were Roman Catholics, but he heard so.

Mr. Treby. There might be so many Roman Catholics, and such as should be with them.

L. Staff. Did he hear fifteen or sixteen Years ago that I was to be among them?

L. H. S. Answer that Question: Did you hear then that my Lord Stafford was to be one among them?

Mr. Dugd. I cannot remember that I did, my Lord.

L. Staff. Then, my Lords, I make this Use of it: He tells you of a Plot sixteen Years ago, that 200,000 Men in Arms were ready against the King's Death.

Mr. Dugd. I did not say so, my Lords; I desire I may be understood aright.

L. Staff. You say you heard so.

Mr. Dugd. I speak as to the Number of Men, what I heard of late at the Consults and Meetings within these two Years.

L. Staff. But I speak of sixteen Years ago, what Number of Men was there to be raised?

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, it was a general Word that was amongst us, That we must be provided against that Time, against the Death of the King, but no Number at all.

L. Staff. This, my Lords, under Favour, I conceive does not concern me. He tells you there was such a Thing; it might be so, or it might not be so; I am not concerned in it, then 'tis out of Doors as to what concerns me, I conceive; if the Gentlemen conceive otherwise, they will say so. Then, my Lords, the next thing is, How long ago it is since I first spake to him about this Plot? And I beseech your Lordship he may mention Time and Place.

L. H. S. You hear the Question, Mr. Dugdale.

Mr. Dugd. The first Time, to my best Remembrance.

L. Staff. I beseech you, my Lords, let us have no Remembrance, but let him swear positively.

T

L. H. S.

Dugdale for the Crown!

L. H. S. There is no mortal Man can swear otherwise than according to his Remembrance.

L. Staff. When a Man's Life and Honour, and all he hath is at stake, and indeed in consequence, every Man in England is concerned, if they swear not positively, but still say, As I remember; who can make a Defence?

L. H. S. Mr. Dugdale, Go on, and say, as near as you can, and be as particular as you can upon your Oath.

Mr. Dugd. That which I can positively affirm, is, It was about August or September, 78.

L. Staff. He said Yesterday it was in the latter end of August, or the Beginning of September, which are two Months. I beseech you what does he mean by the latter end of August? How long before the End of August?

L. H. S. How long was it before the last Day in August?

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I will not be positive; but it was either in one Month or the other: I did not keep a Diary, or else I would give your Lordships Satisfaction.

L. Staff. I beseech your Lordships he may positively say, whether in August, or not in August; or whether in September, or not in September.

Mr. Dugd. I dare not venture to swear that, I dare not do it.

L. Staff. Then saving my Exceptions to the Incertainty of that afterwards, I would ask him, what Day was it in September that I spoke to him.

Mr. Dugd. I remember one was either the 20th or 21st of September, 78.

L. Staff. My Lords, He says the 20th or 21st; does he say that was the first time he spoke with me?

Sir J. Trevor. No, no.

L. Staff. I beseech you, my Lords, they may not answer the Questions, but the Witnesses; they cry, no, no.

L. H. S. My Lord, You shall certainly have an Answer to all the Questions you will ask.

L. Staff. But when I ask, they answer for them; I would know whether that is the Course or no?

L. H. S. Do not disquiet yourself for any thing that is said about you; you shall have a fair Hearing.

L. Staff. But, my Lords, I cannot but be disquieted when I hear these learned Gentlemen make Answers to my Questions for the Witnesses.

L. H. S. Mr. Dugdale, was the 20th or the 21st of September, you speak of, the first time that you spoke to my Lord Stafford?

Mr. Dugd. No, my Lords, it was not.

L. Staff. Pray, my Lords, what Day was it then I spoke first to him?

L. H. S. What was the Day you first spoke to my Lord?

Mr. Dugd. Truly, my Lords, I cannot remember so well as to tell you.

L. H. S. Do you remember when my Lord came to Tixall?

Mr. Dugd. I remember one Sunday in particular; but I cannot tell what Day of the Month it was.

L. H. S. Do you remember my Lord Stafford at Tixall, in Company with my Lord Aston and Father Evers?

Mr. Dugd. Yes, I do.

L. H. S. Do you remember that any Discourse passed between them?

Mr. Dugd. Yes, I do.

L. H. S. Was that before or after the 21st of September?

Mr. Dugd. Both before and after.

L. Staff. My Lords, He says there was a Consult at Tixall, where such and such were present, and the King's Death determined; I ask when was that?

Mr. Dugd. That was in September, I cannot say positively the Day; but in September, or the latter end of August.

L. Staff. My Lords, I must acquiesce and submit to your Lordships to do what you please; but if he does not name Times nor Places, how can I make my Defence? I desire he may say positively within five Days of the one or of the other; and, my Lords, I will put it upon that, if he say five Days before the end of August, or five Days in the beginning of September, which one would think is space enough, that is ten Days time.

L. H. S. My Lords, do observe how far Mr. Dugdale goes, and that he is no further positive than he does express himself.

L. Staff. I beseech your Lordships, I press this, because it concerns me very much, that he may be positive within five Days or under.

L. H. S. Can you remember whether it were within five Days of the one or of the other?

Mr. Dugd. Truly, my Lords, I cannot be positive; if I had not made a particular Remark upon that of the 20th or the 21st, I could not have remembered that; for I did not then intend to reveal the Plot, or else I could have given you Satisfaction in that.

L. H. S. My Lord, Your Lordship hath an Answer to it; he cannot speak more positively to it than he does.

L. Staff. I beseech you, then, how is it possible I can make my Defence?

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I kept no Journal; if I had, I would be more positive.

L. Staff. He says it was the latter end of August, or the beginning of September; I desire he will say, whether it was the last Week in August, or the first Week in September?

L. H. S. He answers he cannot tell; your Lordship must make what Advantage you can of that Answer.

L. Staff. I can make no Advantage of it, unless he does speak positively to the time. My Lords, I beseech you I may know what is the End of August and the Beginning of September?

L. H. S. My Lord, I hear you not.

L. Staff. If a Man says the Beginning of June I was at such a Place, how many Days is the Beginning, and how many Days the End of a Month? How much time will your Lordships understand the Meaning of that to be? I am concerned extremely in the point of Time; for it is that which the whole Business depends upon, I mean as to this Man.

L. H. S. My Lord, go on with your Evidence; I know not how to give you an Answer, what Judgment my Lords will make of it, or how much they will understand by it, till they are withdrawn: They observe how much your Lordship insists upon it, and will hear what the worthy Gentlemen of the House of Commons will answer to it.

L. Staff. My Lords, my whole Business with this Fellow is concerned in a positive Answer to this Question; I give him, I think, reasonable time to confine himself to.

L. H. S. What say you to the 20th or 21st of September, my Lord?

L. Staff. My Lords, I shall give a clear Answer to that anon; but I am extremely concerned in this, to know whether it was in August or September.

L. H. S. My Lord, if your Lordship be concerned never so much at that, the Witness can swear no more than he can swear. He says about the latter end of August or the beginning of September; will your Lordship stand still for that?

L. Staff. Well then, I will go on as well as I can: As for the matter of the 20th or 21st of September, I beseech your Lordships I may ask Dugdale one Question, whether at the Trial of Sir George Wakeman or the five Jesuits, he did not say the Consult was in August; if he deny it, I shall prove it.

L. H. S. Mr. Dugdale, My Lord asks, whether at the Trial of Wakeman, or the five Jesuits, you did not say it was in August?

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I did name there was a Consult at Boscobel in August, but I do not remember that I did name my Lord Stafford in any Consult in August positively; but, as I say now, the latter end of August, or the beginning of September. But I did name that there was a Consult at Boscobel in August 78.

L. Staff. My Lords, He did say I was at the Consult in August.

Mr. Dugd. I did not say My Lord Stafford was there, I don't charge him in it; and if any such thing was printed, I have wrong done me.

L. Staff. Then he says he had nothing to do with me till the latter end of August, or the beginning of September. My Lords, I beseech your Lordships to ask him, whether in Sir George Wakeman's Trial he did not say, he was to receive Orders from me in June or July, when I came into the Country.

L. H. S. Did not you say at Sir George Wakeman's Trial, that you were to receive Orders from my Lord Stafford in June or July, when he came into the Country?

Mr. Dugd. My Lord, I submit to your Lordship, and the rest of my Lords here, whether when that Question was ask'd by my Lord Stafford, I did not say, That the first time I entered into Correspondency with the Consulters, they told me, my Lord was to come down then, and I should receive Orders from him. I had heard of my Lord Stafford before, but not to enter into any Consults with him, till he came down the latter end of that Summer.

L. Staff. I beseech your Lordships pardon me; I desire him to answer positively, whether at the Trial of Sir George Wakeman, he did not say he was to receive Orders from me in June or July, when I came into the Country.

L. H. S. Did you say so at Sir George Wakeman's Trial?

Mr. Dugd. I believe I did say so; for I had it from others, and not my Lord Stafford himself.

L. Staff. My Lords, In June or July I was not in the Country.

L. H. S. He says you were to come down, not that you did come down.

L. Staff. If you will let him do thus, there is no Man safe: I shall begin the Tragedy, and Millions will follow. He swore at the Trial of Sir George Wakeman, or that of those other Persons, That there was a Consult at my Lord Aston's at Tixall, where I was one, in August.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I did not swear so; but in August or September, or one of them, as now I swear.

L. Staff. I shall prove it by the Book, and Witnesses that were there.

Mr. Dugd. Then they did me wrong by printing it; for I never said of your Lordship otherwise than I do now.

L. Staff. I desire my Witnesses may be call'd to prove it, for I conceive it is very material. My Lords, does he deny it?

Mr. Dugd. I do say there was a Consult at Tixall in August; but I did not charge your Lordship positively to be there then, nor with any more than I do now.

L. Staff. I think you did, and I have Witnesses to prove it. And 'tis impossible for any Man living to defend himself, if Persons shall swear as they suppose, think, or remember. I tell your Lordships I was not there all the Month of August.

L. H. S. Does your Lordship intend to call any Witnesses?

L. Staff. My Lords, I thought I had more Witnesses than I have. But I have two here, if your Lordships will hear them, that he did swear I was at Tixall in August.

L. H. S. Who are they?

L. Staff. My Daughter Wincheste for one, and a Lady that is my Kinswoman for another.

L. H. S. Let them stand up, they are not to be sworn. You don't expect against them, Gentlemen?

Sir W. Jones. No, let him prove what he can.

L. Marchioness of Wincheste. He did swear that he was to receive his Orders from—

L. H. S. Madam, your Ladyship is not upon your Oath; but you are under all the Obligations of Truth and Honour in the World.

L. March. Winch. My Lords, by the Grace of God, I will not speak an untrue Word.

Sir Will. Jones. We desire to know this Lady's Name.

L. Staff. It is my Daughter Wincheste.

L. March. Winch. This Stephen Dugdale did say at the Trial of Sir George Wakeman, That he was to receive Orders from my Lord in June or July, when he was to come down; and that my Lord was at a Consult at Tixall in August.

L. H. S. Did he say positively in August, or in August and September.

L. March. Winch. No, he did not name September.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I might say my Lord was to come down then; but not that ever I said he was there, but as now.

L. H. S. But she says you did not name September.

L. Staff. Here is another Lady.

Sir Will. Jones. Who is she, my Lord?

L. Staff. Mrs. Howard, Daughter to Sir George Blount, and married to Mr. Howard, a Kinsman of mine; she is now a Widow.

Mrs. Howard. My Lords, at the Trial of Sir George Wakeman, Dugdale was asked to be positive in the Month my Lord Stafford came down; and he said, he came down in June or July; but he said the Consult was in August, wherein my Lord Stafford was.

L. H. S. That Lady likewise says the same, That you would not be positive as to June or July; but as to August, you were positive that my Lord was there.

Mr. Dugd. No, my Lords, I only said, In August there was a Consult; and in June or July my Lord was to come down.

Mrs. Howard. I do assure you we came to that Trial on purpose to observe observe every Word he said about my Lord Stafford, and we have kept it in our Memories ever since.

L. H. S. What do you say, Mr. Dugdale, to it?

Mr. Dugd. I suppose there was a great many more at that Trial than those two worthy Ladies; and I suppose some of them may remember I said no more than I do now. I said then, my Lord was to come down at that time, and so I said several times, but not positively, that he was there till the End of August, or the Beginning of September.

L. Staff. My Lords, I do positively aver, here are two Witnesses that say, he swore I was there at the Consult in August. Now it concerns me to prove that I was not there in August, since he said absolutely I was there in August; and I assure you I can prove I was not there all the whole Month. In the Beginning of August I come from London, from my own House; on Tuesday or Wednesday the 6th of August, I went to my Lord Bellasis's, and that Night I went to George Porter's; the next Night I went onwards towards Bath; when I was there I went over and staid with my Noble Lord the Marquis of Worcester; there I staid two or three Days, and I went thence to another Place hard by there; and then I came back again to Bath, and went back again afterwards to my Lord's House; and the first or second of September, I went from my Lord's House to London. Then if this be acknowledged I need say no more; if not, I'll prove it by sufficient Witnesses: So then I was not there the whole Month of August; and the Beginning of September he says he spoke with me. I was not there till the 12th of September. Now I beseech your Lordships, how that could possibly be the beginning of September. I submit to you, Whether then he be a Witness fit to be heard, that shall swear positively what hath no Colour of Truth in it, I also leave to you. And if they object I was not where I say I was in August, I will prove it. And for the 20th and 21st of September, I do own something of that, and I shall prove to your Lordship what it was.

L. H. S. Call what Witnesses you please, my Lord.

L. Staff. My Daughter proves when I went out of Town.

L. March. Winch. My Lords, it was on a Tuesday my Father went to my Lord Bellasis's, he dined there, and then went on to George Porter's.

L. Staff. That I was at Bath I shall call Witnesses.

L. H. S. My Lord, you should prove when you first came to Tixall, my Lord Aston's.

L. Staff. Will that satisfy your Lordship?

L. H. S. Me! 'Tis not me you are to satisfy, but my Lords, and the Gentlemen of the House of Commons.

L. Staff. Then I do own to your Lordships, I came the first time the 12th of September to Tixall.

L. H. S. That was the first Day you were there?

L. Staff. That Year, my Lord, it was.

Sir Will. Jones. Prove it.

L. Staff. Does he deny that, my Lords?

L. H. S. Do you deny that my Lord came first to Tixall the 12th of September, or do you know he was there before?

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I have positively spoke to no Day, but only to the 21st or 20th of September.

L. Staff. Where is my Lord Marquis of Worcester's Servant?

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, it will be best for your Lordship to produce all the Witnesses you have, and not to leave any thing undone that you can prove.

L. Staff. But I beseech your Lordships I may ask one Question: If I shall name any of the House of Peers as my Witnesses, does that exempt them from being Judges?

L. H. S. No, my Lord. If your Lordship have any Witnesses among any of my Lords here, they may very well testify for you, and yet remain still in the Capacities of your Judges; for my Lord of Stafford had a great many Witnesses that were Peers.

Sir J. Trevor. We do not oppose it, my Lords.

L. H. S. My Lord, Call your Witnesses.

L. Staff. There is no Place appointed for them, and therefore I could not have them ready here; I have sent for them; I have a Throng of them.

L. H. S. They will open the Way, and we will stay for them.

L. Staff. My Lords, I desire, that as Yesterday, when the Witnesses were sworn against me, mine did not hear what they said, so I desire when my Witnesses come, theirs may not be present.

L. H. S. My Lord, with your Lordship's Pardon, it was not well done that your Witnesses were not there; but if Witnesses be to confront one another, shall they not hear what one another say?

L. Staff. My Lords, I am so clear in every thing, I will dispute no little Matters.

Then my Lord's Witness stood up.

L. H. S. What is this Man's Name you call now, my Lord?

L. Staff. Indeed, my Lord, I don't know.

Witness. My Name is Bonny, My Lords.

L. H. S. Does your Lordship call this Man?

L. Staff. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. You are not upon your Oath, but you are to look that a strict Account will be taken of what you say.

Mr. Foley. My Lords, we desire to know where this Witness lives?

Bonny. I live in Exeter-Street, by Exeter-Exchange.

L. Staff. I declare it I know him not, but I am told he can witness for me.

L. H. S. Your Christian Name?

Bonny. Thomas.

L. H. S. What Profession are you of?

Bonny. I live as Clerk of the Kitchen to my Lord Marquis of Worcester.

Mr. Foley. What Religion are you of?

Bonny. A Protestant, one of the Church of England.

L. Staff. My Lords, I humbly move your Lordships, when I asked Mr. Smith the first Day, where he was made a Priest? The Gentleman said, he was not bound to answer any thing against himself that might make him criminal. I desire that the Question may not be put to my Witnesses what Religion they are of?

L. H. S. The Gentlemen will not offer to ask any Question that may make a Man accuse himself; but my Lord, a Papist or not a Papist is not so penal as a Priest or not a Priest.

Mr. Foley. To acknowledge a Man's self a Papist, is not to make him a Criminal.

L. H. S. What does your Lordship call this Witness for?

L. Staff. To prove when I was at my Lord Marquis of Worcester's?

L. H. S. What say you? when was my Lord Stafford at my Lord Marquis of Worcester's?

Bonny. In August 78.

L. H. S. Do you remember it perfectly?

Bonny. Very well.

L. H. S. What Day of August?

Bonny. The 17th of August, which my Lord Marquis keeps as his Wedding-Day every Year, and the Gentlemen of the Country are invited thither. My Lord Stafford was then at Bath, and my Lord Marquis was pleased to send his Coach for him, to be present there that Day; there he staid that Day and the next Day; and then return'd on Monday. And in the same Month, the 31st of August, my Lord came again from Bath to Badminton, my Lord Marquis of Worcester's, and upon the Monday after returned for London.

L. H. S. That was the Beginning of September?

Bonny. Yes, the 2d he went to London.

L. H. S. Will you ask him, Gentlemen, any Questions?

Managers. No, my Lords.

L. H. S. Call another Witness then.

(Who stood up).

L. H. S. What is this Man's Name?

Witness. Thomas.

L. H. S. Thomas what?

Witness. Thomas White.

L. H. S. Where do you live?

White. I live with my Lord Marquis of Worcester at Badminton.

L. H. S. What do you say?

White. My Lords—

Lord Marquis of Worcester. My Lord Steward, I have only this to say, my Lord Stafford desired that his Witnesses might not be asked what Religion they were of; but I desire all my Servants may be asked, for I keep none but Protestants.

L. H. S. What Religion are you of?

White. A Protestant.

L. Staff. My Lords, I did not require it for them, I know my Lord keeps none but Protestants; but I asked it for others of my Witnesses, that may come, and be startled at it.

L. H. S. What say you, when was my Lord Stafford at my Lord Marquis of Worcester's House?

White. The 17th of August 78; I fetched him from Bath, being my Lord's Wedding-Day.

L. H. S. You fetched him?

White. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. What Place do you serve my Lord Marquis in?

White. As Coachman.

L. H. S. Was he there afterwards?

White. Yes, he was, but I can't remember the Day; only this being a remarkable Day, I can remember it.

L. H. S. Did you carry my Lord from thence towards London?

White. Yes, I did.

L. H. S. When was that?

White. The second of September, to the best of my Remembrance.

L. H. S. Gentlemen will you ask him any Questions.

Managers. No.

L. Staff. I think this is so clear, I shall not need to trouble your Lordships further with more Witnesses.

L. H. S. Call whom you please, my Lord, and as many as you think fit, they shall be heard.

L. Staff. One more then, my Lords.

(Who stood up).

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witness. Richard Bevan.

L. H. S. Who do you live with?

Bevan. I am Groom to my Lord Marquis of Worcester.

L. H. S. What Religion are you of?

Bevan. A Protestant.

L. H. S. Do you remember when my Lord Stafford was at the Marquis of Worcester's House?

Bevan. Yes, I do.

L. H. S. What time was it?

Bevan. The 17th of August.

L. H. S. Do you remember any other Day?

Bevan. No, my Lord; but he was there that Day.

L. H. S. Will you ask him any Questions?

Managers. No, my Lords.

L. Staff. My Lords, if your Lordships please, I desire my Lord Marquis of Worcester may tell your Lordships whether his Men have said true or no?

L. Marq. of Worcester. My Lords, I do remember, that my Lord Stafford was pleased to do me the honour to come upon my Wedding-Day from the Bath, and dine with me, as most Persons of Quality that are of my Acquaintance, and happen to be at the Bath at that time, are pleased to do; and as most of the Gentlemen of the Country, within such a Distance, do also. (And that Day is the 17th of August). I think he was there once or twice after, from the Bath, but I cannot tell precisely the Days; but that particular Day I remember, because it was my Wedding-Day.

L. H. S. Can your Lordship remember when my Lord Stafford went to London?

L. Marq. of Worcester. Truly I cannot tell that, my Lords.

L. H. S. Did you not after that lend my Lord your Coach?

L. Marq. of Worcester. Yes, I did, to carry him as far as Sandy-lane, on the Road to London; but the particular Day I remember not: But one of the Persons examined (who was then my Clerk of the Kitchen) must needs know, because he books every Day who is in the House, and therefore I believe what he has said is true.

L. Staff. Stephen Dugdale, I desire, may come again. I conceive I have made it plain to your Lordships, that Stephen Dugdale did swear, That in August there was a Consult at my Lord Aston's where I was; and I conceive it is also clear that in August I was not there; and then if it were the Beginning of September, that could not be neither; for I came not down to Tixall till the 12th. I beseech you to ask him when I offer'd him the five hundred Pounds to kill the King, I think he says it was the 20th or 21st.

L. H. S. What was the time my Lord offered you the five hundred Pounds?

Mr. Dugd. It was about that time, the 20th or 21st of September, to my Remembrance.

L. Staff. He said positively before, it was one of those two Days; I beseech your Lordship to ask him where it was.

L. H. S. Where was that Offer made?

Mr. Dugd.

Mr. Dugd. In my Lord's Lodging-Chamber at Tixall.

L. Staff. Then one Question more, I desire your Lordship to ask him, what Day the Race was at Etching-Hill between Sir John Crew's Man and Lazingby?

Mr. Dugd. If it please your Lordship, I do conceive it was about that Time.

L. Staff. I pray he may answer positively, for, if you please, I will tell you how it was. It is very true, the 20th of September this Fellow was in my Chamber, and I shall trouble your Lordships with some little Discourse about it, and my Reasons why: First, I beseech your Lordships to permit me to let you know, that this Fellow did serve my Lord Aston in the Quality of a Bailiff. And I never thought him to be an honest Man, he was a mean Servant, and when the other Servants waited but till the second Course came in, he staid till the Coachman and the Groom went to Dinner, and eat with them. I profess before God it is true as that the Sun shines, I have often and often, I cannot tell how many Times, when I have been very dry at my Lord's Table, and seen him by me, not called for Drink; I did detect him as so mean a Knave, that I often refused to take drink at his Hands: And now for me to offer this Fellow five hundred Pounds—

L. H. S. I think your Lordship says he was Bailiff to my Lord Aston?

L. Staff. But I knew him to be an arrant Knave, and a great Gamester at Races, and such Things.

L. H. S. My Lord, would you have offered five hundred Pounds to an honest Man to kill the King?

Mr. Serj. Mayn. You said you never saw him.

L. Staff. I said I had seen him, but now I did not know him by his Perriwig.

L. H. S. Did you not know him, my Lord?

L. Staff. No, my Lords, I profess I did not.

L. H. S. Why, your Lordship was agoing to shew that the Race at Etching-Hill was upon the 20th of September; and your Lordship confesses, that he did speak with you on the 20th of September in your Chamber; and Dugdale says, this Day was the very Offer made him of five hundred Pounds to kill the King. What do you say, Dugdale, were you at the Race?

Mr. Dugd. Yes, I was with my Lord at the Race.

L. H. S. Did my Lord speak with you before he went, or after?

Mr. Dugd. Before.

L. H. S. That Morning in his Chamber?

Mr. Dugd. Yes, it was that very Morning, before he went to the Race.

L. Staff. I do own, my Lord, thus far; he was in my Chamber that Morning; but, my Lord, I can prove what I say to you: My Lords, the 20th of September in the Morning, I was in my Bed, and there comes a Servant of mine that hath served me twelve or fourteen Years, and he comes in to me, and says, Yonder is Stephen Dugdale, very desirous to go to this Race. It seems he says he went along with me to this Race.

Mr. Dugd. I say I went either before or after, or when you went to the Race, for I was with you at the Race.

L. H. S. Whether he went with you or no, is not the Point, but whether he was in your Chamber at that time.

L. Staff. 'Tis the Point; for he said just now, he went with me, as I apprehended him. But I tell your Lordships, my Servant came and told me, Stephen Dugdale desires that you would ask my Lord Aston Leave that he may go before to the Race; my Lord is angry with him already for his meddling in Races, and he dare not ask himself. My Lords, I was a little concerned in the Race, for I had betted some Money; and I thought with myself, should I ask my Lord Aston Leave for him to go, my Lord will not deny me, but perhaps will take it ill to be asked, so I was not over-willing to do it. But I bid my Servant call him in, and when he came, I asked him some foolish Questions about the Race, as who he thought would win, and the like; but I told him, I would get Leave of my Lord for him. My Lords, I did go to my Lord Aston, and told him, my Lord, I am sending my Servant before to the Place of the Race, but I am afraid he does not well know the Way, shall Stephen Dugdale go along with him? My Lord gave him Leave to go. But, my Lords, I dressed me, and did not speak one Tittle more to this Dugdale, but he went before, and I was hardly or but just dressed when he was gone.

L. H. S. I pray, my Lord, was your Lordship at no Time alone with him in your Chamber?

L. Staff. No, never since I was born, never in all my Life.

L. H. S. No, my Lord?

L. Staff. He says my Servants used to come for him, I profess it is all false.

L. H. S. What say you to that, Mr. Dugdale?

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I was in my Chamber, and busy when my Lord sent for me that Morning, and it was either by his Page, or one that waits on him in his Chamber; I went to my Lord, and the Page was in the Chamber, and he ordered him to go out.

L. Staff. I declare and aver to your Lordships he was in the Hall, or the next Room, and desired to come in.

L. H. S. Where is the Page?

L. Staff. This Fellow was but a poor Boy, found at the Door, then he was a Thresher, and now a Witness for the King.

(Then my Lord Stafford's Man stood up.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witness. My Name is Nicholas Furnese.

L. H. S. Do you remember the Day of the Race at Etching-Hill?

Furnese. Yes, I do, my Lords.

L. H. S. Do you remember Dugdale was in your Lord's Chamber that Morning?

Furnese. Yes, I do.

L. H. S. Do you remember whether your Lord did bid you go out or no?

Furnese. No, he did not.

L. H. S. Were you there all the while Dugdale was there?

Furnese. Yes, my Lords, I was.

L. Staff. Pray, my Lords, ask him, whether I sent for Dugdale, or he desired to speak to me?

L. H. S. Did my Lord send for Dugdale, or did he come to you to speak to my Lord for him?

Furnese. No, Dugdale spoke to me first.

L. H. S. What did he say to you, pray?

Furnese. My Lords, about eight or nine of the Clock in the Morning, I came to go to my Lord's Chamber, and I came thro' my Lord Aston's Hall; and coming through, I met Mr. Dugdale coming to me, and said, he had one Favour to desire of me. He said, he would fain go to the Race; but, said he, I do not know how to go, for my Lord is very angry with me, and, if I should ask him, he would be worse, for he is displeased that I have meddled so far in these Matters already; therefore I desire some Means may be used that I may go, and I desire that you would speak to my Lord to get Leave for me to go; for Mr. Fox is there, and hath a great deal of Money in his Hands, and divers People will give Money to bett, and so it will be a great Loss and Prejudice to me not to go. So I did promise him, my Lords, and I went into my Lord's Chamber, and told him; and when I had spoke to my Lord, my Lord bid him come in. And when he came in, my Lord asked him several Questions about the Race: My Lord asked him what Hopes he had, for he said a great deal of Money was laid by several People; he replied, he could win, but he wanted Money to bett: Says my Lord, I will bett twenty Pounds for Staffordshire Sake, though I were sure to lose. And then after some Discourse to that Purpose, my Lord told him, he would speak to his Lord. After my Lord was dressed, he went out of his Chamber, and went to my Lord Aston, to ask him Leave for Dugdale; and my Lord bid me make myself ready to go to the Race. About nine or ten of the Clock I was ready to go, and coming down the Back-stairs my Lord met me: Go, says he, to Etching-Hill, and see what Betts there are, and take Stephen Dugdale with you to shew you the Way; for I have asked his Lord Leave for him to go. So Stephen Dugdale went along with me to the Stable, and took out his Horse; mine was not ready; but I overtook him in Half a Mile, and it was eleven of the Clock ere we were at Ridgely. I asked him some Questions about one Mr. Gerard; and I think about twelve of the Clock we were at the Race, and I staid till one with him and Mr. Fox, who was a Party concerned in the Race, and there were several Betts laid. I was watchful when my Lord should come, lest he should want me; so I left them, and went to the Room where my Lord was to dine; and when I went to my Lord, I left him betting. About two of the Clock the Lords and Gentlemen all went to Dinner (that were there), and when we had half dined, betwixt two and three, Dugdale came in, and we asked him how the Wagers went; he said, he would bett Gold to Silver, if he had it, but he had betted away all his Money, I knew not how much. So there was a Gentleman that was Servant to my Lord Aston, one George Hobson by Name, he lent him two Guineas and odd Money, and I lent him some forty or fifty Shillings out of my own Pocket, which I told him, I would not lend, unless he would give it me at the Hill again, before the Race begun, because I was fearful my Lord should go to Stafford again from my Lord Aston's that Night. About four or five o'Clock I went up to the Race, and demanded my Money, and he paid it me before the Race begun, and after the Race was done I lost him. My Lord went home, and I waited on him. This was about five or six, and about the Midway towards my Lord Aston's House, he went into the Coach, and I got on Horseback, and we got home about six or seven of the Clock, as I suppose. But at Night after Supper I enquired for Dugdale, how he took his Losings, and how he did after it: They told me, he was gone to Bed, so I saw him no more that Night. The next Morning, my Lord bid me come betimes, for he would go to Stafford that Morning, where we dined, at Mr. Abden's, and from thence took our Way to go to my Lord's own House.

L. Staff. Now, my Lords, if you please to ask this Boy, whether I bid him go and call Dugdale to me, and leave him there?

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford did bid you, Mr. Furnese, go and dress yourself, and make you ready for the Race; did you not leave Dugdale behind you in the Chamber when you went to dress yourself?

Furnese. No, my Lord, Dugdale was gone thence; and my Lord was gone too, before me, to my Lord Aston's.

L. H. S. I still ask you the Question (you are upon an Obligation very great, as much as if you were upon your Oath), Whether you were in my Lord's Chamber before Dugdale came in, and staid till after he went out?

L. Staff. And whether I bid him go out or no?

L. H. S. Were you there before Dugdale went in?

Furnese. He went along with me in; I conducted him in.

L. H. S. Did you stay all the while Dugdale was there?

Furnese. As near as I remember, I staid there all the while.

L. Staff. Ask him positively.

Furnese. Yes, my Lords, I was there all the while Dugdale staid; but I cannot say positively how long it was.

L. H. S. Mr. Dugdale, you are upon your Oath; he says he came in along with you, and you went out of the Chamber before him, and he was there all the while you were there.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I am not positive which of my Lord's Servants it was that came for me; but one it was. But when I came into the Chamber to my Lord, my Lord was getting up, and he charged them both to go forth, and the Room was clear, and I saw no Body.

L. Staff. My Lords, ask my Man.

Furnese. My Lord never bid me go forth that Day, nor any else in my Life, when any was in the Room.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, if it please your Lordships, Mr. Furnese was pleased to say, I would bett Gold to Silver; but in that he was mistaken, for the Odds was quite six to four against us.

L. H. S. Well, we are not upon the Race now, or the Wagers laid there. But, Gentlemen of the House of Commons, will you ask this Man any Questions?

Sir William Jones. No, my Lords, we have none to ask.

Sir Thomas Lee. We desire to know where he lives now, what Countryman he is, and what Religion he is of.

L. H. S. Whom do you serve now?

Furnese. My Lord Stafford.

L. H. S. Do you live with him still?

Furnese. Yes, I do, and have done this fourteen Years.

L. H. S. What Countryman are you?

Furnese. A Dutch-Man.

L. H. S. Where born?

Furnese. At Brussels.

Sir Francis Winnington. We would ask him what Persuasion or Religion he is of?

L. H. S. You may be sure of what Answer you shall have.

Furnese. I am a Roman Catholick.

L. Staff. That is as good as a Jew.

Mr. Treby. The Question is not intended for any Harm, not with any Purpose to criminate him; 'tis only in regard of his Credit in this Matter.

L. H. S. Call another Witness, my Lord.

L. Staff. Where is George Leigh? (Who stood up).

L. H. S. How old are you?—Leigh. I am about fifteen or sixteen.
 L. Staff. My Lords, I believe he is eighteen or nineteen.
 Mr. Treby. Whose Servant is he?
 L. Staff. He is my Servant; he hath served me seven or eight Years.
 L. H. S. What does your Lordship call him for?
 L. Staff. To tell you whether I bid my Servants to go out when Dugdale came in, and whether ever he saw Dugdale and I alone.
 L. H. S. George Leigh, how long have you lived with my Lord Stafford?
Leigh. Seven Years the 10th of June last.
 L. H. S. Why then you were but nine Years old when you came to him?
Leigh. No, my Lords, I think I was not.
 L. H. S. Do you remember when my Lord Stafford was at Tixall?
Leigh. I do not remember the Month very well.
 L. H. S. Do you remember the time of the Race at Etching-Hill?
Leigh. I do not remember the Day; but I was at it.
 L. H. S. Did Mr. Dugdale come into your Lord's Chamber that Morning?
Leigh. I do not remember he was there that very Morning.
 L. Staff. Be pleased to ask him whether ever I bid him go out of my Chamber when Dugdale was there.
 L. H. S. Did you ever see Dugdale any other Morning in your Lord's Chamber?
Leigh. My Lords, I think not; I am not certain: He was there one Morning, and it was about a Race; but I am not certain what Race it was, whether it was two Boys ran, or two Men.
 L. H. S. Did your Lord bid you go out of his Chamber?
Leigh. No, my Lords.
 L. Staff. Dugdale says I often sent him for him; pray ask him that Question.
 L. H. S. My Lord, this Boy does not remember that Dugdale at all was at your Chamber that time of the Race at Etching-hill; so that it is not material to the Thing in question.
 L. Staff. Yes, my Lords, Dugdale told your Lordships yesterday that I sent this Boy often for him.
 L. H. S. Did ever this Boy come for you?—Mr. Dugdale. Yes he hath, I am sure, come to my Chamber for me to go to my Lord.
 L. H. S. Were you sent for by my Lord more than once?
 Mr. Dugdale. Yes, several times.
 L. H. S. Before or after the Race?
 Mr. Dugdale. Both before the Race, and after the Race.
 L. H. S. By whom were you sent for?—Mr. Dugdale. Sometimes by the Gentleman that was last examin'd, and sometimes by this Boy.
 L. H. S. Did you ever come from my Lord Stafford to bid Dugdale come to him?—Leigh. My Lords, I do not remember that ever I did.
 L. H. S. 'Tis an hard thing to remember so long.
 L. Staff. If ever he came once to me, and was alone with me, I will be content to acknowledge all this to be true. Pray ask the other Man if ever I sent him for him.
 L. H. S. He did testify before, that he came with him that Day to your Lordship's Chamber.
 L. Staff. That Day, my Lords: But he says, other Days I sent for him.
 L. H. S. Call Furness again. (Who stood up) Furness, did my Lord Stafford ever send you for Dugdale, either before or after the Race?
Furness. Never, my Lords, to his Chamber.
 L. H. S. Did he ever in his Life send you to Mr. Dugdale, to speak with him, as you remember?—Furness. Never, my Lords.
 L. Staff. He was, my Lords, such a Fellow, I could not endure he should come near me; such an impudent lying Fellow.
 L. H. S. Have you any more Witnesses my Lord?
 L. Staff. Yes, a great many.
 L. H. S. Call them all, I pray.
 L. Staff. My Lords, I hope you think I would not be so great and imprudent a Fool to employ such a Fellow as this, who not long after run away from my Lord Aston's.
 L. H. S. Who did?
 L. Staff. Stephen Dugdale. And for that, if you please, I would call some Witnesses.
 L. H. S. Call Furness again. (Who stood up.) Did you ever see Dugdale and my Lord Stafford together?
Furness. Never in my Life.
 L. H. S. Why you saw them together that Morning you brought him to the Chamber. (Then the Auditory laughed.)
Furness. Never alone.
 L. Staff. I did not think I was in a Cock-Pit, or a Play-House. But if your Lordships please to let me call my Witnesses, to prove that Dugdale ran away from my Lord Aston, I shall call for that Thomas Sawyer. (Who stood up.)
 L. H. S. What is your Name?—Witness. Sawyer.
 L. H. S. Your Christian Name?—Witness. Thomas.
 L. H. S. Who do you live withal?—Sawyer. My Lord Aston.
 L. H. S. Where do you live?—Sawyer. At Tixall.
 L. H. S. Are you my Lord Aston's Servant?—Sawyer. Yes.
 L. H. S. How long have you been so?
Sawyer. Six Years, and ever since Michaelmas.
 L. H. S. What have you to say?
Sawyer. As to Dugdale's Reputation, I have this to say, How that he went from my Lord Aston's for Debt, and was taken by the Watch at Heywood.
 L. H. S. When was that?
Sawyer. The latter end of November, or the beginning of December.
 L. H. S. What Year?—Sawyer. (78.)
 L. H. S. Then the Family broke up?

will not own him as his Servant; it was his own Act and Deed. So Mr. Philips and I came back to him, and told him. So he sat down in the Chair, and then rose up again, and swore, He would be revenged of my Lord Aston, if ever it lay in his Power.

L. H. S. You never heard him say he would be revenged of my Lord Stafford, did you?

Sawyer. No, of my Lord Aston. Then another time, being at Stafford, he owed me twenty-nine Pounds, and he was under the Serjeant's hands; and then he promised me from to time he would pay me, and did not keep his Word. This was three or four Days before he began to peach. He bid me come such a Day, and he would pay me part of the Money; and when I came thither, he told me it was reported that he should be a Peacher; and that there was a Speech, how that he should have two hundred Pounds for informing that there were fourteen Priests in the Country: But he takes a Glass of Drink, and, Thomas, says he, by God, I wish this may be my Damnation and my Poison, if I know of any Plot, or any Priests.

L. H. S. Was not he a Papist then?

Sawyer. I cannot absolutely tell that, whether he was or no.

L. H. S. Do you know one Father Evers?

Sawyer. My Lords I have seen him.

L. H. S. Hath he never been at Tixall?

Sawyer. Yes, my Lords, I have seen him there.

L. H. S. And have not you seen Dugdale in his Company?

Sawyer. Yes, I have.

L. H. S. Did not you at Tixall think Dugdale a stout able Fellow?

Sawyer. No, he never was accounted to be so.

L. H. S. Then I ask you, if you thought him an honest Man, or a rich Man?

Sawyer. No, truly, my Lords: For I'll tell you more than that: My Lord Aston employ'd him to be his Bailiff, and receive his Rents, and to pay Workmen their Wages, which he received every Saturday. And my Lord Aston did account with him, where he did set his Hand to receive the poor Workmen's Wages according to their Bills, when they had not been paid some of them whole Years, and Half Years, and Quarters. And they came and cried to my Lord, that they were not paid. And thereupon Dugdale did say, that one of them had demanded more of my Lord than was his due; for he said he had reckoned such a Day with him, and paid him so much Money; which Man said he was not that Day at Tixall: And so he hinder'd him of part of his Money.

L. H. S. Did you ever know that Dugdale did forswear himself?

Sawyer. That I do not know, my Lords, I did hear he was concerned in a Race, about which there was a Trial and a Dispute which had won. This I have heard by Report.

Sir Fran. Win. Speak your own Knowledge, not Reports.

L. H. S. I ask you, do you remember the Day when my Lord Stafford came to Tixall?

Sawyer. He came on the 12th Day of the Month.

L. H. S. What, September?—Sawyer. Yes, the 12th of September.

L. H. S. Did you ever see Dugdale in the Company of my Lord Stafford, while was at Tixall?

Sawyer. No, never in the House; but at the Race, he hath come into the Parlour.

Mr. Treby. You had Discourse with Dugdale: You say he took a Glass and drank, and wished it might be his Poison. Was not Father Evers that time at my Lord Aston's?

Sawyer. Not that I know of, my Lords.

Mr. Treby. Was he not commonly there?—Sawyer. Yes.

Mr. Treby. If he were, Mr. Dugdale must know it; and how then could he take a Glass, and wish it were Poison, if he knew where any Priest was; since it was apparent he knew where that Priest was? 'Tis most improbable Mr. Dugdale should say thus!

Sawyer. My Lords, this was three or four Days ere he confessed any thing he knew of his Knowledge.

Mr. Treby. What Persuasion of Religion are you?

Sawyer. Of the Church of England.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. Pray, my Lords, ask him one Question; he says Dugdale went away from my Lord Aston's, was not there a Speech of a Plot (at that time) that was discover'd?

Sawyer. Yes, that I heard.

Sir Fr. Win. My Lords, I would ask him one Question more: Was there no Discourse of the Death of a Justice of the Peace that was said to be killed in London about that time?

Sawyer. To my best remembrance, as I heard, there was.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, if your Lordships please that I should call Witnesses to confront him now, or afterwards?

Sir Will. Jones. Not now; stay till your time comes.

L. Staff. Then call Philips. (Who stood up.)

L. H. S. What is your Name, Sir?—Witness. Ralph Philips.

L. H. S. What are you, a Clergyman?—Mr. Philips. Yes.

L. H. S. Are you beneficed?—Mr. Philips. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. S. Where?—Mr. Philips. At Tixall, my Lord.

L. H. S. You are a Person that knows the Obligation that lies upon you to give a true Testimony; what can you say of Mr. Dugdale?

Mr. Philips. My Lords, I have very little to say concerning Stephen Dugdale as to any thing of the Plot, but in reference to what he should relate concerning Mr. Samlidge and me in the Narrative which he deposed upon the Trial of Sir George Wakeman: He said then he did receive a Letter concerning the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, which was dated the 12th of October, as I remember; and that he did communicate the Letter to Mr. Samlidge and me immediately the next Tuesday: whereas I will assure you, my Lords, I never heard neither by Letter nor Word of Mouth from him nor any other, till it was publicly known.

L. H. S. You did not live in my Lord Aston's House, did you?

Mr. Philips. No, my Lords.

Sir W. Jones. We know not what he says, we desire to understand what he means.

L. H. S. He takes notice that Dugdale at the Trial of Sir George Wakeman did depose touching a Letter dated the 12th of October, which should come down to Tixall, intimating the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, and that that he did communicate that with the Parson of Tixall and another; which Parson comes now to say, he did communicate no such Matter to him.

Sir W. Jones. We desire to ask him whether he was present at that Trial, and heard him say so?

Mr. Philips. I was not present at the Trial, but if the Narrative of the Trial be Truth, he did say so.

L. H. S. So then, you only come to disprove what is printed that Dugdale should say.

Mr. Philips. Then I leave it to your Judgments, whether what he said in the Narrative of that Trial do concur with the Truth.

L. Staff. I desire then to ask him, whether Stephen Dugdale did not run away from my Lord Aston's, and would have him go to my Lord to own him for his Servant.

L. H. S. What do you know of Dugdale's running away?

Mr. Philips. I know nothing at all of that, my Lords.

L. Staff. Whether he did speak to him to own him for his Servant when he was in the Justice's Hands?

L. H. S. Can you say any Thing touching the Credit of Dugdale?

Mr. Philips. I have nothing to say concerning Dugdale's Credit.

L. H. S. Did you know him?—Mr. Philips. Yes, ever since I came to Tixall.

L. H. S. How long is that?—Mr. Philips. About fourteen Years.

L. H. S. What Reputation had he in the Country? Was he looked upon as one that would perjure himself?

Mr. Philips. I never knew any thing of that.

L. H. S. Was he thought a stout Man?—Mr. Philips. He was in good Repute with some, and indifferent with others.

L. H. S. Will you call any more Witnesses, my Lord?

L. Staff. I would only ask him one Question; whether he did go to my Lord Aston from Dugdale to know if he would own him for his Servant?

L. H. S. What say you, Sir; did you?

Mr. Philips. Yes, my Lords, he knows very well I did; he did request me to go to him. My Lord Aston I was loth to go to, because I had no Familiarity with him, nor Interest in him; but he did request and urge me so much, that I did go by much Motives and Persuasion from him, and I did speak to my Lord: So I told him the Message I had was from Mr. Dugdale, who would request of my Lord that he would own him for his Servant; for if he did not, he knew not what to do with himself: but if he did, he might be free from the Goal and from the Oaths, and escape the Troubles that were upon him. So my Lord replied to me, 'Tis his own Act and Deed, and I have nothing to do with him, and let the Justices do what they will with him; which were Sir Walter Bagott, and Mr. Kinnerley.

Mr. Foley. We desire to know whether he heard any Discourse about a Plot at that Time or no?

Mr. Philips. Truly, my Lords, I heard a Talk of a Plot, but not at that Time.

Mr. Foley. My Lords, I desire to know if he took Mr. Dugdale for a Person that might be in the Plot, if there was any such Thing?

Mr. Philips. I cannot tell how to answer that, 'tis a hard Question; I am not so intimately acquainted with Persons whose Secrets are not reposed in me.

L. Staff. The next Witness I desire may be (with the leave of the Gentlemen of the House of Commons) Sir Walter Bagott; I did desire him to be here.

Sir W. Jones. There he is, we do not oppose it.

L. H. S. Is it your Lordships Pleasure that Sir Walter Bagott be heard in his Place?—Lords. Yes.

Sir Walter Bagott.

L. H. S. What would you ask Sir Walter, my Lord?

L. Staff. My Lords, I desire to ask Sir Walter Bagott, whether he did not apprehend Dugdale, and upon what Account it was?

L. H. S. Sir Walter Bagott, My Lord, desires to know of you, whether you did apprehend Dugdale, and upon what Account?

Sir Walter Bagott. My Lords, Mr. Dugdale was taken at an unreasonable Time of Night, and brought to me the next Morning by the Watch, as the other Witnesses have told your Lordships. And I took him away to Stafford, where there were several other Justices of the Peace; there were offered him the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, which he took. After the taking of these Oaths, we told him, that he was a likely Man to know something of the Plot, and it was a very proper Time for him to discover it to us that were Justices; he at that Time did deny the Knowledge of it; that is all I can say.

L. Staff. I desire Sir Walter Bagott may be asked, whether he did not go to my Lord Aston, to see whether he would own Dugdale for his Servant?

L. H. S. Did you ask my Lord Aston to own him for his Servant?

Sir W. Bagott. Yes, I did: For my Lord's House being in the Way to Stafford, whither I was going, I called upon him to know if Mr. Dugdale were his Servant: He told me he was no Servant of his, and he would not receive him; upon which I and another Justice of the Peace that was with me, took him to Stafford. The Occasion of our Meeting there, was to summon in the Militia, upon an Alarm of the Papists being risen in Derbyshire.

L. Staff. I make this Use of it, my Lords, that my Lord Aston would not receive him: And if my Lord Aston had known he had been in the Plot, and could have discover'd him, he would not have disobliged him.

L. H. S. Nay, he says more than that, which you don't hear; he says, when they examined him, they gave him the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, and then told him he would do well to discover his Knowledge of the Plot, and then he did not know any Thing he knew; nay, he denied it.

Mr. Foley. Did he deny the knowing of it?—Sir W. Bagott. Yes, he did then.

Sir F. Winn. He was not resolved to discover at that Time.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. We desire Sir Walter Bagott may be asked whether he examined him upon his Oath, or no?—Sir Walter Bagott. No, I did not.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. But had they then just given him the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy?

Sir Wal. Bagott. Yes, my Lords, we gave him those Oaths, and those only.

L. Staff. Then Mr. Kinnerley, if you please. (Who stood up) Be pleased to ask this worthy Gentleman what he knows about Dugdale's going from my Lord Aston.

L. H. S. First let us know this Gentleman.

L. Staff. His Name is Kinnerley.

Mr. Kin. What Questions would your Lordship ask me?

L. Staff. What you know about Dugdale's going from my Lord Aston.

L. H. S. Mr. Kinnerley, we must know your Christian Name,

Mr. Kin. Thomas.

L. H. S. Do you know Mr. Dugdale?

Mr. Kin. My Lords, I was not acquainted with Mr. Dugdale, till Sir Brian Broughton, Sir Walter Bagott, and I and others gave him the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, the latter End of November, or the Beginning of December; I did not take Notice exactly of the Time.

L. H. S. What Year?—Mr. Kin. 78.

L. H. S. Well, Sir, go on.

Mr. Kin. When he had taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, I asked him if he knew any Treason or Conspiracy against the King, telling him it was a seasonable Time to declare it. He told me he knew of none. This is all I know, and all the Discourse that I remember we had with Mr. Dugdale.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. Pray why did you ask him that Question?

Mr. Kin. The Plot was then newly broken out.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. Why did you ask him so particularly?

Mr. Treby. Why did you think Mr. Dugdale concerned in it?

Mr. Kin. Because we heard he was a Papist, and my Lord Aston's Servant.

L. Staff. Then I desire Sir Thomas Whitgrave may be examined. (Who stood up.)

L. H. S. What say you to Sir Thomas Whitgrave, my Lord?

L. Staff. Will your Lordships please to ask Sir Tho. Whitgrave whether he did not examine Dugdale about the Plot, and what he said at that Time.

Sir Tho. Whitgrave. My Lords, I came to Stafford the latter End of November, or the Beginning of December, I am not certain which; but I think it was this Time two Years. The Deputy-Lieutenants met about the Militia of the County. They told me that Mr. Dugdale was in Town, and was under an Arrest: The Occasion of his coming to Town, was his Refusal of the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, which he hath since taken. I proposed to them the sending for him, for I thought this was a fit Opportunity to get something of him about the Plot. They seemed to approve of what I said; but withal, I told them it was not good to send for him till the Evening late, that the People of the Town might not take Notice of his coming. At Night we did send for him, and the Gentlemen desired that I would examine him at the End of the Table: So I called him up, and told him, I was sorry he was fallen into that Misfortune to be arrested, and that Mr. Mayor had not dealt well with him or us to take that Advantage of him; that now he had taken the Oaths, I looked upon him as one of us, and would do him any Kindness I could. He said, Truly, for his Part, he was born a Protestant, and of Protestant Parents; and it was his Misfortune to fall into the Houses of Papists, but he never liked their Religion. I then told him, Sir, you may do yourself a Kindness, serve God, and oblige your King and Country: I am very confident you know of this horrid Plot; pray do not stifle your Conscience with any Oath of Secrecy, but let it come out. Many, I told him, strained their Consciences to serve their Interests; but you may clear your Conscience, and at the same Time promote your true Interest. He replied, As he hoped to be saved, he knew nothing of it. And this is as much as I know of the Matter.

L. H. S. Do you ask him any Questions, Gentlemen?

Manag. No, my Lord.

L. Staff. My Lords, I shall humbly move your Lordships now, that you will please to take Notice, this Fellow, Dugdale, hath endeavoured to persuade People to swear against me falsely, and offered them Money for it. In order to the Proof of which, I desire your Lordships would call John Morrall, Samuel Holt, and William Robinson.

(Then Robinson stood up)

L. Staff. This Man I never saw before in my Life.

L. H. S. What is your Name?—Witness. Robinson.

L. H. S. What is your Christian Name?—Robinson. William.

L. H. S. Where do you live?—Robins. In Worcestershire now.

L. H. S. With whom?—Robins. With myself now.

L. H. S. Do you know Dugdale?

Sir F. Winn. We desire he may give you an Account what Profession he is of.

Robins. An Upholsterer.

Sir F. Winn. How long hath he lived in Worcestershire, and in what Place there.

Robins. I have lived half a Year in Worcestershire, half a Mile beyond Worcester.

Sir F. Winn. And whether he follows that Trade or Profession now, or no?

Robins. No, I do not follow it now.

Sir F. Winn. What do you live upon, and how?

Robins. I live of myself now.

L. H. S. How is that?—Robins. Of my own Money.

Mr. Hampden. We desire to know whether this Man was a Servant to my Lady Gerard, or no.

Robins. Never.

Mr. Hampden. Or to my Lord Gerard of Gerard's Bromley?

Robins. Never, not a hired Servant, my Lords.

Mr. Foley. Were you a Volunteer Servant, or what were you?

Mr. Treby. Did you work at any Time there for my Lord or Lady Gerard?

Robins. No.

L. H. S. How came you to live there?

Robins. I went over from a Cocking out of Cheshire.

L. H. S. How long were you there?—Robins. Three Weeks or a Month.

L. H. S. What was your Employment there?

Robins. Nothing at all: I followed no Employment.

Mr. Treby. What Kind of Servant were you then?

L. H. S. Come, do you know Dugdale?—Robins. Yes.

L. H. S. How long have you known him?

Robins. I have known him about five Years.

L. H. S. What say you to him?

Robins. I say, I met Mr. Dugdale about Midsummer was twelve-month, in London, about Charing-Cross, and he carried me to the Harp and Ball, and gave me Beer and Mum, and such as the House did afford, and treated me; and asked me what made me so dejected and cast down. I told him

I was

I was not well; I was poorer than I used to be. He told me again, I should not want any Money that he had; and if I would please to be ruled by him, and do what he would have me, he would furnish me with Money. And he took his Handkerchief out of his Pocket, and bid me, if I wanted, take Money there. I took none; but told him, I would not meddle nor make with any thing that Night. Then he told me he could furnish me with Money, and put me in a Way to get Money, if I would come in as an Evidence against my Lord Stafford.

L. Staff. Be pleased to ask him, for I never saw the Man before, nor heard of him till last Week, what he should say against me, and whether he knew me, or not?

L. H. S. Did he tell you what you should say against my Lord Stafford?

Robin. Nothing at all, my Lords.

L. Staff. Did he say any thing or nothing? Or, did he ask whether he knew me or not?

L. H. S. Did you tell him you knew my Lord Stafford?

Robin. No, if it please you, I told him I did not know him.

L. H. S. And after you said you did not know him, he offered you Money to swear against him, did he?

Robin. Yes, my Lords, he did so, to come in as an Evidence against him.

L. Staff. Will your Lordships please to ask how much Money there was in the Handkerchief?

L. H. S. How much Money was in the Handkerchief?

Robin. I believe there might be eight, or nine, or ten Pounds.

L. H. S. Did he offer you all the Money, or bid you take some?

Robin. He bid me take some.

L. H. S. Did he make any Agreement with you for what you should take?

Robin. No, not at all, my Lords.

Mr. Foley. Did you see Dugdale any more, or was there an end of it then?

Robin. No, I saw him no more.

L. H. S. Will you ask him any more Questions?

Sir W. Jones. We shall have occasion to speak of him (we desire him not to go away) when our time comes. (Then another Witness stood up.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?-----Witness. John Morrall.

L. H. S. What are you?-----Morrall. A Barber.

L. H. S. Where do you live?-----Morrall. At Ridgeley.

L. H. S. Where is that?

Morrall. In Staffordshire, within six Miles of Stafford.

L. H. S. What do you ask him?

L. Staff. Whether Dugdale did not persuade him to swear against some of the Lords in the Tower?

L. H. S. Do you know Dugdale?

Morrall. Yes, my Lords, I have known him twelve or thirteen Years.

L. H. S. What can you say against him?

Morrall. My Lords, this Mr. Dugdale, the 6th of August last was Twelvemonth, sent for me to the White Horse in Ridgeley; and there, when I came to him, he told me I knew as much of the Plot as he. I told him I was innocent of the Thing. He swore God damn him, that I knew as much as he. Then I told him, if he knew no more than I did, he knew no more than my Lord Mayor's great Horse did. Then he took me aside: Come, says he, you are a poor Man, and live poorly, I can put you in a way whereby you may live gallantly; I will give you 50*l.* in hand, if so be you will do so and so, and 50*l.* more when the thing is done.

L. H. S. What do you mean by so and so?

Morrall. To swear against Mr. Howard, Sir James Symons, and several other Gentlemen of the Country.

L. H. S. Did he offer you any Money to swear against my Lord Stafford?

Morrall. No, I did not hear him mention any think of him.

L. H. S. But he offer'd you Money to swear against Symons and Howard?

Morrall. Yes, my Lord; and Herbert Aston, my Lord Aston's Kinsman.

L. H. S. What were you to swear?

Morrall. That they were at such a Meeting at Mr. Herbert Aston's, upon the Conspiracy of the Plot.

L. H. S. Will you ask him any thing?

Man. No, let him by. (Then another Witness stood up.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?-----Witness. Samuel Holt.

L. H. S. What Profession are you of?

L. Staff. Pray, my Lords, ask him whether Dugdale would persuade him to swear that which he knew not.

L. H. S. What Profession are you of?

Holt. A Protestant of the Church of England.

L. H. S. What Trade?-----Holt. A Blacksmith.

L. H. S. Where do you live?-----Holt. At Tixall.

L. H. S. Are you my Lord Aston's Servant?-----Holt. No, my Lords.

L. H. S. What say you?-----Holt. My Lords, He sent a Man and a Horse for me to Stafford, to the Star-----

L. H. S. Who did?

Holt. Mr. Dugdale did. And there I waited upon him a good while. At length he came and told me he must speak with me privately; so he told me, if I would swear that Walter Moor carried Evers away, he would give me 40*l.* And he bid me not be afraid to swear, for fear of my Lord Aston; for he would hire me an Horse, and get me to London, and place me, that where I got one Shilling I should get five.

L. H. S. Did you know Evers?

Holt. Yes, my Lords, I have seen him.

L. H. S. Do you know when he went away from Tixall?

Holt. No, my Lords.

L. H. S. What else can you say?-----Holt. Nothing else.

L. H. S. Will you ask him any Questions, Gentlemen?

Man. No.

L. Staff. The next Thing I go upon is, that Stephen Dugdale, at the Trial of the five Jesuits, swore, That he acquainted Sambidge with the Letter about the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, the Monday or Tuesday after, which Mr. Sambidge denies. And in order to that, I call Mr. Sambidge; but if your Lordships please, I shall first prove that he swore it then. Where is Mr. Lydcott? (Who stood up.) I desire to ask him whether Dugdale did swear at the Trial of the five Jesuits, that he acquainted Mr. Sambidge with the Letter about the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey.

L. H. S. You, Fellow!-----Witness. My Lord.

L. H. S. What is your Name?-----Witness. John Lydcott.

L. H. S. How do you live?

Lydcott. I am a Fellow of King's-College in Cambridge.

L. H. S. What do you come to say?

Lyd. I don't know, my Lords, what my Lord will ask me.

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, before you enter into the Examination of this Man; we desire to ask him a Question or two.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. Whose Servant are you, or were you lately?

Lyd. I am a Fellow of King's College.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. But whom did you serve lately? Were you never Secretary to a Lord?-----Lyd. Yes, I was.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. To what Lord?

Lyd. To my Lord Castlemaine, Sir.

L. H. S. What Religion are you of?-----Lyd. Of the Church of England, and always was; nay, I can't say always, for I was bred up a Presbyterian; my Father was a Colonel under Monk.

L. Staff. Mr. Lydcott, I ask whether you did not hear Mr. Dugdale swear at the Trial of the five Jesuits?

Mr. Serj. Mayn. I desire one Favour, my Lords; my Lord Stafford asks Questions to lead the Witnesses; pray let him ask his Questions more generally.

L. H. S. You say you are a Protestant?-----Lyd. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. When did you last receive the Sacrament?

Lyd. When I was last at Cambridge-----No, not so; for it is not above a Year ago that I was there.

L. H. S. When did you receive the Sacrament?

Lyd. I do not exactly remember, my Lords.

L. H. S. My Lord, I would be glad to know what is the Question your Lordship calls him for, that your Lordship may not ask the Question, but by me.

L. Staff. My Lords, I desire to know (for my part I know not what his Answer will be) whether he did hear, at the Trial of the five Jesuits, Dugdale swear he had communicated the News of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's Death, which was on the Saturday, and on the Tuesday after to any People, and to whom.

L. H. S. Were you at the Trial of the five Jesuits?

Lyd. Yes, I was.

L. H. S. Did you hear Dugdale swear there, and give his Testimony?

Lyd. Yes, I did.

L. H. S. Do you remember what Dugdale swore then?

Lyd. Very well.

L. H. S. What was it?-----Lyd. My Lords, Mr. Dugdale spoke of a Letter that came down to my Lord Aston's on the Monday, and he imparted it on Tuesday after, at an Alehouse, to one Mr. Sambidge, and Mr. Philips: This was also at Sir George Wakeman's Trial, which I took notice of more particularly, because I had occasion to take some Notes there.

L. H. S. What use do you make of this, my Lord?

L. Staff. If that be allow'd to be so, then I will call no more Witnesses; otherwise I have more.

L. H. S. Call them all.

L. Staff. Then call Mr. Charles Gifford.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. Pray, my Lords, give me leave to ask this young Scholar one Question before he goes. By whose Commendation or Means did you come into that College?-----Lyd. By Election from Eaton.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. Who promoted you?-----Lyd. One Mr. Doyley, now Senior Fellow of King's-College; it was his Election.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, I would ask him one Question. He says he went to take Notes; by whose Direction did he go to take Notes at Sir George Wakeman's Trial?

Lyd. It was for my own Curiosity.

L. H. S. Friend, 'tis all one as if you were upon your Oath, and as penal to you: By whose Direction did you go?

Lyd. It was partly my own Curiosity, and partly to see what Evidence was against my Lord; for my Lord Castlemaine thought himself concerned as well as others, and therefore desired me to go.

Sir F. Win. Now it is out.

Sir W. Jones. It was done like a Secretary.

L. H. S. Had you ever that Curiosity before?

Lyd. Yes, I'll assure your Lordships, I had a great Curiosity to hear it.

L. H. S. Were you at any other Trial?

Lyd. Yes, at the five Jesuits Trial, and Langborn's.

(Then another Witness stood up.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?-----Witness. Charles Gifford.

L. Staff. Ask him whether he did not hear at the Trial of the five Jesuits, or Sir George Wakeman, Dugdale say, that he did communicate that Letter to some People, I name not who, the Tuesday after?

L. H. S. Were you at the Trial of the five Jesuits?

Gifford. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Did you take Notes?

Gifford. Yes, my Lords, I was summoned there as an Evidence; I had occasion of being there, both at the five Jesuits Trial, and Wakeman's, and Langborn's.

L. H. S. You took Notes, you say?-----Gifford. Yes, I did.

L. H. S. What do you remember that Mr. Dugdale did then swear?

Gifford. I remember at the five Jesuits Trial, he did swear he received a Letter sent to Evers, which he intercepted, and it spoke of the Death of a Justice of Peace; and he returned answer to Evers again, he would be hang'd if it did not spoil the Business. And he said farther, he could not hold, but went to an Alehouse, and there he did impart it. But then he did say there was one that could testify and make out what he said: Upon which he call'd Mr. Chetwyn, who depos'd much to the same purpose. And then at Sir George Wakeman's Trial he did positively declare, that he spoke of it at an Ale-house to a Minister, Parson Philips, and my Lord Aston's Kinsman.

L. H. S.

L. H. S. What is his Name?-----Giff. Mr. Sambidge.
 L. Staff. Well, my Lords, I have no more to say to him: But I conceive by this 'tis plain, that Dugdale did then say, he had communicated it to Mr. Philips and Mr. Sambidge. I shall call Mr. Sambidge to give you an Account. [Mr. Sambidge stood up.]
 L. Staff. Be pleased to ask him whether he did hear Mr. Dugdale say on the Tuesday, that Sir Edmundbury Godfrey was murdered the Saturday before?
 L. H. S. You hear the Question, answer it.
 Mr. Samb. Who must I speak to?
 L. Staff. He is very deaf, and very old, my Lords,
 [Then the Black-Rod was sent to be near him, to put the Question to him.]
 Black-Rod. What would you have him asked, my Lord?
 L. Staff. Whether Mr. Dugdale did tell him on the Tuesday, that Sir Edmundbury Godfrey was murdered the Saturday before?
 Black-Rod. Did Mr. Dugdale tell you of the Tuesday, that Sir Edmundbury Godfrey was murdered the Saturday before?
 Mr. Samb. No, my Lords, he never told me any such Thing, I take it upon my Salvation. I never heard it till Friday or Saturday he was found at Bury-Hill.
 L. Staff. Ask him if he were with Dugdale at the Alehouse the Tuesday before.
 Mr. Samb. Dugdale never spoke any such Thing to me.
 L. H. S. Were not you with him at the Alehouse?
 Mr. Samb. No.
 L. H. S. Not on Monday?-----Mr. Samb. No.
 L. H. S. Nor on Tuesday?-----Mr. Samb. No.
 L. H. S. Nor Wednesday?-----Mr. Samb. Not as I know of.
 Sir W. Jones. We shall prove he was.
 L. Staff. Pray ask him what Reputation Dugdale hath in the Country.
 Mr. Samb. Oh, the wickedest Man that ever lived upon the Face of the Earth! I know great Part of it myself; and a hundred and a hundred of People will say as much.
 L. H. S. What Religion are you of?
 Mr. Samb. I was never a Papist in my Life, nor ever a Fanatick.
 L. H. S. What do you know of Dugdale in particular, that is ill?
 Mr. Samb. Yes, my Lords, I'll tell you; he was a very abusive Man, especially to the Clergy, and most especially to Mr. Philips, with whom I boarded. My Lord Aston, that is dead, came and told me of it. Said I, You are misinformed, for this Dugdale is a Knave and a Rogue, and all the Country rings of him for his Wickedness. Upon which, he cites me into Litchfield Court for defaming him; and he entertains all the Proctors, that I could not get one to put in my Answer: But before the Day came, he discharged the Court, and never appeared; for we had that against him that he durst not appear.
 L. H. S. What Particulars do you know?-----Mr. Samb. He said the Clergy of England was a lewd Clergy, and a Pack of Rogues.
 L. H. S. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, will you ask him any Questions?-----Manag. No.
 L. H. S. Hath my Lord no more to say to him?
 L. Staff. No, my Lords.
 L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, go on: Hath your Lordship done with Dugdale, or have you any more Witnesses?
 L. Staff. No, my Lords; I have a great deal more to say to him.
 L. H. S. Go on then.
 L. Staff. My Lords, I conceive by this, 'tis proved to your Lordships, that Dugdale did at that Trial declare, he had acquainted Mr. Sambidge and Mr. Philips with the Letter about the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, the Tuesday after he was murdered. And I conceive I have proved to your Lordships, by their denying it, that he did not tell them so; and so he is forsworn in that. I should now have humbly desired your Lordships, that you will please to call William Day; but upon asking the Question, I find he is not yet come to Town, and so I shall not trouble your Lordships with him: I desire that Thomas Sawyer may be called again. (Who stood up.)
 L. Staff. Pray be pleased to ask him, whether he did not hear Dugdale with he might be damned if he knew any Thing of the Plot.
 L. H. S. He said that before.
 L. Staff. Then I beg your Lordships Pardon, I shall not call him again.
 L. H. S. Go on, my Lord.
 L. Staff. My Lords, there are a great many other Witnesses which I could call; but it is to no Purpose, and so I shall call no more as to Dugdale. I conceive upon the whole Matter, his Reputation and Credit are gone; for he is forsworn before the Justices of Peace, in that he said there was no Plot, and wished he might be damned if he knew of any Plot. I conceive it is also proved, that upon the twentieth of September, when he says, I did communicate with him about the King's Death, he was only then with me upon his own Desire, and my Servants were by: There was nothing discoursed of but about the Foot-Race. And likewise, as to what he swore in August, that I was at such a Meeting at Tixall, he is forsworn, for I was not there; and so I hope that Witnels is laid aside; no Creature will give any Credit to him, neither your Lordships nor the House of Commons.
 L. H. S. Have you done with Mr. Dugdale?
 L. Staff. Yes, my Lords.
 L. H. S. Whom will you proceed against next?
 L. Staff. Dr. Oates.
 L. H. S. Call Dr. Oates.
 L. Staff. Only give me leave to say one Thing, my Lords, that you were pleased to say, I should have Copies of the two Depositions of the twenty-fourth and twenty-ninth of December: And I had one to enquire, but cannot find that of the twenty-ninth. (Then Dr. Oates stood up)
 L. H. S. What say you to Dr. Oates, my Lord?
 L. Staff. This Dr. Oates, if your Lordships please, I desire may be asked, when was the first Time he ever saw me in his Life.
 L. H. S. When was the first Time, Dr. Oates, you saw my Lord Stafford?
 Dr. Oates. My Lords, the first Time I saw this Gentleman at the Bar, was, as near as I remember, at Mr. Fenwick's.
 L. H. S. That was in Drury-Lane?-----Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lords.
 L. H. S. When was that?

Dr. Oates. That was, as near as I remember, in June.
 L. H. S. Was it that Time the Commission you spoke of was delivered?
 Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lords.
 L. H. S. Did you see that Commission?-----Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lords.
 L. H. S. Did you read it?-----Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lords.
 L. H. S. From whom was it?-----Dr. Oates. I cannot be positive as to that; but, as near as I remember, it was signed as the rest was signed.
 L. H. S. How was that?-----Dr. Oates. Johannes Paulus Oliva.
 L. H. S. You read it?-----Dr. Oates. Yes, I did, my Lords.
 L. H. S. It was a Commission to be Paymaster of the Army, was it not?
 Dr. Oates. Yes, it was.
 L. H. S. And it was delivered to my Lord?-----Dr. Oates. Yes, it was.
 L. H. S. By the Name of Mr. Howard of Effingham?
 Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lords.
 L. H. S. What says your Lordship to this?
 L. Staff. What is it possible for me to say against this? I declare to your Lordships, in the Presence of God, I never saw the Man in my Life. I never went by any Name, since I had the Honour of being a Peer, but by the Name of Stafford. I never heard of Mr. Fenwick the Jesuit, nor by the Name of Thompson, till this Plot was discovered and he taken. This you may believe, or not, if you please; but this is as true as I am alive. My Lords, I desire I may have out of the Journals the Deposition on which I was committed.
 L. H. S. Turn to the Journal.
 L. Staff. It was read, as I remember, Friday 25 Octob. 78.
 Then the Clerk turned to the Journal, and read.

Die Veneris 25 die Octobris 1678.

Clerk. THE Lord Viscount Stafford acquainted the House, That he was informed that there was a Warrant issued out from the Lord Chief Justice of England to apprehend him, which he thought fit to acquaint their Lordships with, and submitted himself to their Lordships Judgment.

The Lord Chief Justice being present, was commanded to give the House an Account of the Business; who said, That last Night, about nine of the Clock, he received a Letter from the Speaker of the House of Commons, dated from the Speaker's Chair, to come to the House of Commons about Business of great Concernment. Accordingly he attended the House of Commons, where the Speaker told him, That the House of Commons had received Accusations of High-Treason against five Lords, and some Gentlemen, and desired him to issue out his Warrants for their Apprehension. The Persons were, the Earl of Powis, Viscount Stafford, the Lord Arundel of Wardour, the Lord Petres, and the Lord Bellasis. And upon this he issued out his Warrants for their Apprehension, having taken the Examination of Titus Oates upon Oath. That the Earl of Powis and the Lord Arundel were brought to him this Morning in Custody; and he advised them to render themselves to the Gatehouse, where now they are.

Upon this the Examination of Oates was read, whereby it did appear, that the Lord Viscount Stafford was charged to be in a Conspiracy of Treason against the King.

The Lord Viscount Stafford denied the Fact, and after this withdrew. And after a while the House was informed that his Lordship would render himself to the Lord Chief Justice.

L. H. S. This is all that is in the Journal.

L. Staff. Then, my Lords, if your Lordships please to remember, all of you that were there, that I was accused by Dr. Oates, whose Depositions I desire to see, taken before my Lord Chief Justice, that he had seen Letters of mine written to Fenwick, Harcourt, and some others, three or four Jesuits, in which I was consenting to the Plot; that I had sent my Son to Lisbon, yet I would be as kind to the Jesuits as before, though there was some Difference between us. These Affidavits I desire to see, which, as I take it, were read before your Lordships that Day.

L. H. S. The Affidavit was taken by my Lord Chief Justice in the House of Commons, where he did attend them upon their Summons: I know not if the Original were read in the House of Lords, or the Copy; but it seems it is not entered into the Lords Journal: But your Lordship had an Order to take Copies of all things you would have demanded; and if you would not, I cannot tell what to say to it.

L. Staff. Truly I could not take a Copy, because I did not know where it was. I desire my Lord Chief Justice may be asked where it is? that is all I desire, and I will then go on.

L. H. S. I think Dr. Oates does say at this Time that he had seen Letters of your Lordship's, offering your Correspondence and Assistance.

L. Staff. If Dr. Oates will own he said no more than is in that Affidavit, I am content.

L. H. S. Have you any Copy of your own Examination, Dr. Oates?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lords, I think I have it here.

L. H. S. Marry, that is very well; produce it then. Do you oppose it, Gentlemen?

Manag. No, we agree; we desire the Truth may come out.

Then Dr. Oates looking among his Papers, drew out one, and offered it to the Court.

L. H. S. Is that a true Copy of your first Examination?

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I will not swear it, but it was given me for a true Copy.

L. H. S. By whom was it given you?

Dr. Oates. I can't remember now, 'tis two Years ago.

Sir W. Jones. Unless we know whence it comes, or what Authority it hath, we cannot consent it should be read.

L. H. S. Had you it from my Lord Chief Justice, or any Servant of his?

Dr. Oates. I cannot tell whether Sir Charles Harbord give it me, or no.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, Sir Charles Harbord might be of the Committee of Examinations; but the Examination for which my Lord asked, was not in the Committee nor before the House: My Lord Chief Justice retired out of the House, & virtute Officii took it. Now it was very fair in Mr. Oates to produce it; but yet in Point of Evidence, if he will not swear it to be a true Copy, or give an Account how he came by it, we cannot allow it to be read.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, 'tis you that want this Paper, you desire to have the Benefit of the Examination that was taken of Mr. Oates, and therefore you must produce a Copy of it.

L. Staff. My Lords, I could never get it.

L. H. S. 'Tis not entred in our Journal, nor is it to be trac'd; we know not where it is: You have had Time enough to look after it. You are now offered by Oates himself a Copy that was given him for a true Copy, though he cannot swear by whom. Are you content that shall be read, if the Gentlemen will admit it?

L. Staff. By what I guess of Dr. Oates, (I know him not) he would not give in a Copy of an Examination unless it were true; if it be true, I know not what should hinder the reading of it: But as far as concerns me, I desire it may be read.

L. H. S. You do consent, and will you, Gentlemen, permit it?

Mr. Serj. Mayn. We do not know whence it comes; we cannot admit it, unless Oates says 'tis true.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, it hath been long in the Doctor's Possession, he hath read it over, he can't say 'tis a true Copy; but I desire to ask him whether all in that Writing be true, and whether he did swear what is in that Writing.

L. H. S. If your Lordships please thus, and you Gentlemen of the House of Commons, the best Way to have an Answer to this Question is, that it may be read de bene esse.

Sir F. Win. Pray, my Lords, let him read it over to himself privately, and then let us know whether he can swear the same things that are in that Paper.

(Which Dr. Oates began to do.)

Dr. Oates. Your Lordships ask only as to my Lord Stafford?

L. H. S. My Lord desires no more; but pray read it over all, and give your Answer to all; for that Question, may be, will be ask'd in other Cases, and it is fit you should be provided for it. (Which he did.)

L. H. S. What say you, Doctor?

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I do verily believe I did swear the Contents of that Paper.

L. Staff. My Lords, I do not oppose the reading of that Paper; but I have here a Copy of something in the Journal, and do not stand upon my Memory; but I think upon the viewing of it now, there is something in the Copies of the Journal.

Clerks. We cannot find it.

L. Staff. Then read this Paper.

L. H. S. Will you have this Copy of the Examination read, or not?

L. Staff. Yes, my Lords.

Clerk. The Examination of Titus Oates Clerk, taken before us—

L. H. S. When was that?

Clerk. The 24th of October, 1678.

L. H. S. That was read the 25th, the next Day, in the House of Lords.

The Examination of Titus Oates Clerk, taken by us this 24th of October, 1678.

THIS Examinant saith, That in the Month of May last, this Examinant saw a Patent under the Seal of the Father-General of the Society of Jesús at Rome, called Johannes Paulus Oliva, at the Chamber of Mr. Langhorn, wherein it was express'd, That by virtue of a Breve from the Pope, he did constitute the Lord Arundel of Wardour Lord High Chancellor of England, which Patent was sent to the Lord Arundel of Wardour by a Messenger, who was the Son of Mr. Langhorn. And this Examinant saith, That he saw a Letter subscribed by the Lord Arundel of Wardour, as he believes, wherein the Lord Arundel did acknowledge the Receipt of the said Patent, and accepted of the same, and promised to answer the Expectation of the Society.

This Examinant saith, That in June last he saw the like Patent, wherein the Lord Powis was constituted Lord Treasurer of England, which Patent was carried by one Parsons, Secretary to the Lord Powis, from one Sanders's House in Wild-street, to be delivered to the Lord Powis; and at the Delivery of the Patent 300*l*. was paid by Parsons to Fenwick and Ireland, to carry on the Design of the Jesuits, which was to raise a Rebellion in the three Kingdoms, and to destroy the King.

In the Month of July this Examinant saw a Letter subscrib'd Powis, and directed to Fenwick, wherein his Lordship did acknowledge the Receipt of the said Patent, and did accept of the same, and said he had three hundred Men and Horse ready for the Design, and that his Lordship would venture his Life and Fortune in the Affair.

In the Month of August last this Examinant saw a Letter directed to Mr. Langhorn by the Outside, but within to the Society of the Jesuits, wherein Sir William Godolphin acknowledg'd he had receiv'd the like Patent to be Lord Privy-Seal, and had accepted thereof; and in July 1677, this Examinant saw the same in the Hands of the Archbishop of Tuam, at Madrid in Spain.

This Examinant saith, That in July last Mr. Coleman acknowledged and confessed to Fenwick, in this Examinant's Presence, that he had receiv'd the like Patent to be Secretary of State, and that it was a good Exchange.

This Examinant saith, That in May, June, July, and August last, this Examinant saw several Letters sign'd Stafford, whereby it appear'd that the Lord Stafford was in this Conspiracy against his Majesty, and that he had returned several Sums of Money to the Jesuits to carry on the Design; the Letters were directed to Fenwick and Ireland; and in August last this Examinant saw another Letter, directed to the same Persons, sign'd Stafford, wherein my Lord writ, that although he had sent his Son to Lisbon, yet he would be never the worse Friend to the Jesuits; and this Examinant conceiveth the Reason of that Letter was, because there was then a Difference between the English College at Lisbon and the Jesuits. In July last this Examinant saw in the Hands of Fenwick, a Commission directed to the Lord Bellasis, from the Person afore said, to be Lord General of the Army to be raised in England against his Majesty; and in July this Examinant saw a Letter from my Lord, directed to Fenwick, wherein his Lordship acknowledged the Receipt of the Commission, and thanked the Society for the same, and that he accepted the same, and would do what in him lay to answer their Expectations.

In May last this Examinant saw a Patent in the Hands of Mr. Langhorn, to make my Lord Petres Lieutenant-General of the Army; and in June last this Examinant did hear my Lord Petres, in the Presence of Mr. Langworth his Confessor, acknowledge the Receipt of the same, and that he accepted hereof, and his Confessor wish'd him much Joy thereof.

L. Staff. My Lords, If this be own'd for Truth that he swore, then I proceed upon the Evidence of that.

L. H. S. Without allowing it to be a true Copy, Dr. Oates at the Bar does swear what is said there is true.

L. Staff. Then he says there, he saw Letters sign'd by me to Fenwick and others: I do humbly desire to know whether that be Evidence or no, that a Man says he saw Letters, and does not say he knew them to be my Hand, nor what the Letters were in particular; nothing that he did prove of it. I must appeal to your Lordships, to all my Lords, to my Lord High-Steward, and the rest that were of the Council at that Time, Whether Dr. Oates did not positively name some, and left me out at the Council-Table? And whether Dr. Oates did not say there was no Lord concerned in the Plot, and whether some of my Lords did not say so, and told some other Lords of it, from whom I had it? And in order to this, I desire Sir Philip Lloyd may be examin'd; and if he did not know of my being in it, then he hath since forsworn himself.

L. H. S. My Lord, I know not where you are, nor what you are about: Are you objecting against Oates upon any Evidence out of the Journal?

L. Staff. My Lords, I go upon this that hath been read.

L. H. S. Pray, my Lord, produce your Witnesses that did hear him say any Thing, and take your Advantage of it.

L. Staff. I call Sir Philip Lloyd.

L. H. S. Where is Sir Philip Lloyd?

L. Staff. My Lords, I do not know; I think he is here, I hope he will come.

Then he appeared amongst the Members of the House of Commons, and was called to the Bar amongst the other Witnesses, and stood up.

L. H. S. What does your Lordship ask Sir Philip Lloyd?

L. Staff. Whether he was not by when Dr. Oates was ask'd, if there were any Lords concerned in the Plot, and he said, No; and whether he did not tell me so a Day or two before I was committed, in the Prince's Lodgings?

L. H. S. What say you, Sir Philip Lloyd, did you ever hear Dr. Oates deny upon his Oath, that ever he heard of any Lords that were concern'd in the Plot?

Sir Phil. Lloyd. My Lords, truly I cannot remember any such thing: If my Lord put me in mind of any particular Circumstance or Time, I may recollect it: I must confess I think I have heard such a thing rumour'd; but I am so unfortunate I cannot remember any thing positively of it.

L. Staff. He did tell me so, I am sure.

Sir Philip Lloyd. Truly, my Lords, I would be glad to remember any thing to justify the Truth; but I cannot remember this.

L. Staff. But whether it were so or no, your Lordships that were of the Council can tell.

L. H. S. My Lord, I do not know. Your Lordship cannot be refused, if you press it, to ask any of the Lords of the Council, if they remember any such thing that did pass there; but if I were there or in the Council, I deal plainly with your Lordship, I cannot say that there was any such thing said.

L. Staff. If there be any here that were there besides, I desire they may be ask'd.

L. H. S. If your Lordship will call upon any other of my Lords that were there, they will tell you.

L. Staff. I don't know who were there, I can't call them.

L. H. S. You may ask any of the Lords of the Council, who were there that time Dr. Oates was examined.

L. Marq. of Worcester. My Lords, I was not at the Council then; but I heard it, not there indeed, but as a general Report abroad.

L. Staff. I desire my Lord Privy-Seal may tell what he knows of it.

Lord Privy-Seal. What is it your Lordship would know of me?

L. Staff. Whether Oates did not say he had no more to accuse?

Lord Privy-Seal. Where, my Lord?

L. Staff. At the Council-Table.

Lord Privy-Seal. 'Tis a very hard thing for me to charge my Memory with all the Questions at an Examination; we use to refer to the Examinations themselves: I have seen some Examinations, I with all were so, wherein the Questions are put down as well as the Answer; and I cannot charge my Memory that he said he had no more to accuse.

L. Staff. I desire, then, all the Lords of the Council that are here to say, whether or no he was not ask'd this Question particularly by my Lord Chancellor, (and I desire particularly his Lordship would say whether he can't remember it) Whether he had any thing to say against some Lords? And he answer'd, They were to know of it, but God for bid he should accuse them.

L. H. S. When should that be?

L. Staff. My Lords, I can't say the Day, for I was not in Town. But I desire to ask, whether you did not ask him upon the first Discovery of the Plot, whether he had any thing to say against some Lords?

L. H. S. Do you desire to know whether I asked him this Question, If he had any thing to say against some Lords?

L. Staff. I do not say positively your Lordship, but whether that Question was not ask'd him?

L. H. S. Certainly I should never ask any such Question of any Man alive. I might ask in general of any Lord, but not of some.

L. Staff. Some or other Lords it was.

L. H. S. I don't remember it; and 'tis impossible for any Man living to remember what Questions he did ask two or three Years ago upon an Examination.

L. Staff. I desire I may have leave to ask the Earl of Berkley a Question.

L. H. S. What is it you would ask him?

L. Staff. My Lords, I humbly ask his Lordship, whether he did not hear Dr. Oates say, after he had accused some Persons before the Council, that he had no more to accuse?

Earl of Berkley. My Lords, I had the Honour to be of the Privy-Council about the Time of the Discovery of the Plot; but I do not remember that I heard Dr. Oates say any such thing there.

L. Staff. Or in the House of Lords; for I may mistake. And therefore I desire my Lord of Berkley would declare what he heard Dr. Oates say before the House of Lords.

Earl of Berkley. Yes, my Lords; in the Lords House I will tell your Lordships what I remember. My Lord Chancellor, to the best of my remembrance, *to Journal from Acc.

20. Oct.
1678.*

brance, did ask Dr. Oates, at the Bar of the House, this Question—My Lords desire to know, if you can accuse any other Person or Persons, of what Quality soever, and you are encouraged by their Lordships to accuse them: His Answer was—My Lords, I have no more to accuse in relation to England, but in relation to Ireland I have.

L. H. S. That was after he had accused your Lordship, my Lord Stafford.

Sir W. Jones. We pray, my Lords, we may have the Favour to ask that very Honourable Lord, at what time Dr. Oates said this, for the Satisfaction of those that are present.

Earl of Berkley. My Lords, It was after Dr. Oates had accused my Lord Stafford, but before he had accused the Queen.

L. Staff. I beseech you, my Lords, to mark it, (and I am very glad of it) he said he had no more to accuse in relation to England, and yet after that he accused the Queen.

L. H. S. My Lord, Then the best Account of it will be on the Journal; the Question and Answer is entered there.

Die Jovis 31 die Octobr. 1678.

Post Meridiem.

Titus Oates being at the Bar, is directed to proceed in giving an Account of the Commissions given to several Lords and other Persons for Offices Civil and Military.

Upon which he proceeded in a particular Narrative thereof, with some Circumstances tending to make out the Truth thereof, and then was commanded to withdraw, but stay without.

Then upon Consideration had hereof, the Lord Chancellor, by Directions of the House, caused him to be called in again, and told him, that the Lords expect not his entering into particular Circumstances, but if there be particular Persons concerned, of what Quality soever they be, the House expected he should name them: but he named none but those he had mentioned in his Narrative, nor could name no other Person.

L. Staff. Then, my Lords, he said, he knew no Persons more than he had discovered; and after, did he not accuse the Queen, and several others? If he said true, then he knew no body more; if not, he is forsworn.

Sir W. Jones. Pray prove he did accuse the Queen.

L. Staff. He did so in the Council, and he is clearly perjured in that, and so not to be believed. And I say besides, after that Dr. Oates had consulted with himself, and possibly with some others, what his Narrative should be, and what he should accuse Persons of, and did only accuse me of seeing some Letters signed Stafford, and now he comes to give Evidence, he knows more of my having a Commission. After this rate, it may be he may know a great deal more To-morrow, when he hath invented it: And 'tis a great Sign he did not know of any more, if he did know of that; for I never had any Correspondence with the Jesuits, nor any Business transacted with them these twenty-four or twenty-five Years. Indeed at Ghent the English Jesuits were desired to do a little Thing for me, and they refused it me; it was to send over a Man that was to be a Witness in a Suit I had beyond Sea: And I never writ one Letter to a Jesuit since, nor he to me, that I know of, nor never had to do with them, that I know of. I never heard of Fenwick's Name, nor Harcourt's, till I heard of the Plot: nor of Johnson nor Thompson, Jesuits: And if any can prove it, I will acknowledge myself guilty of all that is said against me. And for that Dr. Oates at first said, he only saw Letters of mine, and after comes and accuses me of a Commission, I appeal to your Lordships if there can be any Truth or Belief in him. I cannot say more than what I have said already, and I do challenge Dr. Oates, at the Day of Judgment, to say, if ever he saw me in his Life till I was committed; or if I did ever go by any Name but that of Stafford, I will be content to die immediately. If I had gone by the Name of Howard, I need not be ashamed of it: for 'tis a Name good enough to be owned. I know there is a worthy Gentleman that bears the Name of Howard of Effingham, but I never did. If your Lordships please to let me ask Mr. Dugdale one Question.

L. H. S. Call Dugdale again. (Who appeared.) What say you to him, my Lord?

L. Staff. I desire to ask Dugdale, whether he did not, in his Depositions before Mr. Lane and Mr. Vernon, swear, that the 20th of October I offered him 500*l.* to kill the King?

Mr. Dugd. No, September.

L. Staff. Ay, September.

Mr. Dugd. Yes, I think I did make that Deposition before Captain Lane. I am certain I did, that my Lord Stafford the 20th or 21st of September offered me 500*l.*

L. Staff. Then did he not say presently upon this, he went to Mr. Evers's Chamber?

L. H. S. He says so now.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I am not certain it was the same Day; it was as soon as I could have Opportunity, it was presently after.

L. Staff. Did he not say he told Evers what I said to him, and he did not understand the Meaning of it?

Mr. Dugd. I did say so to Mr. Evers: I did ask Mr. Evers what my Lord Stafford's Meaning was, whether his Intention was true or no, to do as he said, and whether my Lord was in that Condition, as to be able to perform his Promise, for I feared Payment of the Money; and he told me, Harcourt and the rest of the Jesuits would furnish it.

L. H. S. So he said Yesterday.

L. Staff. Then ask him if he did not say, the Beginning of September I met him at Tixall, and I spake to him about such a Business.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, I did say, to the best of my Remembrance, it was about that Time, the latter End of August, or the Beginning of September, I would not be positive, nor could not, to five Days.

L. Staff. No, I think not to 5000. Then I asked him this Question, whether he did not presently upon that, when I told him about the Design, go to Mr. Evers, and asked what it meant?

L. H. S. He said so but now, he went to Evers and asked what you meant.

L. Staff. I beseech you I may be understood, whether he did not say in the Beginning of September, which was before the 20th or 21st in the Journal?

L. H. S. Is it in the Journal?

L. Staff. Yes.

L. H. S. Why, then, read it.

Die Sabbati 28 Decembris 1678.

The Earl of Essex acquainted the House, that he had received an Information out of the Country of very great Concernment, which was read as followeth.

Staffordsh.

December 24, 1678.

The Information of Stephen Dugdale, Gent. late Servant to the Lord Aston of Tixall, concerning the Plot against our Sovereign Lord the King, as followeth:

1. THIS Informant saith, that presently after one Howard, Almoner to the Queen, went beyond the Seas, he was told by George Hobson, (Servant to the said Lord Aston) that there was a Design then intended for the Reformation of the Government to the Romish Religion.

2. He informeth, That in the Beginning of September, 1678, he met in Tixall, nigh the Lord's Gates, the Lord Stafford, who said to this Informant, it was sad that they were troubled, for that they could not say their Prayers but in a hid Manner, but suddenly there would be a Reformation to the Romish Religion; and if there was but a good Success, they should enjoy their Religion. And upon the 20th Day of September last, the said Lord Stafford told this Informant that there was a Design in Hand, and if this Informant would undertake the Design, he should have a good Reward, and make himself famous.

3. Upon the aforesaid Day, immediately after, this Informant went into the Chamber of Mr. Francis Urie, alias Evers (a Jesuit), in Tixall-Hall, and asked him what the Lord Stafford meant by those Words; and after he had made him to swear Secrecy upon his Knees, he told him he might be a Person employed in the Work, and have a good Reward that would make him famous: And then he told him he must be instrumental with others in taking away the King's Life; and that it should be done by Shooting or otherwise. And that this Informant need not to fear, for the Pope had excommunicated the King, and that all that were excommunicated by him were Hereticks, and they might kill them, and be canonized for Saints in so doing.

4. The Informant saith, that the said Evers and Hobson both said, that the Design was as well to kill the Duke of Monmouth as the King.

5. That George North (Nephew to Pickering, and Servant to the Lord Aston,) lately told this Informant, that they had taken his Uncle, (meaning Pickering) and put him into Newgate; and thought the King deserved such an execrable Death as was intended him, because of his Whoring and Debauchery.

6. That Mr. Evers said, Mr. Bennysfield had a Pacquet of Letters delivered to him from the Posthouse, which he feared the Lord-Treasurer had Notice of, and therefore he delivered them to the Duke of York, and the Duke delivered them to the King, and that the King gave them to the Treasurer, after he had read them; but that the King did not believe them, and therefore it was happy, or else the Plot had been discovered.

7. That he had received many Pacquets of Letters for Evers, some of which this Informant broke up, and found them to be and tend to the Establishment of the Romish Religion, &c.

8. That he had received several Sums of Money himself, and knew of divers others that were employed to put forth Money, which was and is for the Jesuits Use.

Stephen Dugdale.

Taken upon Oath the 24th Day of December 1678. before us,

Tho. Lane,
J. Vernon.

L. Staff. My Lords, I find by this here, that presently after one Howard, Almoner to the Queen, went over, George Hobson, Servant to my Lord Aston, told Dugdale there was a Design to reform the Government, &c. I beseech your Lordships I may ask him, how long after he went over this Discourse was.

Mr. Dugd. I do not say I knew George Hobson before he came to be a Servant to my Lord Aston, which was in the Year 78, but that this was only a Discourse to me, that the Plot had been so long carrying on.

L. Staff. He says upon his Oath, presently after the Almoner went over, he told him so. Now the Almoner went over three Years before that, when the Proclamation came out to banish the Queen's Servants for being Papists.

Mr. Dugd. I heard it there; I never knew George Hobson before he came to be a Servant to my Lord Aston, but I did not tell it as a Discourse at that Time, or that it was more than what I had from him, that there was such a Design so long before.

L. Staff. He says, presently after the Almoner went over, in his Oath; which was, I think, in the Year 72 or 73, or rather in the Year 75, about the End of the Year 74, as I remember. And he says presently, three Years after; is that presently? E'en now the End of August was the Beginning of September, and how long that was we can't tell, and now three Years is presently after.

Sir W. Jones. He is telling of another's Discourse with him.

L. H. S. My Lord, you must observe that Dugdale says, that he did hear it from Hobson after he came to my Lord Aston's Service.

L. Staff. But he says, presently after the Almoner went over; and 'tis impossible; for he did not say it till three Years after, and so there is no Truth in him.

Mr. Dugd. My Lords, it was, that Hobson told me, that presently after the Almoner Howard went over, there was such a Design carrying on.

L. H. S. You distinguish not, and therefore don't comprehend. 'Tis one Thing if Dugdale had said, that presently after there was such a Design, Hobson told him so.

L. Staff. I beseech you, it is said, that presently after the Almoner went over, Hobson told him so.

L. H. S. But it is not that presently after he heard the Discourse; but George Hobson told him, that presently after the Almoner went over, there was such a Design.

L. Staff. 'Tis said he was told presently after.

(Then the Information was read again.)

L. H. S. Do you know when Howard the Almoner went over?

Mr. Dugd. No, my Lords; but by Report I heard when he went: But I do not make that Part of my Oath, for I cannot absolutely remember it.

L. H. S. My Lord, You must not make a Strain to make a Mistake.

L. Staff.

L. Staff. God's Life! is three Years a Strain?

Mr. Dugd. I never did mean so, nor never did intend so, for I never knew him till he came to my Lord Aston's; but he told me then this Discourse.

L. H. S. My Lord, this is only a Question of Grammar, how it can be construed.

L. Staff. My Lords, I beg your Pardon; 'tis to my little Reason a Question of Sense, and it is plain to me it can have no other Sense; but I submit it to your Lordships, whether this be not the true Construction.

L. H. S. Go on, my Lord, with your Evidence, Notice will be taken of your Objection; you shall see what they say to it; if they do not give it an Answer, it will have it's Weight.

Sir Will Jones. We will give that an Answer in due time.

L. Staff. Then next he says, I talk'd with him at my Lord Aston's the beginning of September, where he met with me at Tixall at the Gate, and I said, it was sad we could not say our Prayers, but in private. Truly, my Lords, I cannot say I did not say this to him; but if I did say it, I do not remember it, or that I ever thought so much; for I was so much of a contrary Opinion, that I thought those of that Religion said their Prayers too openly, and have chid them for it. And why should I speak it to him, whom I did not know what Religion or what Profession he might be of? And presently after I spoke of these things, he says, he went to know what the Design was, and then Mr. Evers told him of the Plot, and yet yesterday he said he knew it sixteen Years ago. How can all this be true? And besides, it seems I could have no great Power with him to persuade him, for it seems he mistrusted my Ability to pay; and he had reason, for I should hardly have parted with 500*l.* in the Condition I was then in, to any one; but I have no more to say to him now. There is a third Witness, one Turberville, I desire to ask him a Question.

L. H. S. Call Turberville. (Who stood up.)

L. Staff. I desire to know what time he came to serve my Lady Molineux (for it is in the beginning of the Information in the House of Commons, that he came in the Year 73), and how long he staid with her.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, if your Lordship please, there was an Offer made to you, that those Affidavits should be produced, if you desired to see them.

L. Staff. I think I shall have no occasion as yet; it may be I may by and by: But I desire to ask him this Question first, Whether he did say he came in the Year 73 into my Lady Mary Molineux's Service, and staid with her about three Years?

L. H. S. Did he swear in the Year 73 he came?

L. Staff. 'Tis so in his Narrative in Print.

L. H. S. Do you own that Narrative in Print for true?

Mr. Tur. No, my Lords.

L. H. S. How can you challenge him, then, with a Narrative he does not own?

L. Staff. Then what can a Man do, if he must not go according to what is printed?

Mr. Tur. There is a Mistake in the Printing of it, there is a Mistake of 73 for 72.

L. Staff. I now desire that Affidavit may be produced.

L. H. S. Pray let him have the Benefit that was offer'd him of the Affidavit.

Mr. Tur. Besides, I declared I could not be positive to a Year; I own any thing else in it.

L. Staff. Then, my Lords, if I shall have Fellows that will not swear to Months nor to Years, I beg of your Lordships to know whether these be legal Witnesses.

Manag. The Affidavit is in the Custody of Sir W. Poulteney, a Member of our House.

Sir Will. Poulteney. My Lords, I have the Affidavit; if you please, I shall give you an Account what I did upon it, and Sir Thomas Stringer, another Justice of Peace. My Lords, after that Mr. Turberville had given his Evidence to the House of Commons viva voce, he tender'd to them this Information that I have in my Hand. The House of Commons, after it had been read, thought it might be convenient to have it sworn to before two Justices of Peace. Whereupon Sir Thomas Stringer and my self withdrew into the Speaker's Chamber. Mr. Turberville came to us, we read over the Information to him again, and after we had read it over it was sign'd, and he swore it. In this Information, when we then took it, he declared there, That he came to my Lord Powis in the Year 1673, and came into England 1676. After we had sworn him, we carried this Information into the House again. The next Morning, my Lords, he came to me (I being one of the Justices that had sworn him) and told me, that searching among his Papers the last Night for a Letter, which he said he had received from my Lord Stafford, sent to Diep; tho' he could not find the Letter he look'd for, yet he found that the precise time that he went to live with my Lord Powis was 1672, and the precise time of his coming into England was 1675. And he desired me to acquaint the House of Commons with it, that this Circumstance of Time might be alter'd. Whereupon, my Lords, I did acquaint the House of Commons with it, how he was mistaken in that Point of a Circumstance of Time; and that he came of his own accord, and desir'd me to move the House in it. I moved the House, and they did direct we should withdraw again, and take his Information again, and that he should amend it. He amended it, and made the 73, 72; and the 76, 75; and then afterwards we swore him to it again de novo: And this is the Matter of Fact concerning the Affidavit.

L. H. S. Sir William Poulteney, did Mr. Turberville correct the Mistake himself first, or was it found alter'd by others?

Sir Will. Poulteney. My Lords, he came to me, for I did not know any thing of it, that he was mistaken; but he came to me the next Morning as soon as ever I came to the House, before indeed I enter'd into the House, and told me of the Mistake; and told me the Reasons how he came to recollect himself, and find out the Mistake.

L. H. S. Mr. Turberville, I would ask you the Question, how came you to be inform'd that you had mistaken yourself?

Mr. Tur. My Lords, I'll tell you: I was searching for a Letter I receiv'd from my Lord Stafford, and missing that, I found my Discharge I had from the French Army, wherein I saw a Mistake as to the Time, and that I have to produce.

L. H. S. I ask you again by the Oath you have taken, did you correct it of your self, or by Information from any other?

Mr. Tur. By the Oath I have taken, I did correct it of my self, and no body mov'd it to me.

Mr. Serj. May. It was but a Circumstance of Time:

Sir F. Win. And corrected by himself the very next Morning, my Lords:

L. Staff. He does acknowledge he did forswear himself once, and did make himself an honest Man the next Day, when he was a perjur'd Villain the Day before. And now he tells your Lordships, that he was searching for a Letter that I sent to him; but he cannot find it.

Mr. Tur. No, my Lords, I thought I had it, but I cannot find it:

L. Staff. No, I'll swear thou canst not. But then he does say that he had a Discharge from the French Army.

Mr. Tur. Yes, 'tis here, my Lord.

L. H. S. Is that the Paper of your Discharge?

Mr. Tur. Yes, it is. 'Tis worn out a little, and torn, but the Seal is preserv'd: I did not know that ever I should have occasion to make use of it; but my Lord challenging me for a Coward, and a Defter of my Colours—

L. Staff. I believe so still, for I have heard so.

L. H. S. Your Honour is not in question, Mr. Turberville.

Mr. Tur. The Title is a little torn; and if your Lordships please, I will read it: (which he did, being in French, and is render'd in English in these Words:

THIS certifieth all to whom it shall appertain, that I have given an absolute Discharge to the Sieur Turberville, a Cavalier of my Company, after having serv'd the Space of six Months with all Honour and Fidelity. Therefore I desire those that are to be desired, to treat him civilly, and let him pass and repass, and without doing him any Injury, or giving him any Hindrance; but on the contrary, to afford him all Aid and Assistance where it shall be necessary, promising the like upon all Occasions that shall require it. In Confirmation of which, I have for him sign'd this present Discharge, and thereto put the Seal of my Arms, to serve him in case he shall need it. Made at the Camp before Aire this 4th of August, 1676.

Sheldon.

L. H. S. What is the Date of that Discharge, Turberville?

Mr. Tur. 'Tis in August 76.

L. Staff. May I see it, my Lords?

L. H. S. Yes. Deliver it to my Lord. (Which was done, and he look'd upon it.)

L. Staff. The thing looks like Truth, but there is no Proof of it.

Mr. Tur. The Seal is a little broke, but the Name remains perfect.

L. Staff. He says there is a Dismission from the Army in 76; how will that rectify his Mistake about 73? I understand not that.

Then the Court called for the Paper; and it was looked upon by the Duke of Monmouth, and some other Lords.

L. H. S. My Lord, this Paper hath been look'd upon; the Hand is well known by those that should know it.

L. Staff. I do not say the contrary.

L. H. S. Whereabouts are you now, my Lord, then?

L. Staff. I am extremely faint and weary, that I am sure of. This Gentleman told you yesterday, that he spoke with me several times in France, and that he was conversant with me for a Fortnight together; that he visited me, and I propos'd the killing of the King to him; and that he refus'd to give me an Answer then, but told me he would give it me at Diep: This he said yesterday, as I remember. And afterwards, when he was gone down, he came up again, and desired to put your Lordships in mind of a particular Circumstance which he said he did remember, That when he came to me, I had the Gout, and was in a lower Room of the House, in such a Street, which fac'd Luxemburgh House, all which I stand not upon; and that the Prince of Conde lived in the same Street, on the Left-hand he said first, and after on the Right-hand, and after he knew not where, and that I did lodge in the same Street.

Mr. Tur. I did say, I believ'd the Prince of Conde lived there, but I was not positive.

L. Staff. No; but first he swears a Thing, and then only believes it. Be pleas'd to call my Servants, to know if ever I had my Foot ill of the Gout in my Life.

Mr. Tur. Your Lordship told me it was the Gout.

L. Staff. If ever I put my Foot on a Stool, or was lame there, I will own all that he says. But when a Man swears his Evidence, and goes down from the Place, and then invents, and comes up again to tell new Stories, who shall believe such a Man?

Mr. Tur. I never went from the Bar.

L. Staff. I do say, you went down, and had given all your Evidence, and came up again, and told this Circumstance. I have not been lame, not one Moment, these forty Years; and yet this Fellow, this impudent Fellow, to say, that I was lame, and put my Foot upon a Stool! He does not, my Lords, swear positively in any thing but this, and this I can easily disprove him in.

L. H. S. What say you to this Particular, Turberville? Had my Lord Stafford never the Gout while he was in France?

Mr. Tur. He told me it was the Gout, my Lords: He had a great Lameness, he could not go from one Place to another. Here are several People to give Testimony that my Lord was lame within less Time than he says.

Mr. Foley. Hold, hold, Turberville, you must not give that Evidence now.

L. Staff. Call Nicholas Furnese again.

L. H. S. What do you call him for?

L. Staff. Ask whether ever he saw Mr. Turberville with me in France?

L. H. S. Were you with my Lord Stafford all the while he was in France?

Furnese. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Did you never see Turberville there?

Furn. No.

L. H. S. Pray, did you never see Father Anthony Turberville there?

Furn. No, my Lords, I never heard of his Name.

L. Staff. Was I ever one moment lame while I was in France?

Furn. Not that I remember.

L. H. S. How long was my Lord there?

Furn. About three Months.

L. H. S. What time of the Year?

Furn. At Paris in October and November, in December at Rohan, in January we came over into England.

L. Staff. Ask him if ever I put my Foot upon a Cushion or upon a Stool for Lameness.

L. H. S. Mr. Turberville, did you ever see Furnese when you were in France?

Mr. Tur.

Mr. Tur. This Man, my Lords?
 L. H. S. Yes.
 Mr. Tur. No, not that I remember.
 L. H. S. In what Quality did you serve my Lord in France, Furnese?
 Fur. My Lords, I waited on him in his Chamber.
 L. H. S. Do you remember any other Servant of my Lord's that you did see there?
 Mr. Tur. Truly, my Lords, I don't remember, I might forget him.
 L. Staff. So I believe thou dost me too.
 Mr. Tur. Your Lordship that could call me Coward, may say any Thing.
 L. Staff. You shall be as valiant as Hector, if you will. Pray call my other Boy. (Who stood up.)
 L. H. S. You little Boy, Were you all the while with my Lord that he was in France?
 Leigh. Yes, my Lords.
 L. H. S. Did you ever see Turberville there?
 Leigh. No, my Lords, not that I know of.
 L. H. S. Had my Lord the Gout in France?
 Leigh. No; nor never had since I have been with him.
 L. H. S. That is six Years.
 Leigh. Seven Years almost, my Lords.
 L. H. S. Are you sure of that?
 Leigh. I am sure of it.
 L. Staff. Now, my Lords, Mr. Turberville says, I writ him a Letter to Diep, which Letter he can't find; I beseech you, what were the Contents of the Letter?
 L. H. S. What were the Contents of the Letter my Lord sent you?
 Mr. Tur. The Contents of the Letter were, That I should not stay at Diep in Expectation of him, for he had appointed a Yacht to come to Calais; but I should make what haste I could to London, and there I should meet with him.
 L. Staff. I desire to ask, whether I sent him Word that Count Gramont came over with me.
 Mr. Tur. Yes, my Lords, to the best of my Remembrance.
 L. Staff. I shall now bring Witnesses that I did not come by Calais, but by Diep, and Count Gramont came not with me.
 L. H. S. Mr. Turberville, which Way came you, from Diep, or from Calais?
 Mr. Tur. From Diep, my Lords.
 L. Staff. And I came from Diep too.
 L. H. S. My Lord came that Way too, he says.
 Mr. Tur. I know not of that, he sent me Word otherwise.
 L. Staff. I shall now prove what I say. Pray call Mr. Wyborne. (Who stood up.)
 L. H. S. What do you ask him, my Lord?
 L. Staff. Whether he did not see me at Diep, and embark from thence for England?
 Mr. Wyborne. My Lords, I will give you an Account as well as I can. In the Year 75, in December, I had Occasion to go over into France upon my own Concerns; and enquiring where there was a Conveniency to go over, I heard that a Yacht was sending to Diep for my Lord Stafford, and Mr. Henry Sidney, his Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary now in Holland: I took that Occasion, and we weighed Anchor on Friday the 24th of December; and it being foul Weather, and we being tossed long upon the Sea, we did not come to an Anchor before Diep till the Sunday was Se'nnight at two o'clock in the Afternoon, which was January the 2d. Then I came with the Captain immediately on Shore, to enquire for my Lord and Mr. Sidney; I enquired for my Lord, and they told me he was at Roban, expecting to hear of the Arrival of the Yacht: Upon which the Captain desired me to write a Letter to my Lord, and I did so; upon Sight of which Letter, he came to Diep on Tuesday in the Afternoon, which was, as I take it, the 4th of January, and we were at the Bastile there then together when he came that Evening. And the next Day I went on my own Occasions to Paris, and my Lord and Mr. Sidney did come over together in the Yacht.
 L. Staff. If you please, I will call my two Servants again to this Matter.
 L. H. S. Call them, my Lord. (Then Furnese and Leigh stood up.)
 L. H. S. Which Way came my Lord Stafford out of France into England, by Diep or Calais?
 Furn. By Diep.
 L. H. S. What say you, Boy? Which Way came my Lord?
 Leigh. By Diep, my Lords.
 L. H. S. You came with him?
 Leigh. Yes, we did.
 L. H. S. My Lord, the Question is not, whether you came by Calais or no, but whether you writ a Letter to him to Diep, that you would go by Calais.
 L. Staff. He swore Yesterday that I did come by Calais.
 L. H. S. Do you say my Lord came by Calais?
 Mr. Tur. My Lords, I had a Letter from his Lordship, which he wrote to me, that he would come by Calais.
 L. Staff. He did not name the Letter Yesterday, nor is it in the Information.
 L. H. S. Read the Affidavit.

The Information of Edward Turberville, of Skeer, in the County of Glamorgan, Gent.

WHO saith, That being a younger Brother, about the Year 1672, he became Gentleman-Usher to the Lady Mary Molinex, Daughter to the Earl of Powis, and by that Means lived in the House of the said Earl above three Years; and by serving and assisting at Mafs there, grew intimate with William Morgan, Confessor to the said Earl and his Family, who was a Jesuit, and Rector over all the Jesuits in North Wales, Shropshire, and Staffordshire. And he during the three Years Time often heard the said Morgan tell the said Earl and his Lady, That the Kingdom was in a high Fever, and that nothing but Blood-letting could restore it to Health, and then the Catholick Religion would flourish. Whereunto the said Earl many Times replied, It was not yet Time, but he doubted not but such Means should be used in due Time; or Words to that Effect. And he heard the Lady Powis tell the said Morgan and others, publicly and privately, That when Religion should be restored in England, which she doubted not but would be in a very short Time, she would persuade her Husband to give 300l. per Annum, for a Foundation to maintain a Nunnery. And this Informant was persuaded by the Lady Powis, and the said Morgan, to become a Frier; the said Lady encouraging this Informant thereunto, by saying, That if he would follow his Studies, and make himself capable, the questioned not but he might shortly be made a Bishop by her Interest in England; because upon Restoration of the Catholick Religion, there would want People fit to make Bishops, and to do the Business of the Church. And thereupon she gave this Informant ten Pounds to carry him to Doway, where this Informant entred the Monastery, and continued about three Weeks, and with much Difficulty made his Escape thence, and returned for England; for which the said Earl and his Lady, and all the rest that encouraged him to go to the Monastery, became his utter Enemies, threatening to take away his Life, and to get his Brother to disinheret him: Which last is compassed against him. And Father Cudworth, who was then Guardian of the Friars at Doway, some Days before his Escape thence, told this Informant, That if he should not persevere with them, he should lose his Life and Friends: And further added, That this King should not last long, and that his Successor should be wholly for their Purpose. And Father Crofs, Provincial of the Friars, told this Informant, That had he been at Doway when this Informant made his Escape thence, he should never have come to England. And this Informant finding himself friendless, and in Danger in England, went to Paris, where one of his Brothers is a Benedictine Monk, who persuaded this Informant to return for England; and in order thereunto, about the latter End of November 1675, he was introduced into the Acquaintance of the Lord Stafford that he might go for England with his Lordship, and three Weeks he attended his Lordship, and had great Access and Freedom with his Lordship, who gave him great Assurances of his Favour and Interest to restore him to his Relations Esteem again: And said, That he had a Piece of Service to propose to this Informant, that would not only retrieve his Reputation with his own Relations, but also oblige both them and their Party to make him happy as long as he lived. And this Informant being desirous to embrace so happy an Opportunity, was very inquisitive after the Means; but the said Lord Stafford being somewhat difficult to repose so great a Trust as he was to communicate to him, exacted all the Obligations and Promises of Secrecy, which this Informant gave his Lordship in the most solemn Manner he could invent. Then his Lordship laboured to make this Informant sensible of all the Advantages that should accrue to this Informant, and the Catholick Cause; and then told this Informant in direct Terms, That he might make himself and the Nation happy, by taking away the Life of the King of England, who was an Heretick, and consequently a Rebel against God Almighty. Of which this Informant desired his Lordship to give him Time to consider, and told his Lordship that he would give him his Answer at Diep, where his Lordship intended to ship for England, and to take this Informant with him; but this Informant going before to Diep, the Lord Stafford went with Count Gramont by Calais, and sent this Informant Orders to go for England, and to attend his Lordship at London: But this Informant did not attend his Lordship at London, but went into the French Service, and so avoided the Lord Stafford's further Importunities in that Affair. And this Informant further saith, That one Remige, a Frenchwoman, and vehement Papist, who married this Informant's Brother, lived with the Lady Powis all the Time this Informant resided there and some Years since, and was the great Confident of the said Lady; and the said Remige was for the most Part taken with her Ladyship into Morgan's Chamber, when the Consults were held there, where he hath often seen Father Gavan, Father Tourners, Father Evans, Father Sylliard, Roberts, White, Owens, Barry, and the Earl of Castlemaine, and other Priests and Jesuits, meet and shut themselves up in the said Morgan's Chamber, sometimes for an Hour, sometimes for two Hours, more or less; and at the breaking up of the said Consults, have broke out into an Extasy of Joy, saying, They hoped ere long the Catholick Religion would be established in England, and that they did not doubt to bring about their Design, notwithstanding they had met with one great Disappointment, which was the Peace struck up with Holland; saying, That if the Army at Black-Heath had been sent into Holland to assist the French King, when he was with his Army near Amsterdam, Holland had certainly been conquered, and then the French King would have been able to assist us with an Army to establish Religion in England. Which Expressions, with many others, importing their Confidence to set up the Romish Religion, they frequently communicated to this Informant. And the said Morgan went several Times into Ireland, to London, and several other Parts of England, as this Informant hath just Cause to believe, to give and take Measures for carrying on the Design: And the said Remige and her Husband having first clandestinely sold their Estate, and fled into France about May or June last, for fear of Discovery; this Informant by many Circumstances being assured that the said Mrs. Remige was privy to all or most of the Transactions of the Plot. And he saith, That about May last was two Years, he was present at Mafs with the Lord Powis in Vere-street, when the Earl of Castlemaine did say Mafs in his Priestly Habit, after the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of Rome.

Edward Turberville.

Sworn the 9th Day of November, 1680, before

Thomas Stringer.
 William Poulteney.
 Edmund Warcupp.

L. H. S. My Lord, this Affidavit is to the Purpose to which you call for it; this does say, that your Lordship did go by the Way of Calais, it does absolutely so.

L. Staff. Now, whether he be forsworn or no, your Lordships may judge by these three Witnesses.

Mr. Tur. My Lords, That which I grounded my Belief of his going to Calais upon, and so consequently that Affidavit, was the Letter which I received from my Lord; which I have looked for, but cannot find.

L. H. S. This Affidavit does not say you went from Calais to England, but you went with Count Gramont to Calais.

L. Staff. I conceive, my Lords, this Affidavit and his Narrative are Word for Word the same, only that Amendment of 72 for 73, upon which I observed before he was forsworn once. I cannot tell what to say, if this Man can be believed. And Count Gramont came by Diep too. But besides, my Lord, in this Affidavit he does not say he believed so by the Letter, though now he speaks of one.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, Was Count Gramont in your Lordship's Company when you came to Diep?

L. Staff.

L. Staff. No, my Lords, he was in England before me a Month; but, my Lords, I cannot deny but I had one recommended to come over with me, that pretended himself to be a French Count, but the Man was as arrant a Rascal as this that swears against me; and that was one that called himself Count de Brienne, whom all the World knows to be a Cheat.

L. H. S. Call your other Witnesses, my Lord.

L. Staff. Where is John Minhead? (Who stood up.)

L. H. S. Who do you belong to?

Minhead. My Lord Powis.

L. Staff. My Lords, Mr. Turberville, he says, by the Persuasion of my Lady Powis went to Doway, and he staid in the Monastery three Weeks, and not liking that Life, he came away (this may be true, I say nothing to it); but that which I take Exception at, is this; he says, for this the Earl of Powis and his Lady, when he came back from Doway, were very angry with him, and so were all his Relations, and he stood in Fear of his Life from them. Surely when Mr. Turberville knew he was in such Danger, he would not have come near them: pray ask this Gentleman, whether he was at my Lord Powis's, and how he was entertained.

L. H. S. Do you know Turberville?

Minb. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Have you seen him at my Lord Powis's?

Minb. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. How was he received there?

Minb. Very well, my Lords.

L. H. S. When was that?

Minb. In the Year 75.

L. H. S. Was that before or after he came back to England?

Minb. It was after he came from Doway.

L. H. S. What Countryman are you?

Minb. A Frenchman.

L. H. S. What Religion are you of?

Minb. A Roman Catholick.

L. Staff. Pray ask him whether he lay in my Lord's House?

Minb. Yes, my Lords, he lay with me in my Lodgings.

L. Staff. And yet he says he was afraid of his Life.

L. H. S. Did my Lord know he lay there?

Minb. Yes, he must needs, because he came through the Room to go to Bed.

L. Staff. May it please your Lordships, he says he was threatened that he should have his Brother disinherited him, and which afterwards was compassed. Now I shall shew that this is impossible, for he had no Inheritance to lose, nor was to have none; for his Brother, who is elder than he (this Man being by a second Venter), hath Children, as I shall make appear by another of his Brothers, who is here. And this not being settled upon him, who was by the second Venter, could not come to him; but, for want of Issue of that Brother, must go to the Uncle. So he swears he was disinherited of an Estate, when he was to have no Estate, nor could have. Call Mr. John Turberville: (Who appeared.) My Lords, I desire you to ask him, whether he knew that upon his coming back to England he was ill used?

Mr. J. Tur. I never knew any Unkindness from my elder Brother to him.

L. H. S. Are you his Brother?

Mr. J. Tur. Yes, my Lord, by the Father, not by the Mother.

L. H. S. Well, what can you say?

Mr. J. Tur. I never heard any thing when he returned from Doway, that he was ill received by my Lord Powis; but in a few Days after my Brother and Sister came to Town, we went to Bloomsbury, and there we met together: And my Brother complaining that he was unfortunate, in that he had undertaken what he could not perform in going beyond Sea, and now wanted a Livelihood; my eldest Brother told him, he had done as far as his Ability, he could do no more, it was his own Choice, and he had no more to say.

L. Staff. Had he any Money from his Relations?

Mr. J. Tur. He made Intercession by Friends to my Sister, and she told me, that she gave him 7*l.* to bear his Charges to Paris, with that Proviso, that he would never trouble them more.

L. H. S. But they were not angry with him?

Mr. J. Tur. Here he is, he cannot say they ever gave him an angry Word in their Days; I'm sure I never did.

L. H. S. Did you forbid him the House?

Mr. J. Tur. No.

Mr. Ed. Tur. These are People that take not the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, and therefore are not fit to be Witnesses.

L. Staff. Now your Lordships see what a Villain he is.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. You must give good Words, my Lord, for none but good Words are given you.

L. Staff. I must call them Villains, or myself Traitor.

L. H. S. You say they gave him 7*l.* upon Condition they should never see him more.

Mr. J. Tur. I did not say, my Sister said upon Condition she would give him 7*l.* he would never trouble us more: It was his Declaration.

L. Staff. One Thing I would ask Mr. Turberville more, and that is about this Man's being disinherited: Whether he could, or whether he was Heir to an Estate or not?

L. H. S. What say you to it?

Mr. J. Tur. By all the Information of our Relations, the Estate was made by my Grandfather to my Father for Life, and after my Father's Life, to my Mother; and after my Mother's Life, to my eldest Brother, and the Heirs Male of his Body; and for want of such, afterwards to me, and the Heirs Male of my Body; and in case I had none, then to my Father's Brother, and his Heirs Male; and if he had no Heirs Male, then after that to the right Heirs of the Grandfather. This was before my time.

L. H. S. Well, then, that Remainder to the right Heirs might come to him; and so there was some Estate for him to lose, and that Remainder might be docked by the Tenant in Tail. I would ask, Was there any Recovery suffered to bar that Entail?

Mr. J. Tur. Yes, I think there was one upon my Brother's Marriage.

L. H. S. Mr. Turberville, were you told you should be disinherited?

Mr. E. Tur. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Who told you so?

Mr. E. Tur. My eldest Brother.

L. H. S. What did he tell you?

Mr. E. Tur. He told me it should not come to me.

L. H. S. How should it come to you?

Mr. E. Tur. I am not so good a Lawyer as to tell that, whether it could or no; but I thought by Succession.

VOL. III.

L. Staff. Then he says he came to serve my Lady Mollineux in 72; it may be it is so as he says, I don't know it of my own Knowledge; but I pray he may answer, whether it was in 71, or 72.

Mr. E. Tur. In January or February, 71.

Mr. Truby. That is in the Beginning of the Year 72, according to the Almanack.

L. Staff. My Lords, for the present I do not remember any thing more—Oh, yes, my Lords, he says he was at such a Time at my Lord Powis's, when my Lord Castlemain was at Powis-Castle, which must be either in the Year 72, 73, or 74. Now I desire you would ask Mr. Lydcot, whether my Lord Castlemain was there, or could be there in any of those Years. (Then Lydcot stood up.)

L. H. S. What do you ask him, my Lord?

L. Staff. I desire to ask him, whether in the Year 72, 73, or 74, which are the Years Turberville says he was at my Lord Powis's at Powis-Castle, whether my Lord Castlemain was at Powis-Castle, or could be there at that time.

L. H. S. Was my Lord Castlemain there in any of those Years?

Lydcot. My Lords, I can prove he was not, as much as I am capable of proving a negative. I was with him in the Years 72, 73, and 74.

L. H. S. Where?

Lydcot. He was in England in 73; I was with him all the while, and I am sure since I knew him he was never in Wales, and I was never absent from him since I knew him (which is nine Years), not four Months in all: I have travelled with him, and been abroad with him.

L. H. S. Turberville, when do you say my Lord Castlemain was at Powis-Castle?

Mr. Tur. I think it was in the Year 73.

L. H. S. By what Token do you remember him there?

Mr. Tur. He was arguing with my Lord Powis about Religion, and several times he did so: I believe it was in the Year 73.

L. H. S. What say you to that?

Lydcot. I can assure your Lordships he was not there then; I was always with him that Year: He had many times a Design to go there, but he could not but put it off; and the last Time he was there, I can prove it was fifteen Years ago.

L. H. S. I desire to know of you this, Friend; can you take it upon you to affirm upon the Faith of a Christian, that you were never from my Lord Castlemain all the Year 73?

Lydcot. I can give an Account to half a Week where he was; and when I was absent from him, it was beyond Sea; and all that while I kept Correspondence with him every Post, and received Letters from him constantly once a Week, dated from Liege; this was in the time of my Absence.

L. H. S. Were you at Liege when my Lord was in England, or were you with him all the time he was in England?

Lydcot. My Lords, I was with him all the time he was in England, and was never absent from him all that Compass of Time, but when he sent me into England from Liege.

L. H. S. Then he was at Liege himself?

Lydcot. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Was that in the Year 73?

Lydcot. Yes, my Lords, I was then in England. But, my Lords, I can give you a whole Account, for my Lord and I never made any Journeys, but I put them down.

L. H. S. You say you can give a particular Account of the whole Year 73, even to the Compass of four Days in that Year at most.

Lydcot. No, my Lords, I do not say so; but I say I can give an Account of the whole time I have been with him within four Months.

L. H. S. Were any of these four Months within the Year 73?

Lydcot. No: I was with him all the Year 73.

L. H. S. Will you take it upon you to say, That every Day in 73 you were with my Lord?

Lydcot. Every Day, my Lords.

L. H. S. Every Week?

Lydcot. Yes, I do not think but that I was. My Lord did me the Honour to make me as it were his Companion.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. No, you do yourself the Honour to make yourself his Companion; he made you his Servant.

L. H. S. Come, where are your Notes you pretend to speak by? your Diary, or your Journal? Let us hear a whole Account of the Year 73; for you come to testify as if you could give an Account of every Day.

Lydcot. I did not think any Question of this Nature would come on the Stage; there is my Lord's Steward can give a very good Account of this by his Account-Books, which are all ready to be produced: He can tell where my Lord was, by laying out such and such Monies. And 'tis an hard thing to give a Testimony after so many Years, of a Thing that we thought not would ever be a Question.

L. H. S. Let us see your Notes.

Lydcot. My Lords, I will read it to your Lordships.

L. H. S. When was this written?

Lydcot. I took this out of another Book.

L. H. S. When?

Lydcot. Lately, since Mr. Turberville's Narrative came out.

Sir Will. Jones. Oh, I desire that may be observed.

L. Staff. If your Lordships please, I desire that he may bring his Books, Oh, Oh! will not condemn me, but Law and Justice: I am not to be run down with Oh, Oh! or what such impudent Villains as these say.

L. H. S. Read what you have there.

Lydcot. From Liege we set forth to Paris, January 1, 72, where we staid three Weeks, and arrived thence at London, January 24; there we staid till May 73, and from thence we went to Liege again in June, and from Liege we set forth to London in August, and returned October the 3d, 73.

L. H. S. Were you all the while between August and October in London?

Lydcot. I am morally certain, that I did not go from my Lord all that time.

L. H. S. Where were you after October?

Lydcot. Which October, if your Lordship please?

L. H. S. October, 73.

Lydcot. At Liege; for we returned to Liege at October the 3d, and then after this my Lord sent me into England. I left him at Liege, and from thence I set out for England; and in January I returned to Liege, which was the greatest Part of time that I was ever absent from him.

L. H. S. And was he at Liege, are you sure, all that time from October to January?

Lydcot. Yes, except he flew: For I sent Letters by the foreign Post, and received Letters by the foreign Post every Week. And his Account-Books will speak it.

Y

Sir W. Jones.

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, we desire to ask him one Question, (since he can give so exact an Account) whether my Lord Castlemain was in England, 72; and how much of that Year?

Lyd. Yes.

Sir W. Jones. How many Months of the Year 72 was he in England?

Lyd. I read it before. We arrived from Liege to London, January 24th, 72, and staid at London till May, 73.

L. H. S. But where was my Lord all the Year 72?

Lyd. Pray, my Lords, do you mean New-Style or Old-Style?

L. H. S. When I speak of his being at London, I mean the Style of the Country.

Sir W. Jones. Then, under favour, he speaks of the latter Part of the Year: I desire to know, whether my Lord, for all the former Part of the Year was in England?

L. H. S. Where was my Lord in December 72, and in November before that, and in all the Year up backwards?

Lyd. My Lords, I have told you the whole Year.

L. H. S. But where was my Lord from January 71, to January 72?

Lyd. In 71, June the 10th, New-Style, we came to London, and returned in September to Liege; from Liege we set forth to Paris, January 1, 72; and arrived at London, January 24.

L. H. S. He runs past the Time.

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, we ask him a plain Question, but he does not answer it; he slips over the Time that we desire your Lordships to ask him about.

L. Staff. I beseech your Lordships that it may be made plain, that there may nothing be said afterwards that it was not plain.

Lyd. Sir, do you propose any thing to me, and I will answer it.

Sir W. Jones. Answer not us, answer my Lords.

Lyd. I desire any body may peruse my Notes, if they please.

L. H. S. Pray, Sir, answer the Question, which in very short Terms is this, Where my Lord Castlemain was all the whole Year 72?

Lyd. Well, my Lords, I will; I can but read it over again. From Liege we set forth to Paris, January 1, 72.

L. H. S. Are not you a rare Fellow now!

Lyd. My Lords, I understand it according to the Style of that Country when I am there, and of this Place when I am here.

L. H. S. Answer me according to our Style.

Lyd. This that I have written here, in the Book out of which I took it, hath been written ever since that Time; and I did not think I should e'er be called to account about it.

L. H. S. Begin January the 1st, 71.

Lyd. We went from Liege to Paris, where we staid about a Week, or such a time, and we arrived at London January the 24th, that is the Old-Style, and staid at London till May the 8th, 73.

L. H. S. That is impossible, for you 'scape a Year and an half together.

Lyd. My Lord was here in England in January.

L. H. S. You begin very gravely with January, Stilo veteri, that you came from Liege; and so January the 24th, Stilo veteri, you came to London.

Lyd. When I speak of any Stile, I understand it according to the Stile of the Country.

L. H. S. But in your Account, what is become of all the time from January, 71, to January, 72; say and swear, if you can, where my Lord was all that time.

Lyd. He must be in London.

L. H. S. Can you take it upon your Oath, that my Lord was in London from January 71, Stilo veteri, to May 73, Stilo veteri?

Lyd. I cannot know how to count better than I have done.

L. Staff. Mr. Turberville says, my Lord Castlemain was in 73 at Powis-Castle; I beseech your Lordships this Man may be asked, and that without any Interruption, where my Lord was that Year.

Sir W. Jones. With your Lordships Favour I must desire your Lordships to ask Mr. Turberville whether he did say positively the Year 73; for if my Ears and my Notes do not fail me, he said, as he remembered; and that is the Reason why we ask about the Year 72.

Mr. Tur. My Lords, I do not say positively, nor cannot, which Year it was.

Lyd. My Lords, I do stand upon it, that he was in London January, 72, and went away May 73.

L. H. S. What becomes of the mean time, between January, 71, and May 73?

Lyd. My Lords, I explain myself as well as I can.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, will you call any more Witnesses?

L. Staff. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. S. Call them then.

Earl of Shaftesbury. My Lord High Steward, I desire my Lord Stafford may be asked how many Witnesses my Lord hath more, for it now grows late.

L. H. S. My Lord, I desire to know how many Witnesses you have more?

L. Staff. Three or four; I can't tell well how many.

Lords. Adjourn, adjourn.

L. H. S. Is it your Lordships Pleasure that we do adjourn?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. S. Then this House is adjourned into the Parliament-Chamber. Then the Lords returned in their former Order to their House, and the Commons went back to their House.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair, and a Message from the Lords was sent by Sir Timothy Baldwin and Sir Samuel Clarke.

Mr. Speaker,

The Lords have sent us to acquaint this House, that they have ordered the Prisoner, William Viscount Stafford, to be brought again to his Trial at the Bar in Westminster-Hall, to-morrow morning at Ten of the Clock.

The FOURTH DAY.

Friday, December 3, 1680.

ABOUT the Hour of Ten in the Morning the Lords adjourned into Westminster-Hall, and returned in their former Order into the Court there erected; and Mr. Speaker having left the Chair, the Commons were seated as before mentioned.

The Court being sat, Proclamation for Silence was made, and the Lieutenant of the Tower commanded to bring his Prisoner to the Bar; which being done, the Lord-High-Steward spake to the Prisoner as followeth:

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, your Lordship's Defence took up Yesterday. All the Day was employ'd in hearing your Lordship's Witnesses to impeach the Credit of the Testimony that hath been given against you. Your Lordship hath excepted against Dugdale, because you were not at Tinsall, as he says you were, neither the latter end of August, nor the beginning of September, till the Twelfth; and when you were there, you never sent for him to your Chamber, but your Man, upon his own desire, brought him: And when he came there, the Business was, to desire you to get leave that he might go to the Race; and there was no opportunity of private Discourse, because your Men were in the Room all the while: That Dugdale hath often said he knew nothing of the Plot; that he swore falsely, when he said he told of the Letter about the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey before it was known he was killed, and when he said that Hobson told him presently after the Almoner went over, which was three Years before Hobson came to my Lord Aston's Service. Your Lordship hath likewise objected, that he hath corrupted Persons to swear falsely against you and others, as Robinson the Upholsterer against your Lordship, Morrall the Barber against Sir James Symonds, and Hall the Blacksmith to swear that one Moor carried away Evers. Your Lordship hath endeavoured to discredit Oates, by his saying he knew nothing of any other Persons that were concerned in the Plot, and after accusing the Queen. Your Lordship hath impeach'd the Credit of Turberville, by proving that you came home by Diep, and not by Calais, as he says you did; that you had never the Gout while you were in France, nor, as your Page says, for these seven Years; that my Lord Castlemain was not at my Lord Powis's in the Year 73, and there you left off. This I take is the Sum of what your Lordship says; if I do you any wrong, your Lordship will put me in mind of it.

L. Staff. I thank your Lordship, you have done it with great Equity and Truth.

L. H. S. Then go on.

L. Staff. The next Witness that I call is one John Porter. (Who stood up.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witness. John Porter.

L. H. S. What Profession are you of?

Porter. A Butler.

L. H. S. To whom?

Porter. To my Lord Powis.

L. Staff. My Lords, I desire your Lordships would ask him what Mr. Turberville said about the Plot.

L. H. S. I will ask him all the Questions your Lordship desires I should ask him.

Mr. Foley. We desire to know what Religion he is of.

L. Staff. I desire your Lordship would ask him that Question, and not the Managers.

L. H. S. They will tell me their Questions, my Lord, and I will ask them.

L. Staff. They ask him, my Lords, and not you.

L. H. S. What Religion are you of?

Porter. A Church-of-England Man, my Lords.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. The Popish Church of England, I believe.

L. Staff. Pray, my Lords, let not this be; when my Witness says he is of the Church of England, they cry he is of the Popish Church of England. Mr. Serj. Mayn. Pray, good my Lord, we are silent when you ask him proper Questions, and make no Remarks; we do not speak it to the Court; we may say what we will among ourselves, I hope.

L. Staff. I may ask impertinent Questions, because I do not understand so well as these Gentlemen. But I pray they may not deal thus with me.

L. H. S. My Lord, you shall ask what Questions you please.

L. Staff. Pray ask him what Mr. Turberville said to him about the Knowledge of the Plot.

L. H. S. What did Turberville say to you about his knowing of the Plot?

Porter. About a Year since, when I serv'd my Lord Powis as Butler there, he was us'd to come and see me; it was not at my Lord's House, but he sent for me to a Victualling House.

L. H. S. That was last Year?

Porter. Yes.

L. H. S. What time of the Year?

Porter. It was about twelve Months ago, I cannot say positively the time.

L. H. S. Was it in Winter or Summer?

Porter. He hath been both, I can't be positive which; I believe he hath been there forty times.

L. H. S. In the Year 80, or 79?

Porter. In the Year 79.

L. H. S. What did he say?

Porter. He came there and asked me how my Lord Powis did; and said, he was extremely troubled that he was in that Affliction, for he did verily believe, that neither he nor the rest of the Lords were in the Plot; and the Witnesses that swore against him, he believed were perjur'd, and could not believe any thing of it.

L. H. S. Have you any more to say?

Porter. Yes, my Lords: I told him, If there were such a thing as a Plot, he having been beyond Sea, must certainly know of it. He told me, As he hop'd for Salvation, he knew nothing of it, neither directly, nor indirectly, against the King's Sacred Person, nor the Subversion of the Government. And he further said, Altho' I am a little low at present, and my Friends will not look upon me, yet I hope God Almighty will never leave me so much, as to let me swear against innocent Persons, and forswear and damn myself.

L. H. S. Where was this said to you?

Porter. At the Ship Alehouse in Lincolns-Inn-Fields one time, another time at the King's-Head Tavern in the Strand, and another time at the Golden-Ball in the Strand.

L. H. S. Was any body by, besides yourself?

Porter. Not at that time; but there is a Gentleman in Court, that can testify that he said such things at other times.

L. H. S. What say you to this, Turberville?

Mr. Tur. I say 'tis all false: But if your Lordships please, I'll tell you what I said once, I did conceive my Lord Powis was the least concerned of any, I thought; and I hop'd it would prove so. I can take all the Oaths in the World, I said no more.

L. H. S. What else do you know?

Porter. Only such things as these he hath often said.

Earl of Shaftsbury. Pray, my Lords, ask him how came Turberville to be a Witness about the Plot?

L. H. S. Upon what occasion came Turberville to talk of these Matters?

Porter. It was only voluntary of himself; it was speaking of my Lord's will, and the rest of the Lords in the Tower.

Earl of Shaftsbury. My Lords, I mean of his own being a Witness.

L. H. S. How came Turberville to say, he hop'd God Almighty would ever forsake him so far, as to let him swear against innocent Persons? He was never call'd to be a Witness.

Porter. But, my Lord, some of his Friends did say they were fearful of him, in regard he was reduc'd to Poverty; his Friends were fearful.

L. H. S. Who were fearful?

Porter. His Brother and Sister, Mr. Turberville and his Wife.

L. H. S. Did he take notice to you that they were afraid he would come in?

Porter. Yes, Mr. Turberville did tell me himself, that they heard he would come in.

L. H. S. Have you said all that you have to say?

Porter. My Lords, that is all I have to say.

L. H. S. Then call another, my Lord.

L. Staff. Where is Mr. Yalden?

(Who stood up.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witness. Yalden.

L. H. S. Your Christian Name?

Yalden. John.

L. H. S. What is your Profession?

Yalden. A Barrister at Law.

L. H. S. How long have you been called to the Bar?

Yalden. I was called to the Bar last Trinity-Term was Twelve Months.

L. H. S. What House are you of?

Yalden. Grays-Inn.

L. H. S. Are you a Practiser?

Yalden. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. What Religion are you of?

Yalden. Of the Church of England.

L. H. S. Well, what can you say?

Yalden. I am summon'd to appear by Order of this House; and I desire to know of my Lord what he is pleased to examine me about.

L. Staff. What Mr. Turberville hath said in his hearing about the Plot?

L. H. S. What Discourse hath pass'd between you and Turberville about the Plot?

Yalden. My Lords, in February or March last I was walking in Grays-Inn Walks with Mr. Turberville, and Mr. Powell and he din'd with me a Day or two after; and there Mr. Turberville and I were talking of the Disfranchisement of the Times, how Trade was ruined, how the whole Kingdom was out of Order; and he a little touch'd at some things, cry'd out, God damn me, now there is no Trade good, but that of a Discoverer; but the Devil take the Duke of York, Monmouth, Plot, and all, for I know nothing of it.

L. H. S. That is odd, that he should say it was a good Trade to be a Discoverer, and at the same time say, he knew nothing of the Plot.

Yalden. This I understood to be his Meaning; he curs'd himself and them, because he knew nothing of the Plot to discover; for he would have got Money by it, (as I understood) as well as others.

Mr. Tur. My Lords, Mr. Yalden did declare Yesterday, he was summon'd in by my Lord Stafford the last Night, and that he had nothing to say but what was by Hear-say.

Yalden. My Lord, I do declare here what I say is true. And Yesterday Mr. Powell gave me a Caution to take heed what I did, and swore by God, it would else be the worse for me.

L. H. S. Who did?

Yalden. Mr. Powell.

L. H. S. Who is that?

Yalden. Mr. Turberville's Friend. And I said, I do not appear here as a voluntary Evidence, but by an Order of the House of Lords. I do not know what weight my Evidence may have; for I can say nothing but what I heard him say, and so perhaps it will be taken but for a Hear-say.

Mr. Tur. You said you knew nothing but by Hear-say.

L. H. S. Will you ask him any Questions, Gentlemen?

Manag. No, my Lords.

L. Staff. My Lords, I shall not trouble your Lordships with any more Witnesses as to these Points; I have here a Copy of the Warrant for the Yacht to go to Diep: And if there be any Question whether I did come over from Diep at Christmas 75, if you please the Book may be searched.

L. H. S. My Lord, it is all lost, for I hear not one Word.

L. Staff. I say, my Lords, If it be fit to trouble your Lordships with it, I can prove that I did come over in the Yacht from Diep at Christmas 75; here is the Copy of the Warrant for it to go for me. And whether you will believe it proved that I did come over thence, I submit to you.

L. H. S. I suppose that is fully proved, that you did come by Diep.

Manag. We do not deny it.

L. H. S. You do not stand upon it, Gentlemen, do you?

Manag. No, no, my Lords.

L. H. S. 'Tis admitted to you, my Lord.

L. Staff. My Lords, when I went from your Lordships Bar last Night, had no thoughts of examining any Witnesses, but what I had already done: but, my Lords, since I was here, there hath something happened, about which I desire Dr. Oates may be called again (I shall give you my reason why I move it afterward) upon something I heard Yesternight.

L. H. S. Call Dr. Oates again. (Who appeared and stood up.)

L. H. S. My Lord, What does your Lordship call him for?

L. Staff. He did say, that he being a Minister of the Church of England, did seemingly go over to the Church of Rome, or some such Words; I desire he may answer that first.

L. H. S. What say you?

Dr. Oates. Yes, I did say I did but seemingly go over.

L. Staff. I desire to know, whether he was really a Papist, or did he pretend.

Dr. Oates. I did only pretend; I was not really one, I declare it.

L. H. S. What do you make of that?

L. Staff. I desire to know how long Dr. Oates was in Spain.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I came into Spain in May, and I came home again in November.

L. H. S. That is six Months.

L. Staff. He is called Dr. Oates: I beseech your Lordships to ask him, whether he were a Doctor made at the Universities here or abroad.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, if your Lordships please, any Matter that is before your Lordships, I will answer to it; but I hope your Lordships will not call me to account for all the Actions of my Life; whatever Evidence is before your Lordships I will justify.

L. H. S. The Doctor hath never taken it upon his Oath, that he was a Doctor, and why do you ask it?

L. Staff. He is call'd a Doctor, and I would know whether he did never declare upon his Oath, that he took the Degree at Salamanca?

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I am not ashamed of any thing I have said or done; I own what is enter'd as my Oath before your Lordships, and am ready to answer it; but I am not bound to say what does not at all concern this Business.

L. Staff. I say, my Lords, 'tis enter'd upon your Lordships Books, that he did swear at the Council, he was at Madrid with Don John of Austria; I would know of him whether he did so.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I would have my Lord to propose the Question to the Court of Peers.

L. H. S. Have you sworn any thing of Don John of Austria?

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I refer my self to the Council-Book.

L. Staff. I beseech your Lordships, I may have that Book.

L. H. S. I believe it is in the Narrative; turn to the Journal, you have that mention'd there.

[To which the Clerk turned, but it could not be found.]

L. H. S. If you will not acknowledge it, we must stay till the Book be brought.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, if your Lordships please, I will repeat, as well as I can, what was said at the Council Table; but I had rather the Council-Book were fetch'd, because I am upon my Oath: But, my Lords, I always thought the Council Book is no Record upon any Man.

L. Staff. I desire it may be produc'd, or he own that he said so.

L. H. S. What you said at the Council-Table, you said upon your Oath, and 'tis lawful to lay it before you.

Dr. Oates. But if your Lordships please, as to what was said at the Council-Table, if my Lord will bring any one viva voce to swear what was said by me there, that will make something.

L. H. S. That may be material, as he says, that your Lordship should bring somebody to swear he said so, for the Clerks may mistake him.

L. Staff. If your Lordship please that the Book may be sent for, I will make it out.

Sir Will. Jones. It could not be read if it were here.

L. H. S. If the Clerks will swear what is in the Books, it may.

Sir W. Jones. But whether the Clerks will take that upon them or no, may be a Question.

L. H. S. Go on in the mean time.

L. Staff. I cannot conclude with him without it.

L. H. S. Where is the Council-Book? For the Clerks inform me 'tis not in their Custody; but the Gentlemen of the House of Commons have been attended with the Book, and other Papers relating to it.

L. Staff. In the mean time, give me leave to say something, tho' perhaps it may be nothing to the purpose: Mr. Yalden was just now going down, and Turberville threatened to lay him by the Heels.

L. H. S. If he did so, 'tis a Misdemeanor, and he must be punish'd for it. Call Yalden and Turberville.

L. H. S. Mr. Turberville, have you dar'd or threaten'd Yalden the Witnesses, to lay him by the Heels?

Mr. Tur. I did not speak any such Words to him; Mr. Dugdale was just by me all the while.

L. Staff. I tell you but what he said, and what I can prove by Witnesses; pray call Yalden.

Mr. Tur. This Gentleman, Captain Scudamore, stood by me too.

L. H. S. But I ask you upon this Misdemeanor, whether you threaten'd Yalden to lay him by the Heels?

Mr. Tur. My Lords, I stood by Mr. Dugdale till he was gone down.

L. H. S. How could he lay him by the Heels? By what Authority could he do it?

Mr. Tur. I did not speak such a Word, upon my Oath.

L. Staff. Ask Yalden; I am told he did.

L. H. S. I am afraid you are misinform'd, my Lord; for he could not do it, 'tis not in his Power.

L. Staff. He threaten'd he would goal him; but if you won't examine it, I submit to you.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, Yalden, it seems, calls us a Pack of Rogues, that give Evidence for the King; and here are Witnesses of it.

(Yalden stood up.)

L. H. S. Yalden, were you threaten'd by Turberville?

Yalden. Yes, I will tell you how I was threaten'd, my Lords: Mr. Turberville pulls me by the Arm, when I had given my Evidence, and asked me if I knew him, and bid me take care.

L. H. S. Do you call that Threatning?

Yalden. My Lords, I did not make this Complaint, nor did I desire it should be made; but speaking this in the Room, somebody carried it to my Lord.

Mr. Tur. My Lords, now he hath done, let me speak, I pray: Mr. Yalden did say in the hearing of Captain Scudamore, who is here, he had got a great many Clients here; but you, says he, have got nothing but a Pack of Rogues.

Yalden. That is a Mistake.

L. H. S. This is fine Work. But, Gentlemen, will you call Captain Scudamore now, or will you stay till afterwards?

Sir F. Win. My Lords, Mr. Turberville desires it may be now, and we do also desire it upon this Occasion; Captain Scudamore is a Man of Quality, and will give you a true Account. We did not think to have interpos'd in my Lord Stafford's Evidence; but he having impeach'd our Witnesses of a Misdemeanor, we conceive it fittest to clear it at this time.

(Then Captain Scudamore was sworn.)

L. H. S. Mr. Scudamore, what are you call'd for? Can you say any thing that happen'd between Turberville and Yalden?

Capt. Scudamore. The Gentleman that is here, that said he was one of Grays-Inn, I don't know his Name—

L. H. S. 'Tis Yalden.

Captain

Captain Scudamore. I heard a Gentleman ask him if he came there to get Clients, and he said, I know nothing among you but Regency.

L. Staff. Whereabouts did this Gentleman stand?

Capt. Scudamore. In the Passage.

Mr. Tur. Here are five or six more that heard him say so.

Yalden. That which I said, was this, That I might come hither for Practice, but I did not come hither for Regency.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, until such time as the Council-Book comes, which may be sent for, will your Lordship proceed to something else?

L. Wharton. My Lord Steward, I humbly conceive, that it was resolved in the Lords House, the Day before yesterday, that no Book should be sent for out of the Court; and it was done upon the Judgment of all the Judges of England.

Yalden. My Lords, they will not permit me to go down.

L. H. S. There is a strange Quarrel between your Witnesses, and an Affliction of complaining one of another: Let Mr. Yalden go down.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, I would only acquaint your Lordships, that the Council-Book, that my Lord does make mention of, was in the hands of our Clerk, we did not know of it when it was first discoursed of; but now understanding that here it is, we desire it may be delivered in to any body that hath occasion for it.

L. H. S. Hand it in. (Which was done).

L. H. S. What Day does your Lordship speak of?

L. Staff. The 28th, 29th, or 30th of September.

Clerk. Then this is not the Book, for this is for January.

L. Staff. My Lords, Is it your Lordships pleasure I may have Pen, Ink, and Paper allowed me?

L. H. S. Yes, yes; give my Lord Pen, Ink, and Paper.

(Which they did).

[Then the Lord High Steward looked upon the Council-Book.]

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, in this Council-Book, as far as we can inform our selves by the Table of it, there is nothing at all of it; it must be the Council-Book in September.

Sir W. Jones. We have no other Book but that.

L. H. S. Why did not your Lordship send all this while to the Council-Table for any thing that was material, but give the Court the Trouble to be interrupted upon your Enquiries?

L. Staff. My Lords, you may do what you please, I did not know any such thing would have needed to be urged, I have Proof enough without the Book: The use I should have made of it, is this, I do appeal to some of your Lordships (you that were of the Council) I do appeal to which of you that were by, whether Dr. Oates did not say at the Council-Table, he had been at Madrid, he went from Valladolid to Madrid, and there did preach something at the Jesuits College at Madrid (what it was I cannot tell) when Don John of Austria was by.

L. H. S. If any of my Lords of the Council do remember it, they may testify.

L. Privy-Seal. My Lords, I shall tell your Lordships as much as I remember of it: Dr. Oates was examined about his Journey into Spain, and (amongst the rest) some Question happened to be asked, whether he had seen Don John of Austria; he said he had seen one that was called so; that he knew him not, but he was pointed to one that they said was Don John of Austria: that I heard.

L. Staff. My Lord, I thank you.

L. H. S. You hear what is said, Dr. Oates.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, suppose I did say so, I think there is no Crime in it.

L. H. S. 'Tis not objected against you as a Crime, but as a Mistake in your Oath, there was no such Man there.

L. Privy-Seal. My Lords, I would not be misunderstood in the Evidence I give; I did not say that Oates said he knew him, but that he knew him not, and only was told such a Man was he.

Dr. Oates. It was made apparent that I did not know him, because I mistook his Person.

L. Staff. I do stand upon it, That upon his Oath (and I have reason to believe he did so, because I am so informed) he said it was Don John of Austria.

L. Privy-Seal. No, my Lord, Dr. Oates said, he was a tall lean Man, and it seems he was a little fat Man.

L. Staff. If any Man would shew him a Man to counterfeit Don John of Austria, he would not shew him a lean Man for a fat.

L. H. S. Go on, my Lord.

L. Staff. I shall now put your Lordships in mind that he swore, but my Memory is bad, and my Eyes much worse, that he saw me receive a Commission, and it seems he saw what it was too: Now it is strange, that amongst so many Commissions that were given, none should be extant; I desire him to shew the Commission he saw me receive.

L. H. S. Would your Lordship have him shew the Commission which he saw you receive?

L. Staff. I do not believe he can shew my Commission; for I am sure there was none: I desire him to shew any one of my Letters he talks of. He says, he came over, feigning to be a Papist, when he was not, and that they shewed him presently all my Letters; and now he is come to discover the Plot, I ask him, did he keep any one of my Letters?

L. H. S. Have you any of my Lord's Letters by you?

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I could not keep any Letters sent to the Fathers; I had a Sight of them, but none of them to my particular use.

L. Staff. Does he know my Hand? Did he ever see it in his Life?

Dr. Oates. Yes, I do know his Hand, I believe I have a Letter of my Lord's by me, but not about me, 'tis of no Concern: I am sure I have one of my Lord Arundel's.

L. Staff. But he says he hath a Letter of mine; let him shew one of my Letters.

Dr. Oates. He writes a mix'd Hand, I think 'tis but an indifferent one.

L. Staff. So many Commissions, and so many Letters as are spoken of, and not one to be found or produced!

L. H. S. Can you send for the Letter?

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I am not certain of that.

L. H. S. Where did you see my Lord write?

Dr. Oates. At Fenwick's, my Lords, when I carry'd the Letter to the Post.

L. Staff. How often hath he seen me at Fenwick's?

Dr. Oates. My Lords, not above twice, if twice.

L. Staff. My Lords, I cannot say I did not see him there; but I can say I don't know the Place, nor that ever I was there.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, will his Lordship say I never saw him Dr. Perrot's?

L. Staff. Who?

Dr. Oates. My Lord Stafford.

L. Staff. Where did he live?

Dr. Oates. In Duke-Street, going into Lincoln's-Inn-Fields: He is the Arch-Priest of the Seculars, that is, the Principal of the Secular Clergy; and he hath the Care of the English College for the sending of Scholars to the College. Mr. Fisher, my Lord Stafford, and Dr. Perrot were discoursing together about sending his Son thither, and Mr. Fisher would have one sent with him, that was Dr. Perrot's Man.

L. Staff. I do profess before God, I was never at Dr. Perrot's in my whole Life!

L. H. S. Did not you send your Son abroad?

L. Staff. No, my Lords, not I.

L. H. S. Had he a Servant at Dr. Perrot's to attend him?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lords, not that I know of, I cannot say he had not.

L. Staff. I tell you positively, as I am a Christian, my Lords, I did not send my Son to Lisbon, he went against my Will. I told him I had an Aversion to it, but said, I will not lay my Commands on you not to go; but he would go, I could not help it: I told him, Do you mean to go into the College? He would not tell me.

L. H. S. Pray, my Lord, does not your Lordship know Dr. Perrot?

L. Staff. Yes, my Lords, I do.

L. H. S. Were you never with him at his House in Duke-Street?

L. Staff. No, my Lords, never in my Life; nor saw that Fisher he speaks of, ever in my Life.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, 'tis against the Rules of that House, that any be admitted of that House (if their Parents be Catholics) without Consent of their Parents.

L. Staff. If he be admitted there, I know it not.

Dr. Oates. He lives there.

L. Staff. But I protest before God, my Lords, I asked him that Question, Will you go to the College? No, says he, I will go to lie at the Bishop's House: But as for Dr. Perrot, I never was at his Lodgings in my Life, and I never knew where he lay; he hath been with me sometimes, but I knew not that he was a Doctor. But, my Lords, I desire I may not be run down by these Fellows, who do not speak a Word true, nor one tittle. My Lords, I have Witnesses in whose House Fenwick lay. Call them, and ask them if ever they knew me there in their Lives.

L. H. S. What kind of Man was he?

Dr. Oates. My Lords, he is an ancient Man, he wears his own Hair.

L. H. S. Is he a tall Man or a low Man?

Dr. Oates. A luffy Man.

L. Staff. Truly, my Lords, I never was at his House since I was born.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I'll tell your Lordships a Circumstance; That Summer Don Francisco de Melos, the Ambassador here, was sick, and I think he died of the Sickness, Dr. Perrot was his Father Confessor; I was waiting for Dr. Perrot some time, for he promised to meet me at his Lodgings, and this Gentleman, the Prisoner at the Bar, did come in there.

L. Staff. Where?

Dr. Oates. Into Dr. Perrot's Lodging. Dr. Perrot had a Kinsman there that waited on him; and when my Lord came in, he was in haste to speak with Dr. Perrot, and he offered me Half a Crown to fetch Dr. Perrot to him, and I made him this Reply, I was no Porter.

L. Staff. If ever I saw this Man in my Life since I was born, or heard of his Name till the Plot, then I will confess myself guilty of all. Indeed, when first I heard of the Plot (they said) there was one Mr. Oates discovered it, but I did not know any such Man.

Dr. Oates. I went by another Name, and went in another Habit; and my Lord Stafford, tho' his Memory be bad, yet it can't be so bad, but that he must remember something of me.

L. Staff. I don't remember you, I never saw your Face in my Life.

L. H. S. You would have given him half a Crown to have fetch'd Dr. Perrot.

L. Staff. It seems then at that time, I took him for a poor Fellow, that I should offer him a Shilling or two.

Dr. Oates. It is like I was, but I refused your Half-Crown, and told you I was no Porter.

L. Staff. My Lords, I shall give you Evidence that he was a poor Fellow, since he gives me occasion to prove it; nay, that he was so poor, that he was brought down to accept of 6d. I will prove it by the Party that gave it, now he puts me upon it. But, my Lords, this Dr. Oates says he saw some of my Letters, I desire to know what was in them; did he take any Notes? What was in them?

L. H. S. Did you, when you had a sight of these Letters at St. Omers, take any Notes out of them?

Dr. Oates. What Notes I did take, if I did take any, I have not now in being; but I do not remember that I did take any. Besides, my Lords, we could keep no Papers by us, but what we communicated to our Superiors, and therefore it was still their Care to look after their Papers themselves; and in that Circumstance of Time, if they had known I had taken Notes out of their Papers, it would have been prejudicial to me, and endanger'd my Life.

L. Staff. My Lords, I do infer this one thing further, upon what this Dr. Oates tells you; He did seemingly profess himself of the Catholic Religion, and I do stand upon it, that hereupon he is no competent Witness in that which he offers against me: For he being of the Church of England, (for I think he professes himself so, and wears that Habit) I say, any Man, let him be who he will in the World, Church of England Man or other, that shall pretend himself to be a Papist, for what end soever it be that he so pretends, and dissembles with God Almighty, which he must do to a great Height in receiving the Sacrament, which is by your Lordships and the House of Commons declared to be gross Idolatry, is not easily to be esteemed a Witness. I appeal to your Lordships, to the House of Commons, and every body, whether such a Fellow, that will abhor his Religion, let him do it for any ends in the World, be a Man to be credited; and especially engaging in such a way to such an Height, in that which his Conscience tells him is idolatrous, is not a perjured Fellow, and no competent Witness? No Christian, but a Devil, and a Witness for the Devil. And I appeal to the whole Christian World, if a Protestant of the Church of England should come to be a want to a Catholick, and pretend himself a Papist, and were not so, whether he were fit to be countenanced: As it did once happen to me at Brussels, before the King came in, one that was a Protestant came to be my Footman; and he professed himself afterwards to be a Catholick; and when I found he was not so, I told him what a Villain he was, and he ought to be punished severely. I detest such dissembling with God; and I think by the Laws of God and Man, and the Holy Scriptures, such a perjured Man is no Witness. I am sorry I have troubled your Lordships so long; but now if you please to give me leave, my Lords, I will give you my Reasons why I called him now: When I did remember how he had dissembled with God Almighty, as I said before, I did consider with myself, Sure this Dr. Oates must have been, ever since he hath returned, of a very severe, strict, and sober Life; for a Man that hath so dissembled with God, ought to shew himself of an exemplary, peaceful, pious, civil Life, to testify the Truth and Reality of his Repentance. But last Night when I came Home, and was sitting by the Fireside, extremely weary, my Daughter here comes in, and asks me if I had heard what had passed between Dr. Oates and the Lieutenant; how he called the Lieutenant Rascal and Gaoler: Sure then, said I to myself, this is not the quiet, civil, sober Man, that such a one that hath lived as he hath done, ought to be. And this is the Reason I speak of it, that he should call him vile Names, Gaoler and Rascal; it did not become a Man of his Coat to do it: Whether it was so or no, I do not know; but Mr. Lieutenant, I suppose, will satisfy your Lordship.

L. H. S. What did Oates say to you, Mr. Lieutenant?

Mr. Lieut. My Lords, I was desiring Mr. Oates that he would keep the People down, because there was a great Crowd; and seeing a great many People come in, he told me they were Witnesses that were to come in: Said I, I believe half of these are not Witnesses; and the Door opening so often, I could keep this Place in no order; so I desired they would stand away that were not Witnesses: Why, says he, you are but a Gaoler. Then I told him, if it were not for his Coat, and I were out of this Place, I would break his Head. Then he called me Rascal.

L. Staff. My Lord Steward, I desire to know whether this be a Witness fit to be believed against any Man.

L. H. S. Mr. Oates, this does not become you; 'tis very ill Manners in you.

Dr. Oates. My Lords, the Lieutenant of the Tower hath the Law; and I refer myself to the Law, if I have done him any Wrong.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. It did not become Mr. Lieutenant of the Tower to tell him he would break his Head.

Mr. Lieut. Why? If any Man out of the Court, or in any other Habit, should tell me I was a Gaoler, I think I should not deserve to be the King's Lieutenant, if I did not break his Head.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. Pray tell the Court so. But yet, under Favour, you ought not to threaten him for a Word to break his Head.

L. Staff. My Lords, I do say this to your Lordships, a Man that hath dissembled with God Almighty in so high a Nature, as he acknowledges himself to have done, ought to be a Man of a very severe Life afterwards, and not so passionate and choleric, as it seems this Fellow is.

L. H. S. Will your Lordship proceed?

L. Staff. For this Man truly I shall say no more; I think I have said enough to make him appear a Person not fit to be believed. I would only ask Stephen Dugdale a Question, if you please; 'tis but a little, I won't hold you long. I only ask, and if he deny it I'll prove it, whether he was not a Prisoner at Stafford for Debt, when he made the first Affidavit?

L. H. S. Were you a Prisoner for Debt at Stafford, when you made your first Affidavit?

Mr. Dugd. In the Serjeant's Hands I was, my Lords.

L. Staff. For a very great Debt, my Lords, some hundreds of Pounds, and he was a Fellow not worth a Groat. And, my Lords, Dr. Oates says I offered him Half-a-Crown, and he refused it: I call Ellen Rigby to prove he was so poor he begg'd for Six-pence.

Dr. Oates. I will save my Lord the Trouble of proving any such Thing. My Lord Stafford says I was a poor Man, and had not Six-pence in my Pocket: I can make it appear to the House of Lords, that some Time since I came in upon this Discovery, I have not had Two-pence in my Pocket, and sometimes I have not had Six-pence; but a Man's Poverty is no Objection against his Honesty.

L. Staff. Where is Ellen Rigby, to prove whether she did not give him Six-pence? But then, my Lords, pray ask him, whether he did not swear at a former Trial, he had spent six or seven hundred Pounds more than he got?

L. H. S. Did you say at a former Trial, you were five or six hundred Pound out of Purse?

Dr. Oates. My Lords, I will satisfy this House what I said: What Folks write after me, I am not to justify. But, my Lords, I had a Friend of mine presented me with 100*l*. I name not his Name, but if that be questioned, he is a Peer of this House, and will justify it: I had 100*l*. for my Narrative; I had 100*l*. for taking some Jesuits, which is 300*l*. I had for some other Copies that I printed, a Matter of 50 or 60*l*. And now I can make it appear, that as to those Sums which I received in gross, I have spent them all, and more, in this Service: for I have none of the Money now by me.

L. Staff. He makes out but 350*l*. and he swore he was out 700*l*. but he does not swear one true Tittle, nor is any whit to be believed.

Dr. Oates. If you expect I should prove it, I can prove it now.

Managers. Be quiet, Dr. Oates, we will do you Right anon.

L. Staff. My Lords, I do not know for the present that I have any Thing else to trouble your Lordships with. I remember these Gentlemen, when I asked them if they had any more Evidence to give in, said, No, unless I should give them some Occasion: And now I desire your Lordships, if they bring any new Evidence, that I may have Time to answer to it.

L. H. S. God forbid but you should have Liberty to answer any Objection.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, before we go about to sum up our Evidence, we shall have Occasion to call some Witnesses, and that will be to fortify that our Witnesses have said, to discover what kind of Witnesses have been made Use of against them, and to falsify what my Lord's Witnesses have said in some Particulars. These will be the three Heads for which we desire to call Witnesses. And because, my Lords, we will not trouble you with making one entire Narration of what they can say, or to what Purpose we call them before they come, desire the Favour that we may acquaint your Lordships with it, still as we call them; for that we think will be the Way more clearly to be understood. My Lords, we shall begin to make good by other Witnesses, some Things said by Mr. Dugdale (for he was our first Witness, and therefore in order of Time we will begin with him.) My Lords, the Prisoner at the Bar was pleased to object—

L. Staff. My Lords, I would not interrupt him; but I would ask whether there are more than two Heads that he proceeds upon to fortify their own Evidence, and to falsify mine.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, I think we may comprehend all under those two Heads. But, my Lords, you observe, one great Matter my Lord did insist upon Yesterday, was this, That he, it is true, hath seen Mr. Dugdale at my Lord Aston's; (though by the Way I must say this, my Lord at the first did not seem to know him)—

L. Staff. I did not know him in his Perriwig.

L. H. S. Do not interrupt them, my Lord, for they must have the same Liberty that you had, to go on without Interruption.

Sir Will. Jones. We must have the same Freedom my Lord had. I will do his Lordship that Right, he did afterwards recollect himself and say; his Perriwig had made that Alteration in him, that he did not know him. But my Lord was also pleased to say Yesterday, That though he did not know him, yet he looked upon him as so mean and inconsiderable a Fellow, that he did purposely avoid all Discourse with him; and that sometimes when he was a-dry at my Lord Aston's, he would not speak to him to help him, nor to call one, to help him to drink. My Lord was pleased Yesterday also to deny that ever he had any Converse with him, but only that one Time, when indeed Mr. Dugdale did desire to make Use of my Lord, that by his Interposition he might have leave to go to the Foot-Race. My Lords, your Lordships very well perceive we are now going about to prove a Matter mostly arising within my Lord Aston's Family; and what Witnesses we shall have from thence, your Lordships may easily imagine will not be very favourable to us: And if we have not many to this Point, your Lordships will take into Consideration, that those who can give the fullest Proof here, must be those of the Family, and the Religion of the Family. But, my Lords, we will call one or two that I believe will give you Satisfaction that my Lord, the Prisoner, was no such Stranger to Mr. Dugdale; that they have been seen together, and alone together: And that is the first Thing we desire to call Witnesses to. Call Mr. Ansell and William Hanson.

Mr. Hanson was sworn.

L. H. S. Where do you live? Whose Servant are you?

Mr. Hanson. At Widnal in Staffordshire.

L. H. S. What do you ask him?

Sir Will. Jones. I desire, if you be satisfied where he lives, that he will tell you, whether he hath been at my Lord Aston's, and seen my Lord Stafford there?

L. H. S. Have you seen my Lord Stafford at my Lord Aston's?

Mr. Hanson. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. When?

Mr. Hanson. A little above two Years ago.

L. Staff. Be pleased he may name the Time positively.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lord Stafford is not so well versed in Prosecutions of this Nature, as to know that he is not to interrupt us while we are examining our Witnesses.

L. H. S. My Lord, your Lordship received no Interruption, nor must give none.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we desire this Witness may be asked, whether or no he hath seen Mr. Dugdale and my Lord Stafford at any Time together?

L. H. S. What say you?

Mr. Hanson. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. When, and where?

Mr. Hanson. I cannot justly tell the Time.

L. H. S. Can you tell the Place?

Mr. Hanson. Yes, at my Lord Aston's.

L. H. S. Whereabouts?

Mr. Hanson. In my Lord Aston's Parlour.

L. H. S. And were they alone?

Mr. Hanson. Mr. Dugdale fetched me to my Lord Stafford.

L. H. S. And was no body in the Parlour when Dugdale fetched you to my Lord?

Mr. Hanson. No, my Lords, I think there was not.

L. Staff. He thinks there was not.

Mr. Hanson. There was not, to my best Remembrance.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, will you be pleased to ask him the Occasion why Dugdale fetched him to him?

Mr. Hanson. My Lord had a Mind to have a Boy.

L. H. S. What was the Occasion that Dugdale did come to fetch you to my Lord Stafford in the Parlour?

Mr. Hanson. To bring the Boy, my Lords, Young Hawkins. Mr. Dugdale fetched me and the Boy to him; it was a Boy that my Lord would have to live with him.

Sir Will. Jones. Can you tell what Time of the Year it was? Whether Winter or Summer, as near as you can?

L. H. S. Ay, what Time of the Year was it?

Mr. Hanson. Indeed, my Lords, I cannot tell.

Sir Will. Jones. I desire to ask him, whether when he went away he left them together?

L. H. S. Did you leave them together?

Mr. Hanson. To my best Remembrance, my Lords, I did. The Boy and I went away together, and we left them at my Lord Aston's Parlour Door.

Sir Will. Jones. Call James Ansell.

L. H. S. Nay, if you have done with him, my Lord Stafford may ask him any Questions.

L. Staff. My Lords, I shall tell you how this Thing is: There was a Report that this Hawkins was a very good Running Footboy; and this was spoken of at my Lord Aston's at Dinner or Supper, I don't know which, nay several Times about that Time: It was when my Lord of Danby was Treasurer, and his Son, my Lord Dunblain, was much for Foot-Matches, and I had a Mind to have a Footboy to make a Match with him; and I believe Dugdale at Dinner or Supper did say that he was a good running Lad, and I might desire to see him, and Dugdale did bring him to me I believe into my Lord Aston's Parlour; but there was at least six or seven in the Room besides.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, was this at that Time when your Lordship was at Tixall the 12th of September?

Z

L. Staff.

L. Staff. Pray, my Lords, I desire to ask him that Question; I would know what Year it was.

L. H. S. He says it was above two Years ago.

L. Staff. I profess I believe it was one or two Years before I was taxed with this Plot. I did never think I should be questioned about this, or I could easily have brought Witnesses, that were by at that time. It is true, he did come to me; but pray what time of Day was it?

Mr. Hansf. In the Morning, I think it was.

L. Staff. I profess to God; it was after Supper; as I hope to be saved, it was as we were going to Bed, to the best of my Remembrance.

Sir Will. Jones. Did you come into the Parlour after Supper?

Mr. Hansf. I am not sure what time it was.

Sir W. Jones. If his Lordship please to ask him any more Questions; if not, we will call another. James Ansell. (Who was sworn)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witness. James Ansell.

L. H. S. Where do you live?

Mr. Ansell. At Heywood in Staffordshire.

L. H. S. Did you live with my Lord Aston?

Mr. Ansell. I have been at my Lord's House at Tixall.

L. H. S. But you are not of the Family?

Mr. Ansell. No.

L. H. S. How far is Heywood from Tixall?

Mr. Ansell. A Mile.

L. H. S. Have you seen my Lord Stafford at Tixall?

Mr. Ansell. I have seen a Man they called my Lord Stafford. I did not know him, but as they told me.

L. H. S. Did you ever see Dugdale in the Company of a Man they called my Lord Stafford?

Mr. Ansell. Two Years ago I was at Tixall, and there I saw one, that they said was my Lord Stafford, walking with Mr. Dugdale, whom I did know.

L. H. S. Where was it?

Mr. Ansell. In the Court at Tixall, walking together.

L. H. S. Were they alone? Was there no body else in Company?

Mr. Ansell. None that I saw; there might be more Company, but I saw no more.

Sir Will. Jones. Pray, my Lords, ask how long ago this was.

Mr. Ansell. About a Summer was two Years.

Sir Will. Jones. If his Lordship will ask him any Questions now we have done, he may; otherwise we will call another.

L. Staff. My Lords, I have recollected myself as well as I can in so short a Time, and all I can say, is, Some of my Servants were by, I suppose; and I do assure your Lordships, the other Buisness was above three Years ago: So the Fellow does not know what he does say.

L. H. S. Will you ask him any Questions?

L. Staff. Pray ask him how long he saw me in the Court with Dugdale.

L. H. S. How long was it?

Mr. Ansell. I cannot tell: I did but walk through the Court. I came to speak with Mr. Dugdale, and he was with my Lord.

L. Staff. Did he hear us discourse, any Word we said?

Mr. Ansell. No, I did not.

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, if you please, before Ansell go away, we would ask him a Question to another Point; and that is, For what Reason Dugdale was secured, whether he went away for Debt or no?

L. H. S. Do you know wherefore Dugdale was secured, or why he went from my Lord Aston's?

Mr. Ansell. I can't tell why he went away; whether for fear of the Plot, or no, I can't tell.

Sir Will. Jones. What Discourse was between you and Dugdale about it?

Mr. Ansell. Where? There was a Discourse at Stafford, when he was there.

Sir Will. Jones. But before he went away?

Mr. Ansell. I came to my Lord Aston's one Day, and told Mr. Dugdale I heard say he was concerned in the Plot; for I told him I was amongst some People, and they say you are concerned in the Plot. And this was about a Fortnight after the News was hot in our Country.

L. H. S. What said he?

Mr. Ansell. He laugh'd at it, and said, God blast him if he knew any thing of it.

L. Staff. So he denied it then?

Sir Will. Jones. Pray, Sir, at that time did he say he knew any thing about my Lord Aston, and why my Lord Aston did use him ill?

[Then my Lord Stafford objected Mr. Dugdale was too near the Witnesses, and desired he might go down; and it was ordered accordingly.]

Sir Fran. Win. My Lords, we would ask this Man what he does know of Dugdale's concealing himself after he had heard of the Discourse about the Plot.

Mr. Ansell. I know not that, my Lords; he was fearful of coming in Company; what his Discourse was, I do not know.

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, now, if it please your Lordships, we will go to another Particular. Your Lordships will please to remember, that yesterday there were two Witnesses called by my Lord Stafford, that is, Sambidge and Phillips. Sambidge was the old Gentleman that was deaf, and a little passionate too, because he was once summoned to Litchfield Court: Mr. Phillips was the Minister of Tixall: And both these did testify, That whereas Mr. Dugdale had sworn at a former Trial, that he did give notice before them of the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey upon Monday, which (as I take it) was the 14th of October, there was no such notice given in their Presence. Mr. Dugdale did affirm they were by, and that he gave notice before them and others. This was made use of by my Lord to invalidate the Testimony of Mr. Dugdale, that he should go and affirm at a former Trial, that he did give notice of the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey within two Days after he was killed, before any one knew of it; and Dugdale must needs know it from the Jesuits; and both of these Gentlemen being now in Court, do deny that they heard of it at that time. My Lords, we shall prove to you here, that he did give notice of it at that time, and that they were both present: For Mr. Sambidge, it is not so strange he should not observe it; he was very deaf, and he could hardly hear yesterday; and as he was deaf, so he was very passionate. As for Mr. Phillips, I cannot say that as to him, but perhaps he cannot at that Distance of Time remember; but we will prove by undeniable Witnesses, the notice was given that Monday, and that these Persons were by when it was given.

Sir Fran. Win. This Witness we use to another Purpose besides this; but we will ask him only to this now.

-he I was at the

L. Staff. I desire the Witnesses may stand by themselves.

L. H. S. Let them take care that there be but one Witness at a time, and that no body approach them while they are giving their Testimony.

Sir Will. Jones. We did not make the like Desire as to my Lord's Witnesses.

L. Staff. In troth, you might with all my Heart, if you would.

Sir Will. Jones. It may be so; but we did not fear them so much. Swear William Goldsmith.

(Which was done.)

Sir Will. Jones. I would begin with James Ansell.

(Who appear'd, and stood up again.)

Sir F. Win. If your Lordships please, we would ask him what he knows of a Discourse about the Justice of Peace's Death; to tell the Time, and what it was that was said? We only ask general Questions.

L. H. S. What Discourse did you hear of the Murder of a Justice of Peace, and when?

Mr. Ansell. My Lords, I heard it at Tixall.

L. H. S. When did you hear it first?

Mr. Ansell. The 14th of October.

L. H. S. Who did you hear it from?

Mr. Ansell. From Mr. Dugdale.

L. H. S. The Letter was dated the 12th. Where did you hear of it?

Mr. Ansell. It was at one Eld's House, an Ale-house in Tixall.

L. H. S. Where?

Mr. Ansell. At an Alehouse hard by my Lord's.

L. H. S. Who was by?

Mr. Ansell. When that was spoken, there was I, and William Hanson, and Mr. Sambidge, and Mr. Phillips.

L. H. S. Did Dugdale speak with them at that time?

Mr. Ansell. Yes, he was with them at that time, but he spoke with me at the Parlour; for he sent for me into the Parlour.

L. H. S. Then at the same time he spoke it to you, and they were in the House?

Mr. Ansell. Yes, he came from them to me into the Parlour, and went to them again.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, I hear him speak to the Day of the Month; if you please to ask him if he can tell what Day of the Week it was?

Mr. Ansell. It was on a Monday.

L. H. S. That is right, the Letter was dated on Saturday the 12th of October.

Sir F. Win. I would ask him, whether afterwards he came into the Room where Mr. Phillips the Parson was?

Mr. Ansell. Yes.

Sir F. Win. Was there any Discourse after you came in, about the Death of a Justice of Peace?

Mr. Ansell. I cannot tell that.

L. H. S. Will you please to ask him any thing, my Lord?

L. Staff. Indeed, my Lords, he says nothing concerning me; therefore I say only this, I desire to know, if he can tell, what time of Day it was?

Mr. Ansell. It was the Forenoon.

Sir Will. Jones. Then call William Hanson again.

(Who appear'd.)

Sir F. Win. We call him to the same Question. Do you declare to my Lords what you know of Mr. Dugdale's acquainting you with the Death of a Justice of Peace, and when it was.

Mr. Hansf. I heard Mr. Dugdale say at old Eld's House at Tixall, There was a Justice of Peace murder'd that lived at Westminster.

L. H. S. When did he tell you so?

Mr. Hansf. The Day that I went to run the Race, the 14th of October.

Sir F. Win. Can you remember what Day of the Week it was?

Mr. Hansf. It was on Monday.

L. H. S. Was it the Forenoon or Afternoon?

Mr. Hansf. The Forenoon.

L. H. S. What Company was in the House when he told you of it?

Mr. Hansf. Old Mr. Sambidge, and Mr. Phillips the Parson of Tixall.

L. H. S. Were they in the House at that time?

Mr. Hansf. Yes.

L. H. S. Were they by when the Discourse was?

Mr. Hansf. Mr. Sambidge was going to drink a Bottle of Ale, as he said, at my Lord's Bowling-Green; and for a while he sits down, and presently Mr. Phillips comes in and sits down, and Mr. Dugdale came out of the Parlour into the Room where we were come: Said I, What News? Said he, They say there is a Justice of Peace murder'd at Westminster.

Sir F. Win. Was Phillips in the Room?

Mr. Hansf. Yes, he hath forgot it, but he was there.

L. H. S. Did Phillips hear it?

Mr. Hansf. He might have heard it if he would.

L. H. S. Had you any Discourse with Phillips about this since?

Mr. Hansf. No, my Lords.

Sir F. Win. He is positive both as to the Day of the Month, and as to the Week, and that both of them were present.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we shall prove to you now, that the Post which comes out of London on Saturday, comes to this Place on Monday Morning; and those which come out of Tuesday, come there on Thursday Morning; and the Post which goes out of London on Thursday, comes to this Place on Saturday Morning.

L. Staff. He says the Post comes such and such Days, I own it, and in the Morning too.

Sir Will. Jones. Then I go on, my Lords, to another Point, which will be a farther Confirmation of the Matter. For, my Lords, we will prove to you, and that by Men of Quality, that the Noise of the Murder was in that Country, the Wednesday and Thursday following the Murder. Your Lordships please to observe, Sir Edmundbury Godfrey was killed the twelfth of October; he was found the Thursday following, which was (as I take it) the 16th or 17th of October. We will prove now, that the Noise and Knowledge of the Murder was in the Country about Tixall, before he was found here near London. Now we only bring this as a Confirmation of this Matter, that it was revealed at the Alehouse, and so it went about the Country. And for this we call Edward Birch, Esq; and John Turton, Esq;

Sir F. Win. Before we examine them, I would state the Time. Sir Edmundbury Godfrey was missing on Saturday, which was the 12th of October; his Murder was not discover'd till Thursday. We call these Persons to a double

double Purpose; the one to fortify what our Witnesses have said, and the other to shew, that this Man was dispatched by these Men's Confederates, because they knew it so soon; which could not have been, but that they were in the Conspiracy themselves.

L. Staff. I desire only that he may say whether he means me among the rest?

Sir F. Win. My Lord, I will do you no wrong, I speak of those at Tixall.
(Then Mr. Birch was sworn.)

L. H. S. When did you hear of the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, Mr. Birch?

Mr. Birch. My Lords, I did not hear any Thing of the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, till the Saturday Post; but, I presume, that which these Gentlemen call me for, is this: I did hear before Thursday, I think Tuesday was the first Day, that there was a Justice of Peace of Middlesex killed, and it was thought the Papists murdered him; and this on Tuesday and Wednesday was all over the Country, that is, Tuesday after his Death. For I'll tell your Lordships how I came to take Notice of it; for hearing such a Report in the Country, I did not so much as take Notice of it; but being at the King's-Bench Bar, at the Trial of Green, Berry, and Hill, for the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, I found upon the Evidence, that the Body was not found till the Thursday after he was killed; that made me recollect myself as to what I had heard in the Country: And as I stood at the Bar, I told several Gentlemen that I did perfectly remember, before Thursday it was discoursed of in the Country by several Gentlemen where I lived.

Sir Will. Jones. Call John Turton, Esq;

Sir F. Win. Some of my Lords here, I perceive, desire he should be asked a more particular Question.

L. H. S. I desire to ask him this: You heard of it, you say, on Tuesday, that a Justice of Peace of Middlesex was killed; I desire to know who you heard it from?

Mr. Birch. Truly, my Lords, I can't tell: For I'll tell your Lordships, I have some certain Days that I constantly appoint to be at Home in, when People come about Business to me. Among these People, several came that asked me what News I had from London. I told them, I had received a Letter or two by the Post, and I shewed them those Letters, there was little or nothing in them. Thereupon they asked me, if I did not hear of a Justice of Middlesex that was killed? No, said I: How come you to hear it? Says one, I come through Cank, (which is within half a Mile of mine own House, and as I came through, there came a Person from Heywood, that said, 'tis all the News about Tixall and Heywood, and that Part of the Country. And this was said to me in my own House.

Sir F. Win. How far is Heywood from Tixall?

Mr. Birch. About a Mile.

Sir F. Win. Now, my Lords, I would ask Mr. Turton to the same Business.

(Mr. Turton was sworn.)

L. H. S. Mr. Turton, pray hear: When did you first hear in Staffordshire of the Death of a Justice of Peace of Middlesex?

Mr. Turton. My Lords, There are two Races in that Country, at a Place near Lichfield, and they are about the Middle of October; the one that Year was the 15th, the other the 18th. The one the Tuesday, and the other the Friday. I was at both of them: And one of the Days, which I cannot be positive in, there was one Mr. Whitehall, a Justice of Peace in Staffordshire, called me from the Company, and desired to speak with me by myself. Said he, Do you hear any News? No, said I. Do you hear nothing, said he, of a Justice of Peace that is murdered? (I then had not heard of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's being missing) No. Says he, Don't you hear he is murdered? Do you know him? Yes, said I: How do you hear it? Says he, 'tis a Report about us. But I did not then believe it: But the next Post-day, which was Monday, I did hear it. It was either Tuesday or Friday, one of those Days.

Sir W. Jones. If it were either one or t'other, 'tis as strange, and the Evidence as strong; for his Body was not found till Thursday.

Sir F. Win. And will your Lordships please to observe, that by that Time the Report had got the Name of Godfrey too, when at the same Time we in London did not know what was become of him.

Mr. Turton. He asked me if I knew Sir Edmundbury Godfrey: Said he, I hear he was an active Justice of the Peace against the Papists; and he made this Inference, We had need have a Care what we do, for we shall be all sacrificed.

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, Will your Lordships be pleased to observe, that Yesterday there were some Witnesses called to disparage Mr. Dugdale; and the first Man, as I can remember, was a very substantial Gentleman, called Mr. Robinson: I think he was not able to give an Account of his Employment, but he was a Gentleman that lived upon his Money; I remember those were his Words. My Lords, we shall call (without telling you what they will say) some Witnesses to prove the Condition of this Gentleman, what Reputation he is of, and what is his Conversation. And we first call my Lady Gerard.

L. Staff. My Lords, pray give me leave to say one Word—But 'tis no great Matter, 'tis not worth the speaking.

L. H. S. What can you say, my Lord?

L. Staff. It was only a Thought of my own, not worth troubling your Lordships with.

(Then the Lady Gerard appeared, and was sworn.)

L. H. S. Does your Ladyship know one William Robinson?

Lady Gerard. No, my Lords.

Sir Will. Jones. He hath several Names, we desire he may be called.

L. H. S. Call Robinson the Upholsterer.

(He was called, but appeared not.)

Sir Will. Jones. I perceive we mistake one Lady for another. We desire Mr. Booth, a Member of the House of Commons, may be sworn.

(Which was done in his Place)

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, send for Robinson your Witness.

L. Staff. I believe he is here; but if he be not, one that belongs to me I have sent to see for him: Whether he be a good or bad Witness, I do not know personally.

Sir W. Jones. Mr. Booth knows him very well, he saw him Yesterday, and so we may venture to ask him the Question.

L. H. S. Did you see Robinson the Witness yesterday?

Mr. Booth. Yes, my Lords, I did.

L. H. S. Do you know him?

Mr. Booth. My Lords, I do know him very well, though I have not seen him often: For indeed, my Lords, he behaved himself so the first Time that I saw him, that I believe I shall never forget him. My Lords, I am better acquainted with his Character than his Person, though I know the Man very well; and truly the first Time that ever I was in his Company, he gave me no Encouragement ever to desire it again; for, if you please, I'll tell you how I came to know him. He told your Lordships that he came into Cheshire at a Cocking; it was at that Time that I saw him: For upon the Sunday after the Cocking, I was invited to a Neighbour's, about two Miles from Home. We were set down to Dinner, and we had not sat long, but this Man comes into the Room where we were; there was an empty Place at the lower End of the Table, and he sits him down, and began a Discourse to ridicule the Lord's Day, in such a Manner as I never heard the like. And the rest of his Discourse was full of a great deal of Contempt of God Almighty, and all that was sacred. All his Discourse at Dinner was very profane. It was not in mine own House; and because it was not taken Notice of by the Master of the House, and he coming under the Protection of a young Gentleman, I did not what else I should; for I should have made him hold his Tongue, or have used it to better Purpose: The whole of his Discourse was so atheistical and profane, that I never heard the like in my Life. When Dinner was done, he used a great many Inticements to draw the Company into Play, by asking what would they say, if they should see such and such Things to be done? And at length he pulls out a great many Dice out of his Pocket, and behaves himself in that Manner, as People do that would draw in others to play; and they that had better Skill in it than I, said that they were all false. When I saw this, I desired him to leave our Room, or to forbear; for, said I, if this be the Entertainment of the Day, I must leave the Company: Then they commanded him to desist. This is all that I do know of my own Knowledge: But I shall acquaint you what I believe; for I have heard it from very considerable Persons, whom I dare credit: For the Man run much in my Mind, because I never saw so ill a Man in my Life. Coming Home, I was speaking to some of my Family; says I, Yonder I met with the strangest Fellow that I ever saw in my Days, he is fitter to be hanged than any Thing else. Oh, Sir, said they, there is such a Fellow hath cheated I know not how many at the Town where the Cocking was. The next Day, I think it was, or shortly after, I had Occasion to go to that Town; and many People came and complained to me of his Cheats, to a very great Degree. They asked me, what they should do? Said I, You have nothing to do but indict him for a Cheat. Why, said they, will you take no Course with him? Said I, What Course can I take? I am turned out of the Commission of the Peace, else I know enough to bind him to his good Behaviour. After this, I had Occasion to go into Lancashire, and there I found he was better known than trusted. There were very loud Complaints against him, and some would have given twenty Pound to meet with him. I heard afterwards he went into Staffordshire, and he changed his Name wherever he went; but he soon discovered himself, and all thereabouts he goes for a notorious Cheat. This is all I can say of him.

L. Staff. My Lords, Be pleased to give me leave to say one Word. I assure you, if I had thought this Man had been such a Fellow as now he proves, I would not have brought him before you. I never knew what he was in my Life, nor heard of his Name till Saturday last.

L. H. S. It may be so, my Lord: But your Lordship must take Notice, this is the Man that gave the most important Evidence, that Dugdale should corrupt him to swear against you for Money.

L. Staff. Give me leave to observe upon that, my Lords, That if Dugdale knew him to be a cheating Fellow, he might think him the liker to take Money to forswear himself.

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, We shall not reply now, but observe anon, how this cheating Fellow comes to swear for my Lord at this Time. But we desire an Honourable Peer of this House may give some Account of him, and that is the noble Lord the Earl of Macclesfield; I think he may be known to your Lordships.

(Then the Earl of Macclesfield stood up.)

L. H. S. Pardon me, my good Lord, my Lord must be sworn.

Earl of Macc. Before I am sworn, I would know of your Lordships, whether I should be sworn or no? for your Lordship shall not make me be sworn, unless my Lords say I should.

L. H. S. I should not offer it, if there were any Colour of doubt in it.

(Then my Lord was sworn.)

Earl of Macc. My Lords, I have nothing to say against this Man, but what he said to me, and before a Justice of Peace too; for I did take this Man when he had run away from my Lord Gerard. He had cheated many of his Servants. I caught him on the Way running to play his Tricks somewhere else, and I intercepted him; but tho' I was a Justice of Peace there, yet because it was in a Manner my own Cafe, I would not commit him, till I had carried him before another Justice of Peace. So the Man comes up to me; says he, My Lord, have you a Mind to have your Son-in-law bubbled? I have been only teaching him how to avoid being cheated; I acknowledge myself to be a Cheat, and I would teach him to avoid them. I am going now into Staffordshire, and that was all I intended to his Lordship: I am a Rogue I confess. And upon this a Justice of Peace comes in, and while they were examining of him, we bid some that were by to search him, and they found in his Pocket false Dice; and truly the Justice nor I did not know whether they were true or false. Says he, You don't know what to do with these, but I do. This is all I can say; but in all the three Counties of Staffordshire, Cheshire, and Lancashire, there are several Men that I see here, that know his Life better than I do; for 'tis his common Practice. And I believe, my Lords, the Judges must know him; for it was his common Practice at all Assizes and great Meetings to play these Pranks.

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, We will not trouble your Lordships any further as to Robinson; if he were here, perhaps my Lady would know him; but having two such Witnesses, I think we need not trouble ourselves nor you any more about him.

L. H. S. Have you done with my Lady Gerard?

Sir W. Jones. Yes, and we beg her Pardon for this Trouble. My Lords, your Lordships will be pleased to remember, there was one Holt was produced as a Witness by my Lord Stafford; and your Lordship, when you look on your Notes, will remember, he testified to this Purpose: That Dugdale sent an Horse for him to Stafford Town; which Horse brought him to the Star Inn, and there Dugdale did offer him forty Pounds to swear, That one Mr. Moor carried away Evers the Jesuit. My Lord, we will call some Witnesses to this Mr. Holt; you will find him to be something a-kin to Mr. Robinson, and, as we suppose, of nothing a better Reputation than he.

The

The Witnesses will give you an account of his Pranks. Call Sampson Rawlins, and Lander. (Rawlins stood up, and was sworn.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witness. Sampson Rawlins.

L. H. S. What do you ask him?

Sir W. Jones. We desire to ask him if he knows Samuel Holt the Blacksmith?

L. H. S. Do you know Holt?

Rawlins. Yes.

Sir F. Win. Acquaint my Lords what Reputation he is of, where he lives, and what he is.

Rawl. He is counted to be a very lewd, loose Fellow.

L. H. S. Why so?

Sir W. Jones. What hath he done?

Rawl. He is counted a drunken, lewd Fellow.

Sir W. Jones. Is he of an ill Reputation in the Country where he lives?

Rawl. Yes, he is so.

L. H. S. For what?

Rawl. 'Tis said in the Town he keeps another Man's Wife.

Sir W. Jones. Is there any other Fault he hath?

Rawl. He said there were none but Rogues would take Mr. Dugdale's Part; whereas I never knew any harm by Mr. Dugdale, and I have known him this fourteen or fifteen Years: I dealt with him, I was a Taylor to the Family, and he ever paid me very honestly and well.

Sir W. Jones. Have you heard of Mr. Holt any other ill thing besides what you speak of?

Rawl. He broke open my Lord Aston's Wine-Cellar, and stole several Bottles of Wine; wherefore my Lord Aston bid Mr. Dugdale send him to the Goal: but he curry'd favour with Mr. Dugdale, and so kept in with him, that he afterwards begged for him of my Lord to forgive him; and now he comes to evidence against Mr. Dugdale, that was his sure steadfast Friend, and saved him from the Goal.

L. Staff. I would ask this Witness a Question—

Rawl. And because I took Mr. Dugdale's Part, saying, he was an honest Man (and he was so to me, and all others, as far as ever I heard) he met me, and would have murder'd me.

L. H. S. When was this?

Rawl. Since last Term, when I was up here. And likewise Sawyer took a Pot, and would have don'd my Brains out.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, I think this Man was summoned as a Witness, to attend at my Lord Aston's Trial. What Occasion brought you to London at that time?

Rawl. I was subpoena'd up. And when I came home to my Wife and Children, they grossly abused me, and said I was a Rogue, because I came up upon his Majesty's Service.

L. Staff. Pray, my Lords, ask him whether Holt was my Lord Aston's Servant or no.

L. H. S. Was Holt a Servant to my Lord Aston?

Rawl. He was a Smith hard by his Gate, and he worked to the Family.

L. H. S. Were you subpoena'd up to the Trial of my Lord Aston?

Rawl. Yes.

L. H. S. And it was for coming to that Trial he offered to murder you?

Rawl. Yes, I have several Witnesses of it. And by the Blow that Thomas Sawyer gave me, for a good while I could not lay my Head on the Pillow.

Sir W. Jones. Call Thomas Lander. (But he did not appear, being gone away sick.)

Sir W. Jones. Because we would not lose your Lordships time, seeing the Man we call for is gone away sick; we will call a Witness as to another of my Lord's Witnesses, John Morral. Call Thomas Thorne. (Who was sworn.)

Sir F. Win. My Lords, if that other Man come by-and-by, we hope your Lordships will give us leave to ask him a Question to the Point which we are now gone over. But my Lord Stafford did produce one John Morral, a Barber that lived at Ridgely, who said, that Money was offer'd him to swear against Sir James Symons, and Mr. Howard, and others. We call this Witness to give your Lordships an account what this Morral is, and how he hath behaved himself in this Business.

Sir W. Jones. What do you say about John Morral? Do you know him?

Thorne. Yes.

L. H. S. What do you know of him?

Thorne. I know he is a Man that used to come often to my Lord Aston's to Tixall; to trim him, he is a poor Fellow that walks up and down the Country, and hath little or nothing to live on.

L. H. S. Is he poor and needy?

Thorne. Yes, he hath been sued for Money, and I have been contributory to keep him out of Prison.

Sir W. Jones. I ask you in general, is he of a good or bad Reputation?

Thorne. Indifferent.

Sir W. Jones. 'Tis modestly said. My Lords, your Lordships have heard what kind of Witnesses have been brought against us: For two of them, you have had particular Matters; for a third, our Witness speaks modestly, that he is a Man of indifferent Reputation. But now, my Lords, we must prove what Endeavours have been used to get other Witnesses against our Witnesses; and for that, I desire to call one Simon Wright, to tell your Lordships what hath been offered him to swear against Dugdale, and by whom. (Wright stood up and was sworn.)

Mr. Foley. My Lords, we desire this Witness would give your Lordships some account what Endeavours have been used by Offers of Money, or otherwise, to make him swear against Dugdale, and by whom.

L. H. S. Hath any body endeavoured to persuade you to swear against Dugdale?

Wright. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Tell your whole Story, who it was, and what was offer'd you?

Wright. The first time I was employed was presently after the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey; and it was by one Mr. Plessington, that was in custody about that matter: And he sent me one Sunday Morning to the Marquis of Winchester's, to desire him to consider what a Charge he lay at; and my Lord did send him Word, he could not expect to be discharged so soon. The Tuesday after he was discharged; and afterwards coming unto me, I told him I was glad he had so good Friends to get out so soon. He told me, were I in the same condition, I should have as good, or better.

Whereupon Mr. Plessington and I were as good Friends as any about the Town. I was his Barber, and Barber to Mr. Dugdale, and we were all great Cronies. And Plessington told me, if I could find a way to take off his Evidence, or destroy him, I should have seven hundred Pounds. I went to enquire out where I might have a Security for the Money, and Mr. Reeves, an Apothecary in Chancery-Lane, did proffer me his Note, and so did Mr. Dray the Scrivener: but I did not, nor had the Money. And several times, particularly at the Trial of Mrs. Price and Mr. Taffborough, they would have had me sworn quite blank, That he would have hired me to have sworn against them. And afterwards they would have had me own I was forsworn, and they would get me a Pardon.

L. H. S. What had you sworn?

Wright. What I heard Mrs. Price say at the Horst-shoe, in Chancery-Lane, as to the blasting of Dugdale, as may be seen in the Trial.

L. H. S. Who offered you that seven hundred Pounds?

Wright. My Lord Bellasis's Steward.

L. H. S. What is his Name?

Wright. Plessington.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, I think he says he was to swear against Mr. Dugdale; I desire he would explain himself more particularly, and tell who it was that offered the Money to swear against Dugdale.

Wright. Mr. Plessington, my Lords. And since the Trial of Mrs. Price, they did persuade me to write a Paper for the blasting the Reputation of Dugdale, and to shake his Credit by it. And that they carried to Mr. Drayton and Sir James Symons, and they being satisfy'd, would have me write again to those Gentlemen, and they framed a Letter for me to write. And thereupon Mr. Longmors (I know the Gentleman if I see him again) told me that Sir James Symons was better able to perform, than Dugdale was to promise; and if I would stand by it, I should be a happy Man.

L. H. S. What had you said in that Paper?

Wright. I had said according as they directed me, That Mr. Dugdale would have given me Money to swear against Sir James Symons and Mr. Gerard.

L. H. S. Did you swear that?

Wright. No, I did not, but I was to have done it.

L. H. S. How came it to pass you did not agree with them?

Wright. My Lords, I have had four Pounds in hand, and that I had by reason Poverty came upon me. And my Lord Bellasis's Steward came and lay with me, and spent twenty Shillings upon me; but finding that I was not absolutely true to them, nor like to go through, they distrusted me: and I borrowed an Horse of Capt. Chetwin, and got down into the Country, where I have been since July last, till I was fetch'd up by a Messenger to come and give Evidence for the King. And there I received a Letter from my Lord Aston's Agent, That if I would call at Stafford, and come up with my Lord's Witnesses, they would bear my Charges up to London. I have the Letter in my Pocket.

L. Staff. If it please you, he may shew the Letter. (Which he did.)

Clerk. This for Simon Wright, a Barber, at Deliver with Care, Subscribed, Your loving Friend Abnett.

Simon Wright,

I have just now received a Letter from the Lord Stafford, wherein my Lord mentioned Wright to be one of his Witnesses, and desired me forthwith to give Wright notice, that, if possible, he should be at London on the Saturday Night next, his Trial being to be on the Tuesday after; therefore if he pleased to come to him, he should give him Money to bear his Charges up, and he should come up with my Lord's Witnesses.

(This is the Substance of the Letter as it was taken.)

Sir W. Jones. I presume your Lordships will be pleased to take notice, he was intended a Witness for my Lord; and it was supposed then that he was able to say something, but he was not produced by my Lord yesterday.

L. Staff. Pray, my Lords, give me leave, as to this Witness; I desire, if you please, I may have time to prove something against this Man till tomorrow: I have enough against him.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. You will find another Witness, I suppose, by that time.

L. Staff. No, I will not find him, I have him already; I have enough against this Fellow.

L. H. S. You shall have time to say what you will, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. I would my Lord would name his Witnesses.

L. Staff. I will name him to you, since you ask it, 'tis Dodd; he knows what I mean well enough.

Wright. I don't know him, my Lord, I assure you.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we will go on now to another Matter. My Lord Stafford was pleased to object, that Mr. Dugdale did talk much of Letters and Proceedings, but was able to shew none of them. My Lords, we will give an Account how that comes about: Mr. Dugdale, as in part hath been proved already, was apprehensive of being accused for the Plot; nay, I think we shall prove he was afraid he had been in the Proclamation against those Traitors and Jesuits that were fled. We shall prove, that Mr. Dugdale, to secure himself, and his then Friends (for he was not then come over to make any Discovery) did burn a great many Letters and Papers that did relate to those Proceedings, and did not leave any thing remaining; hoping thereby to prevent a Discovery. We will call Witnesses that were by when it was done, and I think that will be some Answer to this Objection. Call Elizabeth Eld, and Anne Eld. (Elizabeth Eld sworn.)

Sir F. Win. My Lords, if your Lordships please, we would ask her this general Question; What she knows of Mr. Dugdale's burning a great many Letters and Papers, at what Place, and about what time?

Elizabeth Eld. I cannot possibly say to the time; I burnt some Writings for him when he went away, he desired me to burn them, he did not tell me what Writings they were. He said, the Times were troublesome, and if he should be sick upon the Road where he was going, he would not have all his Papers seen; but he desired me to burn them. And I took and burnt them all but one Book; and my Sister asked if that Book should be burnt: he said, No, there was nothing of Treason in it. I asked him if there were any thing of Treason in the others; and he said, Do you think there was?

Sir Will. Jones. How long was this before he went away?

Eliz. Eld. That Morning when he went away.

Sir Will. Jones. How many Papers were there?

Eliz. Eld. I cannot say how many.

Sir Will. Jones. I do not ask you the Number, but the Quantity, was there a Bushel?

E. Eld. I cannot say; they were rolled up, and put in his Pockets and his Breeches.

L. H. S. Were they Parchments or Papers?

E. Eld. They were Papers.

L. H. S. Were they Letters?

E. Eld. I did not see what they were, but they were wrapt up together; they might be the Accounts of the House, for what I know.

Sir F. Win. But she says, as I take it, that Mr. Dugdale said there was Treason in them.

E. Eld. No, he said, Did I think there was? He said it was no Matter for burning that little Book, there was no Treason in that; and when I asked him if there was any in the others, he said, Do you think there was?

L. H. S. Was it one or two Bundles?

E. Eld. There were several bundles, they were not tied up, but taken in Handfuls and thrown into the Fire.

Mr. Foley. If my Lord Stafford will ask her no Question, we will call up another.

E. Eld. My Lords, I did see Mr. Dugdale take a Glas of Cyder, and I heard him say, and wish it might be his Damnation, and he might sink in the Place where he stood, if he knew any Thing of the Plot.

Sir Will. Jones. I pray what Religion are you of? I don't ask you to disparage you.

E. Eld. A Roman Catholick.

L. H. S. When was it that he said that?

E. Eld. When he was in Staffordshire.

(Anne Eld was then sworn.)

Mr. Foley. Tell my Lords what you know of any Papers that were burnt by Mr. Dugdale, or by his Direction, and at what Time.

A. Eld. Mr. Dugdale came to my Father's House over Night, and the next Morning (before he went away) he brought a great many Papers he had in his Breeches, and in his Pockets, bundled together, and he desired us to burn them in the Flame of a Candle.

L. H. S. Why did he desire you to burn them?

Anne Eld. He said, the Times were troublesome, and being to travel, he was to go to divers Places, and if he were taken, People would think him a Plotter, having all those Papers about him.

L. H. S. Did he burn the Book at that Time?

A. Eld. No.

L. H. S. Why not?

A. Eld. I found that Book, and asked him, if that should be burnt; he said, No, lay that by, it might do good seven Years hence, there is no Treason in it. Says my Sister to him, Is there any Treason in the rest? Says he, Do you think there is? That was all.

Sir Will. Jones. Not to trouble you longer, my Lords, upon this, your Lordships will be pleased to remember, Yesterday my Lord Stafford was pleased to offer by Way of Evidence, as if Mr. Dugdale was a Man of an ill Reputation in these Particulars, That he had defrauded my Lord Aston, that he was a mean Man, run in Arrear to my Lord; and that being in Necessity, he became a fit Instrument to give false Evidence. We shall shew, That Mr. Dugdale was a Man of Estate; that both before, and since he came away from my Lord Aston, he hath made it his Business to desire my Lord to come to Account; that he hath pressed him, and that he does believe, and hath Reason so to believe, that there is Money coming from my Lord Aston to him, and that a considerable Sum. Now, my Lords, if we shall make it appear, that he hath made it his Business to come to Account with my Lord, I hope it will not be supposed that he is afraid of it, or so needy, or so mean. For this we call Michael Noble and Stephen Colledge.

(Michael Noble sworn.)

Sir John Trevor. What do you know of Mr. Dugdale, and my Lord Aston?

Mr. Noble. My Lords, I can say little or nothing as to Mr. Dugdale, for that I have never been acquainted with him, but since the Plot, and he came to be an Evidence; but Mr. Dugdale desired me to assist him as much as I could, to make up his Accounts with my Lord Aston. And we were twice at the Tower, one Time we spoke with my Lord with great Difficulty; another Time we could not see him. There were three Books of Account, two my Lord would let us see, but the third, wherein all the Discharges were, as Mr. Dugdale said, he would never let us see, that is all I can say.

(Then Stephen Colledge was sworn.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witness. Stephen Colledge.

Sir Will. Jones. Declare to my Lords what you know concerning Mr. Dugdale's pressing my Lord Aston to account with him.

Mr. Colledge. In January last I went along with Mr. Dugdale, at his Request, to the Tower, with one Mr. Noble a Barrister of the Temple, and one Mr. Boson of Lion's-Inn, in order to the making up Accounts between Mr. Dugdale and my Lord Aston; for he told me he was going thither for that End. When we came thither, we met with one Captain Hawley, who belongs to the Lieutenant of the Tower, and we desired him to go to my Lord Aston, and tell him Mr. Dugdale was there, in order to make up his Accounts with him. He went, and brings an Answer back again, that my Lord was not at Leisure to speak with Mr. Dugdale then, nor none of us from him. And Mr. Hawley said he was then going up with the Lords to Nine-pins. Mr. Dugdale said, he was very ill used, for he had been several Times there before, and he could not be admitted to speak with him. He hath a little Book, says he, (meaning my Lord) wherein there is an Account made up under his own Hand, of almost two or three hundred Pounds; which Sum I cannot say, but one of them I am certain of, which he hath denied several Times that he had it, (but I can prove that he hath it:) If he will be pleased to produce that Book, we need not be a Quarter of an Hour in making up the Account. He did speak of some other Sums he had to place to Account, but so much was made up already. But Captain Hawley saying he would not speak with him, nor any of us from him, I did take the Liberty to say to Captain Hawley, that it was hard his Lordship, and his Party should abuse Mr. Dugdale at that rate, to make him his Debtor; for now I understand by what Mr. Dugdale said, my Lord was his Debtor: And said I, if I can persuade Mr. Dugdale, he shall publish his Case, for the Protestant Interest suffered by it, that he should be made a Debtor to my Lord when he was not so. And I believe Captain Hawley told my Lord Aston what I did say; for when he came back again from my Lord Aston, he said, my Lord did acknowledge he had that Book, and it was ready to be produced, but he would stay till a Counsellor of his came out of the Country, and till he had spoke with the Lieutenant; for he would not speak with Mr. Dugdale unless the Lieutenant were by, and in three or four Days Time he would send for him: But I never heard that he sent for him ever since. If it please your Lordships, I have one Thing more that I remember: There was a young Man that belonged to my Lord Aston's Family, that heard Mr. Dugdale was at Captain Hawley's Chamber, and came to see him, and paid a very great respect to him, and would stand bare to him, though Mr. Dugdale desired him to put on his Hat several Times. Some of us asked him, whether Mr. Dugdale was thought to be such a Knave, when he lived with his Lord, as they would have made him since. No, said he, Mr. Dugdale was as honest a Gentleman as ever lived in our Family. I remember my Lord Aston's Man said this to us then.

L. Staff. My Lords, will you be pleased to give me leave; if I speak impertinently, I am under your Correction; I conceive I shall have something to answer to this, but I would first know whether I may desire of your Lordships, that I may have my Lord Aston here to give an Account of this Matter.

Sir Will. Jones. If he were here he could not be heard, being a Person accused for the same Offence.

L. H. S. My Lord, he stands indicted for the same Treason, and cannot be a Witness.

L. Staff. I beg your Pardon, my Lords.

(Nicholas Boson was sworn.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witness. Nicholas Boson.

Sir Will. Jones. Declare to my Lords what you know concerning Mr. Dugdale's pressing my Lord Aston to come to an Account.

Mr. Boson. In January last, I met with Mr. Dugdale, and one Mr. Noble, and one Mr. Colledge. And Mr. Dugdale desired us to go down with him to the Tower. He said he had an Order of the Council to pass his Accounts with my Lord Aston; and when we came there, we enquired for Captain Hawley, and desired him that he would acquaint my Lord Aston, that he was there to account with him. Captain Hawley went up to my Lord Aston, and brought Word back again, my Lord was not at Leisure, or would not speak with him, or to that Effect; whereupon Mr. Dugdale said, it was very hard that he should be aspersed to owe my Lord Money, and he would not come to Account with him. For my Lord Aston had a Book or Books in his Custody which he would stand by, and they would determine the Business between them; that my Lord Aston was almost two hundred Pounds in his Debt. And pray, says he, Captain Hawley, do me the Favour to go to my Lord Aston again, and desire him that he will be pleased to produce that Book or Books. If I owe my Lord any Money, I am ready to pay him. And if he owe me any, I hope his Lordship will do the like by me; as I am sure he does two hundred Pounds. Captain Hawley went away, and brought this Answer, that his Lordship would send for him in some short Time, as soon as a Counsellor did come out of the Country, whom he had entrusted with the Books; and that was one Birch, as near as I remember.

Sir Will. Jones. We have done with this Witness. And because we desire to conclude as to Mr. Dugdale, we shall call some Persons of Quality as to his Reputation, my Lord having gone about to make him a Man of no Reputation.

Mr. Boson. I can speak too about the Boy that came in.

Sir Will. Jones. There is no Need of that now; We shall trouble you no further, Sir. Your Lordships will be pleased to observe, That Mr. Philips, the Minister, that was one of my Lord Stafford's Witnesses, did say, Mr. Dugdale was a Man of whom many spoke well, and some indifferently, and perhaps that is the Case of most good Men; for scarce any are so good that all speak well of them: But that many should speak well, and some indifferently of him, may be the Lot of a very good Man. We shall call some Witnesses, and begin with Mr. Whitby a Justice of the Peace, that will tell you he hath known Mr. Dugdale long, and what Reputation he is of.

(Thomas Whitby, Esq; sworn.)

Sir John Trevor. My Lords, We desire your Lordships would be pleased to ask him what Reputation and Credit Mr. Dugdale was in, in my Lord Aston's Service.

Mr. Whitby. My Lords, I have known Mr. Dugdale to be a Servant to my Lord Aston this nine or ten years; he was Steward to him, and there was no other Person between my Lord and him; he received my Lord's Rents and Debts for him, exchanged his Lands for him in forty Places; I exchanged some Land with my Lord myself, and he was the Man that did it. He was very hard for my Lord's Advantage, and did what he could for my Lord's Profit.

Sir John Trevor. What do you know more as to his Dealing?

Mr. Whitby. He was a Person that was next to my Lord, and did rule and govern the rest of the Family. All the Servants were under him.

Sir John Trevor. Was he looked upon to be an honest Man in his Dealings?

Mr. Whitby. As to what I had to deal with him, he was an honest Man, I never heard to the contrary. I have heard some Tradesmen complain that he hath put them off without Money, would not pay them what my Lord owed them.

L. Staff. I desire that Mr. Whitby may be here when I shall have Occasion to say something to him.

Sir Will. Jones. That will be, I hope, by and by, for we have almost done. Call Mr. William Southall.

(Who was sworn.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witness. William Southall.

Mr. Foley. Give my Lords an Account how long you have known Dugdale, and what you know of him.

Mr. Southall. My Lords, I have known Mr. Stephen Dugdale about eight Years.

Mr. Foley. How hath he behaved himself? What Reputation hath he born?

Mr. Southall. Truly he hath always had a good Repute, not only with my Lord's Tenants, but also with the Workmen, and those People that had Dependence on the Family; and truly I never heard any ill Report of him, but only what is spoken of now of late.

Sir Francis Winnington. Were you very well acquainted with him?

Mr. Southall. Yes, but never had any Business with him. Several Discourses I have had with him about the Popish Religion.

A a

Sir John

Sir John Trevor. My Lords, I only observe this, This Gentleman is Coroner of the County, and hath a general Knowledge of the County, and must know most Men there.

Sir F. Win. You are Coroner of the County of Stafford, Sir, I think?

Mr. Southall. Yes, I am one of them.

Mr. Foley. What was he in my Lord's House.

Mr. Southall. Bailiff, and a Kind of Governor, providing Meat, and paying Workmen; most of the Things of the Family went through his Hands.

Sir Francis Winnington. My Lords, This Gentleman is a Coroner of the County, and can speak materially to other Particulars besides this of Dugdale's Reputation; for he was a Person who was present when he made his first Discovery of this Plot, and was very instrumental in prevailing with him to do it. He will give your Lordships an Account of the whole Business, and I would rather he himself should relate all the Progress of it, than take upon me to recite any of the Passages.

Mr. Southall. There was, the latter End of November (78.) a Report that Mr. Dugdale was gone away from my Lord Aston's suddenly and strangely; and it was the common Report in the Country that he was in the Plot, and was fled for it. In the Beginning of December I went through a Town called Great Heywood, a Mile and a Half from Tixall, where my Lord Aston and Mr. Dugdale dwelt. I called at Mr. Thomas Whitby's House, the Gentleman that was up here lately, and he was telling me, Dugdale was come again, and apprehended by the Watch at Heywood upon Suspicion. He told me further, he would make no Confession of the Plot, though he had been under Examination before Sir Walter Bagott, Mr. Kinnerley, and I think he said Sir Thomas Whitgrave. But he told me divers Passages by which we both suspected he might be concerned and know of the Plot. We thought so from the various Reports and Rumours we had heard in the Country, and from those great Grounds of Suspicion that were given us. As I returned from Heywood, I resolved I would speak with Dugdale the first Opportunity, for I had a strong Persuasion I could prevail with him to make a Discovery of the Plot: But before I did speak with him, there was one Goldsmith my Kinsman, had some Difference fallen out between him and Mr. Ansell, and Mr. Dugdale, touching a Deed, the deciding of which they had referred to Mr. Dugdale. And he desired me to go to Mr. Dugdale to Stafford with him; I was very glad of the Opportunity. Ansell was to bring one Hanson, Mr. Goldsmith was to bring me, and Mr. Dugdale was to bring one Mr. Gerard, that was concerned in the Pre-mortgage, that we might all have Discourse together. I promised to meet them at the Time appointed; and accordingly the 23d of December, two Days before Christmas-Day, I came to the Place in Stafford, where Dugdale was, about ten o'Clock in the Morning, where they met according to their Promise. We had not been in the House longer than a Quarter of an Hour, but the King's Business, which I thought was a Business of greater Weight than any particular Business, did stick much upon me; and I resolved before I spoke to the particular Business about which we all met, I would first speak to Mr. Dugdale to put that in Execution which I had resolved. After a short Space of Time, I desired Mr. Dugdale that I might speak with him in a Chamber privately between him and me; he told me, if I would go into the next Chamber to his, he would come to me. Accordingly I went, and staid a short Space of Time, and Mr. Dugdale came to me. I desired him to make the Door to, which he did, and I began thus with him. Mr. Dugdale, said I, for some Years last past, since I came to be acquainted with you, I have always had a good Esteem of you, and you a good Report in the Country where you live; and now there is an Opportunity put into your Hands to serve his Majesty and his Protestant Subjects, if (as an honest Man ought) you will discharge your Duty. Mr. Dugdale replied, Sir, what do you mean? Why said I, I mean this in a few Words, Here is a Plot discovered in London, and if it be in London, I conceive it hath been in Part acted at Tixall; and if there, of Necessity, you having such a Government and Rule over that House, it is impossible but you must know it. He looked upon me very earnestly, and gave me a Smile, but answered me not. I replied to him again thus; said I, There is a natural Allegiance which every Subject owes to his Sovereign; and by that it is required, that if any Subjects know of any Plot or any Conspiracy against his Person and Government, they ought in Conscience to discover it; therefore Mr. Dugdale, said I, discharge a good Conscience, and tell what you know, for it is commonly suspected you are concerned in the Plot. He answered, I have taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy. When and where? said I. Before his Majesty's Justices of the Peace at Stafford, said he. Then, said I, there is not only that natural Allegiance which every Subject owes to his Prince, but the Oath of Almighty God lies upon your Conscience; therefore discharge a good Conscience, and tell your Knowledge. He stood pausing a little while, and by and by, said he, If I should make any Discovery, how should I be secured of my Life? You need not question that, said I, nor his Majesty's Gracious Pardon, which he hath promised in his Proclamation. Have you seen the Proclamation? Yes, said he. Said I, you have but a short Time, a Day or two to discover in, for this is the 23d, and as I do conceive, you ought to discover before the 25th. He stood pausing a while about the Time; said I, You need not question his Majesty's gracious Promise, and to encourage you thereto, there is not only an Assurance of Pardon, but a Promise of Reward of two hundred Pounds. Said he, if I do discover any Thing of my Knowledge, I matter not, nor desire (I don't know which it was) his Majesty's Money, so I may be secured of my Life. Upon this, my Lords, said I, Sir, you need not question his Majesty's Gracious Promise, my Life for yours if you have not his Pardon; but I will take special Care about it, for I will send up a Letter to London, directed to some of the Lords, (which I accordingly did) and I will also speak to Captain Lane, who is a worthy Gentleman, to interpose in it too. Then, said he, I will make a Discovery of the Plot. Then, my Lords, he told me first some particular Passages relating to this Lord at the Bar, and also concerning Mr. Evers and Mr. Petres, now in Custody, and some other Particulars: I wished him that he would speak no more at that Time. And when I parted with him, forthwith I consulted with myself what I ought to do in Point of Law: I knew, I must discover, that a further Discovery might be made of what had passed between us. Then I went to Mr. Freke, who was either Mayor or Justice of Peace in Stafford, and told him he must come with me to Serjeant Parry's. He asked me what to do. I told him, when he came, he should know; he accordingly came, and took short Notes of a further Discovery, and Mr. Freke he certified it up to Mr. Chetwyn, who was then at London. Upon the Day following, the 24th, I rose and went to one Mr. Vernon, one of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace, and told him what had happened, and he sent for Captain Lane, another of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace, and they took an Examination of him. I have done, my Lords, with reference to his Discovery, and the Time.

L. H. S. Do you remember what he mentioned of my Lord Stafford? What he said of him?

Mr. Southall. Truly, my Lords, I can only tell what he said at the first Examination: He told me, the first Time my Lord Stafford spoke with him was at Tixall-Hall, nigh to the Gatehouse, betwixt the Gate and the Hall. My Lord was going into the Hall, and my Lord Stafford told him it was a very hard Thing, or to that Purpose, that they could not say their Prayers but in private, and after told him the same Day or Night 'one, that they had some Work to do, and he might or must be instrumental in it. This was the Effect of what he told me passed the first Time. Another Time I think he told me he was to have five hundred Pounds to kill the King.

L. H. S. When did he tell you so?

Mr. Southall. Not till Captain Lane examined him, which was the second Time he was examined; which was about the 26th.

L. H. S. Did he swear that before Vernon and Lane?

Mr. Southall. Yes, he did, I could give your Lordships a Breviate of what he swore then.

L. Staff. I desire he may give that Breviate.

Mr. Southall. I took some Notes of what he swore then.

L. H. S. Have you them by you, or about you?

Mr. Southall. Yes, my Lords, I have.

L. H. S. Produce them.

Mr. Southall. I took this upon some Paper I had in my Pocket, and is the Substance of what he swore.

(Which he delivered to the Clerk.)

Clerk. December the 24th 1678, Mr. Dugdale informeth, That in September last, he met in Tixall the Lord Stafford, nigh to the Gates, who said, That it was sad they were troubled they could not say their Prayers, but in a hid Manner; but suddenly there would be a Reformation to the Romish Religion, and if there be a good Success we shall enjoy our Freedom. And that upon the 20th Day of September 1678, the said Lord Stafford told this Informant, That there was a Design in Hand, and if he would undertake in it, he should have a good Reward, &c. and make himself famous. The same Day this Informant went up into Mr. Francis Evers's Chamber, to know what my Lord Stafford meant by his Words; and he first made him swear Secrecy upon his Knees, and then told him, That he might be a Person employed, and have a good Reward, and make himself famous, if he would stand instrumental with others in taking away the King's Life, by Shooting, or otherwise; and need not fear, for that the Pope had excommunicated the King, and that all that were excommunicated by him were Hereticks, and they might kill them, and be canonized for Saints in so doing. And that the Design was to kill the Duke of Monmouth as well as the King.

December the 29th 1678, this Informant saith, That since the 20th Day of September last, the said Lord Stafford did promise him five hundred Pounds as to the carrying on of the Plot, and that Mr. Evers should give him Instructions about the same. And that the Lord Stafford told him, he did not doubt of his Fidelity, for Mr. Evers had given him a good Character to be trusty. And that the Lord Stafford told this Informant, That there was a Design to take away the Life of the King; and the Life of the Duke of Monmouth, and that several others were to be employed in the Design besides this Informant. And that this had been thoroughly considered of to be the fittest way for the establishing of the Romish Religion. And that at the said Time, the said Lord Stafford laid his Hand upon his Head, and prayed God to keep him in his good Mind, and to be faithful to what he had entrusted him in, &c.

And this Informant further saith, That he doubting of the Lord Stafford's Payment, the said Mr. Evers promised him the making good of my Lord Stafford's Promise, &c.

And further saith, that he saw a Letter directed from my Lord Stafford to Mr. Evers, and he read the same, and knows it to be my Lord Stafford's Writing; and that therein was written, that Things went on well beyond the Seas, for the carrying on the Design, and so he hoped it did do here in England, &c.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we will examine no further as to Mr. Dugdale, but will conclude with this Witness, and I think he speaks fully to him. The next Witness we called was Dr. Oates, and your Lordships have been pleased to observe, That what Exceptions have been made against him, have not been so much by Witnesses produced, as by opposing one Part of his Testimony to another, what he swore at one Time to what he swore at another: To which we shall give an Answer when we come to sum up our Evidence; for there will be no Need of Witnesses to what is objected against Mr. Oates; but only of Observations. But as to the third Witness Turberville, we have something to answer of Witnesses, and something by Way of making Observation. We will first call our Witnesses.

[Then Mr. Southall desired his Paper again, which the Court told him he should have a Copy of from the Clerk.]

Sir Will. Jones. And our first Witness is to this Purpose: It was objected against Mr. Turberville—

L. H. S. Have you done with Dugdale? You have forgot to give an Answer to the Objection about the Point of Time when Hobson told him of the Design.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, that will be when we come to make our Observations; we shall not answer that by Witnesses; when we come to sum up our Evidence, I doubt not but we shall give a sufficient Answer to that Objection. But to go on with what is to be answered by Testimony, your Lordships will be pleased to remember, that Turberville did inform your Lordships, That he had some Converse with my Lord Stafford at Paris, being introduced by some of the Fathers. My Lords, we shall call a Gentleman that happened to be there at that Time, that will tell you, though he did not know my Lord Stafford, yet he knew that Turberville did converse much with an English Lord in that Place where my Lord does does acknowledge his Lodging to be. He will give you some further Account how Turberville went to Diep in Expectation of my Lord, and how he had a Message from the Lord, though he did not know my Lord Stafford. He will give you a further Account how Mr. Turberville was earnest with him to go to Calais, and then told him, he might go over with my Lord at that Time. The Use we make of these Particulars we will forbear to mention till we sum up our Evidence. We desire to examine Mr. Thomas Mort.

(Who was sworn.)

Sir Will. Jones. We desire to ask Mr. Mort, whether he knew Mr. Turberville at Paris, and at what Time.

L. H. S. What say you, Sir?

Mr. Mort. Yes, my Lords, I knew him, it is now five Years past since we were in Paris. He and I had been intimately acquainted before, we lived in the same Family. I was several Times in Company with him, and many Times in his Brother's Company, which was a Monk, and I heard him say his Brother had an Intention he should be of the same Order. And some Time after that he altered his Resolution, and designed for England, and I had such a Design too to go from Paris, where I was an Apprentice. And being acquainted with him, I resolved to go over with him, and he told me, his Brother the Monk had introduced him into the Favour of a Lord; as I take it, it was my Lord Stafford, as well as I can remember. And that there was a Vessel to come to Diep, a Yacht, and we should go thither to go over with my Lord. And Mr. Turberville told me, we must make as much Haste as might be, for it were better to be there a Day or two too soon, than too late. We went to Diep, and when we came there, the Vessel was not come. And when we had been there a Fortnight, or thereabouts, we were put to a great Deal of Inconveniency, by Reason of our long Stay there: And, I think, if I mistake not, I or some of the Company said, Cursed is he that relies or depends on a broken Staff; aluding, as I believe, to my Lord Stafford's Name. Mr. Turberville told me, if we did go to Calais, we might go over with my Lord; but how or by what Means he understood the Vessel would be there, and my Lord go that way, I know not. But we did not go thither, we had another Opportunity; there was a small Vessel, whether a Fifth-Boat or a Coal-Vessel I cannot tell, a very little one it was, but we took the Opportunity, and came over in it.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, We shall make use of it in due Time; we only call him now to prove his Converse with a Lord at Paris.

L. H. S. Did you ever see Turberville at a Lord's House in Paris?

Mr. Mort. No, my Lords, not that I can remember; but I think, as near as I remember, I will not be positive, I walked about Luxembourg-House while he went, as he said, to the Place where the Lord lodged, I was thereabouts till he came.

L. Staff. In what Street was it?

Mr. Mort. Indeed I cannot tell.

Sir W. Jones. This Man is very cautious.

L. H. S. Can you tell the Lord's Name?

Mr. Mort. I do not remember his Title, but I think it was my Lord Stafford.

Sir Will. Jones. Pray who were you Servant to? Who were you bred under?

Mr. Mort. My Lord Powis. I served as a Page to him, when Mr. Turberville was Gentleman-Usher to the young Lady, one of his Daughters, since married to my Lord Mollineux.

Sir W. Jones. Will my Lord please to ask him any Questions? If not, we will go on.

L. Staff. No, not at present.

Sir Will. Jones. Well then, my Lords, we desire to call one Mr. Powell, a Gentleman of Grays-Inn, to tell you when he first heard Mr. Turberville speak of this Evidence he hath now given.

(Mr. Powell was sworn.)

Sir W. Jones. Pray will you give an Account what Discourse you had with Mr. Turberville about the Plot, and when.

Mr. Powell. About this Time Twelvemonth we discoursed about it, and he told me, that he had much to say in relation to the Plot; but truly he did not name any Particulars to me at that Time.

Sir Will. Jones. Where was this, we desire to ask him.

Mr. Powell. It was at the King's-Head Tavern in Holborn.

Sir Will. Jones. Are you sure it was a Year ago?

Mr. Powell. It was about this Time Twelvemonth.

Sir Will. Jones. What was the Reason he did not think fit then to reveal it? Did he tell the Reason?

Mr. Powell. I think he gave me a Reason, That he was something cautious, because he feared he might disoblige his Brother at that Time.

Sir Will. Jones. Did he give you any further Reason?

Mr. Powell. I think he said he was afraid he should not have Encouragement enough, for he said some of the Witnesses had been discouraged, and he was afraid he should be so too.

Sir Will. Jones. Now we shall call a few Witnesses to Mr. Turberville's Reputation, which have known him a good while. Mr. Hobby.

L. H. S. Was this Time that Mr. Powell speaks of, that he did discourse with him, before or after that of Yalden?

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, We do not know of any Discourse with Yalden; nay, we believe none such was. The Witness speaks of a Year since.

L. H. S. What Time does Yalden speak of?

Sir W. Jones. February or March last, and this was a Year ago.

L. H. S. This was then before that certainly.

Sir Will. Jones. We desire that Mr. Arnold, a Member of the House of Commons may be sworn.

(Which was done in his Place.)

Sir W. Jones. Do you know Mr. Turberville?

Mr. Arnold. My Lords, I do know him very well, and I have known him these two Years: He came recommended to me from his Grace my Lord Duke of Buckingham. My Lords, presently after the breaking out of the Plot, he was sent down into our Country by the Lords of your Lordships House that were of the Committee, and a particular Recommendation from the Duke of Buckingham to me, to give him Direction and Assistance to find out a Priest, one Charles Prichard, and I think also if I mistake not, one Morgan, my Lord Powis's Priest. I spoke with him before he went, I sent Letters down with him, I spoke with him afterwards: He hath been in my Family some Time; he hath behaved himself very well there, and in several other sober Families nearly related to me. I have not heard a better Character of any Man from all Sorts of People, than of him, in my Life.

Sir Will. Jones. Did he tell you any Thing of the Plot, Sir?

Mr. Arnold. My Lords, I did several Times find by him, that he knew much; having conversed both in France and here with Jesuits and Priests. I pressed him oftentimes to discover his Knowledge, and to come in to the Council; but he gave me such Answers why he did not, that I could not answer.

Sir W. Jones. What were they, Sir? Pray tell us.

Mr. Arnold. That the Witnesses that were come in, were in Danger of their Lives; that they were discouraged, that they were discountenanced; and as long as the Duke of York had that Power in the Council that he had, and my Lady Powis's Brother had that Power over these Countries where he lived, (which his Lordship is often pleased to call his Province) he durst not do it for his Life.

(Then Mr. Hobby was sworn.)

Sir Will. Jones. Do you know Mr. Turberville, and how long have you known him?

Mr. Hobby. My Lords, I have known Mr. Turberville near four Years.

L. H. S. What Account can you give of him?

Mr. Hobby. My Lords, my first Acquaintance with him, was at my Brother's House in Glamorganshire. When I came there, my Brother shewed him me, and told me he was a very worthy Man, but his Friends had cast him off, because he would not take Orders in the Romish Church. He lived at my Brother's above a Year; and when he came thence, my Brother writ a Letter of Recommendation to my Father to receive him there, and do him all the Kindness he could. He came to my Father's, and staid there near Half a Year, or thereabouts, I cannot tell to a Month or so. Since I have known him often in this Town, and been in his Company; and I never knew, nor heard, but that he behaved himself like a worthy honest Gentleman: But as to any Thing of the Plot, I know nothing.

Sir W. Jones. We ask you not to that: Where is Mr. Matthews?

(Then Mr. Matthews, a Divine, was sworn.)

Sir Will. Jones. Mr. Matthews, pray tell my Lords, whether you know Mr. Turberville, and how long you have known him?

Mr. Matthews. Yes, my Lords, I have known Mr. Edward Turberville for about four Years last past.

L. H. S. Go on, what do you know of him?

Mr. Matthews. My Lords, he lived some Time in my Neighbourhood; I never knew him guilty of any ill Action at all, but a Person of a very fair Reputation: He acknowledged himself a Roman Catholick, and was pleased to give me the Liberty to talk to him. I found him inclinable to hearken to me, and to those Reasons I offered to him; and I found he had a Mind to quit that Religion, being convinced by the Arguments I gave him; and at several Times he hath since told me, those were some of the great Motives of his coming over from the Romish to the Protestant Communion.

L. H. S. What were the Motives?

Mr. Matthews. One was the Hazard I told him of, in his living in the Roman Communion, as to Salvation; another was the Excellency of the Doctrines of our Church, its Principles and Practices.

L. H. S. Did he acknowledge to you, he knew any Thing of the Plot?

Mr. Matthews. No, not a Syllable of it.

Sir Will. Jones. We don't call him to that Purpose.

(Then another Witness was sworn.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witness. William Seys.

Sir Will. Jones. Pray will you acquaint my Lords, what you know of Mr. Turberville.

Mr. Seys. I have been acquainted with him these two or three Years, and I never knew him guilty of any ill Action in my Life. I never heard of any Body that could asperse him; but he hath behaved himself like a very honest civil Gentleman.

Sir Will. Jones. Where were you acquainted with him?

Mr. Seys. Here in London.

(Then Capt. Scudamore stood up again.)

Sir W. Jones. He was sworn before, we desire he may speak to Mr. Turberville's Reputation.

Capt. Scudamore. My Lords, I have known Mr. Turberville for these three Quarters of a Year, I have been acquainted with him in London; he hath been much at my House, and all that while I saw nothing in him, but that he is a very honest Gentleman.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, I think we have but one Matter more, which we should have mentioned before, but that our Witness was not come: But I hope we shall have the Favour of some honourable Lords that do know the Thing; and I think there are many more that can prove it. My Lord Stafford, who is very ancient, it may be, may not remember Matters exactly; I blame him not; Oblivion is the great Infirmary of old Age. He was pleased to say Yesterday, he had so good Health, that he had not been lame, I think he said for these Forty Years; but at last his Page said, for the last Seven Years: And I shall confine our Proof to that Time. My Lords, I think there are some honourable Lords here, that have seen this Noble Lord, that says he was not lame in so many Years, very near about the Time that he was confined and imprisoned, go lame and come lame to the House, and ease himself by holding up his Leg sometimes. My Lords, I do not say, the Circumstance is very material, but only to shew my Lord may forget himself, which I shall impute to his old Age.

L. Staff. I will acknowledge it, if your Lordships please; I did say I had not been lame with the Gout so long, no more I have not. I was troubled with the Sciatica many Years, but 'tis above Eight or Nine Years since that; and I took so much Opium, that that, and my going to the Bath, cured me. I have often come lame to the House, out of Weariness and old Age; but if ever I put my Foot upon a Stool for the Gout, or was ever so lame as to put my Foot upon a Cushion to ease it, I will admit what he speaks to: I'll acknowledge thus much to save Time.

Sir Will. Jones. Seeing my Lord is pleased to go off from it, I'll call no Witnesses to it.

L. Staff. I go off from nothing, I was lame three or four Years when the King came in: I went to the Bath, and afterwards into Germany; and what with Opium, and the Bath, I was cured, and have not been lame these eight or nine Years. I have not had the Gout in my Foot for these many Years, and I never was so lame to put my Foot on a Stool, to my Remembrance.

Sir Will.

Sir Will. Jones. I do not think we shall need to trouble your Lordships more with this Matter; that my Lord was lame some Time, he is pleased to confess. One Witness says, That he put his Foot upon a Cushion; my Lord doth not acknowledge that.

L. Staff. I was never lame at Paris.

Sir Will. Jones. That a Man that is lame does sometimes ease his Foot, is no hard Consequence, I think.

L. Staff. I deny I was lame then; I walked about the Streets of Paris, I desire I may not be misunderstood.

Sir Will. Jones. I must then desire, under his Lordship's Favour, if he will not acknowledge it to be within seven Years, that we may prove it, and falsify his Witness, the Page.

L. Staff. I have gone with a Stick to the House, I acknowledge it, and been lame with Weariness.

Sir Fran. Winnington. The Objection went to the Credit of our Witness, and therefore we desire to answer it: My Lord was not lame, as he says, for so many Years; but if we prove that within less Time my Lord hath been lame, it will take off that Objection from our Witness. And we desire a noble Lord or two of this House may testify what they know. And first the Earl of Stamford; (who was sworn.)

Earl of Stamford. My Lords, I think I have not had the Honour to sit in this House much above seven Years, but long since that Time I have seen my Lord Stafford come lame into the House of Peers, and that is all I can say.

L. Staff. I have come lame with a Stick to the House, I say.

Sir Fran. Winnington. My Lords, we desire that noble Lord, my Lord Lovelace, may be sworn; (which was done.)

Lord Lovelace. My Lords, the Account that I can give your Lordships, is this; I cannot ascertain any Time, but I am sure, and I do declare it upon my Honour, and the Oath I have taken, that I have seen my Lord Stafford lame in the House of Lords within less than these seven Years.

L. Staff. If he goes Home to the Tower, he may see me lame, but never put my Foot upon a Stool.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, your Lordships will be pleased to remember, we did call a Witness, one Thomas Launder, and the Account we had of him was, he was gone sick from the Bar, he was very sick indeed; but being just now brought, we desire he may be heard, though it be out of Time: We call him to the Reputation of Holt.

(Thomas Launder was sworn.)

Sir John Trevor. Do you declare to my Lords, whether you know Samuel Holt?

Launder. Yes, my Lords, I do.

L. H. S. What do you know of him?

Launder. He is a Smith, my Lord.

L. H. S. What Reputation is he of?

Launder. Indifferent, my Lord.

Sir Will. Jones. What do you mean by that, good or bad? speak plainly.

Launder. A drunken Sot, a Man that will drink, and rant, and tear the Ground, and sing two or three Days or a Week together, and lose his Time.

Sir F. Win. I would ask this Man, whether he was summoned as a Witness upon any Trial in Relation to the Plot?

L. H. S. Were you ever summoned as a Witness about the Plot?

Launder. My Lords, I was summoned concerning my Lord Aston's Trial, and I came up with my Lord Aston's People as an Evidence.

Sir W. Jones. Had you any Offer of Money, and what Sum?

Launder. Yes, my Lords.

Sir F. Win. Acquaint my Lords with it.

L. H. S. Who offered it you? and when? and for what?

Sir Will. Jones. For what was that Money offered you?

Launder. The Money was not absolutely offered me, but I was to have an Horse to ride on, and Money in my Pocket, if I could take off James Ansell, Dugdale's Evidence.

L. H. S. Who came and offered it to you?

Launder. I was sent for by Mr. Fox to Tixall-Hall, and there was my old Lord's Brother for one, and Mr. Thomas Aston, that is, this young Lord's Brother, and Mr. Francis Aston, who is my Lord's eldest Son, were in a Room together, and this Thomas Sawyer that was here, and more were in the Room when they promised all these Things.

L. H. S. If you would do what?

Launder. If I would take my Oath, that this James Ansell was a perjured Rogue.

L. H. S. Did all they make you this Promise?

Launder. Yes, my Lords.

Mr. Foley. It was a Consult together about taking off the Evidence.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we have done with our Witnesses; if my Lord Stafford please to conclude, we are ready to do so too.

L. Staff. What should I conclude? about those Witnesses you have now brought in?

Sir Will. Jones. Your Lordship may please to conclude your Evidence, we are ready to conclude on our Part.

L. Staff. These new Witnesses, must I say what I can say against them presently? I cannot do it, I know very few of them.

L. H. S. Have you any Witnesses here, my Lord?

L. Staff. I cannot possibly have any; for I did not know, nor guess these People would be brought against me; They are Persons I know nothing of. Ansell I have seen four or five Times, I may have seen the Rest, but I do not know them to be able to give an Account of them.

L. H. S. If you have any Witnesses here to support the Credit of your own Witnesses that have been impeached, you may call them.

L. Staff. I have none, my Lords.

L. H. S. Will your Lordship recapitulate the material Parts of your Defence, that the Process may be closed?

L. Staff. I am very unready for it, my Lords. Let me ask Mr. Whitby a Question, if I must have no more Time.

(Mr. Whitby stood up.)

L. H. S. There he is; what would your Lordship have with him?

L. Staff. I do not know the Gentleman.

Mr. Whitby. Nor I your Lordship.

L. Staff. I ask him upon the Oath he hath taken, I know he will speak Truth, Whether he did not some Years ago tell my Lord Aston that is dead, this Lord's Father, That Dugdale was a Knave, and persuaded him to turn him away, (I say not it is true, but I have heard so) and desired him to tell his Son so, that he might quit-himself of him?

L. H. S. What say you, Mr. Whitby?

Mr. Whitby. My Lords, about three or four Years ago my Lord Aston that is dead (I believe it may be two Years last April) sent for me to dine with him; and when I came thither, he told me, says he, Mr. Whitby, I have sent to you to acquaint you with a Thing, but I do not believe it before I tell it you. What is it? said I. Said he, Stephen Dugdale hath acquainted me, that you have employed Persons upon the Water to destroy my Water; said I, my Lord, I never endeavoured it. He said, he did believe me. Then I told my Lord; said I, Mr. Dugdale is a Dishonour to the Family, upon this Account, because many Times People come for Money, and he will not let them have it, but puts them off, and makes them complain. Says my Lord, my Son is now at Standall, but I will tell him as soon as he comes Home; and if you will bring the Persons that have waited so long for their Money, and made so many Journeys, you shall hear what he will say to it. Within a while my Lord Aston that now is, came down, and I went thither to see what became of it. And I went to the Bowling-Green where my Lord and his Son were; but my old Lord said nothing to me of it, nor his Son neither. Within a few Days my old Lord Aston's Gentleman came down to my House, (one Mr. Ashley) said I, I wonder whether my Lord Aston hath acquainted his Son with what I told him. Says he, he hath, but it signifies nothing; for he will hear nothing against Mr. Dugdale. This I speak upon my Oath, 'tis true.

L. H. S. Your Lordship sees what this Gentleman's Opinion was of Dugdale then, he would hear nothing against him. Will your Lordship conclude?

L. Staff. My Lords, I am mighty unready, and know not which way to turn myself, upon those new Things they have brought; for I knew nothing of it, nor expected any such Thing. But will you be pleased that I may call Simon Wright again? (Who stood up.)

L. H. S. What would your Lordship have with him?

L. Staff. I have nothing to say to him, but to desire him to see this Letter, whether it be of his own Writing or no.

L. H. S. Look upon that Paper, shew it him: (Which was done.)

L. H. S. Is it your Hand?

Wright. This is my Hand. 'Tis Part of that I was hired to do. There is another of a great deal more Consequence than that.

L. H. S. Deliver it in, and read it.

Sir,

June the 14th, 1680.

Clerk. I Can, I bless God, with a safe Conscience declare upon my Oath that Mr. Dugdale hath been unkind to me in taking his Opportunity of my Poverty, by Reason of a private Meeting of us two by his Appointment, he did that Time proffer if I would swear against you, and Mr. Gerard, he would protect me as one of the King's Evidence, and I should not want Money; and in the Hall at Westminster he said, if I did discover it that Day at Mrs. Price's Trial, he would set me in the Pillory. This I have owned to his Face, and shall not go back from this and more, neither for Fear nor Favour. So I rest as you shall find by your Servant,

Sim. Wright.

L. H. S. Is this your Hand.

Wright. Yes, my Lords; this I was advised Word for Word to write.

L. H. S. Who penn'd this for you? Did you pen it yourself?

Wright. No, my Lords, they penn'd it, and a great while I would not set my Hand to it; but Jermin Droyton said I need not fear, I was not to swear against the King.

L. H. S. Who is that?

Wright. He is Butler to Mr. Heveningham.

L. Staff. See what you have under his Hand, I have no more to say to him.

Wright. But by their Persuasion at last I did write it, and a great Deal more than that.

Sir Will. Jones. I desire to ask Mr. Wright whether they would have had him swear this?

L. H. S. Were you desired to swear this?

Wright. No, my Lords, they never put me to swear it; for they told me I was not to swear against the King: But if I would be so kind to make an Affidavit before a Justice of Peace, I might then go where I would into the Country, and I should have Money to bear my Charges.

Sir Will. Jones. Who would have had you swear it before a Justice of Peace?

Wright. Jermin Droyton, and Mr. Longmore; where he is I can't tell, but he told me that Sir James Symons was better able to perform than Dugdale was to promise.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. The same Thing that was done by Redding, he was convicted for it, and stood in the Pillory.

Sir Will. Jones. We desire to know, whether he was ever with Sir James Symons himself, and what he offered?

Wright. I was once with him at the King's Bench; I dined there: After I had written the Paper that was read, he gave me 20s. and said, he hoped I would not go off from what I had said; and he hoped I was sensible his Gratiuity would not be wanting, and was sorry he had not Occasion to use me.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we have done with him; I only observe, that my Lord Stafford was pleased to produce this Paper; he was Master of it, and had it in his keeping.

Sir Fran. Win. Wright says, there is another Paper of more Consequence; I wish his Lordship would produce that also.

L. Staff. I did not know of this till just now it was delivered into my Hands. Did you see Mr. Longmore before this Letter was writ?

Wright. Both before and after, to the best of my Remembrance, and at the Time when Sir James's Trial should have been, at the Sign of the Crown in King-street in Bloomsbury.

L. H. S. My Lord, will you conclude?

L. Staff. My Lords, I desire your Lordships Pardon; I do not know how really to go about it To-night. I will obey your Commands, though I fall down at the Bar. I protest before God, I was all Night so ill of the Cramp, that I had no Repose. If you will have me go on, I will, if you will give me but a little Time to recollect myself.

L. H. S.

L. H. S. God forbid, when your Lordship is to speak upon so great a Concern, and a matter of that Importance as this is to you, you should be put at the end of the Day, and in the midst of all your Thoughts, to sum up your Evidence. I do believe, if you do desire time till to-morrow, my Lords will give it you: And if you would have me move my Lords in it, I will.

L. Staff. One word, I beseech your Lordships—

Sir W. Jones. We do not oppose it.

L. Staff. My Lords, I desire one thing; I am very ignorant in this Matter, and do not understand it; I would desire your Lordships Directions to know in what Method I must proceed.

L. H. S. Your Lordship is to proceed thus, if you please: Your Lordship is to recollect and recapitulate all the Proofs you have made; and you are to enforce them as well as you can, and make such Observations upon them as are for your own Advantage; and this your Lordship must do for the Fact. If there remain a Doubt in Law which you may have occasion to move, Council may be demanded; and if it be considerable and worthy of Debate, you may have Council heard to speak to it. But the Process is closed, no more Witnesses are to be heard: There remains only Observations upon the Fact or Law to be made.

L. Staff. Are no more Witnesses to be heard?

L. H. S. No, I think not: 'tis agreed on both sides all is done: But my Lord, I would not have your Lordship to understand me so, that if so be you have yet any material Evidence, that you think it does concern you to produce, and you have it ready to-morrow, before you sum up the Evidence; I believe then, if you move my Lords, they will let it be heard: Otherwise I think here is an end of Witnesses.

L. Staff. I desire the Paper I gave in, may be returned me.

L. H. S. But in order to this, my Lord, if your Lordship does think you shall use or produce any other Witnesses, it would be of Importance that you would name them now.

L. Staff. Truly, my Lords, I will go hunt for none; and I think I shall have none: only one thing I must beg your Pardon in; which is the only thing I must have witnesses to, to answer what they have said, that my Lord Aston would not come to Account. My Witnesses are very near me. Mr. Lieutenant, some in the Tower, and one Mr. Birch.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, bring those to-morrow that you name to-night.

L. Staff. If you please that I may have that paper, Wright's Letter.

E. of Shaftesb. My Lord Steward, I desire that Letter may be kept.

L. Staff. It is a Paper that was given me; and I would return it: if you won't allow me it, I can't help it.

L. H. S. 'Tis desired it may remain where it is: But your Lordship may have a Copy if you please attested by the Clerk. Is it your Lordships pleasure to adjourn?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. S. This House is adjourned into the Parliament-Chamber.

Then the Lords withdrew in their Order, and the Committee of Commons returned to their House, where Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

A Message was sent from the Lords by Sir Timothy Baldwin and Sir Samuel Clark.

Mr. Speaker.

The Lords have sent us to acquaint this House, That they have Ordered William Viscount Stafford to be brought again to his Trial at the Bar in Westminster-Hall, to-morrow Morning at Ten of the Clock.

The Commons adjourned to Eight of the Clock the next Morning.

THE FIFTH DAY.

Saturday, December 4. 1680.

ABOUT the Hour of Ten in the Mornings, the Lords adjourned into Westminster-Hall, going thither in their former Order into the Court there erected; and Mr. Speaker having left the Chair, the Commons were seated as before.

The Court being sat, Proclamation for silence was made, and the Lieutenant of the Tower commanded to bring his Prisoner to the Bar; which being done, the Lord High Steward began as followeth.

L. H. S. What says your Lordship, my Lord Stafford? My Lords are prepared to hear what your Lordship can say in the summing up of your Defence.

L. Staff. My Lords, I must needs say to your Lordships, That you have given me Favour and Time all that I could demand. But I am a very unfortunate Man in many Things, unfortunate in being brought hither upon this Account; and truly, my Lords, I am very unfortunate, that I had not yesterday, before I went away, the Names of some very material Witnesses, and some that I did not know of, till within this half quarter of an Hour: I humbly offer this to your Lordships Consideration as the State of my Case. 'Tis true, my Lords, I acknowledge I was bound up yesterday to Mr. Lieutenant, and some others that I named; but I humbly tell your Lordships this, That I am informed of some material Witnesses more this Morning.

L. H. S. Are the Witnesses you speak of, any of the Witnesses you named last Night?

L. Staff. No, my Lords; 'tis one of my Lords, a Peer of this House.

L. H. S. How many more have you?

L. Staff. Five or six.

L. H. S. To what Point?

L. Staff. To discredit the Witnesses that have been brought against me; both some of those that have discredited mine, and some that have sworn against me particularly.

L. H. S. There is no end of this Way of Proceeding.

L. Staff. My Lords, I profess to your Lordships, in the presence of God, I do it not for delay, nor did I know of them then.

L. H. S. What say you to it, Gentlemen?

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, I am afraid this Proceeding at this rate will never have an end. If his Lordship have any Witnesses to any material part of his Defence, though he hath bound himself up, I should not be against hearing of them. But if his new Witnesses are only to the Reputation of our Witnesses, then perhaps we must have some other Witnesses brought to discredit his; and we not knowing who these new Witnesses of his would be, may need perhaps another Day to bring Testimony against them; so that I know not when the Matter can have an End. Your Lordships know, there is a Rule in the Civil Law, In testem, testes, & in bis, sed non datur ultra: And I hope beyond that you will not go. Truly, for my own part, I did not expect any other Witnesses, but those he was pleased to name last Night, in relation to the Matters of Account; if he please to call them, we shall hear them: But for any other, considering it would prolong the Trial to another Day, and this cause hath had four Days already for Hearing, we hope they shall not be admitted.

L. Staff. My Lords, I profess to your Lordships, if I were alone concerned in it, I should not have moved it; but when I consider my Wife and Family are concerned, I hold myself bound by the Duty I owe to God and them, to propose this to your Lordships: I am pressed to it by my Wife just now, since the House came in. I protest before God, for my self, I can look Death in the Face without being afraid; but when I consider in what Condition I shall leave my Wife and Family, it moves me.

(Then he wept.)

I am not concerned at it for my own part, for I know I am innocent, but, I cannot forbear Tears when I consider them; 'tis not for myself, I take God Almighty to witness, that I weep; I could be content to speak a few Words to your Lordships, and submit to your Judgment, and take my Death, if you decree me to it, and not defer it till Monday. But I cannot forbear shewing my Grief when I consider my Wife and Children.

L. H. S. Pray, Gentlemen, consider, Whether it be not a saving of Time, to let my Lord examine his Witnesses; else my Lords must withdraw to consider of his Desire. 'Tis true, in the Practice of Chancery we do examine to the Credit of Witnesses, and to their Credit, but no further; but what my Lords will do in this Case, I know not till they are withdrawn.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we have that Opinion of our own Proofs, and are so desirous of an End of these Proceedings, that rather than we will give your Lordship's the trouble to withdraw, if my Lord will please now to tell us the Number and Names of his Witnesses, we shall not oppose their being heard.

Sir F. Win. If your Lordships please, one Word further: We know well of what Concern this is to my Lord, and no body desires to have him cramped in his Evidence. The Objection did lie fair on our side, it looking like a designed Delay; and yet we are willing to comply, with this Reservation, that if there should be any such Witnesses produced now, as may require an Answer, that we may not be foreclosed of advising with one another about it.

L. H. S. No, by no means. My Lord Stafford, your Desire is consented to upon these Terms, That your Lordship will now name the Persons and Number of the Witnesses you will call.

Mr. Hampden. And the Points to which you will call them.

L. Staff. I humbly thank your Lordships for the Favour, but it is an Impossibility for me to do it; If your Lordships will give me a quarter of an Hour's Time, I will name them; I cannot name some of them; one is my Lord Ferrers, another is one Dr. Taylor, Dr. Watson, Dr. Elliot, and one William Dale.

L. H. S. Now to what Points will your Lordship call these Witnesses?

L. Staff. My Lord Ferrers is to speak his Knowledge of Southall the Coroner, and that is as to Dugdale; my Lord knows that Person. Dr. Watson, and they are to invalidate the Testimony of Dr. Oates: And there is another Man's Name, I forget what it is.

Sir W. Jones. To what Point is he to be a Witness?

L. Staff. 'Tis to Dr. Oates, and the Evidence against me.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. So there will be Pretences made every Moment of some new Witness to put off this Cause.

L. Staff. Under your Lordship's Favour, I scorn to make any Delay. If you think this may not be material, or not fit to be done, I will quit it.

L. H. S. Go on, my Lord.

L. Staff. Will your Lordships be pleased to begin with my Lord Ferrers?

(Who stood up in his Place.)

L. H. S. My Lord Ferrers, your Lordship is called upon by my Lord Stafford, and you being a Witness for the Prisoner, and against the King, your Lordship is not to be sworn.

Lord Ferrers. My Lords, what I have to say concerning that Person my Lord named, Southall, is only upon Hearsay, and upon the Reputation he hath in the Country; for I have no Acquaintance with him, nor do know him at all: But the Reputation that hath been given me of him in the Country, is, That he hath been a very active Man in the late Times against the King, and is counted to be a very pernicious Man against the Government.

L. Staff. Call Dr. Taylor.

Servant. I know not where he is, he can't be found at present.

L. Staff. Then call William Dale in the mean time. My Lords, This same Southall I never heard of; the other Man that drew up the Affidavit, that is Feake, I know; he was named by Southall to join with him in the Examination; I can't tell what he was, I can prove that he is an Attorney, that he was Mayor of Stafford, and proclaimed the King Traitor.

L. H. S. Who was that?

L. Staff. One that drew up the Affidavit of Dugdale, Feake mentioned by Southall.

L. H. S. Who is your next Witness, my Lord?

L. Staff. One William Dale. (Who being called, appeared.)

L. H. S. What is your Name?

Witness. William Dale.

L. H. S. What do you say?

L. Staff. About Dugdale, my Lords, what he knows about his offering him any Money.

Sir Will. Jones. We desire to know where he lives.

Dale. Dugdale never offered me any Money.

L. H. S. Where do you live?

Dale. At Owesley-Bridge.

L. Staff. Pray ask him whether Dugdale persuaded him to swear against my Lord Aston something he knew not.

L. H. S. Did Dugdale ever hire you to swear against my Lord Aston?

Dale. No, he never hired me.

L. H. S. Do you know that he ever hired any body else to swear false?

B b

Dale.

Dale. I do not, my Lords.

L. Staff. My Lords, I most humbly thank your Lordships for your favour in giving me the Liberty of examining these other Witnesses; I shall trouble you no further, nor give no more Evidence; only one Witness, my Lords, I shall trouble you no further, and that is Mr. Lieutenant of the Tower, to this Point, whether my Lord Aston did refuse to come to account with Dugdale.

L. H. S. Come, Mr. Lieutenant, do you know any thing about Accompts between my Lord Aston and Mr. Dugdale?

Mr. Lieutenant. My Lords, last Summer was Twelve-month Dugdale came to the Tower, but my Lord Aston would not speak with him, unless I were by; so they brought him to my Lodging, and he shewed me the Books of Accompts: I told them I did not understand Accompts, but if they would have me be by, I would get somebody to be present that did, and have them adjusted. Mr. Dugdale said he would come another time, but from that time to this I never heard of him.

L. Staff. My Lords, I shall not trouble you with any more Witnesses. My Lords, I have now done my Evidence. I shall, as well as my weak Memory and old Age will give me leave, sum it up, something (as well as I can) of the Evidence given against me, and for me. Truly, my Lords, I am able to do it very imperfectly for want of Understanding, and truly for want of Sleep; but I do not doubt, but that according to the Law, as I am informed it is, since I can have no Counsel in Matter of Fact, or to advise me in any thing of that nature, yet I am also informed by the Law, your Lordships who are my Judges, are my Counsel. And I do not doubt but your Lordships, when you take it into Consideration, will supply any Defects which I shall commit, which I believe will be many. I shall spend your Lordship's time as little as I can; tho' these Gentlemen of the House of Commons believe I desire to protract it, yet I profess before God I do not. And I declare before them all, and your Lordships, I am so satisfied of my own Innocency, that I would never beg a moment's time of delay; and I know your Lordships will take care of the Life of the meanest Subject: And tho' I have had the honour to sit among your Lordships as a Peer, yet I ask not for your Favour, but with your Justice too: I shall therefore sum up my Defence as well as I can. For the first Witness, Dugdale, he swore I was at a Consult at Tixall in the end of August or the beginning of September; I have sufficiently proved that in all August I was not there, nor till the 12th of September. I have proved that his first Oath was, I was there in August, and a Man that will swear false in one thing is not to be credited in any. I have made it appear to your Lordships, that upon the 20th of September when he says he was in my Chamber, and I sent the Page to call him, that that is false; it was only he desired he might come to me to get leave that he might go to the Race, my Lord Aston being angry with him for it. This I conceive is proved sufficiently by two Witnesses, my Man and my Boy, and this I think I have proved as positively as can be done. My Lords, 'tis true, 'tis objected against me, That I had said Dugdale was never seen alone with me in my Life, 'tis true; and 'tis true Ansell swears he brought a Footman to me, but he swears it was in the Morning, when it was at Supper, and does not say that he was alone with me. My Lords, Dugdale swore that he told Mr. Philips and Mr. Sambidge of the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey on the Monday, some swore he said it was on the Tuesday, but they deny that ever he told it them; and so he is forsworn in that. And, my Lords, whether he be a Man of any great Credit, I think I have proved enough to your Lordships. 'Tis proved by two Witnesses, Holt and Morral, that he offered them Money to swear, as likewise he did to another, one Robinson; whom I do believe, by the Information that was given of him, to be a wicked ill Man, and not to be credited; but being so, my Lords, he was the fitter for Dugdale's turn. And yet he had so much Conscience, tho' he was a poor and needy Fellow, he would not swear a Man's Life away for Money. The other two are without Exception, the one they say is an idle Fellow, and t'other a Man but of an indifferent Reputation; how far that will move with your Lordships, I submit it to you. I suppose it is also clear by my Witnesses, that Dugdale is a Man of no Reputation, having forsworn himself in several Particulars; and I submit the Credit of all he says to your Lordships upon that.

The next Witness, my Lords, is Mr. Oates, whether he be a Doctor or no, I know it not, he would not own it here; he, my Lords, swears that he saw a Commission delivered to me to be Pay-master of an Army to be raised, God knows when, I never heard when, or where, I suppose it was in the Clouds, for I never knew where else. Mr. Oates all along before swore only that he believed I was in the Plot, now he swears I was in it, at Mr. Fenwick's Chamber, a Man I never saw in my Life, nor heard of till this Discovery. And that he saw Letters subscribed by my Name; but that, my Lords, I conceive is no Evidence at all, for he never saw me write, nor does know my Hand, nor does he pretend to know me then: And when he had told your Lordships he had a Letter of mine, he pretended to look for it, and then said he had lost it, that is, never had it. But besides, my Lords, his Evidence now does not agree with his former: For I do appeal to your Lordships that were in the House then, that he swore the first time, He only saw my Name to Letters; afterwards he swore (that is, some days after he had ended all his Evidence, and knew no more than he had put down then, afterwards he remembers what he knew not before and swears) a Commission he saw delivered to me: So his Memory encreases as he hath time to invent, and perhaps by another time it might be much more. But, my Lords, I think that one particular, his swearing before your Lordship's, as 'tis entered in your Journal, that he had no more to say against any body, and afterwards naming the Queen, and now to me to have a Commission, I conceive, is perfect Perjury. My Lords, Mr. Oates told your Lordships, That he had never been a Papist in his Heart, but ever feigned it; truly, my Lords, I cannot possibly give over that Point, That a Man that feigns himself to be a Papist, or any thing that in the Opinion of Protestants is so wicked a thing as that, is fit to be believed, if he shall not heartily repent himself, and own it to God and Man as an ill thing to dissemble so. But yesterday he with a smiling Countenance, and as it were with a Derision, owns that which must be a very great offence to God Almighty, to pretend to be of an Idolatrous Church. I appeal to your Lordships whether he be a fit Witness, I conceive he cannot be thought a Christian, nor to believe in God. I know many wicked and infamous Persons have done many wicked things, and yet have been Witnesses; but never did any wicked Man own a wicked thing, that he might have concealed, with boasting of it, that ever was credited in any thing: For if he had said I do acknowledge I did dissemble with God and my own Conscience, but I ask God Forgiveness, it was for a good End, and a good Intention, it hath been something, (tho' that could not have atoned for so ill a thing) but shewing no Repentance, but rather an impudent affronting of God Almighty, I think he is not a fit Witness, I appeal to your Lordships and the whole Christian World if he be. I cannot believe your Lordships will condemn me for an Opinion which I will go to my death with, and it stands upon me so to do.

The last Witness, my Lords, is Turberville, and he says, In the Year (75) he often discoursed alone with me for a Fortnight together at Paris. My Servants he owns he never saw them, and how he could come for a Fortnight together, and not see my Servants, I refer it to your Lordship's Consideration whether it be possible. For I'll tell your Lordships, when I had been a few days at Paris, my Landlord came one day to me and said, You do not do well to suffer any body to come to you without your Man be by; for there came Yesterday a Frenchman to speak with you, and I do not know him, and he went up straight to your Chamber without any body with him; 'tis a dangerous thing, said he, for I know that Frenchmen and People have come up, and been alone with Persons, and put a Pistol to them and made them deliver their Money for fear of their Lives; therefore, pray, said he, do it no more. From that time, which was a few days after I came to Paris, the latter end of October or the beginning of November, no Christian Soul was permitted to come to me without my Servants; how then could he come to me for a Fortnight together, and none of my Servants see him? My Lords, this Gentleman very civilly the next day after he had made an Affidavit against me, would needs mend it; and Sir William Poulteny did acknowledge that he made an Affidavit one day, that he came to my Lord Powis's in the Year (73) and the next day amended it to (72). Now I humbly conceive, my Lords, a Man that swears one thing to-day, which he forswears to-morrow, is not to be believed: And the truth of it is, as his Brothers prove to your Lordships, he came to my Lord Powis's in the Year (71) and so he forswears himself in every thing, and is in no wise to be believed. He swears to your Lordships I writ a Letter to him to acquaint him that I would go by Calais, and not by Diep; But I have proved I went by Diep, and I assure your Lordships I have not been at Calais, I think, these twelve or fourteen Years. I conceive these things are very manifest and clear Proofs against him that he hath not sworn one true word. He swears that my Lord Powis, my Lady Powis, and his Friends, persuaded him to go to Doway to be a Friar, but not liking it, he came over again, and was in danger of his Life by them; but the Evidence is sufficiently strong in proof that he afterwards was at my Lord Powis's and was well received, that he lay in the House, and was not in the least injured by them. And for his other Relations, his Brother proves he was not ill used by them. They gave him seven Pound to be gone, and trouble them no more. He says, I said he was a Coward; and I'll tell you why I said so, because a Captain, that is now out of England, told his Sister so, who told me so; but that is not very material. My Lords, there is one Witness more, Jabu Porter, that swears to your Lordships this one Thing, That this Turberville swore to him at such an Ale-house, he knew nothing of the Plot. And then, my Lords, there is Mr. Yalden, and he is a Gentleman of Reputation, he said in his Company, there was no Trade good but that of a Discoverer; God damn the Duke of York, Monmouth, Plot and all, for I know nothing of it. Truly, my Lords, whether he got Money by it or no, is known since he hath been a Discoverer, telling what he knew not so many Months ago; and therefore I submit it to your Lordships what he is.

My Lords, these People that swear against me, there is not one of them a Person of any Quality or Condition; and whether they have not rather sworn for Money than the Truth, by Things that are known, and need no Proof, I shall observe when I come to it to argue that Point in Law, Whether a Man that swears for Gain is a credible Witness, or no?

My Lords, I have, as well as I can, summed up that little Evidence that was given against me: I cannot do it better in so short a Time; for indeed I had but a very short Time last Night, and I have not slept; I had the Cramp so much in Extremity, that my next Neighbour heard me roaring out. My Lords, I submit my self to your Lordships, and doubt not but that the Matters charged upon me will appear to your Lordships sufficiently answer'd. And I beseech your Lordships well to consider that one Thing against Dr. Oates, his dissembling with God Almighty, and his impudent owning of it. This I do insist upon; and I protest before God Almighty, If I were a Judge, I would not hang a Dog upon such Evidence. My Lords, I have many Points in Law to offer to your Lordships, and when you please I should do it, I'll name them to you.

L. H. S. Name them, my Lord; if you have any Doubts in Law, propound them.

Lord Lovelace. My Lords, I would not interrupt my Lord, but It hink indeed it is no Interruption, since his Lordship broke off, and was going on to another Point. But I think I see one of the impudentest Things that ever was done in a Court of Justice; whilst we are trying a Person here for a Popish Plot, I do see a professed Papist standing in the Body of your House, and that is Sir Barnard Gascoigne.

(Who thereupon went out of the Court.)

L. Staff. My Lords, I do conceive I have cleared myself to your Lordships of what I am accused of. My Lords, the Course of my whole Life hath been otherwise; I defy any Creature in the World to say, that I ever used one disobedient or disloyal Word of the King, or did any such Act. I waited on the King that now is, in the unhappy War that is passed, when I was in a low Condition enough as to Fortune, and my Wife and Family were thereby reduced to great Straits, for my Wife and Children lived some five or six Years upon some Plate and Jewels that we had; whereas if I would have come, and been at London, and joined with that Party, I could have saved my Estate, and lived quietly as others did. But my Conscience told me, I ought to wait upon the King, and offer him my personal Service, when I could do him no other. I have shewn how the Witnesses have forsworn themselves; I shall now, if your Lordships please, desire desire your Opinion in some Points of Law. And though perhaps I may name to your Lordships many Things that are impertinent, or not to the Purpose, I beg your Lordships Pardon, 'tis out of the Weakness of my Understanding; and I hope you will not think ill, neither your Lordships nor the House of Commons, if I should, thro' Ignorance, move Things impertinent. The first Point of Law is this:

First, I conceive there is no Example or Precedent for it, that Proceedings Criminal ever did continue from Parliament to Parliament, and this is continued to three.

L. H. S. Speak out, my Lord, and go on.

L. Staff. Secondly, my Lords, I do not question the Power of the House of Commons in the least; but, my Lords, I know they impeach when they find Grounds for it without Dispute: But I question whether any Man, by the known Laws of this Kingdom, in Capital Cases, can be proceeded on, but by Indictment first found by the Grand Jury, and not by Impeachment by any Person, or other Body of Men.

L. H. S. Say on, my Lord.

L. Staff. Thirdly, my Lords, I conceive there are many Defects in the Indictment or the Impeachment. (Indictment there is none.) There is no Overt-Act alledged in the Indictment or Impeachment, I know not well what it is called. And, my Lords, by the Act of Parliament in 1 H. IV. c. 10. nothing from thenceforth is to be Treason, but according to the Statute of 25 Edw. III. which includes an Overt-Act.

Fourthly, My Lords, I desire that I may prove that by Law they are not competent Witnesses, for they swear for Money. But, my Lords, I forgot one Thing to say to your Lordships as to the Evidence, that these Gentlemen did endeavour to prove (I do not speak whether they did or not) a general Plot of the Papists; whether they did or not, I am not concerned in it, for I say they have not proved me a Papist, which I submit to your Lordships: and though any Man may know me so in his private Knowledge, yet they having not given any Proof of it, 'tis not to affect me.

Fifthly, There is one Point of Law more, That no Man can be condemned for Treason, as I conceive, by one Witness; and there are not two Witnesses to any one Point. These are the Points of Law; I humbly beg your Lordships Pardon for the Trouble, and desire your Opinion in them.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, before we make Answer to what my Lord hath said, I do humbly desire, That for the Objection which he hath made against Mr. Southall, proved by a noble Lord of this House (tho' I must observe it was not of his own Knowledge, but by Hearsay, and that Matter of Hearsay contrary to the Act of Oblivion) to the End there may be no Doubt remain of Mr. Southall's Credit, that a noble Lord of this House, and a Gentleman of the House of Commons (who both know Mr. Southall) may be heard to his Reputation.

Sir F. Win. My Lord Ferrers knew him not himself, but my Lord Brook and Mr. Gower will give a better Account of him.

(Then the Lord Brook was sworn.)

Lord Brook. My Lords, what I have to say concerning this Mr. Southall is, That he hath been often employ'd both by my Brother and my Mother; and they have so good an Opinion of him, that they employ him still; and therefore we take him for an honest Man, and an able Man, or he would not be so much trusted and employed: And I take him to be a very good Churchman; for if he was not, I would not employ him.

L. H. S. An honest Man, an able, and a good Churchman, your Lordship says?

Lord Brook. He receives the Sacrament four Times a Year.

Sir Will. Jones. Then swear Mr. William Leveson Gower, a Member of the House of Commons; (which was done in his Place.)

Mr. L. Gower. My Lords, I have been near seven Years of Staffordshire, but did not know Mr. Southall till this Popish Plot was discovered. After that I came acquainted with him (being a Justice of the Peace in that County) in Court, where I found him to be the most zealous Prosecutor of the Papists in that Country, no Man like him. I likewise found several Popish Priests had by his Means been apprehended and imprisoned, and one of them since convicted, who by the way still remains unexecuted in Stafford Gaol. What Opinion some may have heard or had of him formerly, I cannot tell; but this I know, that he hath more than once come to desire my Assistance, that he might prosecute the Papists the most effectual Way upon the Statutes made for that Purpose, and that he did complain to me that he had not met with good Usage elsewhere.

My Lords, I take Opinion to be grounded upon Principles; and I do observe that those of this Country who do believe this Popish Plot, and know Mr. Southall, and are principled for the Preservation of the King, the Protestant Religion, and the Government, do at this Time speak well of him, and those who are not so principled speak otherwise.

My Lords, I was surpris'd when I heard my Name mention'd upon this Occasion: I have told your Lordships all the Matter of Fact that upon the Sudden occurs to me, (with my own Opinion, which I offer with all Submission;) and had I had Notice, I might possibly have recollected more, which I would freely have declared to your Lordships, but this is all that I can now say.

L. Staff. My Lords, if your Lordships please, I would say one Word, if you will give me Leave; I am very ignorant, and beg your Lordships Pardon for troubling of you: I humbly desire to know, Whether after the Points of Law are argued, I may speak something, not concerning the Evidence of the Plot, but concerning myself.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, we shall not oppose the saying any thing he can for himself; but we must conclude, and have the last Word.

L. H. S. My Lord, the Gentlemen that are for the House of Commons must conclude. My Lords will give you all the Favour they can, but they must have the last Word.

L. Staff. I do not oppose it.

L. H. S. Therefore you will do well to say all you have to say together. For the Points of Law, my Lords, will give no Judgment till the Commons have answered them, and they I suppose will first sum up the whole Proofs; then you may say what you have to say, for they must make an End. Gentlemen, will you speak first to the Law?

Sir Will. Jones. No, my Lords, first to the Fact.

L. H. S. Go on then.

Then Sir William Jones, one of the Committee appointed to manage the Evidence, began to sum up the same as followeth.

May it please your Lordships,

We have now done our Evidence as to Matter of Fact; and that which I have in Charge at this Time, is to remind your Lordships of our Proofs; to answer the Objections that have been made against them; and to make some Observations upon the Whole.

My Lords, The Members of the House of Commons that were appointed for the Service of the Management of this Trial, those of them I mean who began the first Day, made a Division of our Evidence into two Parts; the one that which concerned the Plot in general; and the other what related to this Lord in particular.

My Lords, as to the Plot in general, we did call six Witnesses; I know some of your Lordships have taken Notes, and you have their Names: They were Smith, Dugdale, Prance, Oates, Dennis, and Fenison.

My Lords, because I will save as much of your Time as I can, I will not take upon me to repeat what each Witness said as to the Plot in general; but when I come to the Evidence which immediately concerns my Lord, I must beg your Favour that I may be more particular. I will say thus much for the Proofs of the Plot in general, that there was by those Witnesses so much fully proved, that made it most apparent that there was a general Design amongst the Roman Catholics to introduce their false Religion into this Kingdom, that the Jesuits had several Meetings to that End, that they endeavoured to do it by several Ways, by raising of Arms, by collecting of Monies, and by designing against the King's Life; nay, they had so far advanced their Designs, and were in so much Readiness, as they thought it Time to appoint Officers not only for their Army, but for the Civil Government, as if the Work were already accomplished.

Your Lordships were told by one of the Witnesses of a Lord Chancellor, and of a Lord Treasurer, (Lords now in the Tower yet to be tried;) and you were told also of Officers for the Military Part, a General, a Lieutenant-General, and this Lord at the Bar to be Pay-master of the Army.

I shall, my Lords, desire to take Notice to your Lordships, that this Design, though it was to be finally acted by other Hands, yet it was first contrived, and afterwards carried on by the Priests and Jesuits. You will find them preparing for it, by making Sermons to justify that Doctrine (which I confess this noble Lord denies) of the Lawfulness of killing Kings. You will find the Priests and Jesuits, in their Discourses as well as Sermons, urging and encouraging their Disciples and Votaries, to go on with their Design of killing our King, and giving that common Reason for it, That he was a Heretick, and it were meritorious to take him out of the Way.

My Lords, I take Notice of these Particulars in the general Plot, because it may give great Light to, and add much to the Confirmation of the particular Evidence. And, my Lords, (I think) I may take leave to say, That the Plot in general hath been now sufficiently proved. And if we consider what hath been proved at former Trials (upon which many of the Offenders and Traitors have been executed) what hath been published in Print; and above all Coleman's Letters, written with his own Hand, and for that Reason impossible to be falsified; we may justly conclude, that there is not a Man in England, of any Understanding, but must be fully convinced of the Truth of the Plot in general. I shall spare to mention the Resolutions and Declarations of two Parliaments, and of both Houses in those two Parliaments, without (as I remember) one dissenting Voice, expressing their full Satisfaction of the Reality of the Plot: So that I think now none remain that do pretend not to believe it, but two Sorts of Persons; the one, those that were Conspirators in it; and the other, those that wish'd it had succeeded, and desire it may so still.

But, my Lords, I will be the shorter on this Part; for perhaps it will be objected, You have offered a fair Proof of a general Plot, here are Records, Votes of both Houses, Papers and Evidences printed, and Witnesses viva voce to prove it; but what is all this to my Lord Stafford? My Lords, it goes a great Way to him; I do not say to be a convincing Evidence, but to make the particular Evidence against him highly credible.

Your Lordships cannot imagine, that there are such a Store of Lords and great Men amongst that Party (though there be too many) that they should have great Choice for great Offices. Your Lordships hear how the other great Offices were disposed of, and truly I think the Merit of this Lord amongst that Party might very well entitle him to an Office as great as this of Treasurer of War, or Pay-master to the Army. But what is the Evidence of the general Plot (may some still say) to my Lord Stafford? What do you mention the raising an Army? What do you mention the collecting of Money? What do you mention the providing of Arms for? Yes, my Lords, they are very useful, for they give a fair Introduction to prove against this Lord, that he was to have this Office. If it be proved by other Witnesses than those who swore directly against this Lord, That there were Arms provided, that there was an Army to be raised, and the Rest; it proves at least, that there was Occasion for such an Officer as the particular Witness proves my Lord to be.

My Lords, for the other Matter that relates to the Consultations of the Priests and Jesuits, and their Sermons and Discourses, I desire your Lordships to observe that also; which if you do, your Lordships will easily perceive what a great Influence even that Matter hath upon the particular Evidence, and how credible it renders the Testimony of the particular Witnesses. Your Lordships will find, when my Lord was at Tixall (as Dugdale gives you an Account) there was Evers the Jesuit, and other Priests still at my Lord's Elbow, and egging him on to this Business. Your Lordships will find where Oates speaks of him, it is at Fenwick's Chamber, who was a Jesuit, giving him ghostly Council. Your Lordships will find, That at Paris, where Mr. Turberville speaks of him, there were Father Sherborne, Father Nelson, and Father Anthony Turberville. Still the Priests are about my Lord; and when my Lord is among them, or but newly come from them, then he utters the Treason of killing the King. And doubtless this traitorous Purpose of his did arise from their Councils: So that tho' our Witnesses speak of my Lord's Discourses at several Times about about killing the King, yet they make them flow from one and the same Fountain, the Infatigation of the Priests and Jesuits.

But now, my Lords, to come to the particular Evidence, I think I may say, if ever Evidence was convincing, this is so. We have brought three Witnesses which speak each of them that which is sufficient to prove my Lord guilty; and they speak of Overt-Acts too, as I shall observe anon.

His Lordship was pleased at the beginning of our Evidence to desire that the Witnesses might look him in the Face; and for that he cited two Statutes, I suppose he intended the Statutes of 1 & 2 of Edw. VI. which Statutes, or at least one of them, do say, That there shall be in Case of High-Treason, two Witnesses to accuse, and those two Witnesses brought face to face at the Time of Trial: And my Lord hath had the Benefit of those Laws; he hath had two, nay three Witnesses to prove him guilty, brought face to face before your Lordships; and if these three, or any two of them deserve to be credited, my Lord in this Case is guilty of High-Treason. My Lords, I must beg the Favour of looking upon my Paper of Notes; for the truth is, the Witnesses are so many, and the Proceeding hath held so long, that it is impossible for my weak Memory to retain all that was said.

My Lords, the first Witness we began withal was Dugdale; and I know your Lordships did take notice what he swore: but it will be my Duty to remind your Lordships, that he tells you, That he had heard of a general Design of making Preparations to be ready against the King's Death, and this for several Years past. But as to the Matter of hastening the Death of the King, that was but a late Council. He tells you, I think, that about the latter end of August, or the beginning of September 1678, Evers and other Jesuits were at Tixall, that there was a Consult then about the King's Death; and that (by the means of Evers, who was a very great Man among them, but since fled, and is mentioned in the Impeachment) he was admitted to that Consult, and heard particularly what every Man said; and he does take upon him to say, That at that time the Matter of taking away the King's Life was propounded, and that my Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar, did consent to it.

My Lords, he tells you further, That upon a Sunday-Morning my Lord came from Stafford to Tixall to Mass: my Lord was pleased to observe, that we do not prove him a Papist; but we prove my Lord came to Mass, and that, I think, is one good Proof of his being a Papist. Besides Dugdale swears my Lord did then complain, That they had not the free Exercise of their Religion; that they could not say their Prayers openly: What were they? Not the Prayers of Protestants, not those contained in the Liturgy of our Church. He could not complain of any Restraint as to them; but complain he did, that they had not the Free Exercise of their Religion; but he did hope, if Things succeeded well, in a short time it would be otherwise. This is particularly sworn by Dugdale.

My Lords, his Lordship was very much unsatisfied, that Dugdale was not particular in point of time; he did talk of some Matters to be in August or September, but could not fix to any Day. But your Lordships will remember, that as to one Particular, and which mainly concerns his Lordship to answer, he comes to a Day, or within a Day; for he swears positively, That upon the 20th or 21st of September he was sent for to my Lord's Chamber, the Servants were put out; that there my Lord did propose to him, in express Terms, the matter of killing of the King: He would have him be an Actor in it, and he offered him a Reward of 500*l.* to perform it. For this, which is the most material part of his particular Evidence against my Lord, he is certain 'twas either on the 20th or 21st of September; and he tells your Lordships how he comes to remember the time, by a good Token, by the Foot Race that was then to be run; and I do not perceive that my Lord does deny, but rather acknowledge that Dugdale was in his Chamber at that time. 'Tis true he does deny some other Circumstances which I shall answer anon. And here I do think Dugdale undertakes to swear to that which will amount to an Overt-Act, and a damnable one too, that is the offering 500*l.* to kill the King.

But Dugdale (it seems) was not willing to depend upon the Promises of my Lord for so much Money, his Lordship had not that Credit with him; he repairs to Evers, and desires to be satisfied from him, whether he might rely upon my Lord for so much Money? Evers told him he might be sure to have the Money; and that there was enough in Harcourt's and other Mens Hands for the carrying on that blessed Design; and that he should have it thence. I might, my Lords, remember to your Lordships, how Dugdale does particularly swear concerning another Discourse he had afterwards with my Lord; That my Lord complained of the great Losses that had been sustained by him and his Friends for the King; how, in particular, my Lord Asson's Father had lost 30000*l.* and what Repentments my Lord had of it. He said, That Places of Profit were rather bestowed upon those that deserted the King, and were Rebels and Traitors, than on those that did him faithful Service: And what does he conclude from thence? he is very angry with the King, and does say, that next to the Cause of Religion (which was the strongest Motive with him to take away the King's Life) the King's Ingratitude to his loyal Subjects, was that which did most offend him.

I shall not trouble your Lordships with other particular Matters which were to serve as Encouragements to the Design; as that there was to be a Pardon from the Pope; That my Lord did write a Letter to Evers, which was shewn to Dugdale, wherein he says, That things did succeed very well abroad, and he hoped they would do so at home. I shall only observe, that Dugdale's Evidence, as to my Lord's damnable Design of killing the King, is positive and full. And if this be to be believed (as I hope we shall shew there is no Reason but it should be) then here surely is one sufficient Witness to prove my Lord guilty of the highest Treason.

My Lords, the next Witness we call for against my Lord, was Dr. Oates; and I think Dr. Oates is not only positive, but he is positive in that which most certainly will amount to an Overt-Act; nay, I think to more Overt-Acts than one. The Doctor tells your Lordships, That having been at St. Omers and in Spain, he saw several Letters that were subscribed Stafford; he did not then know my Lord's Hand, but he saw the Letters, and he tells you the Effect of those Letters. And I remember in one of them there is this Expression, That my Lord (the Prisoner at the Bar) does give Assurance to the Fathers, that he is very zealous and ready to do them Service.

The Doctor tells you, my Lords, That afterwards coming into England, my Lord Stafford did write a Letter, I think it was to his Son; but sure I am, the Doctor did, he had the Carriage of it to the Post-house; That he saw my Lord write it; he read the Supercription, and he swears, that the Hand which wrote that Letter, was the Hand which subscribed to all the former. And so then joining the one to the other, it amounts to as good an Evidence as if he had known my Lord's Hand from the Beginning.

But that which comes home to my Lord, is that which Dr. Oates saw, and that which Dr. Oates heard: And they are these Particulars which I now mention.

First, he saw a Commission directed to my Lord to be Pay-master of the Army, he saw it delivered to my Lord's own Hand, and my Lord accepted it. Dr. Oates read the Commission, and he tells you by whom it was signed, Johannes Paulus Oliver, a Person substituted by the Pope to issue out Commissions. He tells you the Contents of it, and of this he swears he was an ocular Witness.

He tells you of another Matter he heard my Lord say, as considerable as the other, That when my Lord had received the Commission, my Lord declared, that he was to go down into Staffordshire and Leicestershire, where he was to put Things in Readiness. What were those Things? He had now a Commission, by Virtue of which, in Leicestershire and the other Places, he was to prepare and gather Monies for that Army which he was to pay. So much Dr. Oates doth swear he heard from my Lord's own Mouth.

But there is one thing further, which I had almost forgot. He doth swear, that my Lord was privy to, and approved of, the Matter of killing the King: for he doth swear he did hear my Lord say at that time, He hoped before he returned, honest William (who was Grove that was executed for this Attempt) would have done the Business. And what that Business was, every Man who hath heard of Grove's Treason, must needs understand.

There is but one thing more that I remember of Dr. Oates's Testimony. Your Lordships that have a better Advantage to write than we, who are crowded together, may have taken Notes of more; but this one thing I do observe: Dr. Oates doth expressly swear, That my Lord bore a very ill mind towards his Majesty; for my Lord did, in his hearing, complain, That the King had deceived them a great while, and that they would bear with him no longer, he should deceive them no more.

My Lords, our third Witness was Mr. Turberville, who doth give you an Account, That he being first sent to Dowry, and intended to be entered there in one of the Societies, (he was sent by my Lord Powis and my Lady Powis, and some of his Relations of that Religion, for that Purpose) he did not like the Company, he was not pleased with the Exercises of that Religion, and that with much Difficulty he escaped thence and came for England. But finding he was not well looked upon here, nor well received by his Relations, he went over to France: That being at Paris, he came into the Company of the three Fathers I named before, Father Sherborne, Father Nelson, and Father Turberville; the last whereof, he tells you, was his own Brother: That by the Means of these Priests he was brought acquainted with my Lord Stafford; and doubtless they were able to make him intimately acquainted with my Lord. And it did prove so, for he tells you, after some Time, that in a lower Room of my Lord's Lodging, my Lord proposed to him the Business of killing the King. That he did not at all like it, was very unwilling to undertake it, but my Lord bid him consider of it, and that he should give him his Answer at Diep, having enjoined him Secrecy; but my Lord after sent him word he would go by Calais; and the Witnesses afterwards went into England, and from thence into the French Army: And this is the Substance of what Turberville deposeth.

And, my Lords, I think it will not be doubted by any Man that will consider these three Mens Testimonies, but that here are two Witnesses, if not more, to prove my Lord guilty of Treason.

But my Lord has been pleased against them to make several Objections; some have been by Witnesses which he hath produced to encounter the Proofs that we have offered; and some of them have been by Observations that he hath made upon what hath been said by our Witnesses and his. I will keep to Order as much as I can, and not confound the Order and Method of his Defence.

The Witnesses he first brought were against Dugdale, and of them his Lordship was pleased to begin with his Daughter, the Lady Marchioness of Winchester, and his Niece Mrs. Howard. Your Lordships, I presume, are pleased to observe what they were called to. They did testify, that being at Wakeman's Trial, they did hear Dugdale swear (says my Lady Marchioness of Winchester) that my Lord Stafford was to come down into Staffordshire in June or July, and Mr. Dugdale was then to receive Orders from my Lord; and he swore (as she was pleased to say) that there was a Consult in August at Tixall, and my Lord Stafford was there present. Mrs. Howard (for I put them together) was pleased to say that she was present at that Trial, and there Dugdale swore that my Lord Stafford did come down in June or July, and that my Lord was at the Consult in August.

My Lords, I will not make Objections neither to the Religion of these Ladies, nor to their Relation to my Lord, though those be Matters that are to be considered. But that which I shall observe to your Lordships, is this, That they do not agree one with another: For my Lady Winchester says Dugdale did swear that my Lord was to come down in June or July, and Mrs. Howard says, that he swore he did come down then. Now there is a great Difference betwixt swearing an Intention that a Man was to come down, and swearing the very Act that he did come down at that Time. By which your Lordships may observe, how hard a Matter it is for Witnesses that are present at a Trial (especially at a Trial which did not directly, though it might in consequence concern another Person of their Relation) to take Notice exactly of Things.

And truly, my Lords, these Ladies being of that Religion, might have so much Concern upon them for Sir George Wakeman the Popish Physician, and in him for other their Friends of that Party, that they might not have so much Liberty of Thought, as to observe exactly all Circumstances sworn to by the Witnesses; and therefore it is no great Matter if they are mistaken in them. But I believe if any one do consult the Print (though it be no Evidence, nor offered as such) he will find no such Thing was at that Time sworn; for it is not so printed, and those that took Notes did not understand it so.

My

My Lords, the next Witness my Lord is pleased to bring, is his Servant Furness; and what is it that he testifieth? He saith, that he was with my Lord the whole time that Dugdale was in my Lord's Chamber; and he doth not remember that ever Dugdale was there but once, and he doth not remember that ever my Lord bid him go out of the Room.

My Lords, It is a very hard Matter for a Man to come thus in the Negative, to remember how often Dugdale was there, especially there being no more Occasion to take Notice of it then, than here appears to be, and that after so long a Time. And it is a very hard Matter for a Servant to gain Credit, by saying his Master never bid him go out of the Room in his Life. These things may be done or said, and yet escape the Memory of a Servant of more Age, and of less Inclination to favour his Master, than this Person appears to be of and to have. Therefore I think there will be but a very small Matter made of what he said, no Force at all in it; and I believe your Lordships will give very little Regard to it; but rather believe those Witnesses that swear positively, that they have seen him with my Lord, and speak to a Familiarity at that time between them.

This young Man, Furness, was my Lord's Servant, and of his Religion; and it is considerable, whether we have not reason to be afraid that more than ordinary Practice has been used to prepare Evidence on my Lord's Behalf, which I shall have Occasion to speak to when I come to the other Witnesses.

His next Witness, my Lords, was his Boy, George Leigh, who is 15 Years of Age now, and was eight Years old when he came to my Lord seven Years ago. And he attests the same thing, and to the same Purpose with the other. And I think I may leave him with the same Answer, for we are nothing more concerned with him than we were with the other. Only one thing I would observe, to shew that his Memory was imperfect; he doth not remember that Dugdale was with my Lord at all that Day, which my Lord himself doth acknowledge he was, and the other Witness agrees; so that there cannot be any great Weight laid upon what he saith.

My Lord's next Witness was Thomas Sawyer, and he is one of my Lord Aston's Servants, that I desire to observe of him first. And what does he say? He saith, That Dugdale went away for Debt. The contrary to which was apparently proved; for we, by our Witnesses, made it manifest, that Dugdale went away for the Matter of the Plot; the Fear and Dread he was in upon that Score, and the Circumstance of his being apprehended by the Watch at Night in his Flight, and how he was put to take the Oaths, do manifestly prove this. But he says another thing, which I desire may have no Weight with your Lordships, That Dugdale should threaten, that because my Lord Aston would not own him for his Servant, he would be revenged of him. Truly, if my Lord Aston were here to be tried, it would have some Weight. But to think, if it were true, that he had so sworn, that therefore he would be so wicked as to do Mischief to another Man, that he would be revenged of every Man of that Religion, or of every Man that came to my Lord Aston's House; that cannot be imagined. So I cannot see what great Surety, my Lords, the Prisoner can lay upon it, as to the present Trial, which concerns my Lord Stafford.

But, my Lords, I desire to observe, that he says further, That when Dugdale went away there was a Discourse of a Plot (this he helps out Dugdale in): And that there was a Discourse of the killing of a Justice of Peace. So that certainly it does shew, that Dugdale was apprehensive of the Plot. And as to that which he is pleased to say, That Dugdale should deny his Knowledge of the Plot, and take Drink, and with Exclamations forswear it; it will be no Manner of Objection at all. For I shall have Occasion to shew hereafter, that Dugdale at that time was very far from revealing the Plot he had been so long engaged in; he was in Apprehension of the Danger of his own Life, and Southall tells you how and when he revealed it, and by what Inducements he was prevailed upon to do it.

The next Witness my Lord called, was Philips, the Minister of Tixall; and truly all that I can accuse him of, is want of Memory, and that is no Fault in a Man, that perhaps is very studious and careful in his Employment, as I hope he is. He tells you, That whereas Dugdale swore at a former Trial, that he acquainted Mr Philips with the Death of a Justice of Peace of Westminster on the Monday, that he did not acquaint him with it; that is, he does not remember it, for no Man that swears a Negative, can swear more. But whether Mr Philips's Evidence be of any Consequence to us, we submit to your Lordships Consideration; when we oppose to his want of Memory, two Witnesses that swear he was by when this News was told: And we are told likewise, as a Confirmation of that, by two Gentlemen of Quality, that the Report of such a Thing was spread abroad all over that Country, before it was possible for it to come by the way of ordinary Intelligence. Whether, therefore, what Mr Philips testifies, proceeds from any other Cause than want of Memory in Mr Philips, I must leave to your Lordships Consideration.

But this I would observe to your Lordships, that when Mr Philips was asked by my Lord, whether or no Dugdale were a Person likely to perjure himself, he could not say so? Nay, being asked of what Reputation he was of? he said, by some he was very well spoken of, by some but indifferently; but I do not remember that he said he was ill spoken of by any. So I think Mr Philips has rather advanced than prejudiced Mr Dugdale's Reputation and Credit.

My Lords, I think I may lightly pass over the three Justices of Peace that were brought to give an Account of Dugdale's Behaviour before them, and not mention them distinctly, because they swear all to the same Purpose, That Mr Dugdale was apprehended upon Suspicion of the Plot, that he took the Oaths, that he was invited and urged by them to make a Discovery of the Plot, which he then denied to have any Knowledge of: For all this will be answered, when we come to remind your Lordships of Mr Southall's Testimony.

His Lordship was pleased, in the next Place, to offer to prove Dugdale an ill Man, by endeavouring to suborn Witnesses: And in the first Place he called Robinson, who testified a very unlikely thing, that Mr Dugdale should call him in the Street, and bring him to an House, and offer him Money to swear against my Lord Stafford; which Money he had in an Handkerchief, but did not tell him what Particulars he should swear to: Nay, and this after he had told him he could swear nothing. And it does not appear, that Dugdale had any Manner of Knowledge of him, or that this Gentleman, Robinson, had any Knowledge of my Lord Stafford: So that it was a very rash and presumptuous Thing, that Dugdale should attempt a Man that he knew not; and a very imprudent Thing, that he should suborn a Witness to swear against a Man that the Witnesses to be suborned did not know. But I shall say no more of him, because I think upon the Account that has been given of him by a noble Earl of this House, and an honourable Member of the House of Commons, if he had said things in themselves probable, he is not in the least to be believed.

My Lord's next Witness upon the same Head of Subornation, was one Murrel, a poor Barber; and what says he? He testifies that Mr Dugdale did offer him 50*l.* to swear again: Sir James Symons and some others. My Lords, Whether this be probable or no, we must leave to your Lordships. We have called Witnesses that prove him a Man of no Reputation, one that runs up and down the Country, a Kind of Vagabond, and I think (upon the Endeavours that have been proved to have been used as to others), it is no very hard Matter to bring a Man of his Condition to say as much as he hath done.

The next Witness is Samuel Holt, the Blacksmith; and he tells such a Story, that if it were true, would be some Disparagement to Dugdale: And what is that? He says, That Dugdale sent a Man and Horse for him, to bring him to the Star in Stafford; and there offered him 40*l.* to swear that one Moore carried away Evers. My Lords, How this Story comes in, I cannot imagine; why Mr Dugdale should bear any Ill-will to Moore, or what should induce him to intice this Man to swear against Moore, or what else was in it, it doth not appear. But no Matter what it was for; we prove against this Man, by two Witnesses, Rawlins and Lander; by the first, that he is a Man of ill Reputation, very zealous to support the Plot, and cry down Mr Dugdale, saying, that he was a Rogue, and all they were Rogues that took Part with him. And by the other Witness Lander, that Holt did make an Assault upon him, and would have killed him for being ready to appear against my Lord Aston at his intended Trial: So that he is a Man that has more Zeal than Honesty: Zeal in no good Matter, namely, to hinder the Truth from coming out against my Lord Aston; and therefore we have little Reason to wonder, nay, all the Reason in the World to believe, that he says that which is untrue about Mr Dugdale.

My Lords, There was another Witness, Mr Lydcott, that said, he was a Fellow of King's-College in Cambridge. He has offered no Proofs that he was so; and truly it is very improbable he should be so: For I hope Fellowships in the University, especially in one of the chief Colleges (as this is) are bestowed upon more deserving, and less suspicious Persons than he appears to be: A Man that owns himself the continual Companion and Secretary of one so famous in the Popish Party as my Lord Caslemain is: A Man that pretends he was never out of his Company; and a Man that owns, that two Years since, he was taking of Notes at a Trial for this Plot, not only for his own Curiosity, but for the Service of his Lord, who was concerned in the Accusation: That this Man should be a Fellow of King's-College, seems strange, and till it be better proved, will hardly be believed, nor will he deserve any Credit. It is true, he doth acknowledge himself a Protestant, and to be of the Church of England, and educated, as he says, a Presbyterian; but when he was asked, When he received the Sacrament last? I do not remember that he gave your Lordships any Answer.

This Witness says, That he was at the Trial of the five Jesuits; and there Dugdale did swear, that he gave Notice to Mr Philips and Mr Sambidge of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's Death: And this they would make to be a great Fault in Dugdale, because neither Philips nor Sambidge remember it. Now whether Dugdale swore true in that or no, does not depend upon Dugdale's own Credit alone; but you have heard other Witnesses have made it appear, that he did swear true: So that we need not say any thing more to this Witness, nor to Gifford, who testifies to the same Purpose; because that Point, as to the Report of the Death of the Justice of Peace, is by other Witnesses clearly proved.

And as to Mr Sambidge, I do not wonder much, that he should say he did not hear it, because he could hardly hear what was said to him by the Court, or any of the Officers set near him on Purpose. But my Lords, I desire your Lordships to take Notice, that he was a very angry Witness; he said, he had formerly had a Controversy with Dugdale, that Dugdale had cited him into Lichfield-Court, and had there a Suit against him for a Defamation; and he said that against Dugdale, which, unless better proved, must needs make Sambidge much suspected: He said, that Dugdale was the wickedest Man on Earth; but what Proof he offered of that, or whether he did instance in any one Particular, I leave to your Lordships Memories.

My Lords, There is another Proof relating to Mr Dugdale, not out of the Mouth of a Witness, but out of a Paper, which I desire to give an Answer to. It was an Objection the Prisoner at the Bar was pleased to make to Dugdale's Information, taken the 24th of December, 1678, before the Justices in the Country, wherein he had said to this Purpose; Presently after one Howard, Almoner to the Queen, went over, he was told by George Hobson, that there was a Design, &c. This, saith my Lord, is most impossible to be true: For you say, that immediately after the Almoner was gone away, Hobson told you this, whereas Hobson went away with the Almoner; and he came not to live with my Lord Aston till many Years afterwards.

This my Lord is pleased to offer as a Falsification of Dugdale's Testimony; but, my Lords, I do desire to observe, that this is an Information taken before two Justices of Peace in the Country; and if you look upon it, you will see it was written by a Country Clerk, and not very skillfully done. 'Tis rather short Notes of an Examination, than a compleat Examination. And your Lordships will please likewise to observe, that there is not really an Expression that is clear one way or the other, but capable of two Senses; that is to say, either it may import Hobson told him there was a Design ever since the Almoner Howard went away; or it may import, Hobson told him presently after the Almoner went away, there was a Design. Read but the Words with a different Comma, and it makes the Sense one way or t'other. Now it is plain, Dugdale could not intend that Hobson told him so as soon as the Almoner went away, because Hobson went away with the Almoner. And it was better to his Purpose, that Hobson should tell him so after his Return than before, for that shews the Design had been long a carrying on.

Therefore it being a doubtful Expression, that may refer either to the Time he told it him, or to the Matter he told him of; and being taken in the latter Sense, the Objection faileth; I think this Matter can have no Weight at all in it to falsify a positive Testimony.

My Lords, The next Witness we did call, and which was objected against by my Lord, was Dr. Oates; and truly I must observe, that his Lordship was not pleased to call any one Witness materially to falsify Dr. Oates's Testimony; and I must likewise observe, that Dr. Oates is, in the Material Part of his Evidence, supported by other Evidence.

When Dr. Oates gave Evidence at former Trials, it was the common Discourse of the Men of that Religion, that Dr. Oates had never been in Spain, nor had ever any Credit with the Priests or Jesuits, but was a mean contemptible Person, and that all he said was improbable. But now your Lordships have heard that Dr. Oates, even by the Testimony of Dennis a Popish Priest, (that is so to this Day) was in Spain, was, according to what he saith, brought up in the College of the Jesuits; that he was in such Esteem there, that the Archbishop of Tuam commended him very much in the Presence of Dennis, and spoke of what Expectation there was of him. So that Dennis the Priest doth support Dr. Oates in some Parts of his Evidence. I do not speak of that Part of it which concerns this particular Lord, but of his Testimony touching the general Plot.

There is another Thing wherein Dr. Oates is supported by another Witness, and that is the Esteem and Intimacy he had with the Jesuits. For Mr. Jenison swears, that Dr. Oates was a Man in Esteem among them, that he was at Ireland's Chamber, and had discourse with Ireland, and did appear to be frequently employed by them. And I take these two Witnesses to be a great Support to Dr. Oates, as to the general Matters which he evidenceth of the Plot.

What now doth my Lord object against Dr. Oates? He called no Witnesses against him, but only an Honourable Earl of this House, I think I may name him, the Earl of Berkeley: And that which his Lordship was pleased to testify against him, was;

Obj. That being examined at the House of Lords after he had given a long Evidence against many Persons, he was asked this Question, Whether there were any more Persons of Quality he could speak against, or could accuse? and he said no.

Ans. First, your Lordships will be pleased to observe, that this was after he had accused my Lord Stafford; my Lord was secured in the Tower long before that, upon Dr. Oates's Testimony, and so he could not exclude this Lord. But that which it is brought for (I suppose) is to make him a Person of no Credit; for after he had said this, he proceeded to an Accusation of the Queen. My Lords, I humbly conceive this may receive a very fair Answer. For,

First, my Lords, I appeal to your Lordships Memories (for, I think, the Matter was before you all, or at leastwise before some of your Lordships), that the Accusation which Dr. Oates made of the Queen was not positive, nor of his own certain Knowledge; but Words which he heard spoken in a Room in which he was not himself, but coming in afterwards, he saw the Queen was there. So it was not positive, but circumstantial Proof, and questionable whether what he testified would amount to the Proof of one Witness.

And I must observe in the second Place, it might not be so clear to Dr. Oates, whether the Queen were a Person capable of an Accusation, so as to be proceeded criminally against; the King and the Queen are to some Purposes but one Person in Law. 'Tis true, some Queens have been tried for Treason; but whether Dr. Oates understood that she might be brought to a Trial, may be a Question.

But that which I rely upon as an Answer, and which I desire may be considered, is, that Dr. Oates had given an Account of a great many Persons, and a great many Things he had sworn against several Persons, some of which were executed, some to be tried; and his Narrative against them, and of the whole Plot, consisted of a great Number of Particulars. Here is a Question comes to the Doctor on a sudden, Have you any more to say, or can you speak against any other? 'Tis possible a Man that had said so much, and of so many, might not upon an instant recollect whether he had said all, or against all that he could say: Nay, 'tis easily to be imagined he could not on a sudden comprehend all he had said or could say. Therefore that the Answer of a Man to such a Question, put suddenly to him, having so much in his Mind, and having said so much, should be taken so very strictly, and to hold him as perjured, because he did not at that instant Time remember this Particular of the Queen, I think is a severe Construction.

His Lordship is pleased further to object against Dr. Oates, that he is of no Credit: Why? Because he went to be of the Romish Religion, and so was of that Religion which is Idolatry: I suppose his Lordship will not call that Religion Idolatry another Time, and in another Place: But it serves his Lordship upon this particular Occasion, to call it so. But suppose Dr. Oates did, out of Levity, or for want of being well grounded in his own, turn to another Religion, he is not the first Man that hath done so: There have been Men of great Fame in our Church, and of great Learning too, that have changed their Religion more than once. I think he that knew that famous Man Mr. Chillingworth, could not but know he was first a Protestant, and afterwards a Papist, and afterwards a Protestant again: So that unless my Lord could accuse the Doctor of some great Crime or Immorality, it will be hard, that the Matter of changing his Religion should hurt his Testimony. I am sure, it was happy for us he did change; without that, we had not had the first Knowledge of the Plot, nor of many particulars which he could not come to know but by Occasion of that Change.

My Lord was pleased to object, that the Doctor was a Man subject to Passion; and he brought in the Lieutenant of the Tower to speak of some hot Words that passed between them. My Lords, I will allow the Doctor to be a Man of Passion; nay, if my Lord please, a Man that is not of the deepest Reach: But your Lordships will observe, that passionate Men are not often malicious; and that a Man who is not of a deep Judgment, could never have contrived and invented a Narrative, consisting of so many Particulars, and they so coherent, if they were false. And if his Narrative be not true, he must be endued with more Subtlety and wicked Policy, than upon Trial we can find in him. So that what my Lord hath objected as to his Infirmities, is no Diminution to the Truth of what he says, but rather a Confirmation of it.

My Lords, The last Witness whom my Lord endeavoured to impeach is Mr. Turberville; and against him my Lord thinks he hath a great Advantage: But, my Lords, by that Time I have reminded your Lordships of what hath been already said, and what was before proved in answer to my Lord's Objections against him, Mr. Turberville will stand as clear in this Court, as any of the former Witnesses.

Your Lordships will be pleased to take Notice, That Mr. Turberville was at the Beginning, when he came to the House of Commons, a little uncertain as to Matter of Time: For when he had made in his Affidavit, the Times to be (73) and (76), he craved leave to alter it to (72) and (75). Surely, my Lords, this will be far from being any Imputation to Mr. Turberville; because, first he gives the Reason, how he came afterwards to understand the Time better, by viewing his Papers and Letters; he likewise gives you an Account, and so did Sir William Poulteney, when he did this, the next Morning, before any Man in the World had questioned him upon it. So that it shews the Man's Care and Conscience both, when he is so careful, even in Matters of the smallest Moment, to set things right.

There is no Man that knows the Practice of the Court of Chancery, but knows, that for a Man to mend his Answer after it is sworn in a Point of Time, or other Circumstance, is no Disparagement to him: Nay, to do it, before the other Party did except or take Notice of it, is no Objection, but rather a Reputation to him: And your Lordships will be pleased to take Notice, that one of the Times rectified, is of 7 or 8 Years, the other of 4 Years standing. And I do not think the worse of a Witness that is not positive in a Time, when that Time is so far elapsed.

The next Matter is, That this Man was never with my Lord: How was that proved, for 'tis a Negative? Why, my Lord is pleased to call his own Servants, Furness, and the Boy Leigh; and what say they? They never saw any such Man. My Lords, I desire your Lordships to observe, That Mr. Turberville was introduced by greater Confidants than either of these Servants. Mr. Turberville came in the Company of the Priests, and you hear the Boy deny that he knew Anthony Turberville, but not that he knew Father Turberville; nor doth my Lord himself deny it, nor doth either Master or Man deny my Lord's Correspondency with the other two Fathers. And it might be very easy for Mr. Turberville to come in the Company of the Priests, and the Boy not take particular Notice of him. And 'tis as little an Objection what my Lord says, that Turberville himself said he did not know the Boy: How many are there that come to the Houses of another, and unless they lodge there, or dine there often, do not remember the Servants of the House? And 'tis no greater an Objection to say, the Servants did not know him: The Priests they knew him; they were his Guides; they were the likeliest to gain him Admittance, not only into my Lord's House, but into my Lord's Heart.

My Lords, your Lordships will be pleased likewise to observe, They have also gone about in very little Matters to disprove Mr. Turberville; as that whereas he says, he was not well used by my Lord Powis and his Lady, when he returned from Downey, that he was very well used: And as one Witness (I think Minehead) says, he was permitted to lie in a Room near my Lord's Chamber. My Lords, Mr. Turberville does not pretend to say, that my Lord Powis shut him out of Doors; but what Reproaches or unkind Words might pass between them in private, Minehead might not hear: So that to say, that he lay in my Lord's House, is no Answer to this Matter. And for the other Witness (his Brother) that speaks of his Kindred's being kind to him, that, under Favour, does not at all disprove him; for, what was the Kindness? His Brother and Sister were so kind as to give him 7*l.* never to see him more; a great Matter, when a younger Brother lies upon a Family, that the trouble of his Stay there is redeemed at the Price of 7*l.* This was a very great Kindness, a Kindness indeed that one would scarce deny to a Stranger, if in Poverty. I mention the least Matters I can remember, because I would have nothing stick with your Lordships.

Then Secretary Lydcott (the Fellow of King's-College) was called again; but indeed, my Lords, he was so out in his Arithmetick, so mistaken in the Year, and used the New Stile (the Romish) so much more than ours, that it makes me suspect he is not so great a Protestant as he pretends to be. He promised us his Book, which he was not then prepared to produce; but because we do not hear of him, nor of his Book since, we say no more of him.

My Lords, John Porter, my Lord Powis's Butler, comes next, and what does he tell your Lordships? Why, that Mr. Turberville came not to Powis House, (it seems he did not appear there) but that he came to a Victualling House hard by; and he telling Turberville he must know something of the Plot, he denied that he knew any Thing. To the same Purpose, or rather to less, and more improbably, does Yalden (the Gentleman of Gray's-Inn, as he calls himself) testify, who says, that walking in Gray's-Inn Walks, he had a Discourse with Turberville; and that he then swore, there was no Trade good now but that of a Discoverer; and damned himself because he could make no Discovery. Truly, my Lords, this looks in itself to be something prepared for the Purpose: It is not probable, that a Man that should use those horrid Oaths, and should have such a Mind to be a Discoverer, should disable himself ever to be so by swearing he knew nothing.

But I will not only answer that Matter, with saying 'tis improbable; but I shall desire your Lordships to remember, that Mr. Powel, a Gentleman of the same House, and of good Reputation, does swear, that Turberville did acquaint him, that he could discover a considerable Matter; and this was above a Year since. And Mr. Arnold, a Member of the House of Commons, does confirm it, that he did several Times acquaint him, that he could make an important Discovery; and gave him several Reasons why he thought not fit to do it at that Time, because of the Dangers which might arise from some great Men; and therefore till he had a more convenient Opportunity, he would not discover. But as soon as the Parliament sat, very early he did begin to discover: So that I shall oppose the Testimony of Mr. Powel and Mr. Arnold, to the Testimony of my Lord Powis's Butler and Mr. Yalden; the latter of whom speaks so improbably, and of a Discourse half a Year ago; whereas Mr. Powel speaks of what Mr. Turberville said above a Year since, and Mr. Arnold of a longer Time.

My Lords, It hath been sometimes objected, that Mr. Turberville was a Stranger to my Lord; and it was too great a trust to commit to a Stranger, too great a Secret for a Stranger to be acquainted with: My Lord's Delig-of the King's Death was too great a Matter to lodge with one, with whom my Lord had no more Acquaintance than he had with Turberville.

Your Lordships will be pleased to observe who they were that did introduce him, and who probably gave the best Character of him; they were the three Priests: And I do not wonder when these Priests had brought my Lord up to such a Purpose, that they should prevail with his Lordship to give Credit to, and deal with a Man that was not very unlike in his Circumstances to attempt such a Business: For your Lordships will observe, he was a Man that was very stout; for against my Lord's Reflection upon him as to Cowardice in deserting the Army, Mr. Turberville hath produced the Certificate of his Dismission, which gives him a very good Character. Besides, he was a Man indigent; and therefore I think there could not be a fitter Man chosen for the Purpose, if he had been so void of all Grace as to undertake it; and that Priests having gotten a Man so qualified, as they thought him, were not likely to let slip such an Opportunity.

But, my Lords, to come to that which is the Sum of the Business, and which my Lord lays more Weight on than all the rest; and that is the Affidavit which Mr. Turberville swore before the Justices of the Peace (which was, in Effect, what he informed the House of Commons), and in that Affidavit, besides his Alteration of Times (which I have spoken to already) it is objected, that he does say that which is manifestly untrue: For he says my Lord came by the Way of Calais, with Count Gramont; neither of which my Lord did do.

My Lords, I will not mention the Master of the Yacht, nor the Witnesses from the Admiralty, which make out, that my Lord came from Diep, and not from Calais. Nor do I deny that my Lord came by himself, and not with Count Gramont; and therefore 'tis most certainly true, that what Turberville swore, as to those two Particulars, was not true. Yet if your Lordships please to observe the Circumstances, tho' what he swore herein was not true, it will appear a very innocent Mistake.

For in Turberville's Affidavit he tells your Lordships, That he came away without my Lord to Diep, and came from Diep to England before my Lord Stafford left Paris. Mr. Turberville tells you afterwards my Lord came from Calais with Count Gramont: Mr. Turberville could not possibly be thought to speak this of his own Knowledge, because he does in the same Affidavit tell you too, that he came away before my Lord, and had not his Passage with him. So that, my Lords, I desire you would observe, it could be no Design of his to affirm this of his own Knowledge: For if it were, he took a very ill Course to disclose in the same Affidavit that he was absent, and so could not speak of his own Knowledge. And, my Lords, suppose a Man did swear such a Man and he were in such Company, and that he came Home and left the Man there, and that afterwards the Man said such and such Things in that Company; what should I say of this Oath? I might well say the Words of his Oath were not proper, or that he was unwary in expressing himself; but I could not say, nor would any Man justly be able to say, he had a Design to make the World believe he heard him say so, because he swears in the same Breath, he came away before the Words were spoken. If Mr. Turberville had understood how strict and nice a Man ought to be in expressing himself in an Affidavit, he would have said (as he had been told) my Lord came to Calais; and that Count Gramont came with him, as he understood. 'Tis true, he hath not put in those Words; but I beseech you, when the Matter itself will bear it, nay, when 'tis most apparent, that Mr. Turberville could have no other meaning than to relate what he was informed by others, and what he could not know himself; what Corruption, what Obliquity can there be in this Oath? All that can be said, is, it was not cautiously worded; but it does certainly disclose so much in itself, that every one that hears it must say, That he did not take upon himself to swear it as of his own Knowledge, because he tells you he was not there; so that it was rather want of Knowledge how to express himself properly, than any Corruption in his Oath, of forswearing himself.

But, says my Lord, how should he come to know this? Why Mr. Turberville said, he had a Letter whereby he knew my Lord would come by the Way of Calais: But where is that Letter? Is it necessary to keep, or does any Man almost keep Letters of no greater Concernment than this, that my Lord writ him Word how he would go by the Way of Calais, and this after five Years, and after he was in the Wars, and where I have heard he was taken Prisoner? To be sure, he was much tumbled up and down from Place to Place. And under all these Circumstances might not such a Letter be lost? But, my Lords, I beseech you, are there not some Proofs that look much this Way, made out by another Witness? Does not Mr. Mort tell you something of this Nature? First, he agrees as to the Matter of an English Lord lying about such a Street in Paris, he tells you he was with Mr. Turberville, and that he himself walked about Luxembourg-House whilst Mr. Turberville went to speak with that English Lord: He does say, he believes his Name was my Lord Stafford, but he is not positive; and the Times which he speaks of do agree with what Mr. Turberville deposes. And there is one Thing, which, though I should not mention upon any other Occasion, because it was but a foolish Joke, yet I shall crave leave to speak of it now. He tells you, That one Day, while they were at Diep in Expectation of my Lord's coming, and hearing that he went another Way, they had this Piece of minute Wit upon it, Cursed is he that relies upon a broken Staff: Whereby, he thinks, was meant the Name of Stafford. So then, I beseech you, if Mort say true, are not here Footsteps, and a Foundation whereon to ground a Belief, that there was a Correspondence between Turberville and my Lord; and that Mr. Turberville had an Information, that my Lord would come by the Way of Calais? And one Thing more Mort says, That Turberville told him, if he would make Haste to Calais, he might go over with my Lord. And here I would observe, how should Mr. Turberville come to know that my Lord went that Way? And how should he tell Mort that he might go over with my Lord from Calais, unless he had received some such information? Therefore, my Lords, taking into Consideration what is confirmed by Mort, and taking into Consideration the whole Scope of the Affidavit, I cannot see that there can be any material Objection against Mr. Turberville for saying, that my Lord came by Calais in the Company of Count Gramont.

My Lords, I have done now with the Witnesses, and I told you, as I went along, (because I would not trouble you with a double Repetition) what Evidence we have given in Contradiction to those Witnesses which my Lord hath brought in order to defame our Witnesses.

But, my Lords, I am to acquaint you, That besides these particular Answers, your Lordships have had Men of very great Credit brought to testify the Reputation of Mr. Dugdale and Mr. Turberville. As to Mr. Dugdale, we have brought Men that have known him a great while; one hath sworn what Opinion even my Lord Aston himself had of him: For it seems he lived with so much Credit there, that he would not believe any Ill of him. You have heard from other Witnesses how he did behave himself. It was objected sometimes, Tradesmen were not paid; but what then? can a Man pay without Money? I believe there are some Lords here, whose Stewards are very honest Men, and yet the Tradesmen such Lords deal with are not always readily paid.

He was, as you observe, believed to be in the Plot, and my Lord's Servants say he seemed much troubled about it; he went away upon that account, and was so much concerned, that he burnt his Papers, which I make use of for two Purposes, The one to shew that he did apprehend he was in great Danger; the other to shew what was the Reason why the Letters and Papers he speaks of are not now produc'd; because he look'd upon himself, and them who were then his Friends, to be in such Danger by them, that he burnt them.

My Lords, I know your Lordships will take notice, that there hath been a very good Account given you, how it was that Dugdale came to be prevailed upon to make a Discovery of the Plot; it was with great Difficulty; there were indeed Persuasions used by some of his Friends to bring him to it. The Justices, as they themselves have sworn, endeavour'd the same thing, but all without Success. Then the Coroner, Mr. Southall, (who tho' he was no great, yet seems to be a very understanding Man) takes him in Hand, and he had the good Fortune to succeed. I call it Good, not only for Mr. Dugdale, but for the Nation. I shall not trouble your Lordships with the Particulars of the Arguments Mr. Southall used to him, but 'tis plain (if you believe Mr. Southall, whose Credit is now supported by an honourable Lord, and by a Member of the House of Commons) that Dugdale did at the first Time that he did make a Discovery, depose as much in Substance against this Lord, as now he does. And from thence I desire to make one Observation, and that is this:

'Twas impossible it could be a Contrivance among the Witnesses themselves to depose the same Crimes against this Lord; for Dr. Oates never knew Mr. Dugdale, till Dugdale was brought up, which was long after Dr. Oates's Accusation of this Lord; nor could Dugdale know what Evidence Oates had given here, for Dugdale was a close Prisoner in Stafford Goal before Oates accused this Lord, and long after. And yet the first Evidence Dugdale gives against this Lord, doth in Substance concur with that given by Dr. Oates. So that since there could be no Intercourse nor Conference between them, but as much Distance as from the Prison-Doors in Stafford to London, there could be no Contrivance between them, for both of them to accuse this Lord of the same Matters. And this I desire may be looked upon by your Lordships as a Matter of great Weight to support the Credit of the whole Evidence. And Dugdale does seem to be a Person of an unquestionable Credit, and every one that hears him must observe, he does give his Evidence with great Modesty, and all Probability of Truth.

There is another thing, my Lords, that I would pray your Lordships to observe, These Witnesses, Mr. Dugdale and Dr. Oates, do give such an Evidence as is impossible to be given, unless it were true; for other Witnesses when they are put out of the Road, and asked Questions they did not expect, are commonly to seek, and must pump for an Answer, and then answer with great Difficulty and Wariness. But these two Witnesses do not only answer with Readiness when you ask them any Questions, but what is contained in every new Answer doth add a further Probability and Confirmation to what they said before. And I must needs say of them, I think it were impossible for any Men in the World to contrive a Story of so many Particulars, and so consistent in every part of it, and yet the same should be false; and which is more, after so many Trials, not one material Circumstance of what they say contradicted by any solid Proof.

My Lords, There may be other Particulars which I may have forgotten; I know not whether I observed that my Lord objected that we do not prove him a Papist: I hinted something before about his coming to Mass to my Lord Aston's at Tixall, which is one sort of Proof of his being of the Romish Religion. Besides his perpetual Conversation with that Party, and his Endeavours to promote their Religion and Designs, all which have been fully proved: I think also my Lord deserted the House of Peers, for that he would not take the Test appointed by the late Act; your Lordships best know whether he did so or no. But, my Lords, let him, if he will be a Protestant for this time; let that be suppos'd: If he were a Protestant, and should be guilty of the Offences proved upon him, he would not deserve more Favour from your Lordships.

My Lord hath been likewise pleas'd in further Proof of his Innocency to alledge, that after the Plot was discovered, he had seven Posts time to have escaped, and yet never fled. My Lords, 'Tis true he might have fled, so might Coleman too; that Coleman that left so fatal an Evidence against himself and all his Party under his own Hand, and for that had reason to believe himself very guilty: And so might the Jesuits have escap'd too, but that they had hopes the Oath of Secrecy, and the Means they had used to conceal their damnable Designs, would have been a sufficient Security against revealing it. They had that Opinion of their Priests, and of the Fidelity and Constancy of those that had been seduc'd by them, and recommended by them, that they apprehended nothing less than a Discovery. And those other Persons that were executed, did all stay about the Town after the Plot was discovered, as well as this Lord stay'd in the Country.

My Lord did very much complain, that our Witnesses were not positive in point of Time: I think Dugdale was positive enough as to the time of the Offer of 500*l*. but for other Matters, he would not confine himself to a Month: He talk'd of the latter End of one Month, and the Beginning of another, another, I think he is the more to be believed; for I conceive, unless a Witness hath some notorious Circumstance in his Memory to satisfy him about the Certainty of the Time (such as was that of the Foot-Race, as to the Time of the Offer of 500*l.*) it is rather a Mark of Presumption than of Sincerity for a Witness to be too positive as to the Time. And is there so great a Distance between the latter End of one Month, and the Beginning of another, that a Witness need to be positive as to the very Day? But, says my Lord, You talk of the Beginning; it was the 12th of September ere I came thither. Does not every Man count, that till the Middle of a Month 'tis the Beginning of a Month? Sure in common Speech it is so. Therefore I look upon that as a Matter scarce worth the mentioning; I am sure, not worth the serious answering.

But, my Lords, I must observe thus much, That what my Lord complains of as a Fault in our Witnesses, his own Witnesses are guilty of. For I appeal to your Lordships, when they came to speak of Times, whether they did not talk at a Distance of a Month or Months, and sometimes of Years, and were less certain in Point of Time than ours.

But, says my Lord (for I am still answering his Objections, and you must take them as I find them), here is Mention made by Dr. Oates of Letters, of many Letters; shew me some of those Letters: Shew me the Letter you carried to the Post-house. My Lords, were those Letters written to Dr. Oates? Did they belong to him? Or is it possible that my Lord's Letter delivered by the Doctor to the Post-house, should now be shewn by the Doctor, or that the Letters writ to the Superior of the Society of the Jesuits, should be produced by one that was a Novice of that Society? Does Dr. Oates talk of one Letter written to himself? You will then, I suppose, see no Reason to expect those Letters should be produced by him that were not written to him, and the Custody whereof belonged to others.

My Lords, I must observe to you, that there have been great Endeavours used to invalidate our Testimony; we have had Witnesses called against Witnesses, and my Lord hath had that Advantage to do it, which perhaps was never given in any Case before, and which I hope will never be again. The Evidence hath been printed and published to the World, before it hath been given. I say not that it was not necessary in this Case, which was a National Cause, and the Cause of our Religion; but I do say, it would not be fit to be done in other Cases; for the notifying of the Evidence is the Way to have it falsified and corrupted.

But notwithstanding all these Advantages, my Lords, I appeal to your Lordships Memories, what considerable Contradiction hath been given. It is true, some Witnesses to that End have been brought before your Lordships, but those Witnesses have been rendered incredible by more credible Persons; and I would desire your Lordships to observe, that tho' my Lord hath failed of proving any Subornation in our Witnesses, yet we have proved much Subornation endeavoured by his Agents.

Your Lordships have the Record against Reading before you; and what Reference that hath to the Lords in the Tower, every one does remember, and my Lord is mentioned in that Record. And I might likewise mention the Business of Cellier, and what therein related to the Lords in the Tower. And I'll name but two Witnesses more, that have been attempted upon in this Nature: There was Wright the Barber; all the Applications were made to him that could be; Money given, Letters writ, Insinuations that he was not to swear, he was but to write, and that was easily done; or if he would be so kind to swear it, he should never come into open Court, only go before a Justice of Peace: So that your Lordships will observe by what Steps and Degrees Men were endeavoured to be suborned. And then Launder tells you what was offered to him to perjure himself, how he was brought to Tixall, and what Endeavours were used to make him swear against our Witnesses.

These Things are plain, both by Records and particular Proofs upon Oath. But, my Lords, lest we should want Proof of all, this very Lord (I pity him for it) hath been so unfortunate as to bring that Paper out of his Pocket, which Wright says he had Money to frame, and was to swear to. It seems my Lord had the Command of it, it seems to have been prepared for such a good Time as this, and the producing of this Paper is as full a Confirmation of this Point, as can in Reason be expected.

My Lords, I have been, I fear, too long already; and yet, I fear, I have omitted as many Particulars as I have mentioned.

My Lords, the Evidence is so strong, that I think it admits of no Doubt; and the Offences proved against my Lord and the rest of his Party are so foul, that they need no Aggravation. The Offences are against the King, against his sacred Life, against the Protestant Religion, nay, against all Protestants; for it was for the Extirpation of all Protestants out of these three Nations. I mean not of every one that is now so, but of every one that would have continued so, every one amongst us (if these Designs had been accomplished) must either have turned his Religion, or turned out of his Country, or have been burned in it.

'Tis a Design that appears with so dreadful a Countenance to your Lordships, to this great Assembly, and to the whole Nation, that it needs not any Words I can use to make you apprehend it. If the Matter be fully proved (as I see no Reason to doubt but that it is), I am sure your Lordships will do that Justice to your King and Country, as to give Judgment against these Offenders, which will not only be a Security to us against them, but a Terror to all others against committing the like Offences.

L. Staff. I beg your Lordships to know, whether you will give me Leave to speak a Word? And, my Lords, I shall not speak any Thing but as to a Mistake Sir William Jones hath made in two or three Things. Pray, my Lords, may I put you in Mind of them?

Sir Will. Jones. If there be any Mistake, pray tell us what it is.

L. Staff. First, my Lords, he did omit telling you that Mr. Turberville's Brother did say he came in 71 to my Lord Powis's. Secondly, he says, I have proved myself a Papist, because I have not taken the Test: My Lords, the Test was since I was in the Tower, and whether I will take it or not, I do not yet know, till it be offered me. The third is this, that this Letter was in my Pocket, which I produced to you: My Lords, I knew nothing what was in it, it was given into my Hand as I stood here at the Bar. Fourthly, he said, Hobson did go out of England with the Almoner; he did not so. Another Thing he says, that I said Oates was an infamous Person, because he went to a Church that I said was idolatrous; I only said, it was so adjudged by Act of Parliament. I find, my Lords, these Things he is mistaken in; and that, my Lords, made me very willing to put you in Mind of them.

L. H. S. Gentlemen, I would ask you, whether you take any Notice of the Points in Law?

Sir Fr. Win. After the Fact is stated, my Lords, we shall.

Then Mr. Powle, also one of the Committee appointed to manage the Evidence, proceeded further in summing up the same.

Mr. Powle. My Lords, The learned Person that spake last, hath left very little for me to say in the summing up of this Evidence: But because this Noble Lord hath been pleased to alledge several Reasons, from whence he would infer at least a great Improbability, that he should be guilty of the Treasons whereof he stands accused, I shall crave your Lordships Patience, that I may give three or four Words in Answer to those Particulars.

My Lords, in the first Place, this noble Lord was pleased to begin, and afterwards to continue his Defence, with making Protestations of his own Innocency: We very well know your Lordships sit now in the Seat of Justice, and whatsoever Credit or Regard your Lordships please to give to the Protestations of a Peer in another Case, your Lordships will proceed here only according to your Proofs and your Evidence (secundum allegata & probata), and therefore all we shall say to this, is, that we hope our Proofs are so clear and evident, as will leave no Room to your Lordships to believe this noble Lord's Protestations.

In the next Place, my Lord is pleased to alledge, and withal to lay some Weight upon it, the voluntary surrendering of himself to Justice; and he laid it down as a Rule, that as Flight is an Argument of Guilt, so the surrendering of a Man's self to the Trial of the Law, is an Argument of Innocency.

My Lords, We admit the Rule generally to be true, but in some particular Cases it may be otherwise; for a Man that is not very confident of his own Innocency, may yet be very confident of the Strength of his Party; and whether the Consideration of the Circumstances of Affairs, as they then stood, and the Power and Prevalency of the Popish Party at that Time, might not reasonably create such a Confidence in this noble Lord, we must leave to your Lordships Judgment.

My Lords, We do conceive, that those Persons who contrived Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's Murder, had so great Confidence in the Favour and Protection of some of their Party, that they thought themselves able to outface Justice.

And we verily believe they intended it as an Example, to deter all Men from meddling so much as with the taking an Examination concerning this horrid Plot.

My Lords, I desire to be understood aright in this: I lay nothing of the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey to the Charge of this noble Lord; I only use it as an Argument of the Presumption of the Popish Party at that Time.

My Lords, In the next Place, my Lord Stafford did observe from my Lord Coke, that in the Trials of Treasons we ought very much to guide our Judgments by the Nature and Circumstances of the Fact (the Concomitants and Subsequents, as he termed them) with Reference to the Person accused, whether they were likely to induce or deter him from such an Attempt; and here he was pleased to raise some Arguments from the whole Course of his Life, and did desire your Lordships to consider those Circumstances therein, that might make it improbable or impossible that he should commit a Treason of this Nature.

He desired also your Lordships to remember, that he was descended from an honourable Family, and that his Ancestors were very worthy and very deserving Persons, and such as had often ventured their Lives in Defence of their Country: and here he did likewise mention his own Services to the last King, and our present Sovereign in the late Wars.

It is not my Part, nor will I derogate any thing from the Merits of this noble Lord, much less from the Honour of his Family: But in Answer to this, we shall desire your Lordships to consider, that this noble Lord (however he is pleased to disown it at present) is notoriously known to be a Roman Catholic (as they call themselves), and such we conceive we have sufficiently proved him to be, in the Course of our Evidence: And as there is nothing in the World so much as a misguided Conscience, that can engage the best of Men into the worst of Actions; so we think the Principles of that Religion are such, as are more likely to pervert Men from their Duty and Allegiance, than any other Religion or Persuasion whatsoever.

And if the Zeal of this noble Lord did engage him to endeavour the Establishment of that Religion in this Kingdom, we may easily believe that his Reason did suggest to him the Means by which it must be effected, which could be no other but Blood and Confusion.

My Lords, The last Thing I shall take Notice of, is, what my Lord Stafford was pleased to say in general, as to the Doctrine of killing and depoling Princes, which his Lordship was pleased to call a private Opinion, and not the Doctrine of the Church of Rome.

But by the Way, my Lords, give me Leave to observe, that this noble Lord did upon this Occasion fully own (and I much commend his Ingenuity in it) the Reality of the Gun-Powder-Treason, since we know how much that Party have endeavoured to render it incredible: And as Length of Time hath so fully manifested the Particulars of that execrable Design, that it hath brought such as are of that Persuasion to confess the Truth of it; so we hope this Day's Trial will convince both the Age we live in, and all Posterity, of the Truth and Reality of this present Conspiracy. But to go on with that Point from which I did digress: I am not, I confess, much versed in the Canons and Councils of the Church of Rome; but, my Lords, this I know, the most famous and celebrated Writers of that Church, especially of the Society of the Jesuits, have publicly avowed and maintained this Doctrine. And we know in all Times, when there hath been Occasion to put it in Practice, it hath never failed to have been attempted; and we likewise know, that the Church of Rome and the Pope have always avowed the Acts when they have been done. From all which we may very reasonably conclude, that it is the Doctrine of that Church so to do.

But my Lord is pleased to say, and I admit it for Truth, That a great many private Writers do hold the contrary; I believe it to be so, but I do also believe, that it is the Policy and Artifice of the Church of Rome, to leave this Point of Doctrine in some measure undetermined, that so they may make use of it as the occasion serves; for if it succeeds, then it is owned and justified; if it miscarry, then the Doctrine is but a private Opinion, and the Plot but the Practice of particular Persons that are either desperate or discontented. And I am fully of opinion, that this horrid Conspiracy which is brought this Day in Judgment before your Lordships, wants nothing but Success to canonize it.

My Lords, as to what concerns the Evidence, it hath been so fully stated to you, and the Objections that were raised to invalidate it, so well answered, that I will not trouble your Lordships with any Repetition of what has been said already: All we have further to desire, is, That your Lordships will please to take our Evidence into your Consideration, and to do thereupon what shall be agreeable to Justice.

Mr. Serj. Mynn. My Lords, As to the Matter of Fact I shall say nothing but only this, (and I wish it may be spoken with Gratitude to Almighty God) that the Discovery of this Plot is rather the Work of God than Man. It was first his Act, in prevailing upon Oates to make the Discovery; and when he stood single almost, what came to support his credit but the Letters of Coleman? which were like a Tally to what Oates had said, for what Oates informs is in a great part made good by his Letters. Then when Godfrey was murder'd, how came that Discovery out, but by the voluntary Confession of one engaged in the whole Plot; I mean Bedloe? So that tho' these Men had engaged themselves by wicked Oaths, yet their own Consciences witnessing against them in themselves, they could not forbear coming in to testify against themselves. I shall say no more, than that we ought to acknowledge the Hand of God in the Discovery with great Thankfulness; for it is he, and he alone, that out of his own Grace and Goodness hath done it, and thereby preserved the Life of our Prince to us, and in Him us too.

But as to the Matter in Law:

My Lord has been pleased to mention first this, That there is no Overt-Act. I wonder that my Lord should be so much mistaken. When it is charged in the Articles, and proved to his Face he received a Commission, is not that an Overt-Act? He is charged in the Articles of Impeachment with contriving the Death of the King, and being at several Meetings and Consults about the King's Death, and hiring persons to kill the King; and are these no Overt-Acts? Therefore, as to that, my Lord is mistaken.

My Lords, Another Exception that is taken, is, That there is no Indictment. I conceive that an Impeachment of the House of Commons is more than an Indictment. And there cannot be any doubt of that, the Impeachments of the House of Commons having always been received and proceeded on by your Lordships.

But that which is most insisted upon, is, That this Charge that is made against this Lord, was presented in another Parliament. It is true; but under favour, what is once upon Record in Parliament, may at any time afterwards be proceeded upon. It is a sudden Objection, but I conceive it hath been done: In a Case of this nature, when the Life of the King, when our own Lives, and our Nation, and our Religion lies at stake, if there were not a Precedent, I hope you would make a Precedent. But under favour, Reason is for it, the Charge is before you, the Proof is made and we pray you will judge according as the Evidence hath been.

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, as to these Matters of Law, I think they are of so little difficulty, that my Lord will not desire to have Counsel assigned him; I am sure his Counsel will not desire to speak to them.

For this last Matter which Mr. Serjeant spoke of, and which was first named by the Prisoner, I desire your Lordships to consider what it is. Says my Lord the Prisoner, there was an Impeachment begun in the Long-Parliament, and this is now the third Parliament in which I am brought to my Trial. It is very true, there was a general Impeachment in the Long-Parliament, the particular one was in the last, and this Lord was pleased to plead in the last. It may be he was not so well advised then as he is now.

But, my Lords, how can this be a doubt, when your Lordships have resolved, and have sent it down to the Commons, and it is there entered in their Book, as the Law and Constitution of Parliaments, that not only Impeachments, but all judicial Proceedings continue from Parliament to Parliament, in the same state that they were in at the rising of the last Parliament.

This is now become the Law of your House, and it is under favour, being so, the Law of the Kingdom; and you having thus declared it, and sent it to the Commons, I hope the Commons had very good reason to proceed upon this Impeachment at this time.

The next Matter is concerning the Overt-Acts; I think there are sufficient Overt-Acts in Proof, and sufficient in the Impeachment. Will any man deny that the receiving a Commission to be Pay-master of an Army is an Overt-Act? Will any deny, that the sending for the Witness, and offering him Money in order to hire him to kill the King, is an Overt-Act? And (which answers to all) will any Man deny that the meeting and consulting of several Men together, about killing the King, and changing the Government, is an Overt-Act?

My Lords, these are all Overt-Acts; and I cannot but think it was without Advice of my Lord's Counsel that he made these Objections: for indeed these several Overt-Acts are laid in the Impeachment as fully as they are made out in Proof.

My Lords, There is another Objection that my Lord is pleased to make, and that is, that there is but one Witness to a particular Fact.

L. H. S. Ay, what say you to that?

Sir W. Jones. That, my Lords, is of little weight, with submission; for our Impeachments, and our Proofs run to this, That my Lord had a Design and Intention to destroy the King: This was to be done by force, and this was to be done by secret Assassination. Now if several Witnesses come and prove each a distinct Act, under this Head of killing the King, it is so many Proofs or Witnesses to the Treason.

For, my Lords, if a Man shall intend to kill the King, and shall buy a Knife in one County at one time, and send for a Man out of another County at another time, whom he shall hire to kill the King, and these distinct Acts proved by several Witnesses; if they concur to the same general Treason, they are all but Parts of that, and so are so many Witnesses to the whole. And so I am sure it was resolved in the Case of others of the Conspirators in the Old-Bailey, and before that in the Case of Sir Henry Vane*. But,

My Lords, in this Case here is first a Proof that he accepted a Commission, which I do not use as an Act for the levying of War only, but as a Design to change the Government, and destroy the King. Here is meeting and consulting how to do this wicked Work, I mean to kill the King; that is another Overt-Act. Here is offering Money to one of the Witnesses for that end; that is a third Overt-Act. And there is attempting another of them, tho' not with Money, yet with promises of Reward in general; that is another Overt-Act: All which are to this End, the killing of the King. And I am sure of it, your Lordships cannot but receive satisfaction from my Lords the Judges, that it hath always been so held, that tho' there need two Witnesses to prove Treason, yet there needs no more than one to one Act, and another to another, if the several Acts fall under the same Head of Treason.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, I crave your Patience but for a Word or two, and this Noble Lord will have little reason to say his Objections in point of Law are of any weight. I confess he had said a great thing, if it were true, that the Articles of Impeachment did not alledge an Overt-Act; for then indeed they had been apparently defective: But, under his pardon, that is not a Point of Law, but a Point of Fact. Let us therefore resort to the Articles themselves: In the second Article it is alledged, that he, with the rest, did most wickedly and traitorously agree, conspire and resolve to imprison, depose and murder his sacred Majesty, and to deprive him of his Regal State and Government. And then the same Article alledges farther, that they did contrive and consult to effect the Murder of the King, by Shooting, by Poisoning, and by Stabbing. All these Particulars are expressed; so that when my Lord said the Articles were therein defective, all we can say, is, that he was misinformed.

My Lords, There was another Exception taken, That this is the Impeachment of another Parliament. I must not now repeat how this Point was agreed by both Houses at a Conference; but it was then declared, upon search of Precedents in all Ages, That it was the Law of Parliaments, which is the Law of the Land, that if once an Impeachment by the House of Commons were lodged in the House of Lords, tho' that Parliament were dissolved, the Impeachment remained in the same state. It was the Cause of the Commons of England, who only change their Representatives in a new Parliament.

It has been also objected, that this Prosecution ought to have been upon an Indictment: As if an Accusation of the House of Commons, who are the Grand Inquest of the Nation, were not as effectual to bring Offenders to Justice, as the finding of a particular Jury.

My Lords, I should wonder to hear this Objection made, were not my Lord to be easily excused for his knowing the Law no better. None who know any thing in the Law, would have urged such a thing; his Council, I dare say, did not suggest this Matter to him.

It is true, my Lords, when a Peer comes to be tried by way of Commission, or in Parliament when it is not at the Prosecution of the Commons, there an Indictment is first found in the proper County, and brought up before the Peers by Certiorari, and upon that they proceed; but whether the Party be a Peer or Commoner, if he be impeached for many Crimes, surely no one can deny, but that by the constant Usage of Parliaments the Lords have proceeded to Trial, and have given Judgment thereupon without an Indictment found: So that this Exception will be of no force at all.

As for the remaining Objection, That there are not two Witnesses to prove any one Overt-Act, the King's Person would be in no manner of Safety, if that Doctrine should be once allowed. Conspiring to kill the King is the Treason laid in the Impeachment, and the several Overt-Acts are so many several Evidences of that Treason. Words themselves, if they signify an Intention to do an Act, and express something to be done in futuro, are a sufficient Overt-Act, and a legal Evidence of Treason. Then we prove by another Witness, not Words of Encouragement only, but Offers of Money, and they are both to the same kind of Treason, though not to the same Act, and at the same time. And if there must be two Witnesses to every single Act, the King of England is not only in a far worse Condition than any other Prince, but than any one of his own Subjects. Treasons may be committed every day with Impunity, and unless the Traitors be as great Fools as Villains, he shall never be safe from them, nor capable of punishing them.

I must say it, and I say it with Commiseration to the Condition of this noble Lord, that his Exceptions in Law are as weak as the Answers he has given to our Evidence. We hope no Doubt in Law remains with you, and that we have given your Lordships full Satisfaction of the Reality of the Plot, and a convincing Evidence of the great share which my Lord Stafford had in it; and we humbly pray your Lordships Justice.

L. H. S. You do not take notice of one thing that my Lord Stafford said this Morning; that is, That the Witnesses are not competent Witnesses, because they swore for Money, and that is fit to be spoken unto; not for the Weight of the Objection, so much as for the Satisfaction of the Auditor.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, I had taken a Note of that, but forgot to mention it. If my Lord at the Bar will say they have taken Money to swear, that is purely a Matter of Fact which he ought to prove; and that which is said and not proved, ought to go for nothing: Let him prove his Case to be so, and then we will give him an Answer.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, If your Lordship can prove that they have had Money to swear, your Lordship urges that which will be material; but if it were only Money to maintain them, that sure will amount to no Objection.

L. Staff. My Lords, I submit it to your Lordships, whether Dr. Oates and the rest have not had great sums of Money, besides their Charges 10*l.* a-week a-piece. But I desire your Lordships to consider, and I appeal to many of your Lordships, whether it has not been said that there was a Defect in Coleman's and Langborn's Trials, that they did not plead that; and if they had pleaded it, they must have been acquitted: I will name no body, but I appeal to your Lordships, whether some of you have not said so. But I desire your Lordships to admit me to plead by my Counsel; if not, I submit it to you. I confess here is a Piece of Law that I never heard of before, that the House of Commons, and your Lordships at a Conference, have adjudged it to be the Law of Parliaments, That Impeachments shall continue from Parliament to Parliament. If you will please to hear my Counsel for me, so; if not, I submit.

L. H. S. What would you, or can you prove?

L. Staff. My Lords, those things that I have given in to your Lordships, I desire my Counsel may be heard to.

L. H. S. Gentlemen, What can you object why he should not have Counsel to argue his objections in Law?

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, I do think under favour, if a Prisoner in a Capital Cause do desire Counsel, he must not only alledge Matter of Law to introduce that Desire; but that which he doth alledge must be also a Matter of some Doubt to the Court: For if he do alledge Matter which in itself is not disputable, he shall have no Counsel allowed him. If your Lordships are not satisfied that it is the Law of your House, that Proceedings upon Impeachments do continue from Parliament to Parliament, we cannot answer that, it lies in your Lordships Breasts; it is not what we are to argue, because it is a Matter that concerns the Law and Rules of Parliaments. Is there, my Lords, any doubt of any other Point that is urg'd? Is there any doubt of this thing, whether if one Witness speak to one Point of Fact, and another to another, upon the same sort of Treason, but that these be two such Witnesses as the Law requires? I pray then, my Lords, consider the Consequence of that Doubt: A Man shall talk with twenty Persons about a Design to kill the King, in one and the same Room, one after another, by taking them into a Corner singly; and if ten, or all twenty come to prove it, here is but one Witness to each Discourse. This would be a Matter of dangerous Consequence, but I hope will remain no manner of Doubt with you, nor is it fit to be argued.

As to the hiring of Witnesses to swear, I think that can be no Point of Law till it be so proved in Fact. Doth his Lordship think, that when his Majesty, out of his Grace and Bounty, allows a Maintenance to his Witnesses, that that is an Objection to their Testimony? Doth not every Man allow his Witnesses a Maintenance, and yet it never was thought a thing to take away their Evidence? It may be every one doth not give so large an Allowance as the King, because his Dignity is not so great. But can it be an Objection to the House of Commons? Have we that are the Prosecutors maintain'd them? If his Majesty has been bountiful to his Witnesses, what is that to this Cause of the Commons? If my Lord can prove any thing of Bribery in us, as he has proved for us against himself, it may be an Objection. But till that Fact be proved, I hope there is no ground for a Question in Law; and if there be no Doubt in Law, I hope there will be no need of Counsel.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, What are the Points you would have Counsel to?

L. Staff. To all of them, my Lords.

L. H. S. Would you have Counsel to the first Point, to argue what the Law of Parliaments is concerning the Continuance of Impeachments from Parliament to Parliament?

L. Staff. My Lords, If you will declare the Law to be as these Gentlemen say, I must acquiesce.

L. H. S. Pardon me, my Lord, I do not declare the Law, but ask you whether you would have Counsel to argue that Point?

L. Staff. My Lords, I do say there is no Example of it: I know there have been Impeachments, but no Examples of Impeachments continued from Parliament to Parliament.

L. H. S. Then in the next place, for I shall propose your Objections to their Lordships by and by, and desire their Judgment in them, do you desire to argue by your Counsel, that every Overt-Act ought to be proved by two Witnesses?

L. Staff. I do, my Lords; I desire my Counsel may be heard to all the Points I mentioned to your Lordships.

L. H. S. Have you Counsel ready to speak to these Points now?

L. Staff. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. S. Are they prepared to speak to them now?

L. Staff. They are, my Lords.

L. H. S. If they be so, what hurt will there be in hearing of them?

Sir W. Jones. My Lords, Whether you will hear an Argument from Counsel about the Law of Parliaments, I hope you will please well to consider.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, We in the House of Commons do never suffer any Counsel to tell us what is the Course of our House, and the Law of Parliaments: If your Lordships think fit to allow it, 'tis in your own Power; but we who are intrusted with the Management of this Cause by the House of Commons, have no Direction to consent to such a thing.

L. H. S. We will hear Counsel, to save time, upon that Point, whether in Proof of a Treason for killing the King, every Overt-Act ought to be proved by two Witnesses.

Sir W. Jones. If your Lordships make a Doubt of it.

Sir F. Win. And if the Prisoner desire it.

Mr. S. Mayn. My Lords, We shall not oppose it; but I shall wonder if any Counsel do maintain it.

L. H. S. Are your Counsel ready to speak to that Point?

L. Staff. Here they are, my Lords.

[Mr. Wallop of the Middle-Temple, Mr. Saunders of the same Society, and Mr. Hunt of Gray's-Inn appeared by the Prisoner at the Bar as his Counsel.]

Mr. Wallop. May it please your Lordships, we are here commanded by your Lordships to attend, that if any Matter of Law do arise upon a Case proved, agreed, and judged by your Lordships debatable, then in due time we are to conform ourselves to your Lordships Command, and argue those Points for my Lord the Prisoner at the Bar. But if your Lordships do think that the Points urged by my Lord are not debatable in Law, I have so high an Opinion of your Lordships Judgment, and such a mean Opinion of my own Talent, that I shall not undertake to argue extempore in this great Assembly, in a Cause of so high a nature.

L. H. S. Look you, Sir, you are of my Lord's Counsel.

Mr. Wallop. I am, my Lords; and by the Order of your Lordships do attend here.

L. H. S. If you think it is an arguable Point, you will have the Judgment of my Lords afterwards. Will you argue it now?

Mr. Wallop. My Lords, I always thought, if a Point be stirred in any Court, and thought disputable, it should be stated and agreed before it be argued.

L. H. S. You are to argue for my Lord, and to know the Judgment of the Court afterwards: Would you know our Opinions before-hand?

Mr. Wallop. We would know what it is we are to argue, if your Lordships please.

L. H. S. Why, if you are provided for it, you are to maintain, that by Law every Overt-Act ought to be proved by two Witnesses; if you are prepared, speak to it, and my Lords will hear you.

Mr. Wallop. It is true, my Lords, there have been some publick Resolutions concerning that Point, therefore I shall be the warier what I say in that: But, my Lords, it is a Matter that has been thought of great Import one way or other; but I do profess at this time I am not able to undertake a solemn Argument upon that Point.

L. Staff. My Lords, I am so far from delaying this Cause, that I desire it may be argued now.

L. H. S. Then you are not ready to speak to it?

Mr. Wallop. No, my Lords, I am not for my own part at present; for it is impossible we should foresee what would be the Point: And to apply ourselves to study an unforeseen Case before it be agreed, stated, and judged worthy of Argument, cannot be expected from us. I have always observed it in the King's-Bench, if the Prisoner urge any thing, and the Court think it debatable, they first agree and state the Case, then assign Counsel, whom they do not urge to deliver an Opinion presently, but give them time to prepare for it.

L. H. S. Mr. Wallop, It is not believed that this Point is moved, but by your Advice that are of my Lord's Counsel, and you should be ready to maintain the Advice you give; therefore, if you are so, speak. You have the Protection of the Court for the Counsel you give in Matter of Law, and whatever Advice you give, you should maintain by the Law.

Mr. Wallop. Truly, my Lords, it is a Point that has, as I said before, received some Settlement; but whether ever in this Court, or no, I cannot tell. Therefore I did discharge my Thoughts of providing any Argument, till your Lordships should have determined whether you will take the Point upon the resolution in the Courts below to be finally settled and determined.

Sir W. Jones. So then it is agreed to be settled in the ordinary Courts.

L. Staff. I desire also it may be argued, whether Words are an Overt-Act?

Sir F. Win. It seems the Law is with us in case of a Commoner; but whether it be so for a Lord, is the Question.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, how comes it to pass that your Lordship came prepared with Objections; but not with Counsel ready to argue them?

L. Staff. Mr. Wallop has given you an Answer, I must stand by that.

L. H. S. Is it your Lordships Pleasure that we adjourn?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. S. This House is adjourned into the Parliament-Chamber.

Then the Lords returned to their House in their Order, and the Committee of Commons staid in their Places to attend their Resolutions.

In an Hour's time, the Lords returned, and my Lord High Steward being seated upon the Wool-pack, Silence was proclaimed.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, My Lords, since they have been withdrawn, have considered of one Point, of that Point, chiefly, which your Lordship did move, touching the Necessity of two Witnesses to every Overt-Act as Evidence of High-Treason, that is the Point you have desired Counsel to speak to, and that is the Point your Counsel desired to know whether it was a doubtful or debatable Point before they would argue it; and hereupon my Lords did withdraw to consider it. And my Lords have directed, That all the Judges that assist them, and are here in your Lordship's Presence and Hearings, should deliver their Opinions, whether it be doubtful and disputable or no.

[Then all the Judges consulted privately together, and afterwards gave in their Opinions seriatim, beginning with the Lord Chief-Justice North, the Lord Chief-Justice Scroggs being absent.]

L. C. J. North. My Lords, I do here deliver my Opinion, and am clear in it, That if there be several Overt-Acts or Facts which are Evidences of the same Treason, if there be one Witness to prove one such Overt-Act at one time, and another Witness to prove another Overt-Act at another time, both the Acts being Evidences of the same Treason, these are two sufficient Witnesses of that Treason, and will maintain an Indictment or an Impeachment of Treason. I never knew any doubt made of it in any Inferior Court of Justice, and I have known it often resolved.

L. C. B. Montague. My Lords, where-ever Treason is to be proved, to every Overt-Act, two Witnesses, as I conceive, are not required. If so be, there are two Witnesses to several Overt-Acts, conducing to a Proof of the same Treason, I think they are Witnesses in the Judgment of the Law, such as the Statute requires.

Mr. Justice Windham. I am of the same Opinion with my Lord Chief-Justice North, and my Lord Chief-Baron, That if there be several Overt-Acts, done at several times, tending to the same Treason, these several Acts, being severally proved by several credible Witnesses, tho' but by one Witness at each time to each Act, the said several Acts, being Evidences of the same Treason, these are sufficient Witnesses of that Treason so proved, and will maintain an Indictment, or, as I conceive, an Impeachment.

Mr. Just. Jones. My Lords, If several Witnesses speak to the same kind of Treason, altho' they speak to several Overt-Acts, and give Evidence of several times, the one of them speaking to one time, and the other to another time, yet keeping still to the same kind of Treason, they are such two Witnesses as are required by the Statute of Edward III. and this I take to be the constant Opinion of the Courts below.

Mr. Just.

Mr. Just. Dalben. My Lords, I am of the same Opinion, and I know it hath been many times so resolved: I have been present when Sentence hath passed upon Persons by whom the same Case hath been urged, and it hath been so resolved. And it hath been moved in Westminster-Hall, and that was the constant Opinion of the Judges there; particularly in the Case of Sir Henry Vane. It was upon solemn Debate resolved, and divers times it hath been held, That the same Treason may be proved by two Witnesses to several Overt-Acts, though one speak of Words or Actions that were spoken or done at one Time and in one Place, and another speak of Words or Actions at another Time and in another Place; these are two good Witnesses in Treason within the Intent of the Law; and if the Law were otherwise, 'twere scarce possible to convict any Man of Treason, and therefore I take it to be very clear.

Mr. Just. Raymond. I am of the same Opinion, That where several Circumstances are brought to prove the same Treason, one Witness to each of the several Circumstances is sufficient; and this, I conceive, hath been always the Opinion of the Judges.

Mr. Baron Atkins. My Lords, I am of the same Opinion. That there must be two Witnesses in the Case of Treason, is a Matter without question; but there are several Overt-Acts that may contribute to the effecting of that Treason. If a Man designs to kill the King, and buys Powder at one Place at one Time, and a Pistol at another Place at another Time, and promises a Reward to one to assist him to do the thing at a third Place and a third Time; these are several Overt-Acts: But if the Law requires that each be proved by two Witnesses, I do not well see how any Man can be convicted of Treason. In the Case of Sir Henry Vane, and others, this very Question was started, but was not thought worthy of Debate: If it should be otherwise, it would touch the Judgments which have been given upon this Kind of Proof; and what would the Consequence of that be, but that those Persons who were executed upon those Judgments have suffered illegally? and therefore I am of Opinion, that it is not requisite there should be two Witnesses to every Overt-Act.

Mr. Baron Gregory. My Lords, I am of the same Opinion, it is Treason to conspire the Death of the King: Now each of the Witnesses is a Witness to prove that Treason; the one says, he offered him such a Reward, in such a Place; that is one Witness to prove that he conspired the Death of the King; and another says, that he offered him such a Reward in another Place; that is another Witness that he conspired the Death of the King. For the Party is not indicted upon one particular Overt-Act, but he is indicted for Treason, in conspiring the Death of the King; and each of the Witnesses being to prove that, though they speak to several Acts, they are good Witnesses according to the Law.

Mr. Baron Weston. My Lords, I am of the same Opinion with my learned Brethren who have spoke before him.

Mr. Just. Charlton. My Lords, I am of the same Opinion; and I think truly it would be the easiest matter for a Man to commit Treason, and escape without questioning, if it should be otherwise. But this is the first Time that I have heard it hath been made a Question, that to the same Treason there must be two Witnesses to every Overt-Act. It hath been adjudged always according to the Law, that to prove Treason there must be two Witnesses, but to an Overt-Act there needs but one.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, by the uniform Opinion of all my Lords the Judges, there is no colour to doubt the Law in that Point which you desire to argue; so that as to that Point you must rest satisfied, you are not to have Counsel to speak to it: For the rest, I have no Commission yet from my Lords to say any thing.

L. Staff. Will your Lordships give me leave to say one thing to what I have heard? I would answer, if I might, only to one Judge; I think they call him Judge Atkins.

L. H. S. Your Lordship may say what you please.

L. Staff. My Lords, I hear a strange Position, I never heard the like before in my Life; and 'tis what he said: If I am in the wrong, I beg your Lordships Pardon, and his too. He told your Lordships the Reason why the Law should be so, was, because else a great many of those Persons that have already been executed, must have been acknowledged unjustly cut off and put to death; that is an Argument I hope will not weigh with your Lordships or any body; for 'tis better that a thousand Persons that are guilty should escape than that one innocent Person should die; much more then, that it should not be declar'd, that such a Judgment was not well given.

L. H. S. Look you, my Lord, where many Reasons are given, 'tis easy to make a Reply to one of the least among many; that was one Reason given, but the true Reason is this: If the Law were otherwise, there would be great Safety in conspiring the Death of the King.

L. Staff. My Lords, I say nothing farther as to the rest, but this stuck with me. I am sorry to hear a Judge should say any such thing; and tho' I am in such a weak and disturbed Condition, I assure your Lordships my Blood rises at it.

L. H. S. Is it your Lordships Pleasure that we should adjourn?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. S. Then this House is adjourn'd into the Parliament-Chamber.

[The Lords withdrew in their Order, and the Committee of Commons went back to their House.]

Mr. Speaker resum'd the Chair.

A Message was sent from the Lords by Sir Timothy Baldwin and Sir Samuel Clarke.

Mr. Speaker. The Lords have sent us to acquaint this House, that they have ordered William Viscount Stafford to be brought again to the Bar in Westminster-Hall, on Monday-Morning next at Ten of the Clock.

After which, the House of Commons adjourn'd to Eight of the Clock on Monday-Morning.

THE SIXTH DAY,

Monday, December 6th, 1680.

ABOUT the Hour of Eleven in the Morning, the Lords being adjourn'd into Westminster-Hall, going thither in their former Order into the Court there erected; and Mr. Speaker having left the Chair, the Committee of Commons were seated as before.

The Court being sat, Proclamation for Silence was made, and the Lieutenant commanded to bring his Prisoner to the Bar; which being done, the Lord High-Steward began.

E. H. S. Read my Lord Stafford's Petition.

To the Right Honourable the Lords in Parliament assembled, the Humble Petition of William Viscount Stafford.

Humbly shewing unto your Lordships,

THAT he hath some things to offer unto your Lordships in order to clear himself, which he hopeth to do.

Your Petitioner doth therefore, with all Humility, most humbly beseech your Lordships to give him leave to offer some things unto your Lordships Consideration. And your Petitioner shall ever pray, &c.

STAFFORD.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, My Lords have been willing, upon your Petition, to come and hear what that is that your Lordship hath to offer: And they would know whether it be Matter of Fact, or Matter of Law. For your Lordships must know, that as to Witnesses the Process is closed.

L. Staff. I do not pretend any more Witnesses, my Lords.

L. H. S. Then, my Lord, what is it that you would say?

L. Staff. My Lords, I did yesterday receive an Order from your Lordships; and upon that and some other Things that I have to trouble your Lordships with, I did petition for this Favour, which I humbly thank your Lordships for granting. If I be impertinent, I shall beg your Lordships Pardon, and I hope you will be pleased to consider my Weakness at all times, especially in this Condition I am now in; but I hope by your Lordships Favour to be in a happier one quickly. For the Matters of Proof, I shall offer not a Tittle; but, my Lords, this Order which I receiv'd does say, That the Lords assembled in Parliament have order'd, that my Counsel shall not be heard touching the Continuance of Impeachments from Parliament to Parliament: But I hope, my Lords, you will please, without offence, to let me offer to your Lordships my own Conceptions about it; which I shall do as briefly as I can.

My Lords, I do not conceive by this Order, that your Lordships say it does or does not continue; you have given no Judgment, as I know of, in it; when you have, I shall acquiesce: But I hope your Lordships will resolve that it does not. And, my Lords, my Reasons for it are two: The first is, Because one of the Managers for the House of Commons, as I take it, Sir W. Jones, said these Words, and your Lordships may remember them, That if there were no such Precedent, your Lordships would make a Precedent: Whether you will or no, that I must submit to your Lordships; but then there is none yet. The next thing is, my Lords, this, Whether an Impeachment be to be prosecuted in Parliament without an Indictment? This, my Lords, I humbly hope your Lordships are resolved it ought not. For I see not how truly, my Lords, it can be; by the little Reading which I have had in the Law, I never found any Man prosecuted in a legal Way, but by an Indictment. I may be mistaken, and I beg your Lordships Pardon for troubling you with my Mistakes; but I never read of any that were prosecuted upon an Impeachment: So then, the legal usual Word being Indictment, I hope your Lordships will not alter the Form; for I hope you will keep that great Maxim of your noble Ancestors, Nolumus Leges Anglia mutare: And whether this be a Change of the Law or no, I submit it to your Lordships.

A third thing is this; Your Lordships do not think fit that my Counsel shall plead to that Point, whether Words do amount to an Overt-Act; for hearing my Counsel to that likewise I do not pretend: But I hope your Lordships will give me leave to say this, I never heard that Words did amount to an Overt-Act: if your Lordships judge otherwise, I submit; but till then, I hope it shall not conclude me.

There are some other Points which I did offer to your Lordships, and I humbly beseech you to know, whether my Counsel shall be heard to them. 'Tis true, one of them, which was, whether two Witnesses in several Places did amount to a legal Testimony or no, your Lordships did not declare one way or another: If you say you acquiesce in the Opinion of the Judges, I must submit; but till Judgment is given, I beseech your Lordships to give me leave to tell you my weak Thought about it. I did not hear what the Judges said all of them, but as I apprehend, they were all of one Opinion: 'Tis true, one of them that spoke last, I think it was Judge Atkins, did say it did amount to a legal Testimony, because else those Juries that have found some guilty upon the same Sort of Evidence should be perjured; but if this were not so, then upon the same Grounds, under your Lordships Favour, those Juries that acquitted some upon such Testimony were perjured: But I must believe it to be otherwise till your Lordships have declared it as your Opinion; for that Reason will not hold; for the same Reason will be for the perjuring the one, as for the perjuring the other. And the same Juries, for the most part, tried those that were found guilty, and those that were acquitted.

L. H. S. Is this all your Lordship will please to say?

L. Staff. No, my Lords, if you would give me leave, I would trouble you a little farther; if it were an offence I would not say a Word. My Lords, I do conceive I am not concerned in the general Plot of the Papists; for I am not proved to be so, and whatsoever I may be in myself, as I conceive, or whatsoever there is of Hearsay, I hope your Lordships will not go upon that, but upon what is proved Secundum allegata & probata, and that Common Fame will condemn no Man; if it do, then no Man is safe; but I must say, there is not one Word of Proof offer'd that I am a Papist.

I hope, my Lords, I have clear'd myself to your Lordships, and made my Innocency appear, by making appear the Perjury of the Witnesses, and the Falshood of those things they said against me. Against Dugdale I have proved it by two of his own Witnesses; the one was Eld, the one was Whitby, who says, he had given my Lord Aspen's Father warning long ago what a Knave he was. So 'tis clear. For Dr. Oates I hope from his Contradictions against himself as well as Dugdale, who does contradict himself, at one time August, at another time the latter End of August or the beginning of September: And I hope your Lordships will give no Credit to Oates's Testimony; for he said before your Lordships

Lordships he had declared all he knew, ('tis true, I was then accused, but not for having a Commission, as he now swears) and afterwards he accus'd the Queen; so here is Oates against Oates, and Dugdale against Dugdale: And for Turberville, I have proved by his Affidavit, first he swears one thing and then another; and the Truth of it is, his Brother proved him false in his last Oath, that it was (71,) and not (72.)

My Lords, 'Tis not my Part to make any question, nor do I, whether a Plot or no Plot; for I am not concerned in it: If what I shall say now be impertinent, I humbly beg your Lordships Pardon. My Lords, I have been by the most of my Friends, at least every one that came to me, particularly by my Wife and Daughter that is near me, persuaded to tell all that I knew, and I do here in the Presence of God Almighty declare what I know to be true.

L. H. S. What says my Lord? Speak out.

L. Staff. My Lords, I do believe since the Reformation from the Church of Rome to (what it is now establish'd) the Church of England, those of that Religion have had several wicked and ill Designs and Plots: I do believe they had a Design in Queen Elizabeth's Time, Babington's Plot, (that is a long time ago) how far it was to take away the Queen's Life I can't tell, but a Plot it was: And I do believe there was another in her Time, called Earl of Westmoreland's Plot, wherein there was a Rebellion in the North, for which some fled and some were executed, that was a very ill Design: As for those Poisonings of her Saddle, and the like, I take them to be but Stories.

In King James's Time, in the first Year of his Reign, there was a wicked Plot compos'd by Actors, some of one Religion, some of another; there was my Lord Grey, my Lord Cobham, my Lord Brooke, and other such, they were condemned all of them; some fled, as Markham and Bainham: those Lords and Sir Walter Raleigh were reprieved and kept long in the Tower. But Sir Walter Raleigh was afterwards upon that same Judgment beheaded, and the Lords died in the Tower.

My Lords, Next to that was the execrable Treason that I spoke of at first, the Gun-powder Treason: And I protest before Almighty God, I did from my Infancy detest and abhor those Men that were engaged in it; and I do think, and always did think, the Wit of Man nor the Devil's Malice can't invent an Excuse for it. For the Men concern'd, they all acknowledged it, confess'd it, and begg'd pardon of the King, and God, and all good Men for it; that is all I shall say to that now.

My Lords, Since his Majesty's happy restoration, I do conceive, and I think I may safely say it, (for you all know it) he was gracious and good to all Dissenters, particularly to them of the Romish Church; they had Conivance and Indulgence in their private Houses; and I declare to your Lordships, I did then say to some that were too open in their Worship, that they did play foul in taking more Liberty upon them than was fitting for them to do, and that brought the Misfortune upon me which I will not name.

My Lords, It was not long ago that your Lordships at your own Bar did allow all the Dissenters from the Church of England to give some Reasons to your Lordships why those Laws that were against them should be repeal'd, as well Protestant Dissenters as those of the Church of Rome, and why they should have some Kind of Toleration; among whom you did permit those of the Romish Religion to appear too, I forget their Names. And I remember particularly one of the Sorts of them, an Anabaptist I think, did urge for a Reason, that which is a great Truth, That they held Rebellion to be the Sin of Witchcraft; I believe it is as bad as any Sin can be.

My Lords, That came to nothing at that time; but, my Lords, I believe that after that, all of all Religions had Meetings among themselves to endeavour to get that Toleration which they proposed humbly to your Lordships; there I will never deny, my Lords, that my Opinion was, and is, that this Kingdom can never be happy till an Act of Parliament pass to this effect; it was my Opinion then, and I did endeavour it all I could, that the Dissenting Protestants might have a Comprehension, and the other a Toleration: I acknowledge it to be my Intention, and I think it was no ill one; for if that be a true Copy of the Commons Votes which is in Print, there is some such thing designing there as a Comprehension; and I was of opinion, that it were sufficient that such as were of the Church of Rome might by Act of Parliament serve God in their own Houses, and privately in their own way, not in publick, and that for it they should pay something to the King out of their Estates, but truly not much; that they should be severely punished if they or any of them did endeavour to persuade any Subject to their opinion, or did come to Court, or enjoy any Office whatsoever, though it were but that of a Scavenger, but that they should pay their Proportion to all chargeable Offices: That I profess, my Lords, was my Opinion, and I confess to your Lordships 'tis so still. I was in some hopes that it would have been done in that Sessions, because I was afraid it was unlikely to be done at any time else. I confess to your Lordships, I was heartily and cordially against the Test, because it hinder'd those just and honest things that were for the Good of the Kingdom.

My Lords, there was the first or the second Day brought into your Lordships House, the Record of Mr. Coleman's Trial; and for the Letters in it, I do, my Lords, declare to your Lordships, I never read one of them before, but I have often read them since they have been in Print; and when I read them first curiously over, my Opinion was and is, That Coleman's endeavouring by Money out of France, and keeping off the Parliament, to get a Toleration, was that which he could not justify by Law; how far it was criminal, that I do not know; I am not so skilled in the Law; I think it was not justifiable, but he hath paid for it severely since.

My Lords, I do declare that ever since I had the Honour to set among your Lordships, which is now 40 Years, (for in the Year 1640, I was by his Majesty's Favour call'd up a Peer,) I have valued myself upon the Honour of setting with you; and I do declare, when I have sat in this House, when your Lordships have desir'd the King, when it was hot Weather and unreasonable, to put off the sitting of the Parliament, I was never glad of it, but sorry when they were prorogued but for a short time. This I profess is true, and I hope I am no Criminal in it; for I do value the Parliament's setting to be the only Means to keep this Kingdom quiet.

My Lords, 'Tis very true by Coleman's Letters, and what I have seen in Print since, I do believe there have been some Consultations for a Toleration; and if I had known as much then as I have since I have been in the Tower, I had perhaps prevented many things: For, my Lords, I hold England to be a great and an happy Body; but it is as other great Bodies are, it may be now, as you know before it was, over-grown or sick; it was then, and I pray God it be not now; but I hold nothing can cure it but that old English Physician, the King, your Lordships, and the Commons in Parliament assembled. But if I had known any such Design as Coleman's Letters do hint, I would not have continued in England.

My Lords, For that damnable Opinion of King-killing, if I were of any Church whatsoever, and found that to be it's Principle, I would leave it. My Lords, this is as true as I can speak any thing in the World; I beg your Lordships Pardon for troubling you with my Impertinencies, and hope you pardon it to my Weakness. My Lords, I do profess before Almighty God, and before your Lordships my Judges, I know no one Tittle nor Point of the Plot; and if I did, I hold myself bound to declare it. For the present I shall say little more, unless the Managers give me occasion; if they will reply, and make any Objections, I desire I may answer them. I know the great Disadvantages I am under, when these Gentlemen, who are great Scholars and learned Men, reply upon me, who have those great Helps of Memory, Parts, and Understanding in the Law, all which I want. And therefore I hope your Lordships will not conclude me upon what they or I have said, but will be pleased to debate the Matter among yourselves, and be as well my Counsel as my Judges.

My Lords, When I offer'd to your Lordships Matter of Law, I did in no wise admit the Matter of Fact——

L. H. S. My Lord, I cannot hear you.

L. Staff. My Lords, If your Lordships please, this Paper may be read.

L. H. S. Deliver your Paper in, my Lords cannot hear.

L. Staff. I cannot deny to your Lordships, that what happen'd to me on Saturday-Night, disturb'd me very much. Every Day since I came hither, there hath been such shouting and hooting by a Company of barbarous Rabble, as never was heard the like, I believe; but it was at a distance most of the time, and so it did not much concern me. But Saturday-Night it was so near and so great, that really it hath disturb'd me ever since; it was great to-day, but at a distance; if it were not thus, I should not offer a Paper to be read: I scarce know what I do or say, considering the Circumstances I am in.

L. H. S. Take my Lord's Paper, and read it.

Sir Tho. Lee. My Lords, I desire you will please to consider whether this may not introduce a new Custom by reading of this Paper. As to what my Lord is pleased to say, I am sorry for the occasion that any Disturbance should arise to my Lord from the Rabble, or any one else; I hope his Lordship believes we cannot help, nor do we contribute to that Disturbance. But we desire your Lordships to consider, whether this Practice of having things written down for the Clerk to read, may not introduce a Custom, which may in time grow inconvenient for future Example. I see no great Danger in the particular Instance before your Lordships now, but it is dangerous in such Cases to do any thing that is new in this Court.

L. H. S. All the Matter is, whether it be read by my Lord, who cannot be heard, or read by the Clerk.

Sir Tho. Lee. We only oppose it out of fear of making a Precedent, which may be of ill Consequence.

L. H. S. Read it, my Lord, and raise your Voice, for it concerns you to speak out.

L. Staff. (Reading out of his Paper.) My Lords, When I offer'd Matter of Law to your Lordships, on Saturday last, I did in nowise admit the Matter of Fact to be true that was alledged against me, and so I desire to be understood. And I hope your Lordships will not lay the less Weight upon the Testimony of my Witnesses, because they are not sworn; for the Law does not suffer them to be sworn, which is no Fault of mine, nor ought not to turn to my Prejudice.

I must appeal to your Lordships Judgments in point of Fact, how far the King's Witnesses are to be believed against me, considering the whole Matter, and my Counter-Proof.

Next I submit to your Lordships Judgments this Point, That the Impeachment being founded upon the Common Law, and the Statute of 25th Edw. III. and not upon the Statute of the 13th of this King, two of the Witnesses, Dugdale and Turberville, do only swear treasonable Words spoken by me, and not my Overt-Act; for they swear only that I promised them Money and Rewards to kill the King. Now I humbly pray your Lordships Judgment, whether bare speaking of Words be an Overt-Act, and Treason at the Common Law, or upon that Statute; and whether there be more than speaking of Words in a Consult, or otherwise proved by Dugdale and Turberville, I appeal to you. Then the other Witness, Oates, is but a single Witness, who speaks of the receiving of a Commission. This is that I offer to your Lordships now for your Judgments, and then I desire I may have your Opinion in other things.

L. H. S. Is this all your Lordship hath to say?

L. Staff. For the present, my Lords.

L. H. S. You must say all you have to say now.

L. Staff. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to hear Counsel to nothing at all? I did likewise alledge to your Lordships th' other day, That People that swear for Money are not competent credible Witnesses; how far that was proved, or I may prove by my Counsel, I submit to your Lordships.

L. H. S. Look you, my Lord, you have so far receiv'd already the Pleasure of the House: You have rais'd several Questions of Law, Whether every Overt-Act requires two Witnesses to prove it. You have had the Opinion of the Judges, and there is no more to be said in it. As to that, Whether Impeachments continue from Parliament to Parliament; and the other thing, Whether Proceedings may be upon an Impeachment without an Indictment; these are Matters of the Course and Constitution of Parliaments, my Lords will consider of them by themselves, and will permit no Counsel to argue them. For the other Point, That Words are no Overt-Act, that rests for their Opinion in another Case, when it shall come, for they have now no such Case before them.

L. Staff. I humbly conceive there is.

L. H. S. There is a great Difference between bare Words being an Overt-Act, and Persuasion by Promises of Money and Rewards to kill the King, which is a very great Overt-Act.

L. Staff.

L. Staff. Is it possible to do an Act by Words? If it be so, I never heard it before.

L. H. S. Otherwise Men may promise Rewards to twenty several Persons to kill the King, and then say 'tis all but Words.

L. Staff. I say it not, but I humbly conceive the Law says it.

L. H. S. What say you, Gentlemen of the House of Commons?

L. Staff. My Lords, I have something to say, which I desire to speak first: My Lords, I hope I have cleared to your Lordships that all the Witnesses have sworn falsely against me, and this I have made out by Proofs: I say not much to that. — (My Lord was searching for his Papers.) Truly, my Lords, I am confounded with the Noise and other Circumstances: but, my Lords, I shall, if your Lordships please to give me leave, humbly represent my Case to you, how I take it to be in Matter of Fact, (as to my own Condition not any Thing,) how I am now before your Lordships.

I was, my Lords, committed by my Lord Chief-Justice's Warrant, on the 20th or 21st of October, (78.) Friday, 25th of October, I was brought to your Lordships Bar; I was impeached; I do not remember the Day, my Lords, the Beginning of December; in one Parliament Articles exhibited against me; in another Parliament I was brought upon these Articles exhibited, and being called to your Lordships Bar, the Articles were read to me, and I gave in my Answer; that was sometime in May (79.) and in the End of May, the 27th, (if I mistake not, if I do, I desire it may be rectified by your Books) I, with the other Lords, were brought to this Place in order to our Trial. We staid some Time there, and then were remanded by your Order to the Tower, where I continued till November twelve Months after, without having heard any Thing concerning it. So that I was first impeached in one Parliament, Articles brought against me and pleaded to in a second, and now brought to my Trial in a third; and what your Lordships will say upon this, I submit to you; and whether these be Proceedings according to Law your Lordships will judge.

My Lords, I humbly conceive that Magna Charta says, That Justice shall be denied nor delayed to no Man; whether it hath not been delayed to me let your Lordships judge. If you say the Prorogation of the Parliament is the Cause of that Delay, I hope your Lordships will give me leave to say, That from the 5th of December to the 30th, when the first Parliament was prorogued, or during the Session of the other Parliament, there was Time enough sure wherein I might have been brought to my Trial; and if these Proceedings be lawful and just, there is no Man living, but may be kept off from Time to Time, till some Accidents happen that their Ends may be gained. I leave it to your Judgment, whether it may be only my Case now, or of some of your Lordships in future Ages, to be accused of Things that you never heard of before, and not brought to justify yourselves, but kept in Prison.

My Lords, There is a Statute, I have forgot where it is, (but such a one I have read) that tho' the King by his Great Seal, or Little Seal, command that Justice should be delayed or denied, yet, however, the Judges shall not obey it, but proceed. So I hope there is no Pretence of Delay on my Part, and the Benefit of that Statute shall not be denied me. And that Statute of the Great Charter, which cost so many of your Ancestors their Lives to maintain, I hope you will never go from. Now your Lordships noble Ancestors, amongst other Things, took great Care that Justice should be denied or delayed to none; and this I desire you to take into Consideration.

I am in your Lordships Judgment either to be acquitted or condemned. I hope your Lordships will, and I know you will, lay your Hands upon your Hearts, consult your Consciences and your Honours; and then you will do what is just and equitable, I doubt not.

My Lords, Mr. Oates said I came by the Name of Mr. Howard of Effingham, but that I did to my Letters sign Stafford; surely, my Lords, if I was ashamed to own my Person, I should have been as much ashamed to have owned my Name. He says, he saw me take a Commission, and whether that be an Overt-Act, your Lordships are to determine. Upon the whole Matter, I conceive, there is nothing proved against me but Words, nor pretended to, but only by Oates. And whether you will credit a Man that so dissembles with God, as I have told you, I appeal to your Lordships, and beg you to consider of it.

That these Witnesses have sworn for Money, if you send to the Exchequer-Office, and see what Money they have received, you will find by the great Sums that 'tis so; and then I hope you will not allow them to be heard, nor credit any that swear for Gain. I had a Suit in Westminster-Hall, that had like to have gone expressly against me, only because one of my Witnesses was to gain 8*l.* if the Suit went for me. But pray consider how much these Men have had. And for the Point, that there are not two Witnesses, I beseech your Lordships give me leave to put you in Mind, That not many Years ago, you passed an Act against Frauds and Perjuries, wherein you were so careful to preserve Men's Estates, that you required three Witnesses to prove a Will of Goods or Lands above 100*l.* and will you allow but one Witness to take away a Man's Life for Words? Though your Lordships will never commit Treason, yet no Man can preserve himself from the Misfortune that happens to me, of being falsely accused.

'Tis true, my Lords, the Managers have given an Answer to the Business of the Money, by saying, The King may give as liberally as he pleases; but to give so great Sums, whereby Men poor before, are now become rich, I think will be an Objection against their Credit.

My Lords, I have said what I do think convenient, though I think much more might be said by an abler Man to your Lordships, for the clearing of himself. I hope I have done it, nay, I am confident I have; and this I have done for the Memory of that Great and Blessed King, who first made me a Peer, that it may not be said he did me the Honour forty Years ago to call me up to this Dignity, and I should fly in the face of his Son in so horrible a Manner as these Men would make me. I owe it to the Honour of my Father and Mother, who, I think I may safely say, were both honourable and worthy Persons: My Father was a learned Man, and a wise Man, as I may appeal to some of your Lordships who knew him well; I say, I owe it to their Memory, and to the Honour of the Family from whence I sprang, which all the World knows that it is. And I should be an infamous Man to dishonour them so much, as to bear their Name, and commit Treason. My Lords, I owe it to my Wife, who hath been a very kind Wife to me as ever Man had: She is a Person at Law to the great Estate of that great and unfortunate Man

Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, who was cut off in the Reign of King Henry the VIIIth, and all his Estate, if it were not for that Attainder, would have come to her.

I may be impertinent in telling your Lordships what it was; but I do not over say it, when I reckon it would have been at this Day 20,000*l.* a Year, for it was 17,000*l.* a Year in those Days Penny-Rent, besides other Emoluments. This is an extravagant Thing to say, but 'tis true; something thereof does remain to her, which I now enjoy. I owe it to all my Children, especially to my eldest Son, who is a young Man, and I may say, of far better Parts and Hopes than his Father, and whom, I hope, will serve his Country. I owe it to all my Friends and Relations, for I would not have it said after my Death, my Wife was the Widow of a Traitor. I owe it to all these, but above all, I owe it to God Almighty; that when I come to be judged by Him, I may give a good Account of what he hath entrusted me with, that I may not appear as an infamous Man who knows he hath a Body, but not his own, and yet should throw it and his Soul away together. And if I should have committed this execrable Treason, I should have been guilty of my own Murder: First, In the committing a Crime worthy of Death; and then in not confessing, to save my Life. I hold Murder an extraordinary Crime, the worst next to Treason: And I know, if I should not prevent my Death by confessing all I knew, I should have been guilty of Self-Murder, the worst of Murders. I know your Lordships will lay to Heart, what an execrable Thing Murder is, and the Blood of Innocents; and I hope there is none of the House of Commons, but after this Evidence will clear me. I am sure none of them would have me punished for that I am not guilty of. I do not blame these Gentlemen of the House of Commons for prosecuting, nor the first for impeaching; for they had without all doubt, Reasons great enough for it upon what Evidence they had before them, before they knew what the Witnesses were. I know your Lordships will not in the least Point vary from Justice, or the Law of the Land, and I desire you to lay the whole Matter to your Hearts; I have not the least Suspicion of the Partiality of any Man in the House; nay, I profess, if I had an Enemy, and he were not here, I would beg of you that he might come. I have cleared myself before your Lordships, and I hope I shall not be run down by the wicked Rabble; which, where it will end, God knows. It began in the late Times against my Lord of Stafford, and so continued till it ended in that most execrable Fact, one of them, that ever was done. A wicked Beginning it was, and it had a wicked End. For since our Saviour's Death and Murder by the Jews, never was so execrable a Murder in the World; and whoever had an Hand in it, without an extraordinary repentance, can have no Thoughts of Salvation. I never could serve the King, 'tis true, but in my Desires; and I never deserted him in Thought, Word, or Deed, to my Knowledge, in my Life; much less did I ever contrive or consent to his Death. I do in the Presence of God, Angels, your Lordships, and all Men, declare, I do know no more of the Plot, or any such Thing, than any one here does. That those of the Romish Religion had Meetings, I believe, to obtain those Ends that I spake of before: Coleman went too far; how far he was criminal in it, I can't tell. Meetings, I say, there were, but I was never at one of them, nor do I know what was done there. I do leave it to your Lordships to do Justice, as I know you will, and with all submission I resign myself up to you.

L. H. S. Have you done, my Lord?

L. Staff. If your Lordships will not allow me Counsel to argue those Points, I have done.

L. H. S. What say you, Gentlemen of the House of Commons?

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lords, Something that my Lord hath spoken hath been resolved against him, that is, about two Witnesses to each Overt-Act; some things are not to be disputed about the Law and Course of Parliaments; some things were not to be said now, because he had said them before. My Lords, we had concluded our Evidence, and he is pleased to take up the Time with repeating what was said before.

For the other Matters that my Lord is pleased to discourse of, all he says is but his Obligations, and how unreasonable it were for him to do it; the Question is, Whether he hath done it or no? If he hath, his Obligations are an Aggravation of his Crime, not an Excuse. His Relations, his Family, and other Things are nothing before your Lordships now in Point of Judgment, nor is there any Thing new said to Day, that was not said before.

Sir Will. Jones. My Lords, I should not add one Word farther, were it not that this noble Lord is pleased upon his Memory, or rather without, to say something of me; and that was, That speaking of the Continuance of Proceedings, I should say, If your Lordships had no Precedent, I hope you would make one. My Lords, I do appeal to your Lordships Memory, whether I said any Thing like it; I utterly deny it, nor was there any Occasion for it. For there was no need of urging Precedents, when your Lordships, upon a Conference with the Commons, did declare it to be the Law of Proceedings in Parliament, and did then fortify it with many Arguments. I know, my Lord's Memory is not very good; I'm sure in this he is very much mistaken.

My Lord hath been pleased to complain he hath received much Disturbance, and that the Noise and Shouts have been so great, that they have occasioned some Distraction in him. My Lords, I am sure his Lordship cannot mean us; for I appeal to your Lordships, and all that have heard this Trial, whether he hath received the least Disturbance or Interruption from us, or whether we have not treated him with that Respect that becomes his Dignity, and the Discretion that ought to be in the Managers of the House of Commons. But I must needs say, that his Lordship hath received Distraction from those Friends or Counsel of his that put those many Papers into his Hand; for he hath read one after another that do contain the same Matter over and over again. These, I confess, were sufficient to distract him, or any other that should make use of them. His Lordship hath been pleased to go off from the Matter of Law, to the Matter of Fact; and backward and forward, so that it is impossible to follow him: And as to the Matter of Fact, we shall decline to follow him; for tho' we have not given his Lordship any Disturbance, yet we submit to your Judgment, whether it be regular, or according to the course of Proceedings, when his Lordship hath summ'd up his Evidence, and we that are the Prosecutors have concluded ours, he should begin that Work again; which, if it should be admitted, we were to reply, and he might rejoin upon us, and so there would be no end of Proceedings.

And, my Lords, I hope, tho' this Lord hath had the Favour to do it, yet it shall not for the future be brought into Example, for it will make Trials endless.

My Lords, For the Matter of Law, there is nothing that deserves an Answer; for tho' the Law does admit the Prisoner Counsel in Matters of Law, yet it must be in things doubtful; and if there be any thing of that in our Case, I submit it to your Lordships. I am sure, I have heard nothing new but what hath been over-ruled already, unless it be a Matter of Law which rises upon the Matter of Fact, and that not proved, to wit, the Corruption of Witnesses. The last Day, all was said by his Lordship he could say, and all said by us that we thought fit to say; and now to begin the same Matter again, I think ought not to be admitted. We shall not follow his Lordship in that way of Proceedings, and hope it shall never fall into Example.

Sir F. Win. My Lords, I have only one Word to say to your Lordships, and that is in relation to the Proceedings of the Commons in this Cause; for if the Cause had not been of an extraordinary Nature, we should have stood upon it, that the Prisoner ought not, after the Prosecutors had concluded, to have taken a liberty of reading and repeating what he had said over and over again. We know, my Lords, there are a Sort of Men in the World, who are willing to lay hold of any Pretences to cavil at our Proceedings; and therefore we have let my Lord take all this liberty, that so his Party might have no colour of Complaint. His Lordship was pleased to say the last Day, that he had not a Witness more to produce, nor a Reason to give, as I understood him; and therefore he must own that we have been very tender to him in all our Proceedings. One thing my Lord insinuates to Day, which I cannot forbear taking notice of as if we had delayed him: which is without cause; we had used all Diligence in preparing ourselves, and were soon ready when the King was pleased to let the Parliament sit, and therefore it can be no Imputation on us: and truly, if my Lord considers the Weight of the Evidence, I fear he will think his Trial comes soon enough now.

L. Staff. My Lords, I desire to be rightly understood in one thing, and 'tis only this; I did not say the House of Commons shouted at me, but the Rabble.

L. H. S. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. S. Then this House is adjourned to the Parliament-Chamber.

[Then the Lords withdrew in their former Order, and the Committee of Commons went back to their House.]

Mr. Speaker resum'd the Chair, and a Message was sent from the Lords by Sir Timothy Baldwyn and Sir Samuel Clarke.

Mr. Speaker,

The Lords have commanded us to acquaint this House, that they have appointed William Viscount Stafford to be brought to the Bar in Westminster-Hall to-morrow Morning at Ten of the Clock, to receive Judgment.

[The Commons adjourned to eight of the Clock the next Morning.]

THE SEVENTH DAY.

Tuesday, December the 7th, 1680.

ABOUT the Hour of Eleven, the Lords adjourned into Westminster-Hall, going thither in their former Order into the Court there erected; and Mr. Speaker having left the Chair, the Committee of Commons were seated as before.

The Lords being sat, Proclamation was made for Silence; and the Lord High-Steward being seated on the Woolpack, with Garter Principal King of Arms, the Usher of the Black-Rod, nine Maces attending him, with all the rest of the Solemnity, as was at first expressed, took the Votes of the Peers upon the Evidence, beginning at the Puisne Baron, and so upwards, in this order; the Lord Stafford being (as the Law requires) absent.

L. H. S. My Lords, I am an humble Suitor to your Lordships, That you will give me leave to collect your Votes as I fit, for I am not able to stand. (Which being granted, the Lord High-Steward proceeded.)

L. H. S. My Lord Butler of Wotton, Is William Lord Viscount Stafford Guilty of the Treason whereof he stands impeached, or Not Guilty?

Lord Butler. Not Guilty upon my Honour.

[The same Question was put to the rest, whose Names and Votes follow.]

Lord Arundel of Trerice. Not Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Crew. Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Cornwallis. Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Holles. Not Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Wootton. Not Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Rockingham. Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Lucas. Not Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Ashley. Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Ward. Not Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Byron. Not Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Hatton. Not Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Leigh. Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Herbert of Cherbury. Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Howard of Esherick. Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Maynard. Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Lovelace. Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Deincourt. Not Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Grey of Werk. Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Brook. Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Norris. Not Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Chandos. Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord North and Grey. Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Pagett. Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Wharton. Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Eure. Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Cromwell. Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Windsor. Not Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Conyers. Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Ferrers. Not Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Morley. Not Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Mowbray. Not Guilty upon my Honour.

Lord Visc. Newport. Guilty upon my Honour.

L. H. S. My Lords, Upon telling your Votes, I find there are Thirty-one of my Lords that think the Prisoner Not Guilty, and Fifty-five that have found him Guilty. Serjeant, Make Proclamation for the Lieutenant of the Tower to bring his Prisoner to the Bar.

[Which was done, and his Lordship came to the Bar.]

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, I have but heavy Tidings for you; your Lordship hath been impeached of High-Treason, you have pleaded Not Guilty; my Lords have heard your Defence, and have consider'd of the Evidence, and their Lordships do find you Guilty of the Treason whereof you are impeached.

L. Staff. God's Holy Name be praised, my Lords, for it.

L. H. S. What can your Lordship say for yourself, why Judgment of Death should not be given upon you according to the Law?

L. Staff. My Lords, I have but very little to say; I confess, I am surpriz'd at it, for I did not expect it; but God's Will be done, and your Lordships, I will not murmur at it: God forgive those that have sworn falsely against me. My Lord, I conceive I have something to say for respite of Judgment: I have been at many Trials in my Life, but never saw any Trial where the Party tried did not hold up his Hand, which I was never asked to do: I thought it had been a very material Point in the Law, that by the holding up of the Hand he might be known to be the Person. I have read lately, since I had the Misfortune to be thus accused, Sir Edward Coke upon the Pleas of the Crown; and he says That Misnomer, the not giving a Man his right Name, or Addition, is likewise a just Cause to arrest the Judgment. There is likewise another Question, how far it may be valued I know not; I submit it, as I do all to your Lordships. Tho' I am tried upon the Act of the 25th of Edward III. yet there is nothing more in that Act, than what is included in the Act of the 13th of this King; and I humbly conceive, my Lords, that that Act, and the last Proviso in it, a Peer that is accused and found guilty of the Crimes therein mentioned, is to lose his Seat in Parliament: those are the Words; and since 'tis so put down in the Act, it is so to be understood, and that is all the Punishment. And I humbly demand your Lordships Judgment upon these Points, whether it be so or no.

L. H. S. Has your Lordship any more to say?

L. Staff. No, my Lords, I submit to your Lordships, and desire your Judgment in these Points.

Then the Lords adjourned into the Parliament-Chamber, and the Committee of Commons returned to their own House; and their Speaker having resumed the Chair, the whole Body of the House went with the Speaker to the Bar of the House of Lords, to demand Judgment of High-Treason against William Viscount Stafford, upon the Impeachment of the Commons of England, in Parliament, in the Name of the Commons of England, and of all the Commons of England.

It don't appear what the misnomer was Lord Stafford said in the last part of his speech in 13. Chas. 2. chap. 1.

See in vol. 2. on the first of the trials of Peter for perjury in the State Tri. 40. where it is said that his Lordship was & other Lords were very for this there in the Court of the evidence.

The Commons, with their Speaker, went back to their House. Then the Lords took into Consideration what Judgment was to be given upon William Viscount Stafford, and it was moved that he might be beheaded. After some Debate, the Judges were asked, whether if any other Judgment than the usual Judgment for High-Treason were given upon him, it would attain his Blood? The Judges were of Opinion, that the Judgment for High-Treason appointed by Law, is to be drawn, hanged, and quartered; and in the Courts and Proceedings below they can take no notice of any Judgment for High-Treason but that.

Then Sir Creswell Levinz, the King's Attorney-General, desired to be heard on his Majesty's behalf, which the House gave leave for him to be; who said, he knew no other Judgment by Law for High-Treason, but Drawing, Hanging, and Quartering; if any other Judgment were given, it would be prejudicial to his Majesty, and be a Question in the inferior Courts as to his Attainder of High-Treason.

Whereupon their Lordships ordered, That the Lord High Steward do pronounce the ordinary Judgment of Death upon the Lord Viscount Stafford, as the Law hath appointed in Cases of High-Treason.

And a Message was sent to the House of Commons from their Lordships, by Sir Timothy Baldwin and Sir Samuel Clark.

Mr. Speaker, We are commanded by the Lords, to acquaint this House, That their Lordships are going presently into Westminster-Hall, to give Judgment against William Viscount Stafford.

The Committee of Commons appointed for the Management of the Evidence against the Prisoner, with the rest of the Commons, went into Westminster-Hall, to the Court there erected; to be present when the Lords gave Judgment of High-Treason against him upon the Impeachment of the Commons of England.

After a short Time their Lordships were adjourned into Westminster-Hall, coming in their former Order into the Court there erected; where being seated, and the Lord High Steward being on the Woolfack, attended by Garter Principal King of Arms, the Usher of the Black Rod, eight of the Serjeants at Arms kneeling with their Maces, the ninth making Proclamation for Silence; which being done, the Lord High-Steward gave Judgment upon the Prisoner as followeth:

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, THAT which your Lordship hath said in Arrest of Judgment hath been found by my Lords, upon due Consideration had of it, to be of no moment at all. It is no essential Part of any Trial, That the Prisoner should hold up his Hand at the Bar; there is no Record ever made of it when it is done; the only Use of it is to shew the Court who the Prisoner is, and when that is apparent, the Court does often proceed against him, though he refuse to hold up his Hand at the Bar; therefore the Omission of that Ceremony, in this Case, is no legal Exception, as all the Judges have declared.

And as to the Proviso in the Statute of the 13th Year of this King, their Lordships do find that they are in no Sort applicable to this Case, forasmuch as the Proceedings against your Lordship are not grounded upon that Statute, but upon the Statute of 25 Edw. III. And yet if the Proceedings had been upon the latter Statute, the Proviso therein could have done your Lordship no Service at all.

My Part therefore which remains, is a very sad one: For I never yet gave Sentence of Death upon any Man, and am extremely sorry that I must begin with your Lordship.

Who would have thought that a Person of your Quality, of so noble an Extraction, of so considerable Estate and Fortune, so eminent a Sufferer in the late ill Times, so interested in the Preservation of the Government, so much obliged to the Moderation of it, and so personally obliged to the King and his Royal Father for their particular Favours to you, should ever have entered into so infernal a Conspiracy as to contrive the Murder of the King, the Ruin of the State, the Subversion of Religion, and, as much as in you lay, the Destruction of all the Souls and Bodies in three Christian Nations?

And yet the Impeachment of the House of Commons amounts to no less a Charge, and of this Charge their Lordships have found you Guilty. That there hath been a general and desperate Conspiracy of the Papists, and that the Death of the King hath been all along one chief Part of the Conspirators-Design, is now apparent beyond all Possibility of doubting.

What was the meaning of all those Treatises which were published about Two Years since against the Oath of Allegiance, in a Time when no Man dreamt of such a Controversy? What was the meaning of Father Conyers's Sermon upon the same Subject, but only because there was a Demonstration of Zeal, as they call it, intended against the Person of the King? Which the Scruples arising from that Oath did somewhat hinder. To what Purpose were all the Correspondencies with foreign Nations? The Collections of Money among the Fathers Abroad and at Home? What was the meaning of their governing themselves here by such Advices as came frequently from Paris and St. Omers? And how shall we expound that Letter which came from Ireland, to assure the Fathers here, that all Things were in a readiness there too, as soon as the Blow should be given?

Does any Man now begin to doubt how London came to be burnt? Or by what Ways and Means poor Justice Godfrey fell? And is it not apparent by these Instances, that such is the frantick Zeal of some bigotted Papists, that they resolve, no Means to advance the Catholick Cause shall be left unattempted, though it be by Fire and Sword?

My Lord, as the Plot in general is most manifest, so your Lordship's part in it hath been too too plain. What you did at Paris, and continued to do at Tixall in Staffordshire, shews a settled Purpose of Mind against the King, and what you said at London touching honest Will, shews you were acquainted with that Conspiracy against the King's Life which was carrying on here too: And in all this there was a great Degree of Malice; for your Lordship at one time call'd the King Heretick and Traitor to God; and at another Time you reviled him for misplacing his bounty, and rewarding none but Traitors and Rebels.

And thus you see that which the Wife-Man forewarned you of, is come upon you: Curse not the King, no, not in thy Heart: For the Birds of the Air shall reveal, and that which hath Wings will declare the Matter.

Three Things I shall presume to recommend to your Lordship's Consideration. In the first Place, your Lordship now sees how it hath pleased God to leave you so far to yourself, that you are fallen into the Snare, and into the Pit, into that very Pit which you were digging for others. Consider therefore, that God Almighty never yet left any Man, who did not first leave him.

In the next Place, Think a little better of it than hitherto you have done, what kind of Religion that is, in which the blind Guides have been able to lead you into so much Ruin and Destruction as is now like to befall you.

In the last Place, I pray your Lordship to consider, That true Repentance is never too late. A devout penitential Sorrow, joined with an humble and hearty Confession, is of mighty Power and Efficacy both with God and Man.

There have been some of late who have refused to give God the glory of his Justice by acknowledging the Crimes for which they were condemned; nay, who have been taught to believe, that 'tis a mortal Sin to confess that Crime in publick, for which they have been absolved in private, and so have not dared to give God that Glory which otherwise they would have done.

God forbid your Lordship should rest upon Forms; God forbid your Lordship should be found among the Number of those poor mistaken Souls, whom the first Thing that undeceives is Death itself.

Perhaps your Lordship may not much esteem the Prayers of those whom you have long been taught to miscall Hereticks; but whether you do or no, I am to assure your Lordship, That all my Lords here, even they that have condemned you, will never cease to pray for you, That the End of your Life may be Christian and Pious, how tragical soever the Means are that must bring you thither.

And now, my Lord, this is the last Time that I can call you my Lord; for the next Words I am to speak will attain you.

The Judgment of the Law is, and this Court doth award, That

YOU go to the Place from whence you came; from thence you must be drawn upon a Hurdle to the Place of Execution: When you come there, you must be hanged up by the Neck, but not till you are dead; for you must be cut down alive, your Privy-Members must be cut off, and your Bowels ript up before your Face, and thrown into the Fire. Then your Head must be severed from your Body, and your Body divided into four Quarters; and these must be at the Disposal of the King. And God Almighty be merciful to your Soul.

Prisoner. My Lords, I humbly beseech you give me leave to speak a few Words; I do give your Lordships hearty Thanks for all your Favours to me. I do here, in the Presence of God Almighty declare, I have no Malice in my Heart to them that have condemned me; I know not who they are, nor desire to know; I forgive them all, and beseech your Lordships all to pray for me. My Lords, I have one humble Request to make to your Lordships, and that is, my Lords, That the little short Time I have to live a Prisoner, I may not be a close Prisoner as I have been of late, but that Mr. Lieutenant may have an Order that my Wife and Children and Friends may come at me. I do humbly beg this Favour of your Lordships, which I hope you will be pleased to give me.

L. H. S. My Lord Stafford, I believe I may, with my Lords leave, tell you one Thing further, That my Lords, as they proceed with Rigour of Justice, so they proceed with all the Mercy and Compassion that may be; and therefore my Lords will be humble Suitors to the King, that he will remit all the Punishment but the taking off your Head.

Prisoner. (Weeping) My Lords, your Justice does not make me cry, but your Goodness.

Then the Lord High Steward broke his Staff, and the Lords adjourned into the Parliament Chamber, and the Commons returned to their House, and the Prisoner with the Ax born before him with the Edge towards him (it being carried contrarily during his Trial) was sent back to the Tower.

His Majesty afterward ordered the Lord High-Chancellor to issue out under the Great Seal of England the following Writs for executing the said late Viscount Stafford; the first being to the Lieutenant of the Tower, to deliver him on the 29th of December 1680, between nine and eleven o'Clock in the Forenoon, at the usual Place without the Tower-Gate, to the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex; and the other being for them then and there to receive him into their Custody, and to lead him to the usual Place upon Tower-Hill, and there to cause his Head to be cut off, and severed from his Body: Which Writs were in Form following:

B A R K E R.

There were two Writs to the Sheriffs, both alike verbatim, one delivered in London, the other in Middlesex.

Whereupon the Sheriffs doubting whether that was a sufficient Authority for them to execute the Prisoner by Beheading only, the Sentence of Death being otherwise given, petitioned the Lords in Parliament to take the Premises into Consideration, and to make such Order as should be agreeable to Right and Justice, as by the following Petition appears.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Temporal in Parliament assembled; The Humble Petition of Slingsby Bethel, Esq; and Henry Cornish, Esq; Sheriffs of London and Middlesex:

Sheweth,

THAT your Petitioners have received a Writ under the Great Seal of England, reciting, That Judgment had been given by your Lordships against William Viscount Stafford, for High-Treason, and divers other Crimes and Offences, upon the Impachment of the Commons in Parliament assembled, and commanding your Petitioners to cause the said Viscount Stafford's Head to be sever'd from his Body upon the 29th Day of this Instant December, notwithstanding any Judgment, Law, Ordinance, or Command to the contrary:

That your Petitioners have not as yet received any Command from your Lordships for executing the said Judgment.

May it therefore please your Lordships to take the Premises into Consideration, and to make such Order therein, as shall be agreeable to Right and Justice. And your Petitioners shall always pray, &c.

Upon which Petition, the Lords did declare as followeth:

Die Martis 21 Decembris, 1680.

UPON Application from the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, making some Scruples concerning the Execution of the late Lord Viscount Stafford, which were found by this House to be unnecessary, this House do declare, That the King's Writ ought to be obeyed.

The said Sheriffs likewise made Application to the House of Commons upon the aforesaid Matter, who made the following Resolve:

Die Jovis 23 Decembris, 1680.

Resolved, &c. That this House is content that the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, do execute William late Viscount Stafford, by severing his Head from his Body only.

Accordingly, on the Wednesday following, being the 29th of December, between nine and Ten in the Forenoon, the two Sheriffs, with a considerable number of Gentlemen on Horseback, went to the Tower-Gate, and there demanded William Howard, late Viscount Stafford; when a Gentleman belonging to the Lieutenant of the Tower, told the Sheriffs, That the Lieutenant would wait on them presently, and bring the Prisoner to the Bars: To which the Sheriffs answered, That they must preserve the Privileges and Bounds of the City: An Officer replied, Sir, We were ordered to draw up two Companies from the Gate to the Bar, and there you are to receive the Prisoner. Sheriffs. Gentlemen, we will preserve the Liberties of the City: And we are come at the Gate to demand the Prisoner; whether the Lieutenant will deliver him or no, we demand him. And accordingly, he was deliver'd to the Sheriffs between the Gates and the Bars.

Before the Prisoner came, several People were upon the Scaffold, among which were two appointed to write.

The Headſman came up with two Blocks, one old, one new, in a Bag; also the Ax covered with a Cloth. The new Block being taken out, was covered over with Black, and laid upon a piece of Black Bays, about two Yards and a half long, upon which the Prisoner was to stretch himself. Then the Coffin was brought up, being coloured with two Letters, W. S. 1680. Then the Prisoner came upon the Scaffold, and asked for the Executioner; upon his appearing, he asked him, If he had received Money for the Cloaths? being answered, No, his Man took out a Purse of Five Pounds, which the Headſman objected against, and the Prisoner gave him two Guineas more. After a short Pause, he stepp'd to one side of the Scaffold, and taking a Paper out of his Pocket, read it as his Speech, (Which came out the very same Day, before two of the Clock, in Print, as his Speech) and was as follows:

BY the Permission of Almighty God, I am this Day brought hither to suffer Death, as if I were guilty of High Treason. I do most truly, in the Presence of the Eternal, Omnipotent, and All-knowing God, protest, upon my Salvation, That I am as innocent as it is possible for any Man to be, so much as in a Thought, of the Crimes laid to my Charge.

I acknowledge it to be a particular Grace and Favour of the Holy Trinity, to have given me this long time to prepare myself for Eternity. I have not made so good use of that Grace as I ought to have done, partly by my not having so well recollected myself as I might have done, and partly, because not only my Friends, but my Wife and Children have for several Days been forbidden to see me, but in the Presence of one of my Warders. This hath been a great Trouble and Distraction unto me, but I hope God of his infinite Mercy will pardon my Defects, and accept of my good Intentions.

Since my long Imprisonment, I have consider'd often, what could be the original Cause of my being thus accused, since I knew myself not culpable, so much as in a Thought; and I cannot believe it to be upon any other Account than my being of the Church of Rome. I have no reason to be ashamed of my Religion, for it teacheth nothing but the right Worship of God, Obedience to the King, and due Subordination to the temporal Laws of the Kingdom. And I do submit to all Articles of Faith believed and taught in the Catholick Church, believing them to be most consonant to the Word of God. And whereas it hath so much and often been objected, That the Church holds that Sovereign Princes, excommunicated by the Pope, may, by their Subjects, be deposed or murdered: As to the Murder of Princes, I have been taught as a Matter of Faith in the Catholick Church, that such Doctrine is diabolical, horrid, detestable, and contrary to the Law of God, Nature, and Nations; and as such, from my Heart I renounce and abominate it. As for the Doctrine of deposing Princes, I know some Divines of the Catholick Church hold it; but as able and learned as they have writ against it: But it was not pretended to be the Doctrine of the Church, that is, any Point of Catholick Faith: Wherefore I do here in my Conscience declare, that it is my true and real Judgment, that the same Doctrine of deposing Kings, is contrary to the fundamental Laws of this Kingdom, injurious to Sovereign Power, and consequently would be in me or any other of his Majesty's Subjects, impious and damnable. I believe and profess, that there is one God, one Saviour, one Holy Catholick Church, of which, through the Mercy, Grace, and Goodness of God, I die a Member.

To my great and unspeakable Grief, I have offended God in many things, by many great Offences; but I give him most humble Thanks, not in any of those Crimes of which I was accused.

All the Members of either House having Liberty to propose in the House what they think fit for the Good of the Kingdom; accordingly, I proposed what I thought fit; the House is Judge of the Fitness or Unfitness of it; and I think I never said any thing that was unfitting there, or contrary to the Law and Use of Parliament; for certainly if I had, the Lords would (as they might) have punished me: So am not culpable before God or Man.

It is much reported of Indulgencies, Dispensations, and Pardons, to murder, rebel, lie, forswear, and commit such other Crimes held and given in the Church; I do here profess, in the Presence of God, I never learnt, believed, or practised any such Thing, but the contrary; and I speak this without any Equivocation or Reservation whatsoever: And certainly, were I guilty, either myself, or knew of any one that were guilty, whosoever that were so, of any of those Crimes of which I am accused, I were not only the greatest Fool imaginable, but a perfect Mad-man, and as wicked as any of those that so falsely have accus'd me, if I should not discover any ill Design I knew in any Kind, and so upon Discovery save my Life, I have so often had so fair Occasions proposed unto me, and so am guilty of Self-Murder, which is a most grievous and heinous Sin; and though I was at last impeached at the Lords Bar, yet I have great Grounds to believe, that I was first brought to Trial, on the Belief, that to save my Life, I would make some great Discovery; and truly so I would, had I known any such thing of any ill Design, or illegal dangerous Plot, either of myself, or any other Person whatsoever, without any Exception. But had I a thousand Lives, I would lose them all, rather than falsely accuse either myself, or any other whatsoever. And if I had known of any Treason, and should thus deny it, as I do now upon my Salvation at this time, I should have no hope of Salvation, which now I have, through the Merits of Christ Jesus.

I do beseech God to bless his Majesty, who is my lawful King and Sovereign, whom I was always, by all Laws human and divine, bound to obey; and I am sure that no Power on Earth, either singly, or altogether, can legally allow me, or any body else, to lift up a Hand against him, or his legal Authority. I do hold, that the Constitution of the Government of this Kingdom is the only way to continue Peace and Quietness, which God long continue.

Next to Treason, I hold Murder in Abhorrence, and have ever done and do; and I do sincerely profess, that if I could at this time free myself immediately, and establish what Religion I would, and what Government I would, and make myself as great as I could wish, and all by the Death of one of these Fellows, that by their Perjuries have brought me to the Place where I am, I so much abhor to be the Cause of any Man's Death, that I would not any way be the Cause of their Murder; how much less would I endeavour the Assassination of his Majesty, whom I hold to be as gracious a King as ever this, or any other Nation had, and under whom the People may enjoy their Liberties, as much as ever any did? And if it please God to grant him Life and Happiness, according as I have always wished and pray'd for, I am morally persuaded, that he, and all his Dominions, will be as happy and prosperous as ever People were, which I beseech God grant.

I do most humbly ask Pardon of the Almighty and All-merciful God, for all the great Offences I have committed against his Divine Majesty; and I know he would not have the Death and Confusion of a Sinner, but that he may repent and live; in that Assurance I hope, knowing he never despiseth a contrite heart; and though I have not so feeling a Contrition as I would, yet I have it as well as I can; and I doubt not but that God will accept of the Good-will.

I do desire that all People will forgive me any Injury that I have done them in any thing, either willfully or by Chance; and I do heartily forgive all People in this World that have injur'd me; I forgive even those perjur'd Men, that so falsely have brought me hither by their Perjuries.

I do now upon my Death and Salvation aver, That I never spoke one Word either to Oates or Turberville, or, to my Knowledge, ever saw them until my Trial; and for Dugdale, I never spoke unto him of any thing, but about a Foot-boy, or Foot-man, or Foot-race; and never was then alone

alone with him: All the Punishment that I wish them, is, that they may repent and acknowledge the Wrong that they have done me; then it will appear how innocent I am: God forgive them! I have a great Confidence that it will please Almighty God, and that he will, in a short time, bring Truth to Light; then you, and all the World, will see and know what Injury they have done me.

I hope that I have made it appear that I have some Conscience; for if I had none, certainly I would have saved my Life, by acknowledging myself guilty; which I could have done, though I know I am not in the least guilty. And I having some Conscience, make very ill use of it, for I throw myself into eternal Pain, by thus plainly and constantly denying at my Death, the Knowledge of what I am accused of in the least.

I have said thus much in discharge of my Conscience, and do aver, upon my Salvation, what I have said to be really true.

I shall say little of my Trial; and whether it were all according to the known Law, I am too much a Party to say much of it: if it were not so, God forgive him or them that were the Cause of it.

My Judges were all Persons of Honour, who were all as much bound to judge rightly, as if they had been upon Oath upon what was legally proved; and not to vote but according as in their Consciences they were satisfied; and if any of them did otherwise, upon any Account whatsoever, I beseech God forgive them, I do heartily.

I shall end with my hearty Prayers for the Happiness of his Majesty, that he may enjoy all Happiness in this World and the World to come, and govern his People according to the Laws of God; and that the People may be sensible what a Blessing God hath so miraculously given them, and obey him as they ought. I ask Pardon with a prostrate Heart of Almighty God, for all the great Offences that I have committed against his Divine Majesty, and hope, through the Merits and Passion of Christ Jesus, to obtain everlasting Happiness, into whose Hands I commit my Spirit, asking Pardon of every Person that I have done any Wrong unto; I do freely forgive all that have any ways wronged me; I do, with all the Devotion and Repentance that I can, humbly invoke the Mercy of our Blessed Saviour.

I beseech God not to revenge my innocent Blood upon the Nation, or on those that were the Cause of it, with my last Breath. I do with my last Breath truly assert my Innocency, and hope the omnipotent, all-seeing, just God will deal with me accordingly.

His Speech being ended, he deliver'd several Copies signed with his own Hand, to Mr. Sheriff Cornish, and other Gentlemen about him; one whereof, wrote with his own Hand, he sent to the King. He then desired he might have Liberty to pray in his own Way, which being granted, he kneeled down by the Block, and taking out of his Pocket another Paper, he read a Latin Prayer; which done, he gave the Paper to Mr. Sheriff Bethel, and then spoke to the People about the Scaffold to this effect; God blefs you, Gentlemen; God preserve his Majesty; he is as good a Prince as ever govern'd you: Obey him as faithfully as I have done, and God blefs you all, Gentlemen. Then a Minister applied himself, and said, Sir, Do you disown the Indulgences of the Romish Church? To which he answer'd with great Passion, Sir, What have you to do with my Religion? However, I do say, that the Church of Rome allows no Indulgences for Murder, Lying, &c. and whatever I have said is true.

Min. Have you received no Absolution?

Answ. I have received none at all.

Min. You said that you never saw those Witnesses?

Answ. I never saw any of them but Dugdale, and that was at a time when I spoke to him about a Foot-Boy.

Then turning about to his Friends, he distributed among them his Watch, two Rings off his Fingers, his Staff, and his Crucifix from off his Neck; and his Gentleman stripping him of his Coat and Peruke, put on his Head a Silk Cap; and having accommodated his Hair, Shirt and Waistcoat for the Execution, he laid down his Neck on the Block and stretched himself.

The Executioner being demanded by the Sheriffs, Whether he had any Sign, he answer'd, No. Whereupon the Prisoner rose up, and asked, What they wanted: To which it was answered, What Sign will you give?

Answ. No Sign at all: Take your own Time; God's Will be done.

Whereupon the Executioner said, I hope you forgive me: He made answer, I do. Then lying down again, the Executioner at one Blow severed his Head from his Body, save only a small Part of the Skin and Wind-pipe, which was immediately cut off with a Knife. After which, the Headman holding up the Head in his Hand, carried it about the Scaffold, shewing it to the People, and saying, Here is the Head of a Traitor. The Corpse with the Head were put into a Coffin, and conveyed to the Tower, where they were interr'd.

The Report of the COMMITTEE of the House of Commons appointed to examine the Proceedings of the Judges, made December 23. 1680. 32 Car. II.

THIS Committee being inform'd, That in Trinity-Term last, the Court of King's-Bench discharg'd the Grand-Jury that served for the Hundred of Ossulston in the County of Middlesex, in a very unusual Manner; proceeded to enquire into the same, and found by the Information of Charles Umfreville, Esq; Foreman of the said Jury; Edward Proby, Henry Gerard, and John Smith, Gentlemen, also of the said Jury, That on the 21st of June last, the Constables attending the said Jury were found defective in not presenting the Papists as they ought, and thereupon were order'd by the said Jury to make further Presentments of them on the 26th following, on which Day the Jury met for that Purpose; when several Peers of this Realm, and other Persons of Honour and Quality, brought them a Bill against James Duke of York for not coming to Church: But some Exceptions being taken to that Bill, in that it did not set forth the said Duke to be a Papist, some of the Jury attended the said Persons of Quality to receive Satisfaction therein. In the mean time, and about an Hour after they had received the said Bill, some of the Jury attended the Court of King's-Bench with a Petition, which they desired the Court to present in their Name unto his Majesty for the sitting of this Parliament. Upon which the Lord Chief Justice Scroggs raised many Scruples, and on Pretence that they were not all in Court, (tho' twenty of the Jury had subscrib'd the Petition) sent for them, saying, he would dispatch them presently. The Jury being come, and their Names called over, they renewed their Desire that the Court would present their Petition: But the Chief Justice ask'd, if they had any Bills? They answer'd they had, but the Clerks were drawing them into Form. Upon which the Chief Justice said, they would not make two Works of one Business; and the Petition being read, he said, This was no Article of their Charge, nor was there any Act of Parliament that required the Court to deliver the Grand Jury's Petitions: That there was a Proclamation about them; and that it was not reasonable the Court should be obliged to run on their Errands; and he thought it much, that they should come with a Petition to alter the King's Mind declared in the News Book. The Jury said, They did it not to impose on the Court, but (as other Juries had done) with all Submission they desired it. But the Court refused, bidding the Crier return them their Petition: And Mr. Justice Jones told them, they had meddled with Matters of State, not given them in Charge, but presented no Bills of the Matters given in Charge. They answered as before, They had many before them that would be ready in due time. Notwithstanding which, the said Justice Jones told them, They were discharged from further Service.

VOL. III.

But Philip Ward (the Clerk that attended the said Jury) cried out, No, no; they have many Bills before them; for which the Court understanding (as it seems to this Committee) a secret Reason, which the Clerk did not, reproved him, asking, If he or they were to give the Rule there? The Crier then told the Court, they would not receive their Petition; the Chief Justice bid him let it alone: So it was left there, and the Jury returned to the Court-House, and there found several Constables with Presentments of Papists and other Offenders, as the Jury had directed them on the 21st before; but could not now receive the said Presentments, being discharged. Whereby much Business was obstructed, tho' none of the said Informants ever knew the said Jury discharged before the last Day of the Term, which was not till four Days after. And it further appeareth to the Committee, by the Evidences of Samuel Astrey, Jasper Waterhouse, and Philip Ward, Clerks, that have long served in the said Court, That they were much surprized at the said discharging of the Jury, in that it was never done in their Memory before; and the rather, because the said Waterhouse, as Secondary, constantly enters on that Grand Jury's Paper, that the last Day of the Term is given them to return their Verdict on, as the last Day but one is given to the other two Grand Juries of that County; which Entry is as followeth:

Trinit. 32 Car. II.

Juratores habent diem ad Verdictum suum reddendum usque diem Mercurij proxime post tres Septimanas sanctæ Trinitatis.

Middlesex
Ossulston Hundred.

Being the last Day of the Term, and so in all the other Terms the last Day is given; which makes it appear to this Committee, That they were not in truth discharged for not having their Presentments ready, since the Court had given them a longer Day, but only to obstruct their farther Proceedings: And it appeareth by the Evidence aforesaid to this Committee, That the four Judges of that Court were present at the discharging of the said Jury, and it did not appear that any of them did dissent therein; upon Consideration whereof, the Committee came to this Resolution:

Resolved, That it is the Opinion of this Committee, That the discharging of the Grand Jury of the Hundred of Ossulston in the County of Middlesex, by the Court of King's-Bench in Trinity-Term last, before the last Day of the Term, and before they had finished their Presentments, was illegal, arbitrary, and an high Misdemeanor.

This

This Committee proceeded also to enquire into a Rule of the Court of King's-Bench, lately made against the publishing a Book, called, The Weekly Pacquet of Advice from Rome; or, The History of Popery: And Samuel Astrey, Gent. examined thereupon, informed this Committee, That the Author of the said Book, Henry Carr, had been informed against for the same, and had pleaded to the Information; but before it was tried, a Rule was made on a Motion, as he supposed, against the said Book: All the Judges of that Court (as he remembers) being present, and none dissenting. The Copy of which Rule he gave in to this Committee, and is as followeth:

Dies Mercurij proxime post tres Septimanas sancta Trinitatis. Anno 32 Car. II. Regis.

Ordinatum est quod liber intitulat. The Weekly Pacquet of Advice from Rome; or, The History of Popery, non ulterius imprimatur vel publicetur per aliquam Personam quancumque;

Per Cur.

And this Committee admiring that Protestant Judges should take Offence against a Book, whose chief Design was to expose the Cheats and Popery of Popery, enquired further into it; and found by the Evidence of Jane Curtis, that the said Book had been licensed for several Months; that her Husband paid for the Copy, and entered it in the Hall-Book of the Company: But for all this, she could not prevail by these Reasons with the Lord Chief Justice Scroggs to permit it any longer; who said, 'Twas a scandalous Libel, and against the King's Proclamation, and he would ruin her if ever she printed it any more: And soon after she was served with the said Rule, as the Author and other Printers were; and by the Author's Evidence it appears, That he was taken and brought before the said Chief Justice by his Warrant above a Year since, and upon his owning he writ Part of that Book, the Chief Justice called him Rogue, and other ill Names; saying, he would fill all the Goals in England with such Rogues, and pile them up as Men do Faggots; and so committed him to Prison, refusing sufficient Bail, and saying, He would Goal him to put him to Charges; and his Lordship observed his Word punctually therein, forcing him to his Habeas Corpus, and then taking the same Bail he refused before: Upon which, this Committee came to this Resolution:

Resolved, That it is the Opinion of the Committee, That the Rule made by the Court of King's-Bench in Trinity Term last, against printing a Book, called, The Weekly Pacquet of Advice from Rome, is illegal and arbitrary.

And the Committee proceeded farther; and upon Information that a very great Latitude had been taken of late by the Judges, in imposing Fines on the Persons found guilty before them, caused a Transcript of all the Fines imposed by the King's-Bench since Easter Term, in the 28th of his Majesty's Reign, to be brought before them from the said Court by Samuel Astrey Gent. By Perusal of which it appeared to this Committee, That the Quality of the Offence, and the Ability of the Person found guilty, have not been the Measures that have determined the Quantity of many of these Fines; which being so very numerous, the Committee refer themselves to those Records as to the general, instancing in some Particulars, as followeth.

Trinit. 29. Car. II. Upon Joseph Brown of London, Gent. on an Information for publishing a printed Book, called, The Long Parliament dissolved; in which are set forth these Words: Nor let any Man think it strange, that we account it Treason for you to sit and act contrary to our Laws: For if in the first Parliament of Richard the Second, Gomecys and Weston for lack of Courage only, were adjudged guilty of High Treason for surrendering the Places committed to their Trust; how much more you, if you turn Renegadoes to the People that entrusted you, and as much as in you lie, surrender not a little pitiful Castle or two, but all the legal Defence the People of England have for their Lives, Liberties and Properties, at once! Neither let a vain Persuasion delude you, That no Precedent can be found, that one English Parliament hath hanged up another; tho' peradventure even that may be proved a Mistake: For an unprecedented Crime calls for an unprecedented Punishment; and if you shall be so wicked to do the one, or rather endeavour to do (for now you are no longer a Parliament) what ground of Confidence you can have that none will be found so worthy to do the other, we cannot understand; and do faithfully promise, if your Unworthiness provoke us to it, that we will use our honest and utmost Endeavours (whenever a new Parliament shall be called) to chuse such as may convince you of your Mistake: The old and infallible Observation, That Parliaments are the Pulse of the People, shall lose it's Esteem; or you will find, that this your Presumption was over-fond; however, it argues but a bad Mind to sin, because it is believed it shall not be punished. The Judgment was, That he be fined 1000 Marks, be bound to the good Behaviour for seven Years, and his Name struck out of the Roll of the Attorneys, without any Offence alleged in his said Vocation. And the publishing this Libel consisted only in superscribing a Pacquet, with this inclosed, to the East-Indies. Which Fine he not being able to pay (living only upon his Practice) he lay in Prison for three Years, till his Majesty graciously pardoned him, and recommended him to be restored to his Place again of Attorney, by his Warrant dated the 15th of December 1679. Notwithstanding which, he has not yet obtained the said Restoration from the Court of King's-Bench.

Hil. 29 & 30 Car. II. Upon John Harrington of London, Gent. for speaking these Words laid in Latin thus: Quod nostra Gubernatio de tribus statibus consistebat, & si Rebellio eveniret in regno, & non accideret contra omnes tres status, non est Rebellio. A Fine of 1000 l. Sureties for the good Behaviour for seven Years, and to recant the Words in an open Court; which Fine he was in no Capacity of ever paying.

Hil. 31 & 32 Car. II. Upon Benjamin Harris of London, Stationer, on an Information for printing a Book, called, An Appeal from the Country to the City, setting forth these Words: We in the Country have done our Parts, in chusing for the Generality good Members to serve in Parliament; but if (as our two last Parliaments were) they must be dissolved or prorogued whenever they come to redress the Grievances of the Subject, we may be pitied, not blamed, if the Plot takes Effect; and in all Probability it will. Our Parliaments are not then to be condemned, for that their not being suffered to sit occasioned it. Judgment to pay 500 l. Fine, stand on the Pillory an Hour, and give Sureties for the good Behaviour for three Years. And the said Benjamin Harris informed this Committee, That the Lord Chief Justice Scroggs pressed the Court then to add to this Judgment his being publicly whipped; but Mr. Justice Pemberton holding up his Hands in Admiration at their Severity therein, Mr. Justice Jones pronounced the Judgment aforesaid; and he remains yet in Prison, unable to pay the said Fine.

Notwithstanding which Severity in the Cases forementioned, this Committee has observed the said Court has not wanted in other Cases an extraordinary Compassion and Mercy, though there appeared no publick Reason judicially in the Trial; as in particular:

Upon Thomas Knox Principal, on an Indictment of Subornation and Conspiracy against the Testimony and Life of Dr. Oates for Sodomy; and also against the Testimony of William Bedloe; a Fine of 200 Marks, a Year's Imprisonment, and to find Sureties for the good Behaviour for three Years. Hil. 31 & 32 Car. II.

Upon John Lane, for the same Offence, a Fine of 100 Marks, to stand in the Pillory for an Hour, and to be imprisoned for one Year. Eod. Ter.

Upon John Tasborough, Gent. on an Indictment for Subornation of Stephen Dugdale, tending to overthrow the whole Discovery of the Plot; the said Tasborough being affirmed to be a Person of good Quality, a Fine of 100 l. Pas. 32 Car. II.

Upon Anne Price for the same Offence, 200 l. Eod. Ter.

Upon Nathaniel Thompson and William Badcock, on an Information for printing and publishing a weekly Libel, called The true Domestic Intelligence, or News both from City and Country, and known to be Popishly affected, a Fine of 3 l. 6 s. 8 d. on each of them. Trin. 32 Car. II.

Upon Matthew Turner, Stationer, on an Information for vending and publishing a Book, called The Compendium, wherein the Justice of the Nation in the late Trials of the Popish Conspirators, even by some of these Judges themselves, is highly arraigned; and all the Witnesses for the King horribly aspersed: And this being the common notorious Popish Bookseller of the Town, Judgment to pay a Fine of 100 Marks, and is said to be out of Prison already. Eod. Ter.

Upon Loveland, on an Indictment for a notorious Conspiracy and Subornation against the Life and Honour of the Duke of Buckingham for Sodomy, a Fine of 5 l. and to stand an Hour in the Pillory. Trin. 32 Car. II.

Upon Edward Christian, Esq; for the same Offence, a Fine of 100 Marks, and to stand an Hour in the Pillory. Mich. 32 Car. II.

And upon Arthur Obrian, for the same Offence, a Fine of 20 Marks, and to stand an Hour in the Pillory.

Upon Consideration whereof, this Committee came to this Resolution: Resolved, That it is the Opinion of this Committee, That the Court of King's-Bench (in the Imposition of Fines on Offenders of late Years) hath acted arbitrarily, illegally and partially, favouring Papists, and Persons popishly affected, and excessively oppressing his Majesty's Protestant Subjects. And this Committee being informed, That several of his Majesty's Subjects had been committed for Crimes bailable by Law, although they then tendered sufficient Sureties, which were refused, only to put them to Vexation and Charge, proceeded to enquire into the same, and found that not only the forementioned Henry Carr had been so refused the common Right of a Subject, as is aforesaid; but that George Broome, being a Constable last Year in London, and committing some of the Lord Chief Justice Scroggs's Servants for great Disorders, according to his Duty, he was in a few Days arrested by a Tipstaff, without any London Constable, and carried before the said Chief Justice by his Warrant, to answer for the committing of those Persons aforesaid; and being there, was accused of having spoken irreverently of the said Chief Justice; and an Affidavit read to him to that Purpose, which was falsly (as the said George Broome affirms) sworn against him by two Persons that use to be common Bail in that Court, and of very ill Reputation. Upon which he was committed to the King's-Bench, though he then tendered two able Citizens and Common-Council-Men of London to be his Bail: and he was forced to bring his Habeas Corpus to his great Charge before he came out: When the Marshal, Mr. Cooling, exacted 5 l. of him; of which he complained to the Chief Justice, but had no other Answer, But he might take his Remedy at Law. But the said Marshal fearing he should be questioned, restored him two Guineas of it.

And farther this Committee was informed by Francis Smith, Bookseller, that about Michaelmas was Twelve-month he was brought before the said Chief Justice by his Warrant, and charged by the Messenger, Robert Stephent, That he had seen some Parcels of a Pamphlet, called Observations on Sir George Wakeman's Trial, in his Shop: Upon which the Chief Justice told him, he would make him an Example; use him like a Boor in France, and pile him and all the Booksellers and Printers up in Prison like Faggots; and so committed him to the King's-Bench, swearing and cursing at him in great Fury. And when he tendered three sufficient Citizens of London for his Bail, alledging Imprisonment in his Circumstances would be his utter Ruin; the Chief Justice replied, The Citizens looked like sufficient Persons, but he would take no Bail; and so he was forced to come out by Habeas Corpus, and was afterwards inform'd against for the same Matter, to his great Charge and Vexation. And a while after Francis (the Son of the said Francis Smith) was committed by the said Chief Justice, and Bail refused, for selling a Pamphlet called A New-Year's Gift for the said Chief Justice, to a Coffee-house; and he declared to them he would take no Bail; for he would ruin them all.

And farther it appeared to this Committee, That the said Chief Justice (about October was Twelve-month) committed in like Manner Jane Curtis, the having a Husband and Children, for selling a Book called, A Satyr against Injustice, which his Lordship called a Libel against him; and her Friends tendering sufficient Bail, and desiring him to have Mercy on her Poverty and Condition, he swore by the Name of God she should go to Prison, and he would shew no more Mercy than they could expect from a Wolf that came to devour them; and she might bring her Habeas Corpus,

Corpus, and come out so: Which she was forc'd to do; and after inform'd against and prosecuted to her utter Ruin, four or five Terms after.

In like manner it appeared to this Committee, That about that time also Edward Berry (Stationer of Gray's-Inn) was committed by the said Chief Justice, being accus'd of selling the Observations on Sir George Wakeman's Trial; and tho' he tendered 1000*l.* Bail, yet the Chief Justice said, he would take no Bail, he should go to Prison, and come out according to Law. And after he with much Trouble and Charge got out by Habeas Corpus, he was forc'd by himself, or his Attorney, to attend five Terms before he could be discharg'd, though no Information was exhibited against him in all that time. In Consideration whereof, and of others of the like Nature, (too tedious here to relate) this Committee came to this Resolution:

Resolved,

That it is the Opinion of this Committee, That the refusing sufficient Bail in these Cases, wherein the Persons committed were bailable by Law, was illegal, and a high Breach of the Liberty of the Subject.

And this Committee being informed of an extraordinary kind of a Charge given at the last Assizes at Kingston (in the County of Surrey) by Mr. Baron Weston, and proceeding to examine several Persons then and there present; it was made appear to this Committee, by the Testimony of John Cole, Richard Mayo, and John Peirce, Gentlemen, and others (some of whom put down the said Baron's Words in writing immediately) that part of the said Charge was to this Effect: He inveighed very much against Farel, Luther, Calvin, and Zuinglius, condemning them as Authors of the Reformation, which was against their Princes Minds; and then adding to this Purpose, Zuinglius set up his Fanaticism, and Calvin built on that blessed Foundation: And to speak Truth, all his Disciples are seasoned with such a Sharpness of Spirit, that it much concerns Magistrates to keep a strait Hand over them; and now they are restless, amusing us with Fears, and nothing will serve them but a Parliament. For my Part, I know no Representative of the Nation but the King; all Power centers in him: 'Tis true, he does entrust it with his Ministers, but he is the sole Representative; and i' faith he has Wisdom enough to entrust it no more in these Men, who have given us such late Examples of their Wisdom and Faithfulness. And this Committee taking the said Matter into their Consideration, came to this Resolution.

Resolved,

That it is the Opinion of this Committee, that the said Expressions in the Charge given by the said Baron Weston were a Scandal to the Reformation, in Derogation of the Rights and Privileges of Parliaments, and tending to raise Discord between his Majesty and his Subjects.

And this Committee being informed by several Printers and Booksellers, of great Trouble and Vexation given them unjustly by one Robert Stephens, (called a Messenger of the Press) the said Stephens being examined by this Committee, by what Authority he had proceeded in that manner, produced two Warrants under the Hand and Seal of the Chief Justice Scroggs, which were in hæc verba:

Ang. II. WHEREAS there are divers ill disposed Persons, who do daily print and publish many seditious and treasonable Books and Pamphlets, endeavouring thereby to dispose the Minds of his Majesty's Subjects to Sedition and Rebellion; and also infamous Libels reflecting upon particular Persons, to the great Scandal of his Majesty's Government: for suppressing whereof, his Majesty hath lately issued out his Royal Proclamation. And for the more speedy suppressing the said seditious Books, Libels and Pamphlets, and to the end that the Authors and Publishers thereof may be brought to their Punishment:

These are to will and require you, and in his Majesty's Name to charge and command you, and every of you, upon Sight hereof, to be aiding and assisting unto Robert Stephens, Messenger of the Press, in seizing on all such Books and Pamphlets as aforesaid, as he shall be informed of, in any Bookfellers or Printers Shops or Warehouses, or elsewhere whatsoever, to the end they may be disposed as to the Law shall appertain: Also if you shall be informed of the Authors, Printers or Publishers of such Books or Pamphlets as are above-mentioned, you are to apprehend them, and have them before one of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace, to be proceeded against according to Law. Dated this 29th Day of November, 1679.

To Robert Stephens, Messenger of the Press, and to all Mayors, Sheriffs, Bailiffs, Constables, and all other Officers and Ministers whom these may concern.

WILLIAM SCROGGS.

Ang. II. WHEREAS the King's Majesty hath lately issued out his Proclamation for suppressing the printing and publishing unlicensed News-Books, and Pamphlets of News: notwithstanding which, there are divers Persons who do daily print and publish such unlicensed Books and Pamphlets.

These are therefore to will and require you, and in his Majesty's Name to charge and command you, and every of you, from time to time, and at all times, so often as you shall be thereunto required, to be aiding and assisting to Robert Stephens, Messenger of the Press, in the seizing all such Books and Pamphlets as aforesaid, as he shall be informed of, in any Bookfeller's Shop, or Printer's Shop or Warehouses, or elsewhere whatsoever, to the end they may be disposed of as to Law shall appertain. Likewise, if you shall be informed of the Authors, Printers or Publishers of such Books and Pamphlets, you are to apprehend them, and have them before me, or one of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace, to be proceeded against as to Law shall appertain. Dated this 28th Day of May, Anno Dom. 1680.

To all Mayors, Sheriffs, Bailiffs, Constables, and all other Officers and Ministers whom these may concern.

WILLIAM SCROGGS.

To Robert Stephens, Messenger of the Press.

Upon View whereof this Committee came to this Resolution:

Resolved, That it is the Opinion of this Committee, That the said Warrants are arbitrary and illegal.

And this Committee being informed of certain scandalous Discourses, said to be uttered in publick Places by the Lord Chief Justice Scroggs, proceeded to examine Sir Robert Atkins, late one of the Justices of the Common-Pleas, concerning the same; by whom it appears, That at a Sessions Dinner at the Old Bailey, (in the Mayoralty of Sir Robert Clayton) who was then present, the said Chief Justice took occasion to speak very much against petitioning, condemning it as resembling 41, as factious and tending to Rebellion, or to that Effect; to which the said Sir Robert Atkins made no reply, suspecting he waited for some Advantage over him: But the Chief Justice continuing and pressing him with the said Discourse, he began to justify petitioning as the Right of the People, especially for the sitting of a Parliament, which the Law requires, if it be done with Modesty and Respect. Upon which the Chief Justice fell into a great Passion; and there is some Reason to believe, that soon after he made an ill Representation of what the said Sir Robert had then spoke, unto his Majesty. And this Committee was farther informed, That the said Sir Robert Atkins being in Circuit with the said Chief Justice at Summer Assizes was Twelve-month at Monmouth, (Mr. Arnold, Mr. Price, and Mr. Bedloe being then in Company) the Chief Justice fell severely in publick upon Mr. Bedloe, taking off the Credit of his Evidence, and alledging he had overshot himself in it, or to that Effect, very much to the Disparagement of his Testimony: And the said Sir Robert defending Mr. Bedloe's Evidence and Credit, he grew extreme angry and loud, saying to this Effect, That he verily believed Langhorn died innocently. To which the said Sir Robert replied, He wondered how he could think so, who had condemned him himself, and had not moved the King for a Reprieve for him. All which Matters of Discourse this Committee humbly submit to the Wisdom and Consideration of this House, without taking upon them to give any Opinion therein.

And this Committee proceeded farther to enquire into some Passages that happened at Lent-Assizes last for the County of Somerset, at the Trial of Thomas Dare, Gent, there, upon an Indictment for saying falsely and seditiously, That the Subjects had but two Means to redress their Grievances, the one by Petitioning, the other by Rebellion: And found, that though by his other Discourse when he said so, that it appeared plainly he had no rebellious Intent, in that he said, Then God forbid there should be a Rebellion, he would be the first Man to draw his Sword against a Rebel; yet he was prosecuted with great Violence: And having pleaded Not Guilty, he moved Mr. Justice Jones (who then sat Judge there) that he might try it at the next Assizes, for that Mr. Searle (who was by at the speaking of the Words, and a material Witness for his Defence) was not then to be had, and an Affidavit to that Purpose was made and receiv'd. But the said Justice Jones told him, That was a Favour of the Court only, and he had not deserved any Favour, and so forc'd him to try it presently. But the Jury, appearing to be an extraordinary one, provided on purpose, being all of Persons that had highly opposed petitioning for the sitting of this Parliament, he was advised to withdraw his Plea; and the said Justice Jones encouraging him so to do, he confess'd the Words, denying any evil Intention, and gave the said Justice an Account in writing of the Truth of the whole Matter, and made a Submission in Court, as he was directed by the said Justice; who promised to recommend him to his Majesty, but imposed a Fine of 500*l.* on him, and to be bound to the good Behaviour for three Years; declaring, also, That he was turned out from being a Common-Councillor of the Corporation of Taunton in the said County, on Pretence of a Clause in their Charter, giving such a Power to a Judge of Assize. And the said Thomas Dare remains yet in Prison for the said Fine; in which Matter of the Trial aforesaid, this Committee desireth to refer itself to the Judgment of this House.

Upon this Occasion Sir Francis Winnington made the following Speech.

Mr. Speaker,

IN the Front of Magna Charta it is said, Nulli negabimus, nulli deferemus Justitiam, we will defer or deny Justice to no Man: To this the King is sworn, and with this the Judges are entrusted by their Oaths. I admire what they can say for themselves; if they have not read this Law, they are not fit to sit upon the Bench; and if they have, I had almost said, they deserve to lose their Heads.

Mr. Speaker, The State of this poor Nation is to be deplored, that in almost all Ages, the Judges, who ought to be Preservers of the Laws, have endeavoured to destroy them; and that to please a Court-Faction. They have by Treachery attempted to break the Bonds asunder of Magna Charta, the great Treasury of our Peace: It was no sooner passed, but a Chief Justice in that Day persuades the King he was not bound by it, because he was under Age when it was passed. But this Sort of Insolence the next Parliament repented, to the Ruin of the pernicious Chief Justice. In the time of Richard the Second, an unthinking dissolute Prince, there were Judges that did insinuate into the King, that the Parliament were only his Creatures, and depended on his Will, and not on the fundamental Constitutions of the Land; which treacherous Advice proved the Ruin of the King, and for which all those evil Instruments were brought to Justice. In his late Majesty's Time, his Misfortunes were occasioned chiefly by the Corruptions of the Long Robe; his Judges by an extrajudicial Opinion gave the King Power to raise Money upon an extraordinary Occasion without Parliament, and made the King Judge of such Occasions. Charity prompts me to think they thought this a Service to the King; but the sad Consequences of it may convince all Mankind, that every illegal Act weakens the Royal Interest; and to endeavour to introduce absolute Dominion in these Realms is the worst of Treasons, because, whilst it bears the Face of Friendship to the King, and designs to be for his Service, it never fails of the contrary Effect.

The two great Pillars of the Government are Parliaments and Juries: it is this gives us the Title of Free-born Englishmen: For my Notion of free Englishmen is this, That they are ruled by Laws of their own making, and tried by Men of the same Condition with themselves. The two great and undoubted Privileges of the People have been lately invaded by the Judges that now sit in Westminster-Hall; they have espoused Proclamation against Law; they have discountenanced and opposed several legal Acts, that tended to the sitting of this honourable House; they have grasped the legislative Power into their own Hands, as in that Instance of Printing; the Parliament was considering that Matter, but they in the Interim made their private Opinion to be Law, to supersede the Judgment of this House; they have discharged Grand Juries on purpose to quell their Presentments, and shelter great Criminals from Justice; and when Juries have presented their Opinion for the sitting of this Parliament, they have in Disdain thrown them at their Feet, and told them, they would be no Messengers to carry such Petitions; and yet in a few Days after, have encouraged all that would spit their Venom against the Government; they have served an ignorant and arbitrary Faction, and been the Messengers of Abhorrences to the King.

and

Mr. Speaker, What we have now to do, is to load them with Shame, who bid defiance to the Law; they are guilty of Crimes against Nature, against the King, against their Knowledge, and against Posterity. The whole Frame of Nature doth loudly and daily petition to God their Creator; and Kings, like God, may be addressed to in like Manner by Petition, not Command. They likewise knew it was lawful to petition; Ignorance can be no Plea, and their Knowledge aggravates their Crimes. The Children unborn are bound to curse such Proceedings; for 'twas not petitioning but Parliaments they abhorred. The Atheist pleads against a God, not that he disbelieves a Deity, but would have it so. Treshian and Belknap were Judges too; their Learning gave them Honour, but their Villainies made their Exit by a Rope. The End of my Motion therefore is, That we may address warmly to our Prince against them; let us settle a Committee to enquire into their Crimes, and not fail of doing Justice upon them that have perverted it; let us purge the Fountain, and the Streams will issue pure.

The Resolutions of the House of Commons upon the said Report.

I. THAT it is the Opinion of this House, That the Discharging of the Grand Jury of the Hundred of Ossulston in the County of Middlesex, by the Court of King's-Bench in Trinity-Term last, before the last Day of the Term, and before they had finished their Presentments, was arbitrary and illegal, destructive to publick Justice, a manifest Violation of the Oaths of the Judges of that Court, and a Means to subvert the fundamental Laws of this Kingdom, and to introduce Popery.

II. That it is the Opinion of this House, That the Rule made by the Court of King's-Bench in Trinity-Term last, against printing of a Book, called The Weekly Pacquet of Advice from Rome, is illegal and arbitrary, thereby usurping to themselves legislative Power, to the great Discouragement of the Protestants, and for the countenancing of Popery.

III. That it is the Opinion of this House, That the Court of King's-Bench, in the Imposition of Fines on Offenders of late Years, have acted arbitrarily, illegally, and partially, favouring Papists and Persons popishly affected, and excessively oppressing his Majesty's Protestant Subjects.

IV. That it is the Opinion of this House, That the refusing sufficient Bail in these Cases, wherein the Persons committed were bailable by Law, was illegal, and a high Breach of the Liberties of the Subject.

V. That it is the Opinion of this House, That the late Expressions in the Charge given by the said Baron Weston, were a Scandal to the Reformation, and tending to raise Discord between his Majesty and his Subjects, and to the Subversion of the ancient Constitution of Parliaments, and of the Government of this Kingdom.

VI. That it is the Opinion of this House, That the said Warrants are arbitrary and illegal.

The Resolutions of the Commons for the Impeachment of the said Judges.

Resolved, THAT Sir William Scroggs, Knight, Chief Justice of the Court of King's-Bench, be impeached upon the said Report, and the Resolutions of the House thereupon.

Resolved, That Sir Thomas Jones, one of the Justices of the said Court of King's-Bench, be impeached upon the said Report, and Resolutions of the House thereupon.

Resolved, That Sir Richard Weston, one of the Barons of the Court of Exchequer, be impeached upon the said Report, and Resolutions of the House thereupon.

Ordered, That the Committee appointed to prepare an Impeachment against Sir Francis North, Chief Justice of the Court of Common-Pleas, do prepare Impeachments against the said Sir William Scroggs, Sir Thomas Jones, and Sir Richard Weston, upon the said Report and Resolutions.

Ordered, That the said Report, and several Resolutions of this House thereupon, be printed; and that Mr. Speaker take Care in the printing thereof apart from this Day's other Votes.

Accordingly, Jan. 5. Articles of Impeachment were actually brought in against Sir William Scroggs; and the said Articles were ingrossed, and carried up to the Lords by Lord Cavendish: But the Parliament being soon after prorogued, this Affair was dropped; however, it was thought proper to remove Scroggs from being Chief Justice; which was done with all the Marks of Favour and Respect, being allowed a Pension for Life. But a Parliamentary Censure did not hinder the Court from preferring others, who had been censured a little before; as may appear by these Votes of the House of Commons.

Octob. 29. 1680.

Resolved, That Sir Francis Withens, by promoting and presenting to his Majesty an Address, expressing an Abhorrence to petition his Majesty for the calling and sitting of Parliaments, hath betrayed the undoubted Rights of the Subjects of England.

Ordered, That Sir Francis Withens be expelled this House for this High Crime; and that he receive his Sentence at the Bar of this House upon his Knees from Mr. Speaker.

( Which he received accordingly. )

Nov. 13. 1680.

Resolved, That Sir George Jefferies, Recorder of London, by traducing and obstructing petitioning for the sitting of this Parliament, hath betrayed the Rights of the Subject.

Ordered, That an humble Address be made to his Majesty, to remove Sir George Jefferies out of all publick Offices.

CIII. Proceedings in Parliament against EDWARD FITZ-HARRIS, upon an Impeachment for High-Treason, March 25, &c. 1681. 33 Car. II.

ON the 25th of March, 1681, the House of Commons took into Consideration the Affair of Fitz-Harris; they began with reading his Examination, taken March 10. before Sir Robert Clayton and Sir George Treby, which was in Substance as follows.

THE Examinee saith, That he was born in Ireland, and was bred, and is a Roman Catholick; That he had a Commission, and raised a Company of Foot in Ireland for the French King's Service, and conducted them into France.

That in 1672, going to take his Leave of Father Gough, an English Priest at Paris, he told him, Within this two Years, You will see the Catholick Religion established in England as it is in France; the Examinee asking how that could be, the King being a Protestant, he answered, If the King would not comply, there was Order taken, and Things so laid, that he should be taken off or killed; That the Duke of York was a Catholick, and in his Reign there would be no Difficulty of doing it; That the Father then told him, that the Declaration of Indulgence was for the introducing the Catholick Religion; and that to the same End the War was made against Holland, it being a Nest of Hereticks; and that Madam came over to Dover upon this Design.

That the Examinee, about February 1672, had a Lieutenant's Commission in Captain Sidenham's Company, in the Duke of Albemarle's Regiment, in the Black-Heath Army; and that he knew many of the Officers to be Roman Catholicks; and that the Act passing to disable Roman Catholicks, he and others of them were forced to quit their Commands; that the common Opinion amongst them was, for the settling the Roman Catholick Religion in England; but that the Measures being broken, by Means of the Peace with Holland, and the Duke of York and other Catholick Officers quitting all Commands, and the King failing in his Expectations from them; the Roman Catholicks came to a Resolution to destroy the King, as Father Parry, Confessor to the Portuguese Ambassador, told the Examinee in 1673; who put this Confidence in him, being his Confessor; and that the same Father repeated the same Discourse to him with more Assurance in 1678; adding then, that the Business then was now near, and he should soon see it done. That about April 1679, the Duke of Mdena's Envoy having sworn him to Secrecy, told him, That if he would undertake the killing the King, he should have 10,000*l.* which he refusing, the Envoy said, the Dutchess of Mazarine understands poisoning as well as her Sister, and a little Vial when the King comes there will do it; and that upon the King's Death, the Army in Flanders, and Parts adjacent to France, was to come into England to destroy the Protestant Party; and that after that, there should be no Parliaments; and that the Duke of York was privy to all these Designs.

That about April 1680, Kelly the Priest, whom he had known above 11 Years, and had sometimes confessed him, owned to him at Calais, that he was concerned in the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey; and that the same was done as Prance had related it.

That the Examinee had been six or seven Years acquainted with Monsieur de Puy, Servant to the Duke of York; and that he told him soon after the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, That that Murder was consulted at Windfor; and about that Time said, That the Duke was very desirous to come to the Crown, the King being uncertain, and not keeping touch with them; and that De Puy said, there was a Necessity of taking off the King, and that it would be soon done: That the Duke of York possessing Part of the Examinee's Father's Estate in Ireland, the Examinee being acquainted with Father Bedingfield, asked him, How he could give Absolution to the Duke, till he had made Restitution? To which the Father said, That every Penitent was supposed to know his own Sins, and to declare them to his Confessor: To which the Examinee replying with Warmth, But since you know it, you ought to take Notice thereof; the Father answered, Be not angry, for e're it be long you may be in a better Condition.

That in March 1680, he met Father Patrick at Paris; and talking of Rupture that might be between England and France, the Father said, That the French intended, in such Case, to send Marshal Bellfonds into Ireland.

Ireland with 10000 Foot and 2000 Horse, and Arms and Ammunition for 30000 Men to be raised there; and the Father promised the Examinee a Regiment of the Men to be so raised, and the Design was to restore that Kingdom to its former Owners in Subjection to France.

That Father Patrick desired him to send him all the Libels that came out in London; and said, that libelling the King was a thing necessary; in order to distaste and make him jealous of his People; that the Examinee knew Mr. Everard at Paris in 1665, and hath since increased his Acquaintance with him; and that the Opinion of Father Patrick about libelling the King, encouraged the Examinee to concur with Everard, as to the Libel lately written by Everard.

As soon as the Examination was read, Sir John Hotbam moved that it might be printed, to shew the World the devilish Conspiracies of the Papists; which Motion was seconded by Sir William Jones, who said, that People had been prevailed upon to believe the Plot not true, and that that Examination confirmed the Informations of Oates and Bedloe.

Sir Francis Winnington. The treasonable Paper of Fitz-Harris was to have been sent to many Gentlemen, and they to have been seized thereupon, as Traitors in a Conspiracy against the King: All is at Stake, therefore let not our Courage lessen: Let us go to the Bottom of this Business of Fitz-Harris; I move, he may be impeached of High-Treason; and it may be, he will relent and tell you all.

Sir Robert Clayton then said, That when Fitz-Harris his Examination was taken at Newgate, he told him, that he thought he had not dealt ingenuously, unless he would tell what Counsel he had for drawing the Paper; and that he bad him be ingenuous in the whole Matter, and he would come and take his farther Examination; and that Fitz-Harris having promised this, he was removed out of their reach into the Tower.

Whereupon an Impeachment was ordered, and Sir L. Jenkins commanded to carry it to the Lords; and Col. Birch said, that we ought all to give God Thanks for this Discovery of Fitz-Harris, next to the first Discovery of the Plot.

Upon Saturday the 26th of March 1681, the House of Commons being informed that the House of Lords had refused to proceed upon the Impeachment,

Sir Thomas Lee said, That he saw by the Lords refusing the Impeachment, no farther Use of Parliaments; That they would be a Court, or not a Court, to serve a present Purpose.

Sir William Jones's Indictments were brought against the Lords in the Tower, and yet that was no Impediment to their Impeachment in the Lords House; but here is no Indictment or Prosecution brought against Fitz-Harris. We have an Instance fresh in Memory; Scroggs a Commoner, and not indicted at Common Law, yet the Lords without scruple accepted his Impeachment. We find the Lords have determined a great Point; the Lords Spiritual, as well as Temporal, have voted the Refusal of the Impeachment of Fitz-Harris; which we own not in this Judicature, and I hope never shall; and we are denied Justice by the Lords Spiritual, who have no Right to vote. This is a double Act of Injustice: Let us then vote, That the Commons have a Right to impeach in capital Cases; and that the Lords have denied us Justice, in refusing the Impeachment in a Parliamentary way. At a Conference, let us show how unwarrantable the Lords Actions have been; and if the Dissolution of the Parliament follows, it is the Fault of those Men who will not hear our Reasons.

Sir Francis Winnington. This Impeachment is not an ordinary Accusation, but it relates to our Religion and Property; and how the Bishops come to stifle this, let God and the World judge—If the Lords will vote that the Commons shall not impeach him, they may as well vote they shall not be Prosecutors. This is a new Plot against the Protestants, of which Fitz-Harris is accused, and we must not impeach him: In this, the Lords say, we must not hear it—I desire you would come to some Vote: You are willing to discover the Plot, if you could—If our time be short, (as I believe it is) pray come to some Resolution to assert your Right—A little while ago, when the Duke was presented for a Papist, the Grand Jury was dismissed by the Chief Justice. This seems as if the Lords would justify the Judges Proceedings by their own—If no Man doubts our Right, pray vote it.

Sir Robert Howard. This of Fitz-Harris seems to me to be a more dangerous Breath than usual, a Breath fit to be stifled; there is something in this more than ordinary. If there be so sacred a Respect to common Trials in inferior Courts, 'tis strange that the House of Commons should be below a Common Jury—It seems the Lords value Fitz-Harris to keep him from us—If Dangerfield would speak what he knew, nothing of Mercy was too big for him; but they hurry Fitz-Harris away to the Tower, when he began to confess in Newgate: Are you so lost that you have no Mercy left for the Protestant Religion?—We hear that the French Ambassador had a hand in this Plot, which a Jury will not enquire into. I must confess, that by the Carriage of this I have enlarged my Suspicion; for I cannot but suspect unusual Ways—Something depends upon this Man—Sure we must not lay down all Prosecution of the Plot, and that the Protestant Religion shall have no Mercy. Fitz-Harris may merit Mercy by Confession; and if his Breath be stopped by the Lords, I am sorry that People will say, If it were not for the Lords, Fitz-

Harris might have discovered all the Conspiracy, and the Protestant Religion might have been saved.

Mr. Serjeant Maynard then added, We all know what Arts and Crafts have been used to hide the Plot; it began with Murder, Perjury and Subornation: This of Fitz-Harris is a second Part of it; the Lords deny to receive our Impeachment; in effect, they make this no Parliament, if we are the Prosecutors, and they will not hear our Accusation: 'Tis strange, when their own Lives, as well as ours, are concerned in the Plot.—When all is at Stake, we must not prosecute: If this be so, Holland and Flanders must submit to the French, and they over-run all. This is a strange Breach of Privilege, and tends to the Danger of the King's Person, and Destruction of the Protestant Religion.

Sir Thomas Player. This of Fitz-Harris is a considerable Confirmation of the former Plot: I call it the Old Plot, but 'tis still new upon us. When he inclined to discover what he knew, he was fetched to Whitehall, and sent to the Tower; and so we were deprived of all farther Hopes of Discovery; and now they stop his Mouth: I move therefore, that you will declare, That if any Judge, Justice or Jury proceed upon him, and he be found guilty; that you will declare them guilty of his Murder, and Betrayers of the Rights of the Commons of England. Hereupon the House came to these Resolves:

That it is the undoubted Right of the Commons in Parliament assembled, to impeach, before the Lords in Parliament, any Peer or Commoner for Treason, any other Crime or Misdemeanor; and that the Refusal of the Lords to proceed in Parliament upon such Impeachment, is a Denial of Justice, and Violation of the Constitution of Parliaments.

That in the Case of Edward Fitz-Harris, who by the Commons has been impeached for High-Treason before the Lords with a Declaration, That in convenient time they would bring up the Articles against him: For the Lords to resolve, that the said Fitz-Harris should be proceeded with according to the Course of the Common Law, and not by way of Impeachment in Parliament, is a Denial of Justice, and a Violation of the Constitution of Parliaments, and an Obstruction to the farther Discovery of the Popish Plot, and of great Danger to his Majesty's Person, and the Protestant Religion.

That for any inferior Court to proceed against him, or any other Person lying under an Impeachment in Parliament for the same Crimes for which he or they stand impeached, is an high Breach of the Privilege of Parliament.

This Matter, thus agitated in the House of Commons, was countenanced by a Protestation of many Temporal Lords; which was to this Effect:

"That in all Ages it hath been an undoubted Right of the Commons to impeach before the Lords any Subject for Treasons, or any other Crime whatsoever.

"That they could not reject such Impeachments, because that Suit or Complaint can be determined no where else; for an Impeachment is at the Suit of the People, but an Indictment is at the Suit of the King; as, the King may indict at his Suit for Murder, and the Heir, or the Wife of the Party murdered may bring an Appeal; and the King cannot release that Appeal, nor his Indictment prevent the Proceedings in it.

"It is an absolute Denial of Justice, in regard it cannot be tried any where else. The House of Peers, as to Impeachments, proceed by virtue of their Judicial Power, and not by their Legislative; and as to that, act as a Court of Record; and can deny Suitors (especially the Commons of England, that bring legal Complaint before them) no more than the Judges of Westminster can deny any Suit regularly commenced before them.

"Our Law saith, in the Person of the King, Nulli negabimus Justitiam, We will deny Justice to no single Person; yet here, Justice is denied to the whole Body of the People. This may be interpreted an Exercise of arbitrary Power, and have an Influence upon the Constitution of the English Government; and be an Encouragement to all inferior Courts to exercise the same arbitrary Power, by denying the Presentments of Grand Juries, &c. for which, at this time, the Chief Justice stands impeached in the House of Peers.

"These Proceedings may misrepresent the House of Peers to the King and People, especially at this time; and the more, in the particular Case of Edward Fitz-Harris, who is publickly known to be concerned in vile and horrid Treasons against his Majesty; and a great Conspirator in the Popish Plot to murder the King, and destroy and subvert the Protestant Religion.

This Protest was no sooner made upon Monday the 28th of March 1681, but the Parliament was instantly dissolved.

Proceedings against EDWARD FITZ-HARRIS in the King's-Bench, upon his Arraignment and Plea to an Indictment for High-Treason, April 27, &c. 1681. Paschæ. 33 Car. II.

ON Wednesday April the 27th, 1681, the Grand Juries for the County of Middlesex were sworn; and after the Charge delivered by Mr. Justice Jones, his Majesty's Attorney-General desired, That some of that Grand Jury which served for the Hundreds of Edmonston and Gore (that for Ossulston Hundred being immediately adjourned for a Week) might be present at the swearing of the Witnesses upon an Indictment for High-Treason, to be preferred against Edward Fitz-Harris, Prisoner in the Tower of London, which was granted; but the Grand Jury being under some Scruples against receiving of the Bill, desired the Opinion of the Court therein; which Mr. Justice Jones alone thought not fit to give, but ordered them to attend next Day when the Court was full.

G g And

And accordingly on Thursday, April 28, the said Grand Jury came to the Bar, and Mr. Michael Godfrey (Brother to Sir Edmundbury Godfrey), who was their Foreman, addressed himself thus to the Court.

Mr. Godfrey. My Lord, I have an humble Request to make to the Court on the Behalf of myself, and another on the Behalf of the Grand Jury for the County of Middlesex, of which I am Foreman. This Gentleman, Mr. Ward, I did beg of when I was sworn, to chuse another Man that was fitter for the Service, as being more experienced, but he would not; and I beg your Pardon, if I should commit any Failure for want of Experience. But I desire, before we proceed upon this Indictment before us, that this same Fitz-Harris may be examined about my Brother's Death, of which I suppose he may know much, because in the printed Narrative he does speak of one De Puy, who was a very active Man about that Murder; and how ill a Man soever he hath been, we do hope he hath so much Truth in him, as to tell what he knows of that horrid Murder. Therefore I pray your Lordship, that you would grant an Habeas Corpus to fetch him before your Lordship to be examined upon that Point before we do proceed; that is all as to myself. My Lord, as to the Jury, we do all of us humbly present this Paper, and desire it may be read in Court.

* L. C. Justice. † What is it? a Petition?

† Sir Francis Cl. of Crown. It is not subscribed by any Body.
Pemberton.

Jurors. But we do all own it, my Lord.

L. C. J. What is it? Read it.

Cl. of Crown. We Michael Godfrey, &c. being sworn to serve in the Grand Inquest for the Hundreds of Edmonton and Gore, in this County of Middlesex, &c. and being Yesterday sent for into the Court of King's-Bench, by a Messenger from the said Court, to be present at the swearing of several Witnesses produced on the Behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, to prove the Truth of some Indictments, then in the Hands of the Clerk of the Crown; and observing, that Sir William Waller, Smith, and others, were sworn to give Evidence against Edward Fitz-Harris, now Prisoner in the Tower, who in the late Parliament at Oxford, was impeached by the Honourable House of Commons, in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of England; of which, we the said Michael Godfrey, &c. are Part, and as Jurymen, be his Judges also.

We therefore humbly desire the Opinion of this Honourable Court, whether it be lawful and safe for us, the said Godfrey, &c. (in case an Indictment of the said Fitz-Harris should be brought before us) to proceed to examine any Witnesses in Reference to the said Indictment, or any way to meddle with it, or proceed upon it, notwithstanding the said Impeachment, and Votes pursuant to it by the said Honourable House of Commons? And this being a great Point in Law, and of so great Consequence for us to undertake in a Point of Right not settled by Conference, and remaining yet undetermined in the High Court of Parliament.

We therefore humbly desire the Opinion of this Court upon the whole Matter, Whether legally and safely we may proceed to find the Indictment of Fitz-Harris, or no?

Mr. Godfrey. My Lord, we do humbly desire the Resolution of the Court in this Matter, as a Thing of Weight; for we are between two Mill-stones, as we apprehend it, and shall be ground between them.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, we do not apprehend so.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, be pleased to spare me one Word: This Indictment was tendered to this Grand Jury Yesterday, and this Gentleman was against accepting the Bill, till he had your Judgment, and so were two more; but for all that, the Body of them carried it (all but these three) to hear the Evidence: Whereupon Mr. Solicitor and myself did go on upon the Evidence, and spent some time in opening it to them, and it was all given to them; and truly the Gentlemen did seem to be abundantly satisfied what an horrid Villainy it was, and we did think they would have found the Bill: But it seems they have prevailed to put these Scruples into the others Heads.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Attorney, we will now enquire into that. Gentlemen of the Jury, you seem dissatisfied in this Matter, and desire the Opinion of the Court in it, whether you may lawfully proceed to find this Indictment or not? We did hear Yesterday of some Scruples you made to my Brother Jones when you were sworn, and he sat in Court to give you the Charge, which he thought not fit then to answer, but left it till To-day: Truly we would have all things fairly and clearly done, that we may understand how we go all along in this Matter. Your Scruple is this: Here was, you say, an Impeachment offered against Fitz-Harris by the Commons to the Lords, and that Impeachment was of High-Treason, which was not received, and thereupon there was a Vote of the House of Commons that he should not be tried by any other inferior Court: You desire now to know whether you may enquire concerning this Treason, notwithstanding these things that have passed thus?

Mr. Godfrey. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. We are very ready and willing to satisfy any of the King's Subjects in any Matters in Judgment before us, that they may see there shall be nothing but fair Proceedings in all Cases: We do tell you it is our Opinion, that notwithstanding any thing of this Matter that you suggest in the Case before you, it is fit for you to enquire upon the Indictment; and you are bound to enquire by virtue of your Oaths, if an Indictment be exhibited to you: You cannot, nor ought to take any Notice of any such Votes of the House of Commons afterwards, if any such there were, for they will not excuse you (who are sworn to enquire of the Matters given you in Charge), in case you do not your Duty; and therefore if you have Evidence enough given you to satisfy you that the Indictment is true, you are to find it. And likewise we ought to proceed according to Justice, in Cases that are brought before us. Neither you nor we can take Notice of these things, in case there be any such as you suggest; nor will they excuse us before God or Man for the Breach of our Oaths, if we should do the contrary. And this we declare to you, not only as our Opinions, but as the Opinion of all the Judges of England. For when we did hear there was a Scruple made by you the Gentlemen of the Jury, because we would make the Way fair and clear, all the Judges did assemble to debate the Matter for your Satisfaction; not that we were dissatisfied at all in it ourselves, but that it might appear to you and the Kingdom, that there is nothing but Fairness used in this Case, as in all others; and all the Judges, Nemine contradicente, were all of Opinion, that you are not to take Notice of any of these Things; but if the Indictment be exhibited, and you have Evidence enough, you ought to find it. This we have endeavoured for your Satisfaction, to make your Way clear.

Jurors. We humbly thank your Lordship.

[Then the Jury went away, and afterwards found the Bill.]

On Friday, April 29, 1681, Sir Tho. Stringer, the King's Serjeant at Law, moved for an Habeas Corpus, to bring up the Body of Edward Fitz-Harris, to be examined by the Court about the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey. The Court granted the Writ, and said, he should be arraigned upon the Indictment against him, and then they would examine him.

Saturday, April 30, Edward Fitz-Harris was brought with a strong Guard to the King's-Bench Court.

Mr. Serj. Stringer. Your Lordship hath been pleased to grant an Habeas Corpus for Fitz-Harris, and he is brought up, and attends here.

L. C. J. We will send for Mr. Attorney, Brother.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I beg this of your Lordship, That you will be pleased to stay a little; I know not how he comes to be brought up here; Mr. Attorney, it seems, says, he knows nothing of it.

L. C. J. Well, well; send for Mr. Attorney, Brother, and hear what he says.

[Which being done, and Mr. Attorney come in, the Prisoner was brought to the Bar.]

Mr. Serj. Stringer. My Lord, I would humbly move he may be brought into Court to be examined before he be arraigned.

L. C. J. Why so?

Mr. Serj. Stringer. My Lord, we would have him examined concerning Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's Death.

L. C. J. What matters it? That may be done after as well as before.

Cl. of Cr. Edward Fitz-Harris, hold up thy Hand.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I have been a close Prisoner these ten Weeks, and have not had the Liberty to see any one in the World: I desire I may have Liberty to see my Friends, and speak with them, before I do answer to any thing.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. My Dear, plead to the Jurisdiction of the Court; here's a Plea drawn by Counsel for you.

L. C. J. You had best consider well what you have to do.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I desire this Paper may be read by the Clerks.

Mr. Just. Jones. No, no; that cannot be till you have answered to your Indictment.

Cl. of Cr. Pull off your Glove, and hold up your Hand.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I desire Leave to plead to the Jurisdiction of the Court.

L. C. J. You shall have it.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. I desire this Plea may be allowed.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Hear your Indictment first, and plead afterwards.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Fitz-Harris, let us thus far direct you: Your holding up of your Hand, and hearing the Indictment read, will not hinder you from any Manner of Plea which you may have to make afterwards; but you can plead nothing before.

Cl. of Cr. Pull off your Glove, and hold up your Hand (which he did). And then the Clerks of the Crown read the Substance of his Indictment to him in English. And then speaking to him, said, How sayest thou, Edw. Fitz-Harris? Art thou guilty of this High-Treason whereof thou standest indicted, and hast been now arraigned, or Not Guilty?

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I offer this Plea to be read first, before I answer.

L. C. J. That Plea? Take his Plea: Let us see what it is. We take it to read it now.

Mr. Just. Jones. Not to allow it.

L. C. J. Only to see what it is.

† See an Account of this Chief Justice in Burnet's Hist. Own Times, Vol. I. p. 501.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Fitz-Harris, as for this Pleading here, we use not to receive such Pleading as this without a Counsel's Hand to it.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. I desire your Lordship to assign me Counsel.

L. C. J. Who would you have assign'd Counsel?

Mr. Fitz-Harris. Sir William Jones, Sir Francis Winnington, Sir George Treby, Mr. Williams, Mr. Pollexfen, Mr. Wallop, and Mr. Smith.

L. C. J. Here are a great many you name: we will not enjoin any Counsel to serve you farther than they are willing themselves. As for Sir William Jones, one of them you desire, he does not practise now in Westminster-Hall, and therefore we cannot assign you him unless he please.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. Then I desire Sir Francis Winnington, Mr. Williams, Mr. Pollexfen, Mr. Wallop.

L. C. J. Let them be assign'd of Counsel for him. We do assign you them for Counsel. And now, look you, Sir, you had best consider how you plead this Matter. You will do well to think of it, lest it be more fatal to you than you expect; therefore we will give you time to plead the Matter you rest upon, let it be what it will: We'll give you time to have Advice upon it, and you shall be brought hither again on Tuesday Morning by Rule. And in the mean time things shall stand as they do; Mr. Attorney will consider upon the putting in of your Plea, what is fit to be done upon it.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I humbly desire the Liberty to see my Wife and Friends in the mean time.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, why may not he see his Wife, so it be done in the Presence of some Person entrusted by the Lieutenant, to see that nothing be done that is prejudicial to the King?

Mr. At. Gen. I cannot oppose it, my Lord.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. I desire my Counsel may come to me.

L. C. J. Mr. Fitz-Harris, we will admit Counsel to come to you, or else it will do you no good to assign them; all we can do shall be done.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, with Submission, I conceive you will not allow any body to come to him, to be alone with him; that would be the Way to prevent the Discovery of the Practices he is accused of: I hope, if your Lordship shew him Favour, you will do the King Justice.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I beg that any of those that have been named may come to me.

L. C. J. Yes, these four. And Mr. Attorney, they are Gentlemen of fair Credit and Reputation in the World; we have no Suspicion that they will do any thing unfairly: what we can reasonably do for any Man in his Condition, we must do.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I am not against that; but I would have all done safely and securely for the King.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I have one thing more to beg; the Time your Lordships have set is so soon, that they cannot come to me perhaps.

L. C. J. 'Tis long enough, Mr. Fitz-Harris.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. If I cannot get them to come to me in that time, what shall I do?

L. C. J. You must do what you can; we can't enjoin them to come to you.

Mr. At. Gen. This Motion of his, I fear, is designed to put off his Trial.

L. C. J. It shall not, Mr. Attorney. It is true, 'tis a busy time, the middle of the Term; but they will sure find time to dispatch this Business within the time we have allotted. On the other side, some time they must have to consider of it: I do therefore tell him, it may be fatal and peremptory to him for aught I know. Indeed if we would insist upon it, we might compel him to be ready presently, but that we will not in this Case.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. Pray, my Lord, give me till Thursday, if you please.

L. C. J. I know it is time enough for Counsel to draw up a Plea between this and Tuesday.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. To-morrow is Sunday, my Lord, and they can't come to me then; so I shall have but one Day.

L. C. J. Mr. Fitz-Harris, 'tis time enough; we must not waste the Term; for as we would shew you all the Favour we can in Equity and Justice, so we must not deny the King Justice neither. And you hear Mr. Attorney say, that these things (if they should delay the Business too long) would be prejudicial to much of the King's Business. It may be, that this dilatory Plea may spend so much time of the Term, that we cannot try it; and therefore if we do give a just Favour, you must not grow upon us.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Fitz-Harris knows this Plea hath been well advised on: There went a whole Club to the making of it.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. How should I know? I never saw nor heard of it till now. I have had the severest Measure in the World: I have had no body suffered to come to me.

L. C. J. Do not complain of Severity, Mr. Fitz-Harris. I do not believe any such thing hath been used towards you.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. Pray, my Lord, give me a little longer time.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, what if we do this? He giving you the Plea upon Tuesday, he may come upon Wednesday Morning to put it in.

Mr. At. Gen. I cannot oppose it, if your Lordship think fit so to order it.

Mr. Just. Delben. 'Tis fit you should have it to see it, Mr. Attorney, before-hand.

Mr. Just. Jones. And have some reasonable time for Consideration what to do upon it.

L. C. J. Well, delivering of the Plea on Tuesday Morning to Mr. Attorney, we do give you till Wednesday to bring it hither; and then you shall come by Rule again.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I hope I shall have the Liberty to see my Wife this Day.

L. C. J. Yes, at seasonable Hours, when there may be somebody by, to see that nothing be done to the King's Prejudice. And your Wife must do this; she must submit to be searched, that she carry nothing with her that may be prejudicial. And with these Cautions we will admit her to come to you.

Lieut. of Tower. Will your Lordship please to give us a Rule, to let his Wife and Counsel come to him?

L. C. J. We do make such a Rule.

Ch. of Crown. My Lord, we will make it Part of the Rule.

Lieut. of Tower. We desire such a Rule for our Discharge.

L. C. J. Sir, this is our Rule, and we have declared it to this purpose. Then as to your Matter, Brother Stringer, this we will do; Let the Lieutenant of the Tower keep Mr. Fitz-Harris safely till we return out of the Exchequer, and then we will examine him.

Mr. Serj. Stringer. My Lord, we think it will be a short Business and soon over, if you please to do it first.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I may see my Wife in the mean time, I hope.

L. C. J. Do you insist, Brother, that we should examine him presently?

Mr. Serj. Stringer. My Lord, Mr. Godfrey desires it.

L. C. J. Then we will presently.

Lieut. of Tower. Must his Lady speak with him?

L. C. J. Yes, after he is examined. Lieutenant of the Tower; bring Mr. Fitz-Harris into our little Room, where we will take a Clerk and examine him.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris, to her Husband, (the Court being just risen.) My Dear, do not confess any thing about the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, nor the Plot, for you will be betray'd: speak only to little things.

[Then the Prisoner was carried away to be examined, and after that to the Tower.]

On Monday, the 2d of May, Sir Francis Winnington and the other three Gentlemen assigned of Counsel for Mr. Fitz-Harris, came to the Bar, and moved the Court for an Explanation of the Rule concerning themselves, and the Business they were assign'd for.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I am to move your Lordship in a Case, wherein I am, with three others of the Gentlemen that attend this Bar, assigned of Counsel for Mr. Fitz-Harris; and that which I would beg for myself and them, is this: There is one thing we desire may be explained a little in the Rule: I humbly apprehend your Lordship gave Leave to the Counsel, whom you so assign'd to come to Mr. Fitz-Harris, and entrusted them with the Liberty of speaking with him alone; but by the penning of the Rule, we apprehend that the same Restraint is put upon them, that is upon other Persons, to have somebody by at their being with him.

L. C. J. The Lieutenant sent to me on Saturday about it, and I told him it did not extend to you.

Sir Fran. Winnington. We think it may have a Construction either way; but we desire it may be made plain, as you meant it.

L. C. J. We tell you it is plain, and it was so intended.

Sir Fran. Winn. Therefore we taking it that your Lordship pronounced and meant it so, do desire it may be so expressed. We are satisfy'd that it was your Lordship's Intention; we desire the Clerk may make it in plain and intelligible Words. And there is this farther in it, my Lord—

L. C. J. We declare it now to you, it was so meant and intended.

Sir Fran. Winn. My Lord, there is this further in it: We four have met, and we desire as much as may be to expedite this Matter as far as we can, for our own Reputation, and doing our Duty to the Person we are assigned of Counsel for. But truly, so soon as is appointed by your Lordship, it is impossible for us to prepare things so, as to be ready by Wednesday Morning. The Plea I never saw, nor did I ever hear of it, till it was brought and read here; but since that, I have not seen it till this time. The Rules were brought but last Night to our Chambers; there is no Solicitor in the Cause that may attend us. The Indictment I have not seen that we are to plead to, and truly I think the Course is to have a Copy of the Indictment.

L. C. J. We deny that, Sir Fran. Winnington.

Mr. Williams. It is impossible for us then to get ready in this time. I humbly move you will assign some convenient time. I know your Lordship will not put an Hardship upon us that are of Counsel, to plead such a Matter so quickly: 'Tis a Matter of Difficulty, and there are not many Precedents in it; and therefore it will require more Care than ordinary.

Sir Fran. Win. My Lord, We ought to present things to the Court as they are in Fact, that we may not lie under any Reflection from the Court, nor any body else. You made a Rule on Saturday, that I should be of Counsel for him, (which I submit to) but I knew not of this till afterwards. I never saw the Plea, nor any Paper in this Cause as yet: The Rule was left at my Chamber this last Night; and when I saw it, Mr. Williams and we got together in the Hall this Morning: We could not do it till just now, and we come now to wait upon the Court, to acquaint them how the Matter stands. I was not in Court, when you gave your Directions about this Matter; but when I find what the Nature of the Case is, I shall be ready to do my Duty to the Court, and to him who is upon his Life. It is a mighty Cause, it is a Cause that may-be, if we do not acquit ourselves as we ought, have Reflection upon our Posterity, if we do not do it as well as we can. Therefore we desire some reasonable time, that we may have Copies of the Papers and things concerned in this Cause, as the Court shall direct. And we are assured your Lordship is so well acquainted with the usual Method in such Cases, that you will give us all the Favour in it you can.

Mr. Wallop. For my part, my Lord, the Notice I had was but very lately: I was by indeed when this Person Fitz-Harris did desire Counsel, and your Lordship assigned me amongst the rest; but nothing of the Order was brought to me till this Morning: so that I know nothing of the matter less or more, than what I heard upon the reading of the Paper here on Saturday. I do not desire time for time-sake, or for Delay; but we think the Nature of the thing is such, as will require great Consideration, and we desire convenient time to prepare it for the Court.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir Francis Winnington, you must consider here the Nature of your Case: This is an Indictment of High-Treason, and there is nothing I see that is so greatly considerable in the Case, but the Height of the Crime. 'Tis an extraordinary Crime indeed, if he be guilty of it (for I speak not to prejudice your Client, but of the thing itself). 'Tis a Treason of a very high Nature: and then what have we to consider in this Case? We might have taken your Client at advantage here, and it had been no Injustice if we had made him plead immediately as he would stand by it: And we are not to consult your leisure, but your Client's Cause: he hath pitch'd upon you for his Counsel; we have given him three Days time to plead as he will stand by it, Saturday, Monday and Tuesday, and he is to come with his Plea upon Wednesday. We have appointed for Convenience-sake, that you should give a Copy of the Plea to-morrow Morning to Mr. Attorney; but we do not tie you so peremptorily to that Copy, that you may not vary in Words from that Form. Give him but the Substance of the Plea, and we will not tie you to the particular formal Words. Peradventure Mr. Fitz-Harris could not have expected three Days time, in Course of Law, upon such a Crime, to put in such a Plea, when he tells us, he will plead specially to the Jurisdiction of the Court. But we have done it in this Case, to shew, that that all the Fairness that can possibly be used shall be used. On the other side, we must not spend all our time so, as to let the Term slip for his Neglect of waiting upon you. Therefore if he will delay to send to advise with you, he must suffer for it. Suppose he did not come to you till to-morrow, what can we help it?

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. There is no Solicitor, my Lord, to go to the Council.

L. C. J. Well, we must not spin out the Term to please him: he must take more care; I believe he would by Dilatories be glad to put it off all the Term. If Mr. Attorney gives Consent for more time, well and good.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. I hope your Lordship will give Leave for a Solicitor; without your Lordship's Leave none will dare to venture. And I had the Rule so very late—

Cl. of Crown. They had it at three of the Clock in the Afternoon, as soon as it could be drawn up.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. That Copy was brought to the Lieutenant of the Tower, and he sent it away immediately.

Cl. of Crown. Another Copy they had from me that Evening.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. I never saw my Husband in the Tower till yesterday in the Afternoon, and I am an ignorant Person, and know not what to do in it without a Solicitor. As soon as I could get Copies of the Rule writ out, I carry'd them to these Gentlemen.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I think it will be very hard upon us that are of Counsel, to be so straitened in Point of Time; for my part, the Rule was left under my Door the last Night, and I had it not till this Morning: It will be a mighty hard matter for us to get the Plea ready, without a Sight of the Indictment. Things must be averr'd to be the same; which we cannot, unless we see what is there alledged. This Man hath been kept close Prisoner, and no body suffer'd to come at him to instruct him; and we have not so much as Copies of any thing that we must make use of. We have no Concernment, my Lord, in this matter, but what is assign'd us by the Court; and we do not know by any Papers, if there be any, how we should put it into Form; and that is it, my Lord, which may lie heavy upon us; if this Man's business should miscarry for want of putting it into due Form, the Blame will be upon us, who are assigned his Counsel. Therefore if your Lordship please, under these Considerations, to give us time and leave to see the Indictment we are to plead to, we may be the better enabled to do our Duty.

Sir Fran. Win. Really, my Lord, I ought to deal clearly with the Court; without a Copy of the Indictment, I know not how we shall be able to plead as we should do.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I do really move, not in favour of Fitz-Harris, but for my own Reputation: I cannot put my hand to a Plea of this Consequence, without time to consider very well of it; and unless in Truth, I can see the Indictment, and compare the Plea with it, to put it into Form fit for the Judgment of the Court. And if these things cannot be granted, I desire to be excused.

L. C. J. Why, Gentlemen, see what you ask: Where do you find any Precedent of a Man indicted for High-Treason, that would plead to the Jurisdiction of the Court, that had more time given him than is in this Case?

Sir Fran. Win. We do not know what his Plea will be, my Lord, till we have seen it and considered it.

L. C. J. Your Client told us all, and we know all of us very well, that it is to the Jurisdiction of the Court, and can be no otherwise.

Mr. Just. Jones. Any thing else you may give in Evidence upon Not guilty; and it would be considered on your Trial.

Sir Fran. Win. My Lord, it may happen to be not so properly pleadable to the Jurisdiction of the Court; we know not what it will be till we have seen the things necessary to draw it into Form. It is true consequently, it is the Concern of our Client; but the Ground of our Motion at this time is for ourselves. I did apprehend by the Rule, his special Plea was to be admitted, if he tender'd one, let it be what it will: We must consider many things in a Case of this Nature; and at last, whether it will be to the Jurisdiction, or what 'tis, we can't tell as yet. And till we have seen the Nature of the thing, and what is necessary to prepare it for the Court, I cannot venture to give it its proper Term. But our time is so short, if your Lordship will afford us no longer, that we know not how to be ready for it. Your Lordship does speak of Mr. Attorney's being attended with the Substance of the Plea, not tying us to the Form in the Copy deliver'd to him. Mr. Attorney was here upon Saturday, when this matter was first started, and he knew the Substance then: We know not what it is more than by Report. It is a Plea that so rarely happens, that we must be cautious in what Form we put it. 'Tis, as your Lordship hath been pleas'd to say, an horrible Treason that in the Indictment is specify'd. We must not speak, nor do not mitigate the Heinousness of the Crime; nor do we speak it because it is Term-time, and may hinder our other Business: We shall all of us, I am sure, not at all consider our own Time, or Loss in the matter; but it being of so great Weight, we desire reasonable time to do our Duties: we name no time, nor dare do it; we submit that to the Court. But, my Lord, under favour, for the Copy of the Indictment, we do conceive 'tis necessary that we should see a Copy of it; and when the Court is pleas'd to admit the Party to give in a special Plea to the matter he is accus'd of, and assign him Counsel to plead it, I take it to be very rational and consonant to Law, that we have a Copy of the Charge.

L. C. J. Sir Fran. Winnington, for you to come and say these things here, methinks is very strange. I think you can shew us no Precedent, that ever so long time was given to any Man to plead to the Jurisdiction of the Court, nor that ever a Copy of the Indictment was granted in High-Treason; and for you, because of the Greatness of the Treason, therefore to go about to make us believe, that it is more reasonable that a Copy of the Indictment should be granted in this Case than in another; that the Greatness of the Crime should be meritorious, and deserve a Favour of the Court, not granted in other Cases, is a thing extraordinary.

Sir F. Win. I do not press it that way; I pray I may be understood aright. Upon what appeared the other Day, upon the Nature of the Plea, I present it to your Consideration, Whether or no, when you have been pleas'd to admit a special Plea, you will not let us see that which we are to plead to?

L. C. J. No, it was never thought of surely.

Mr. Just. Dolben. No, it hath been constantly denied in Cases of Felony and Treason; and so you will find the Practice to have always been. But I'll tell you what hath been done sometimes; they have granted some Heads out of the Indictment, that should enable the Party to fit his Plea to the Charge; and that was done in Wittypole's Case, upon a Plea of Auter fois acquit. They gave him the Times, and some other Circumstances, to fit his Plea to his Case; but never was there a Copy of the Indictment granted.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord Coke, in his Preface to the Third Report, declares, That it was the ancient Law of England, and so declared by Act of Parliament in Edward III's Time, That any Subject may, for his necessary Use, have access to Records and Copies of them, be they for the King or against the King; and that the Practice to the contrary is an Abusion.

L. C. J. So then, Mr. Wallop, you take it that we are bound when any Man is indicted of Felony or Treason, or any capital Crime, if he say he must have a Copy of the Record, we must grant him a Copy of the Indictment: if you think so, the Court and you are not of the same Opinion.

Mr. Wallop. I inform the Court what I have read and seen, and where 'tis to be found.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, it may be necessary, for aught we know, for him to plead over to the Fact laid in the Indictment, Not guilty, as sometimes it is requisite for the Party to do. Now if we should mistake for want of having what is necessary, and thereby preclude him of the Advantages he might have had if the Plea had been rightly drawn, for aught I know, it will lie upon me for ever. My Lord, I do it merely out of Caution, and for my own Reputation sake: If any legal Advantage should be lost by my Unwariness, it will be a perpetual Reflection upon me; and therefore I am so earnest in this Case. And, my Lord, I can tell you what was done in a Case wherein I was of Counsel; it was not a Case of Treason indeed, but it was Murder, the next Crime to it; it was the Case of King and Thomas. Thomas was indicted of Murder in one County; and found guilty of Man-slaughter; and afterwards was indicted for the same Murder in another County, and being to plead this matter, I did insist upon it, that we ought to have a Copy of the Indictment. There was some Debate about it; but at last we had a Copy, and we alledg'd there; as here, it was impossible to plead without it; and the Cause was removed hither into this Court for Judgment.

Mr. Just. Dolben. The first Indictment you might have a Copy of, for you were to plead the whole Record.

Mr. Williams. Nay, we had a Copy of that to which we pleaded.

L. C. J. Mr. Williams, you tell us, you may peradventure have occasion to plead over when you know 'tis High-Treason that you are indicted of, in framing and publishing a treasonable Paper: Can't you direct your Client to plead over without a Copy? Certainly what you alledge in that, for a Copy of the Indictment, is Non Causa pro Causa.

Mr. Just. Jones. What Prejudice will it be to your Client to plead over?

Sir Fran. Win. My Lord, we only offer these things for ourselves, and we hope we shall not be press'd to do such a thing as this, without having reasonable time to consider and deliberate of it, and without having what is necessary in order to it.

[Then Mr. Attorney being sent for, came into the Court.]

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Attorney, these Gentlemen that were assign'd of Counsel for Fitz-Harris, do move the Court here, and say, they would have longer time to draw up his Plea, for they must make use of several Copies of Papers, and they cannot so soon obtain them, nor find out those Records they must use, or other things as Ingredients to this Plea, in so short a time; and they say likewise, that they desire a Copy of the Indictment. Now, in truth, they ought to have given you notice of this, that you might have been here likewise to hear what they say: If you do consent to give them longer time, we shall be ready to do it: but without it, we shall not be willing to delay it.

Mr. Att. Gen. I think your Lordship and the Court gave them a very just and reasonable Time, when you allowed them four Days; and these Gentlemen are mistaken, if they think they are assigned as Counsel to all Events. They are only to draw up a Plea upon that Matter that is alledg'd by the Prisoner, and to the Jurisdiction of the Court.

Sir Fran. Win. No, my Lord, I beg your Lordship's Pardon: The Rule is to plead the special Matter without more saying.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, under favour, it is as I say, and so is the Course of Law; for the Prisoner ought to acquaint you with the Points he desires his Counsel to be heard to: And in this Case, Fitz-Harris did acquaint the Court before he would plead, that he had something to object to the Jurisdiction of the Court; and so his Wife directed him when she gave him the Paper. I suppose she had other Advice upon it; for she could not draw it up in that Form it was herself; and he did acquaint the Court, he had Matter to plead to the Jurisdiction of the Court, and concluded so in the Paper that was read. And thereupon, according to his Prayer, he had Counsel assign'd him these Gentlemen. I consented to it, as it was just I should but that they should think, that they are to advise him in other Matters; than that Particular upon which they are assign'd, I know they know their Duty better than to offer at any such thing. Now since then there is but one single Point, the Jurisdiction of the Court and nothing else, for they are not to advise in other Matters, I think it was more than strict Justice, nay it was a very great Favour, for all Men ought to be ready to plead such Pleas immediately.

L. C. J. Yes, in strictness, we might have required him to plead, as he would stand by it, presently.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Law is, that he must have all ready, in Poigne, to make it appear that what he avers in his Plea is so; therefore you need not to have given him any longer time: but because all the World might see the Court and King's Counsel dealt fairly in this Matter, and did not mean to take advantage of any thing that look'd like a Surprise, I consented to that time that your Lordship was pleas'd to set: And as for the Copy of the Indictment, I know not any Reason they have to desire it; for they are not to advise in that, what Defence he shall make, but only upon this Matter he hath alledg'd.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, what Mr. Attorney tells you is so, and we do expect that you should conform yourselves to it: We have given you three Days time, which is sufficient for such a thing as this. And Mr. Attorney, we told them thus when we did direct them, That they should deliver you a Copy of the Plea To-morrow Morning. We are not so critical with them, as that we will not receive their Plea, if it be variant in Form from that which they deliver to you. That that we intend by it is this, That they should deliver to you a Plea, the same in Substance as that which they do plead here: If they would alter it in the Form, we can give them leave to do that without any Prejudice.

Mr. Att. Gen. We will never pinch them in Form; I think I have Matter enough.

L. C. J. I tell you truly, I do believe some Friends of his had Counsel to draw up this Plea for him.

Mr. Att. Gen. A great Cabal, no doubt of it, my Lord!

Mr.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, I desire that Counsel may be assigned in my Place.

L. C. J. We assigned him those that he required, excepting Sir William Jones; and we did not deny to put in Sir William Jones's Name, because we would not assign him, but because he hath declined the Bar, and does not practise here.

Mr. Williams. We do not draw in the Name of Sir William Jones, or decline him: We submit to your Order about ourselves; but we desire that Person that did draw this Plea may be added to us.

L. C. J. If his Wife desire it, and will name him, it shall be so.

Mr. Williams. I desire to be put out, and he put in.

L. C. J. Sir, he understands what he would have, sure! and we can't discharge you upon any such Account.

Mr. Wallop. Here are many Particulars and many Averments, which cannot so suddenly be set right as the Time allotted.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, there is not half those Gentlemen assigned that I writ to my Husband to ask for: I directed him eight.

L. C. J. Who else would you have?

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. There was in the Paper Sir William Jones, his Majesty's late Attorney-General, Sir Francis Winnington, Mr. Williams, late Speaker of the House of Commons, Sir George Treby, Recorder of London—

Mr. Pollexfen. Your Lordship may easily perceive by this Gentlewoman's Carriage, how we are like to be instructed in this Cause, when no Body follows it but she.

L. C. J. Do you desire Sir George Treby should be added?

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. Yes, I do.

L. C. J. Let it be so then.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. And Sir William Jones; I will do what I can to get him to come.

L. C. J. We will not enjoin him; but if he pleases, we leave him to his Liberty.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Why, Mistress, you are got into the Hands of Gentlemen that are as learned and able in their Profession as you can have; you need no more.

L. C. J. Do you desire Mr. Smith?

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then add him.

Mr. Pollexfen. We desire that there may be Leave for a Solicitor, one that may carry Papers in the Presence of the Lieutenant.

L. C. J. We have Confidence in you, but not in other Persons; therefore we must consider of that: But what think you of it, Brothers? We may permit, I think, one to come from the Counsel to him with that Caution.

Judges. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Let the Papers then be inspected before by the Lieutenant of the Tower, and be from one of the Council; and so they have Liberty to do it.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is no Need of any Papers, my Lord—

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, do not oppose that: Let them have Liberty to carry any Papers that any of their Counsel, these Gentlemen we have assigned, shall send to him, or any from him to them; so as the Lieutenant may have first the Sight and Perusal of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is no great Harm in that, though I see not that they will need any Papers.

L. C. J. Yes, their Plea to the Jurisdiction must arise upon Fact, which may be out of some Papers.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are assigned, Gentlemen, but to one Point, the Jurisdiction of the Court; remember that.

Mr. Pollexfen. Your Lordship is pleased to say, That we may vary in Form from what we deliver to the Attorney-General; and Mr. Attorney is pleased to say, he will not pinch us as to Form: How shall we be secure no Advantage shall be taken of the Form?

L. C. J. 'Tis only as to that Particular. You shall not be tied up to the Form you deliver to him. What Advantages there may be concerning the Form of the Plea you bring hither, we will see shall not be taken.

Sir Fran. Win. Will your Lordship please to afford us no longer time?

L. C. J. When you are to plead to the Jurisdiction of the Court in a Case of High-Treason, and such a Treason as this is, what Reason is there that so much time as is granted already should be given you?

Sir Fran. Win. Shall not we have a Copy of the Indictment neither?

L. C. J. You will offer Things that are not to be granted to you, ad captandum populum, that you may say you are hardly used, and mightily frustrated in this Case.

Sir Fran. Win. No, my Lord, we do not offer it for any such End.

Mr. Att. Gen. Gentlemen, remember you have not Liberty to plead any Thing, but to the Jurisdiction of the Court.

Sir Fran. Win. We must submit to what your Lordship orders in it.

[Upon Wednesday the 4th of May, 1681, Edward Fitz-Harris was brought from the Tower to the King's-Bench-Bar.]

Cl. of Crown. Edward Fitz-Harris, hold up thy Hand (which he did): Thou hast been indicted and arraigned for High-Treason; how sayest thou? Art thou guilty of the High-Treason whereof thou standest indicted, and hast been arraigned, or Not Guilty?

Mr. Fitz-Harris. I have made a Plea, my Lord, which I desire may be received and allowed.

Mr. Wallop. May it please your Lordship, I desire to be heard a few Words.

L. C. J. Would you not have the Plea read?

Mr. Wallop. I have but a few Words to say before it be read, if your Lordship please, for ourselves, or at least for myself. According to the best Instructions we have had, we have drawn up this Plea, and I pray it may be entered so. But, my Lord, I humbly conceive we have not had, or for my own Part I have not had those Instructions that were fit to direct me in this Case. It is a special Plea, and of a Matter that rarely happens; and the Nature of this special Plea is, that the Matter contained in the Indictment and in the Impeachment, is one and the same Matter. Now I have not yet seen, nor could I come at a Sight, though I desired it, of the Impeachment, nor of the Indictment: But I humbly conceive, that by the Law, as this Case is upon a special Plea, the Prisoner ought to have a Copy of the Indictment. And I do not say, that every one may demand a Copy of his Indictment to find Faults; but upon a special Plea, and particularly upon this, I humbly conceive he ought to have a Sight and a Copy of his Indictment.

L. C. J. What, would you not have your Plea received?

VOL. III.

Mr. Wallop. Thus, my Lord: If we can have no farther Instructions, nor can by any other Means come to a Sight of these Things, then it is the best Plea we can make in such a Case, and I avow the Plea: But if any Thing should fall out amiss to the Prisoner for want of such a Sight, I pray it may not lie upon me.

L. C. J. Read the Plea.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we humbly pray, being assigned of Counsel for this Gentleman, Mr. Fitz-Harris, that this Plea may be received.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, have you been attended, according to the Rule of Court. with this Plea?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. What is the Reason of that?

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is no more in effect, than what was offered four Days ago, when Counsel was allowed him. I sent last Night late to them for a Copy of the Plea: Indeed Yesterday at Noon they sent me this Note, That Fitz-Harris intends to stand upon his Plea, that he stands impeached in the House of Peers. I sent to know of them whether they would plead this to the Jurisdiction, or in Abatement, or in Bar: They declared, they would not plead to the Jurisdiction, but now I see 'tis to the Jurisdiction.

L. C. J. It is so; and that he proposed to plead at first.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is true, my Lord; but thus they sent me Word.

L. C. J. And as a Plea to the Jurisdiction, so it concludes.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we have done all that is possible for us to do in this Case. The Court directed us to attend Mr. Attorney with the Substance, and so we have done; but the Form, we had Liberty to do as we pleased in.

L. C. J. You need not go about to excuse it, that you have not done it; we charge you with nothing.

Mr. Williams. I don't go about to excuse it; we don't take it as a Charge upon us.

L. C. J. All we say is this: If Mr. Attorney had had it, peradventure he might have considered of a Replication by this Time, or what he would do concerning it; but if he hath not had Time, we cannot expect it from him.

Sir Fr. Win. My Lord, I only beg one Word as to Matter of Fact, and 'tis material as to ourselves to urge it. We did send several Messengers to get, if it were possible to be obtained, a Copy of the Impeachment in Parliament. We sent to the House of Lords Clerk to get it; but they that went down, tell us the Clerk is not in Town, or else we had sent Mr. Attorney the whole Plea at that Time.

L. C. J. I only ask the Question, to see whether Mr. Attorney hath had time to think of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I think I need not any time in this Case.

L. C. J. Pray go on, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I do pray your Judgment upon it; for 'tis a Plea that is insufficient: Nay, 'tis no Plea to bar you of your Jurisdiction. First, I observe that whosoever will plead a Plea to the Jurisdiction, if he have any Record to plead, must have it in poigne, must produce it in the Court, or at least must produce a Copy sworn, that the Court may see there is nothing dilatory in the Case. And for this Matter, it will appear upon Examination to be a plain frivolous Plea; for there is no such Matter depending as this Plea alleges. But I speak of it as a Plea to the Jurisdiction of the Court; and such an one as will plead such a Plea, he must have the Record ready, to shew it to the Court, and by the Course of Law ought to have it ready to assert to the Court, that they have not Jurisdiction: So then 'tis certainly naught. That is the first Thing. Another Thing is this; with Submission, I say, They have pleaded no Record at all, nor any Impeachment at all, as this Case is; for the Notes that I have taken, my Lord, are, They say he was impeached by the Commons de alta Proditione; but that is naught. He ought in his Plea to have set forth his Impeachment, and for what Crime particularly; for either an Indictment or an Impeachment de alta Proditione, or Felony, or any other Crime, is naught, the Law allows it not. He ought to set forth, and must not aver upon a Record, but set it forth in hec verba, or in the Substance of it; and so ought to plead the Record entirely as it is. And for those necessary Averments that cannot otherwise be made, the Law allows of them. But in this Case he cannot come and aver upon this Record; for he hath set forth the Impeachment not as it was, but only barely de alta Proditione in general, which the Record must shew, so as the Court may judge of it, and it must not be intended. But as they have set it forth, in this Case there is nothing of Treason specified in the Record averred, that can intend this to be the same; and, My Lord, so are all the Precedents. Whosoever pleads a private Act of Parliament, must plead it as it is, not in general that it is for the same Matter; for I take it then it is naught: And we are in your Judgment, that this is no Plea to the Jurisdiction upon that Point.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, Do you think it prudent to argue it this Time, or will you take a Day? Pray consider of that a little.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I think delay is very dangerous and mischievous in this Case.

L. C. J. We can give you as short a Day as you please.

Mr. Att. Gen. But to satisfy the Court, the Clerk will be ready with the Journals, to shew that the Fact is not as they plead it.

H h

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Attorney, we must go on in a legal and formal Way, when we have a Plea put in; therefore whether you will not take Time for a Day or two to consider of this Plea: You had the Substance of it, but nothing concerning the Manner of the Pleading; they would not tell you whether they would plead it in Abatement, or in Bar, or how: Therefore whether you will not take time to consider of this Pleading for a Day or two, pray consider with yourself.

[Then the King's Counsel consulted one with another.]

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, not only for what I have already offered, but for many other Reasons, we can see this can be no way a Plea to the Jurisdiction of this Court; for upon any Impeachment or Indictment, the King hath Election to proceed upon which he will: And if there were ten Indictments for one and the same Thing, if none of them are come to a Judgment the King may proceed upon which he pleases, as in that Case of Ireland Yesterday; though the Party were arraigned and ready to be tried in Ireland, yet the King might, if he pleased, try him here; and the King hath ordered it so to be. But, my Lord, I take it, that this is not only apparently a false Plea, but a frivolous Plea in itself, being to the Jurisdiction of this Court: For there was never any thing of a Crime so great, but this Court of King's Bench, which hath a sovereign Jurisdiction, for Commoners especially, could take Cognizance of it; and I put it upon that, my Lord. Never was such a Plea pleaded to your Jurisdiction; and therefore we pray your Judgment upon it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, before we come to that which is the Question, if there were such a Plea pleaded to the Jurisdiction as they would have this to be, we humbly pray the Judgment of the Court, whether this be any such Plea at all as can bear any Debate: For it will not be a Question now, how far an Impeachment depending is a Bar to your Jurisdiction? But the Question is, first, whether this be such a Plea? For, my Lord, I do take it, no Man can plead any Record in another Court, any Indictment or Acquittal upon it, by pleading it in this Form as this is pleaded, by saying generally, that such a Time in such a Court, he was indicted for the same Offence, and was acquitted; yet thus this Plea is, and no more. But he that will plead auter foitz acquit, must plead that such a time he was indicted in such a Court, and set forth the Indictment and all the Proceedings of that Court upon that Record, and then 'tis proper for Judgment; such a Plea is formal, and requires an Answer, and it will be proper for us to give it an Answer: And when such a Plea is put in, we shall either demur to it, or give it the Answer that it requires of null tiel Record. But this does not require any particular Answer, because it sets forth no Record at all that we can answer to: for it is not sufficient to say in general, that he was indicted and acquitted, or impeached, and then averr that it was for the same Offence; but he ought to shew forth the Impeachment, and set forth in the Plea the Record, that upon it you may pass a certain Judgment. Therefore we hope you will set this aside, as not being at all formal, or requiring any Answer to it.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. My Lord, If you please to consider in this Case what is the Question, and what not. At present 'tis not the Question, whether if a Man be impeached of High-Treason by the Commons before the Lords, and this Impeachment stands unreversed in the Court of Parliament; I say, 'tis not the Question, whether this Court have Jurisdiction over this Man for that Offence? but the Question is, Whether he hath put in such a Plea before you, as will put that in Question? Under favour, 'tis not sufficient for him that will plead a particular Record, in bar or other way, and make use of it, that he pleaded it in general Terms, but he must set forth that Record as it is; he must not give you the Title only, or say, he was indicted for such a thing generally; but he must set it forth to the Court, that if Issue be taken, the Court may, by comparing the Record with the Plea, judge whether it be the same Matter or no. Now when he pleads he was impeach'd for the same Treason, he must set forth what that was, that it may appear it was for the same Treason; and if that be particularly set forth as it ought, upon null tiel Record, the Question will be, Is there such a Record or not? Now if he comes and says he was indicted or impeached, and not for what in particular; the two things that upon the Issue are to be compared, are not made so fit for your Judgment. In our Law, my Lord, if a Man will plead, he need not set forth a general Act of Parliament; but if he will plead a particular Act, he must set forth the Matter of it, to bring his Case under the Judgment of the Court; and whether this be so pleaded or no, we submit it to you.

L. C. J. Pray let me speak two or three Words to you: Do you speak it against our receiving of the Plea?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord, we hope you will not admit such a Plea.

L. C. J. That will be hard. Pray then consider with yourself, whether if it be an insufficient Plea (for we'll say nothing at present to that) and if the Plea be such that no Issue can be taken upon it (admitting it were so), whether you should not demur to it, before you demand our Judgment, that we may have somewhat upon the whole before us to judge upon? And I speak it to you, Mr. Attorney, to this purpose, that you may consider, whether you shall think fit to demur to this Plea, or whether you shall think convenient to take Issue upon it, or to reply to it, that it may come judicially for our Opinion; for in a regular way, if a Plea be admitted, it must be either demurred to, or reply'd to. Pray consider of it in this Case; and we will give you time to consider, if you please.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Under favour, my Lord, if a Plea be apparently vicious when it is upon Record, we need not demur to it, nor take Issue; for else the Mischief will be, we shall admit all that is well pleaded to be true.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, if your Lordship please, I do confess that according to the usual Course and Practice, if there be a doubt upon a Plea that is read, whereon any Point in Law may arise, you do put the Party to demur or take Issue: but according to the common course of this Court in common Cases, and much more in extraordinary Cases, and especially in capital Cases, and most of all in a Case of High-Treason, such as this, if it do appear to the Court, and your Lordship, that the Plea is in its nature a frivolous Plea, you do usually refuse to admit such a Plea, and give Judgment upon it. Now we would acquaint your Lordship with our Apprehensions in this Case, and we would pray you to consider what the danger may be upon us to demur, if this Plea be frivolous, as it appears to be: For whether an Indictment in this Court, or an Indictment in another Court be for one and the same Offence, and so a bar to the Jurisdiction, we are not so much as admitted into the Question of that, as this Plea is. Whereas according to the course in other Pleas, we pray you would be pleased to see the Inconvenience, if we should be put to demur to it; for then we do admit by this Demurrer, that this Impeachment is for one and the same thing; and we humbly conceive, my Lord, that is a little dangerous. How then will it be possible for you ever to judge, that the Impeachment (which in Fact is otherwise) and the Indictment is for the same thing, unless you will put them to pursue the common Methods, how it was in the House of Lords, by shewing forth the Record? And what can we do otherwise (it being apparently against the common Form of Pleas, and manifestly for Delay only) than pray the Judgment of the Court, which we hope will be to reject this Plea?

L. C. J. Brother Jeffries, you need not be afraid, that you shall be concluded by this Demurrer, that there is such an Impeachment in the Lords House for the same Offence: there will be no colour for it. And Brother Maynard, formerly I confess, when they pleaded Pleas Ore tenus, and took their Exceptions Ore tenus too, they would demand Judgment of a Plea presently; and so it was in the Bishop of Winchester's Case, 3 Edw. III. where there was an Indictment against the Bishop here in this Court, for going away from the Parliament at Shrewsbury without the Leave of the Lords: There Shurd comes in, and pleads Ore tenus this Matter, and says, This is a Thing that concerns the Lords in Parliament, of which they have Cognizance only, and so prays the Judgment of the Court presently, Whether they have Jurisdiction of the Cause or no? And he pleads it in Abatement. There they over-ruled him presently without any more to do, because their Pleadings were not as now they are; now they are grown into a formal Way, all entered upon Record, or at least written in Paper: And what should be the Reason why you should not do according to the common Course of the Court, I leave it to you to consider of it.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. It is very true, my Lord; anciently the Course was so, my Lord, and the Law was so too, to plead Ore tenus; but pleading in Paper is the same Thing; and the Course of the Court hath been, when they saw it in Paper to be a frivolous Plea, to give Judgment presently: And you have the same Privilege upon this Account, as they had when Pleas were by Word of Mouth. If there be a Demurrer, it may hang longer than is convenient this Cause should do.

L. C. J. Do not speak of that, Brother Maynard; as to Delay, you shall take as short a Day as you will.

Mr. Att. Gen. I have looked upon all the Precedents, and could never meet with one Demurrer where the Plea was to the Jurisdiction: But I pray your Judgment upon the first Matter, whether whosoever pleads to the Jurisdiction ought not to have the Record in poigne to justify his Plea? In a Plea in Bar indeed it may come in by Mittimus, but in a Plea in Abatement, the Party ought always to be ready with those Matters that are to out the Court of their Jurisdiction; and besides, the Court is to maintain their own Jurisdiction, the King's Counsel have nothing to do to assert that, but they ought to avoid all Things that may be to the King's Prejudice, and therefore it ought to be by the Judgment of the Court in this Case set aside. But I do think you will never find a Demurrer that was to a Plea to the Jurisdiction.

L. C. J. Pray consider of that.

Mr. Att. Gen. But if it appear to be a frivolous Plea in the Form or in the Matter, you will not put us sure to demur.

L. C. J. If you do insist upon it, that you won't demur, nor do nothing, we will give Judgment; but we will take Time to consider it, if you won't demur, nor take Issue, or Reply.

Sir Fran. Withins. Will your Lordship please to spare me one Word? As it hath been observed to your Lordship, this is a Plea to the Jurisdiction of the Court; and if they do plead a Plea of that nature, the Court always expects the Plea should be substantially good, otherwise 'tis not to be received. Now it is not substantially good here; for it says, that Fitz-Harris was impeach'd of High-Treason: Now such an Impeachment is naught, for no body can be impeached of High-Treason generally. It ought to come and set forth the particular Acts that make up the Treason; for the calling of a Thing so, does not make it so: Therefore they that would plead this Plea, must come and shew that there is an Impeachment that hath such Matter in it as does amount to Treason; so that then it being a naughty Plea in the Substance of it, and the end of it to put this Court out of a Jurisdiction, we hope for that Reason you will not receive it.

Mr. Sanders. One Word farther, if your Lordship please, on the same Side, for the King. As for this Plea that he hath pleaded here, if it had had substantial Matter in Law whereupon to ground a Debate, we should not press your Lordship not to receive it, but we must get off it as well as we could; but when it is manifestly pleaded merely for Delay, and it so appears to your Lordship upon the reading of it, and that there is nothing of Substance in it, then we hope you will not receive it, nor put Mr. Attorney to demur to it, or take Issue upon it. Now for the Plea the Case is thus: Here is an Indictment for Treason against Mr. Fitz-Harris, for conspiring the Death of the King, compassing of it, and declaring such his Intention by a venomous Libel. Now he comes and pleads to out this Court of their Jurisdiction; and what does he plead? He says he was formerly impeached of High-Treason in the Parliament, that is all he says concerning the Impeachment; then he does come and make an Averment, without shewing more, that this High-Treason, and that for which he was impeached, is the same; and takes upon himself to judge, whether the Court will or not, and will not submit it to the Court, which certainly is not the right Way of pleading. If Mr. Fitz-Harris should come and plead auter foitz acquit, That he had been tried at another Time for the same Offence and acquitted, he should not have said generally he had been formerly indicted and acquitted, and this for the same Thing; but he must have shewed the Record, and then averred upon the Record that it was for one and the same Crime. For suppose in this Case, which would have appeared perhaps to be so, if he had done as he should have done, shewn that there was such an Impeachment, whereby he was impeached of High-Treason, and which Impeachment did charge him with Treason for levying War against the King, and then have made a Conclusion as he does now, with an Averment, that the Impeachment and the Indictment was for one and the same Offence: Under favour, notwithstanding his Averment, the Court would have adjudged them not to be the same; for if so be the Treason do not appear upon the Record to be the same, his Averment will signify nothing; why then his pleading now this insufficiently for want of the Record, will be better for him than if he had pleaded it sufficiently. Why then if he had now pleaded, that there is a Record of the former Impeachment, and set forth the Record, and then averred this was for the same, Mr. Attorney might take Issue either there was no such Record, or said it was another Treason, and traversed it that it was not for the same; and so there would either have been one Trial by the Record, or the other upon the Fact by the Country. But now as he hath made it, this Trial both upon the Record, and upon the Fact, is only triable by the Country, not by the Record. For if Mr. Attorney take Issue that there is no such Record, then all the Record is, that he was impeached for High-Treason, and then a Record of Impeachment for any High-Treason would serve the turn; which if it be not for the same, it ought not: So then the Issue of null tiel Record could not be taken. Why then now, my Lord, as to the Fact: If Mr. Attorney take Issue, that it was not the same Treason, then the Record must be tried; that is, whether there there was such a Record that does contain an Impeachment for the same Treason for which he stands indicted; this, I say, must be tried by the Country. And if he have pleaded it so, that Matter of Record upon Issue must be tried by the Country, for that reason his Plea is naught; and if that be so, then the Court may be satisfied, and 'tis apparently pleaded only for Delay, because he would not come to the principal Matter, and plead Guilty or Not Guilty, which is the Matter of Fact most proper for the Country. I rather hope he is not Guilty than that he is; but if he be Guilty, 'tis the most horrid venomous Treason as ever was spread abroad in any Age. And for that reason your Lordship will not give countenance to any Delay. And therefore we pray the Plea may be rejected, and he may answer over.

Mr. Att. Gen. He hath not pleaded prout patet per Record.

L. C. J. Yes, 'tis prout patet in Rotulis Parliamenti. He does say that he was impeached of High-Treason by the Commons before the Lords, as appears by the Records thereof amongst the Records of Parliament.

Mr. Att. Gen. I did not truly remember that; but I beg your Pardon if it be so, for I had not a View of the Plea till now; but I am ready thus far to satisfy the Court, 'tis a pure false and frivolous Plea. And then with Submission I offer it to your Consideration, whether you will give any time, or presently reject it.

L. C. J. We will give them no time, that is sure. But the Question is, Whether time should not be taken, not in Favour of the Prisoner, but of the King and of the Court?

Mr. Att. Gen. I am ready to make out, if it were necessary, that there is nothing of all this true; 'tis all Fiction that is pleaded, and nothing in the Record to warrant it: I have a Copy of the whole Journal, and of the Transactions in the House of Lords, the Book is close by and ready to be shewn; but when 'tis a frivolous Plea, I hope there will be no need of that trouble.

L. C. J. But, Mr. Attorney, whether we can take notice of the Journal Book now, you had best consider, as this Case stands.

Mr. Att. Gen. They ought to have it here ready, they ought to have it here in poigne.

Mr. Just. Jones. There have been very many good Arguments urged by you, upon which perhaps the Plea will be judged insufficient; but the Question is, Whether you are now in any such Form as we can pass Judgment upon this Plea or no? Therefore it being offer'd to you to consider of it, what you will do in it; sure it is reasonable you should consider of it, and when you are agreed, then you may ask our Judgment.

L. C. J. We cannot put you to it to give a final Answer to bind the King: therefore let it stand as it is; we will consider of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, I'll demur immediately.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And we pray they may join in Demurrer immediately.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. If they do not mean it for Delay, now Mr. Attorney hath demurred, I suppose they will join Demurrer immediately.

[Then the Clerk of the Crown drew up a general Demurrer, which Mr. Attorney signed, and it was read in the Court by the Clerk of the Crown.]

Mr. Att. Gen. We pray they may join in Demurrer.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we that are assigned of Counsel for this Gentleman, the Prisoner at the Bar, (that your Lordship may be satisfied, and all that hear us, that we do not design or desire to delay one Minute in this Cause) do declare, that we will join in Demurrer with them immediately.

[Then the Clerk drew up the Joinder in Demurrer, which being signed by the four Gentlemen of Counsel with Mr. Fitz-Harris, was also read in Court.]

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I pray your Judgment; here is an Indictment for framing a treasonable Libel—

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we hope we shall not be put—

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, hear what I pray. My Lord, I desire your Judgment, that the Plea may stand over-ruled for a plain fatal Error in it. This is a particular Indictment for the framing a most pernicious scandalous Libel against the King and the Government, for Treason in that particular; and I think there is no Person does doubt, but that this is a Matter within the Jurisdiction of this Court to try: There is no Difficulty in that. What do they do to out this Jurisdiction? They come and plead, that Fitz-Harris was impeached de alta Proditione; that's all they plead of High-Treason in general, to out the Court of a Jurisdiction of a particular Treason, for framing a malicious traitorous Libel; and this is a particular Treason upon the Statute of the 13th of this King. Now they have pleaded no particular Treason upon that Statute they were impeach'd for, nor upon the Statute of the 25th of Edward III. which hath a general Clause of a declaratory Power, and it may be he was impeach'd upon that, and we shall not intend it otherwise, that being the general Law, the other but a particular Law for this King's Life. Now in all Pleas to the Jurisdiction, they ought to be the strictest and most certain of any Pleas whatsoever. And as I offered before to you, so I do now again, they ought to be ready with the Record to justify their Plea: but this in short I insist upon, that to out a Court of its Jurisdiction for a particular Treason, 'tis not a good Plea, by saying he was impeached or indicted generally of High-Treason, and no Averment can possibly help it. For it appears by the Impeachment 'tis not for the same, and 'tis rather to be intended that it was not; but the Impeachment being general, that they went upon a declaratory Power, in the Statute of the 25th of Edward III. which reserves to them the Power of declaring Treason at large, and not upon that which may be tried here in an inferior Court upon a particular Statute: I say, my Lord, they ought to have pleaded it certainly, which they having not done, 'tis fatal; and I pray your Judgment upon it: and I hope they are ready to make good their Plea.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, that which we do say to it, is, That this Plea is neither good in Matter nor Form; and if it had been pleaded never so formally, perhaps we would have demurred to it: but as now it is pleaded, it is not formal, and therefore we pray it may be over-ruled. The Exception, we take it in point of Form, we think is fatal; for there is no man that pleads an Indictment or an Impeachment in another Court, but must set forth the Indictment in the Plea, which is not done in this Case, and we take that to be fatal to it. For a Man that will plead auter foitz acquit, must set forth the Indictment, and all the Proceedings of the Court upon that Indictment; this is the constant pleading in all Cases, and particularly in Vaux's Case, the Fourth Report. Whoever will plead auter foitz acquit, must set forth the Record, before it will require an Answer to be given to it.

L. C. J. What do you say to it, Gentlemen, for the maintaining of our Plea?

Mr. Williams. This is that we say, my Lord: We hope your Lordship, and the Court, in this Case, will not tie us up presently to come and argue this Matter. One thing I would mention, because it hath been said there never was such a Precedent; I think, to this purpose, the Precedent of Elliot's Case is very full in it. Mr. Attorney is pleased to say, he never found that any Plea to the Jurisdiction did ever require a Demurrer, but was over-ruled or allowed by the Court presently; but that Case is plain to the contrary upon that very Matter: It was an Indictment brought against Elliot, for some Misdemeanors committed by him in the House of Commons; this being pleaded to the Jurisdiction of the Court, the Attorney-General at that time said it was not to be received; that was the Matter he insisted on then, that it should be rejected: but the Court did then, as you do now, over-rule the Attorney in it, and put him to demur.

L. C. J. We have done the same for you.

Mr. Williams. Then, my Lord, here is a Precedent that Mr. Attorney hath not seen: Now for Time, the Court in that Case did not tie Counsel up to argue the Plea presently, but gave them time till the next Term. We ask not so hard a thing of the Court, as so long a time in this Case, only here is a Man's Life in question; 'tis indeed for Treason, and so it is of consequence to the King; and there is also the Privilege of Parliament consequently concern'd in it. What time your Lordship and the Court shall think reasonable for us to be ready in, we leave it to your Lordship; we design not to delay at all, only we desire a reasonable time. Your Lordship did in the Case of Plunket give him time for his Trial till next Term, which is as high a Treason as this, I am sure.

L. C. J. You would have People think you have strange Measure in this Case, that you have not the same time given to you that was given to Plunket: Pray consider, you object these things as tho' the Court were hard upon you, to tie you up in point of time: Is your Case like Plunket's? Pray give us leave to clear our Accounts as we go along: He is brought from Ireland hither, is indicted for what he did in another Kingdom, and it is by Law he is so indicted indeed; but he being kept close Prisoner, and not knowing what time he should be brought to a Trial, he desires time to send for his Witnesses, who are to be brought over to clear him of the Treason. Could we in Justice deny it him, or could there be a shorter time than next Term, given him, when his Witnesses are in another Kingdom, and it would be a Fortnight or three Weeks before possibly he could have his Witnesses here? This I mention, because you will needs make use of such a Case, that is no more like yours, than any thing that is the farthest different from it; yet you will have the Case to measure with your Case.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I know it is in the Discretion of the Court; and as your Lordship did what was just for Plunket, so you will to this Person: I know you will do what is right to every body: We are Counsel assigned by your Lordship, and we doubt not but your Lordship will be just to us, and give us a reasonable time to argue it.

L. C. J. Look you by the way, Mr. Williams, I must tell you, when we assigned Counsel to Mr. Fitz-Harris, we expected that Counsel should consider the Plea, so as to be able to maintain it, when they come to plead it here; for that reason we gave him time to plead it, so as he would stand by it: What needed we else to have assigned him so much Counsel in such a Case as this is, but that he should be ready? And why you should now hope that we will give you a longer time for Argument in such a Case, I see not. Consider, whether in Discretion you think longer time ought to be expected upon such a Plea as this is?

Sir F. Win. My Lord, we will not take upon us to prescribe, nor to mention any time in particular, we leave that to the Discretion and Judgment of the Court; but this, I think, we may pray, according to the Duty we owe to our Client, upon your Lordship's assigning us of Counsel. We could not foresee till to-day, what the King's Counsel would do; whether Mr. Attorney would take Issue upon us of null tiel Record, or upon any of our Averments. We could not foresee whether he would demur to us, or not. I know your Lordship will be as favourable to us as you can; not having those Papers, or Sight of those Records that were necessary, and would have expedited this Matter, our time was all spent in forming of the Plea, and we could not prepare particular Matter in Law to defend it. We are as ready as can be expected, and we have been as industrious to prevent any Delay, as any Persons could be in our Condition; therefore, it may be, we have had a general Consideration of the Plea: But now we see where the Doubts do lie upon it; 'tis a Matter of Law pleaded to the Jurisdiction of the Court. I do not indeed love to cite Precedents upon what is plain; but withal, I do not love to say things upon a sudden are plain without Consideration: but this I will say, as 'tis now upon this Demurrer joined, it is a Case well worth our taking care of, and yours too; I must say it with your Lordship's leave. Therefore, if in the Case of my Lord Hollis, which was but upon an Information, and that but for a Misdemeanor, and tho' it was a Plea directly to the Jurisdiction of the Court, and certainly they came prepar'd; for they were all at liberty, and had resort to all Papers and Books before the Plea pleaded, which we could not have; yet the Court was pleased to assign them time, and give them a large time, I hope we shall have some reasonable time. I do not speak it, that we should have so long time; but I humbly beseech your Lordship, that we may do our Duty to the Court, and to our Client, that we may have a little time. It is true, it is a great and a horrid Treason; but it is as true, here is the Life of a Man concerned in it: we affect not delay at all, but hope you will not deny us what time is reasonable.

L. C. J. Look you, Ill tell you; you might, if you had pleased, have entitied yourselves better to have had time to speak to the Plea, if you had pleaded over to the Treason; then we could have given you time to have spoken to it, and not delay'd the King at all: but you have thought fit not to plead over. I must confess, I did expect you would have pleaded over, as you might have done, and I thought you would; therefore having not done it, it is in our Consideration, whether we will give you time, and what time we will give you.

Mr. Wallop. It is under your Lordship's Favour, according to the usual Course of modern Practice. I have been an unprofitable Attendant here near forty Years, and, for my part, I did never yet see so swift a Proceeding as this is now; it is as swift as Lightning. It is a very extraordinary thing; we might well conceive, that nothing more should be expected from us than what is usual, and that we should not be put out of the ordinary Proceedings. Anciently indeed, as your Lordship did observe the other Day, they pleaded Ore tenus, and then the Proceedings were very quick: now indeed it is otherwise; modern, and what we may call ancient Practice too, hath made an Alteration from that Method: and we humbly pray we may not proceed, but according to the rate of modern Practice. My Lord, whereas they are pleased to call it a frivolous Plea, I believe it is a Plea of the greatest

Import

Import that ever these Gentlemen came here about, whatsoever they are pleased to say. But your Lordship knows the Life of a Man is the greatest Favourite in Law; and that to be a most ancient and wise Rule, De morte hominis nulla est cunctatio longa. And since we could not reasonably expect to be thought to come provided in this Case, we humbly pray, that your Lordship will allot us such a reasonable Time as your Lordship shall think fit.

L. C. J. Come, let me propose this to you, Will you plead over?

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I will give you an Answer to that, We cannot do it. When we were together, we did consider, whether if we should plead over, it would not destroy the Plea, and we were of Opinion that it would destroy the Plea: We cannot plead over, but we give up the Jurisdiction. It is as indifferent and light to me, as any Body, to be forced to argue it now; but as to the Matter of it, I believe no Body can say they ever saw many Instances of the like Nature: Therefore, pray, my Lord, let us not go on so hastily with it, for we could not foresee, what since we know, how it would be with us. I did not think they would have demurred; but now 'tis come to that, we must make the best of it. We have pleaded this Plea; if you will not be pleased to give us Leave and Time to be prepared to argue it, you must take it as we are able, since we can't have time to make ourselves able.

L. C. J. Certainly, Mr. Pollexfen, in favorem vite, it would not hurt the Plea to plead over.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if your Lordship pleases to favour me a Word in this Case; I hear several things urged, particularly instancing in modern Practice. If that Gentleman will shew that in any Case the King and the Court were so indulgent to give four Days to plead to the Jurisdiction of the Court, then he will shew me something of modern Practice, which I know not; but if that Gentleman will remember modern Practice in a great Nobleman's Case, for whom he was of Counsel, it was told him, if he would debate the Point of Law, he must do it presently: They never would give him time to prepare for his Argument, there was no such modern Practice then. I would desire him to give me one Instance, that when Gentlemen are assigned of Counsel to plead a Matter to the Jurisdiction, and deal so with the King's Counsel as they have dealt with us, not to let us see the Plea till now; the modern Practice hath been to give them any Time. For them to say, that they could not foresee what we would be at; could they not foresee the Points of Law? Could they not foresee a plain Case? But they do not take off the great Matter, that he that doth plead to the Jurisdiction, ought to have the Record ready in his Hand; but, my Lord, we lay our Thumb upon that which is our Exception; they have pleaded no Impeachment of any Crime, that can appear to be the same with that for which they are indicted, that is the Point. Is there such Difficulty? Did not these learned Gentlemen think? Could they not foresee that we should look into their Plea, that it should be legal? Therefore I did, and do pray your Judgment. If they had pleaded, and set forth the Record truly, as it is, and as it ought to be set forth, in case they would have any Benefit by it, we would have given them another Answer; but if it be done purposely, as it is done with Artifice, I am bold to say, for these Gentlemen know how to plead a Record as it ought to be, and how this ought to be pleaded to, to out the Court of a Jurisdiction of a particular Crime. They say, the Life of a Man is concerned, and so is the Peace of the Kingdom concerned too, in the Life of as great a Traitor as ever was tried in Westminster-Hall. For if his Treason had taken Effect, certainly the Kingdom had been very near embroiled in Civil Wars by this Time; therefore the whole Peace of the Kingdom depends upon his Life, and it depends upon the clearing of the whole Matter. And I challenge them again, if they can shew me any Instance of the like Nature. That of Eliot's Case that was mentioned, it was an Information; and to Pleas upon Informations there have been Demurrers, but to Indictments found by twelve Men, we do not meet with any Demurrer any where to a Plea to the Jurisdiction. But I pray your Judgment, that he may plead in Chief; for 'tis but a Respondens ouster, and if these Gentlemen desire to take Time, I hope you will not delay the King by giving Countenance to such a plain imperfect Plea; for those high Matters they talk of, that will be the Consequence, they can never come in Question upon this Plea.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I have but one short Word to that which is now in Question. Our Exceptions to the Plea we offered and opened before; the Question is now, whether they shall have time to argue this Plea? And the Arguments they use for longer time, is, the Life of a Man, and they could not be prepared on a sudden, because they knew not what we would do. For the hasty Proceedings that have been in this Case, which they clamour of, I think they have little Reason to speak so, since that hath been done in this Case that never was done in any other. He hath had three Days Time to consider, whether he will plead to the Jurisdiction of the Court, which never was done to any, and so great a Favour, that he is scarce entitled to any farther Favour. Does any Man believe that they are not prepared? Do not Gentlemen, when they consider of a Plea, consider upon what Grounds they plead? And does not that let them into the whole Matter, where the weak Parts of the Plea are, and what may be objected against it? I am sure that these Gentlemen are of that Consideration, that no Man does believe they would put in this or any Plea, without having considered beforehand what to do. And then, when they have put in a Plea upon great Consideration, no Man is to think that they are unready to maintain it. Our Exception is short, and they do but talk in general Terms that they are unprepared; and they have no Reason to expect this Kindness from the Court, especially since they used Mr. Attorney at this Rate: They gave him not the Plea, but only a Note to tell him they would do that which they said four Days before, and no more. If they had done regularly, they should have brought Mr. Attorney the Plea, and left a Copy with him, and desired him to consider of it. But we do not pretend we are surprized for all this Usage, we see the Plea here, and we see the Faults of it, and we have demurred to it, and tell them our Exception; sure they are better prepared than 'tis possible for the King to be, yet we are ready; and we hope you will grant them no longer Time.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Will your Lordship be pleased to spare me one Word: I wonder at what Mr. Wallop seems now to urge concerning the Life of a Man that is concerned in this Case; 'tis true, the Life of a Man is concerned, which is a dear Thing to the Law; but certainly the Life of the Government is more dear to the Government, and all Courts of Justice, than the Life of any one single Person: And I am sure this one Person hath done as much as in him lies to strike at the Life of the Government, in case this be true that is laid to his Charge. Now to make this Case like to Phaulkon's the other Day, is strange: I think your Lordship hath given an Account of that: For both he pleaded to the Fact, Not Guilty, as Plunket did: We that are of the King's Counsel would in common Charity hope, that he is not guilty; but I am sure, if he be guilty, no Englishman can think that he deserves to live: Why then should we be so fond of a Man's Life, that hath been guilty of such a Fact as this? For Example Sake; surely if that be the Thing in Question, we ought to have speedy Justice executed upon a Man that deserves no Mercy. Your Lordship was pleased to take Notice of another Circumstance in the Case of Plunket: He was indicted, he was arraigned, and was to have had his Trial in Ireland, and was to fetch his Witnesses from thence; all these Things were in that Case. He desired Time to consider what he should plead; but your Lordship finding an Indictment found against him, according to the Rules of Justice, over-ruled that Matter he suggested, and made him plead Not Guilty, before ever you admitted him to debate any thing of that Fact. And then it appearing to your Lordship to be in another Kingdom, and that it was impossible, in regard of the Hazards of the Winds and Seas, to get over his Witnesses in a little Time, your Lordship gave him Time; but you gave him as strait a Time as could be consistent with the Rules of Justice, and as his Case would bear. Now, my Lord, this being offered in a Case of that Expectation which the Case before you seems to have, we desire the Dispatch of it as much as we can. In case the Man be innocent, God forbid but he should be acquitted; but if he be guilty, God forbid he should live a Minute.

L. C. J. Surely you don't take the Case, Gentlemen, to be a Case of so much Difficulty, as to deserve long Consideration; we did expect truly, that you would have been ready to have maintained your plea.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we do not desire any long time; be pleased to give us a Day, or two, or three, as you please.

L. C. J. 'Tis said, 'tis in a Case wherein the Life of a Man is concerned; 'tis true, here is the Life of a Man, of whom, till he be found guilty, we ought to have Consideration, as we would of any other whatsoever: For we have no Reason to conclude him guilty till we hear him, and we are to be indifferent till we hear the Evidence; therefore, notwithstanding the Indictment, we ought to weigh his Life as we would another Man's, till he be found guilty. We in ourselves do not see there is any so great Matter of Necessity for Time to consider of this Case; yet I must tell you, since they pray it, Mr. Attorney, we are inclinable to give them a Day or two's Time to consider of it, and see what they can say to maintain this Plea. But then, Gentlemen, if we do so, you must take Notice we will call you to plead presently after our Judgment upon the Plea.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we have nothing to do with the Fact of this Case; we are only to speak to the Plea.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. Pray how then is your Life in Question upon the Decision of this Plea?

L. C. J. Brother, they do not speak as to this Plea, that it hazards his Life, but the subjecta materia, upon the Decision of it, supposing Judgment be against the Plea. Therefore, Mr. Attorney, we do think fit to give him till Friday Morning, and that he shall be brought hither then again by the Lieutenant of the Tower; then we will hear these Gentlemen: And if they do not shew us any considerable Matter to maintain the Plea, they must expect Judgment presently.

Mr. Att. Gen. That certainly will be too long a Time; pray, my Lord, they ought to have been ready now: If they will be pleased to be ready To-morrow Morning, I pray it may go off to no farther time.

Mr. Just. Jones. There is a Necessity, my Lord, I think that it should be so; for there is a long Trial at the Bar here on Friday.

Mr. Williams. That is a very short Time, indeed.

Mr. Just. Jones. You must be ready To-morrow Morning.

Mr. Williams. Unless, my Lord, you will give us a little more Time, you had as good give us no Time.

L. C. J. It seems the Business of the Court is such, on Friday Morning you can't be heard.

Mr. Just. Jones. Either it must be To-morrow Morning or Saturday, and that is Exchequer-Chamber Day.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I believe they are not in Haste.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, We would give them a reasonable Time; but yet we would do nothing that might make unnecessary Delays in this Case.

Mr. Att. Gen. I pray, my Lord, let it be no longer than till To-morrow, and that is more than ever was given in such a Case. I know it was deny'd in my Lord Stafford's Case; they would not give the Counsel any Time, but would make them argue presently.

L. C. J. As to that, Mr. Attorney, every Case stands upon its own Bottom.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, we have your Direction for To-morrow Morning.

Sir Fr. Win. No, no, my Lord, we hope not so.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, to accommodate you, the Court does think fit thus to do: We will be here on Saturday by Seven o'Clock in the Morning. On Friday we can do nothing, for there is a long Trial at Bar that will take up our Time; but on Saturday we will be here by Eight o'Clock sitting, and expect you to be here by that Time: And we cannot afford you then long time to argue in, because it is an Exchequer-Chamber Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. If Judgment be against the Plea, they must plead presently then, that we may not lose the Term for a Trial.

L. C. J. You must take Notice of that, by the Rules of the Court they must do it, Mr. Attorney. If our Judgment be against them, the Course of the Court is so, we can't rule it one way or other.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But then they ought not to pretend they have no Notice, their Witnesses are out of the Way, and so hinder the Trial.

Mr. Just. Jones. No, No.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I desire I may have these Lords come to me; my Lord of Essex, my Lord Salisbury, my Lord Mayor, your Lordship, and Sir Robert Clayton, to perfect my Discovery. I have something to discover to your Lordship and them.

L. C. J. Your Discovery of what, do you mean?

Mr. Fitz-Harris. Of the Plot, and of the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey.

L. C. J. We did examine you about the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. Your Lordship went away in Haste, before I had told all I could say.

L. C. J. We asked you ten times, whether you had any more to say, and you said, No.

Mr. Fitz-

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I was in Confusion and Consternation; I scarce knew what your Lordship said to me.

L. C. J. We were not in haste; we asked you often that Question.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. It was haste to me, because I was not provided of the Questions you asked me.

Mr. Just. Dabben. To some of the Questions we asked you, you answered readily and freely; but to some we could not get a positive Answer by any means.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he told me he was not in England then, and that he knew no more than what he had discovered.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. Did I say so, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, you are the Man.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. I can bring twenty Witnesses, I did not tell you so; and I can bring 500 Witnesses, that I was in Town then.

L. C. J. Lieutenant of the Tower, take your Prisoner, and be here before eight o'Clock on Saturday Morning.

Sir Fran. Win. My Lord, now I desire we may have a Copy of the whole Record.

L. C. J. Not of the Indictment, but of the Plea and Demurrer you may.

Sir Fran. Win. But, my Lord, I hope you will let the Indictment be read upon Saturday, because Mr. Attorney had fixed his Exception upon part of the Indictment, which is the Libel that he calls the particular Treason, and I desire it may be in Court.

L. C. J. It shall be, and if you have any occasion of Reference to it, we will look upon it; we are all upon our Oaths, and must take heed that no Prejudice be done to the King, as well as to see the Prisoner have no unfair thing put upon him.

[Then the Prisoner was carried back to the Tower.]

On Saturday the 7th of May, 1681, Mr. Fitz-Harris was brought to the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench, about eight of the Clock in the Morning.

Mr. Williams. MAY it please your Lordship, I am assigned of Council for this Person, Mr. Fitz-Harris, the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if you please, I will only briefly acquaint them with what our Exceptions are, that they may apply themselves to them.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, I must tell you all our Time is strait enough for this Matter, for we are all of us to be by and by with all the Judges in the Exchequer-Chamber; therefore we pray this of you, we will abridge no Man's speaking what is material for his Client, but we desire you will keep to the Matter, and the Points in Question between you, and save our Time as much as you can.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is the reason, my Lord, why I would lay my Finger upon those Points that will be the Questions between us. Now the Exceptions I take to the Plea are these: This is a Plea to the Jurisdiction of the Court, and some of our Exceptions are to the Form, and one is to the Matter. To the Form, my Exceptions are these: First, We say that the general Allegation that he was impeached de Alta Proditione is uncertain, and too general; it ought to have been particularly set out, that the Court might judge, whether it be the same Crime, and it is not helped by the Averment. And the next Exception I take to it, is, here is no Impeachment alledged to be upon Record: I mentioned this the last time, and looking more strictly into it, I find it is so as I said: For they come and make a general Allegation, that Fitz-Harris, such a time, was impeached, Impetitus fuit, by the Commons before the Lords, Quæ quidem impetitus in pleno robore existit, prout per Recordum inde, &c. Now, my Lord, there is no Impeachment mentioned before: And quæ quidem Impetitus is a relative Clause, and if there be no Impeachment mentioned before in the Plea, then there is nothing averred upon the Record, to be continued or discontinued; for Impetitus does not actively signify the impeaching, or passively the Person impeached, but it signifies the Indictment or Impeachment, that Instrument which contains the Accusation, and which is to be and remain upon Record. Therefore, when they come and say he was impeached, and afterwards alledged, Quæ quidem Impetitus remains upon Record, that cannot be good. If a Plea should be Indictatus fuit, and afterwards they say quod quidem Indictamentum, &c. it cannot be good, for the Relative there is only illusive. These are our Exceptions to the Form. For the Matter of it, it is a Plea to the Jurisdiction of the Court; and, with Submission, there the Point will be, whether a Suit depending, even in a superior Court, can take away the Jurisdiction of an inferior Court, who had an original Jurisdiction of the Cause, of the Person, and of the Fact, at the time of the Fact committed. What Use might be made of it, as a Plea in Bar, might be of another Consideration; but whether this be enough to make it amount to such a Plea, as will take away the Jurisdiction of a Court, that had an original Jurisdiction, that is the Question before you. These are the Exceptions I take, and do insist upon: And I desire, my Lord, the Counsel will apply themselves to these Exceptions, to answer them; and when we have heard what they can say, I hope to give them an Answer.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I am assigned of Counsel for the Prisoner at the Bar, Edward Fitz-Harris, who is indicted here for High-Treason, and hath pleaded a special Plea to the Jurisdiction of the Court: And I must crave leave to state his Case upon the Indictment, the Plea to the Indictment, and the Demurrer to the Plea. And the Case, my Lord, upon the whole Record stands thus: He was indicted this Term, by one of the Grand Juries for this County, of High-Treason. As to the Indictment, it cannot be expected I should state the Parts of it, it being an Indictment I never saw. To this Indictment thus presented, Fitz-Harris hath pleaded thus: That he ought not to be compelled to answer to this Indictment, because that before the Indictment was found, at a Parliament he ldat Oxford the 21st of March last, he was impeached by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses of the House of Commons in Parliament assembled, in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of England, of High-Treason; and that this was before the Court of Lords in that Parliament. He says farther, that this Impeachment is remaining in full Force and Effect before the Lords in Parliament, prout per Recordum inde int' Record. Parliamenti remanens plenius liquet & apparet. These are the Words of the Plea: And then he avers, that the High-Treason mentioned in the Indictment, and the High-Treason specified in the Impeachment, are one and the same: And he further avers, that he is the same Fitz-Harris named in that Indictment, and mentioned in the Impeachment. And after the Averments, he concludes, to the Jurisdiction of the Court; whether upon all this Matter, they will proceed any farther against him upon this Indictment; and demands the Judgment of the Court to that Purpose.

Upon this Plea, Mr. Attorney hath demurred generally, and we that are of Counsel for the Prisoner have joined in Demurrer with him. Now in this Case which thus comes before you, for your Judgment upon this Plea and this Demurrer, I take these Things to be admitted.

First, That the Prisoner stands impeached, by the Commons of England in Parliament assembled, of High-Treason. Secondly, That the Impeachment thus made by the Commons, in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of England, before the Lords in Parliament, for Treason, is now in being. Thirdly, which I omitted in the opening of the Plea, that this was done secund. Legem, & Cons. Parliamenti; and being so, remains in plenis suis Robore & Effectu. And more particularly this Plea does refer to the Record, for the Parts and Circumstances of the Impeachment, prout patet per Record. inde inter, &c. So that it does refer the Impeachment itself to the Record, and tells you this is among the other Records of that Parliament: all this is admitted by the Plea. Fourthly, And moreover, that this Treason, for which he stands impeached before the Lords, and the Treason for which he stands indicted before this Court, are one and the same Treason, and no way diverse; and so they are the same numerical Thing, and there is no manner of difference: And that this Person Fitz-Harris, now indicted, and the Fitz-Harris impeached, are one and the same Person, and no way diverse. And withal, my Lord, it appears plainly upon the Record, that this Impeachment was depending before; the Indictment found for the Parliament was the 21st of March, and it appears by the Record this is only an Indictment of this Term. And another Thing I must intreat you to observe, my Lord, it does not appear but that this Parliament is still in being, for any thing to the contrary in the Record, and as I take the Case, then it must be admitted so to be.

So then, I take the Plea to be in Substance thus, though Mr. Attorney was pleased to except to both the Substance and the Form; but in Substance the Case is thus: Here is a Person impeached in Parliament, by the Commons in Parliament, for High-Treason, before the Lords in Parliament, and for aught appears that Parliament still in being, and this Impeachment still depending; then here is an Indictment for that very Treason: whether your Lordship now will think fit in this Court to proceed upon that Indictment, is the Substance of the Case. I shall speak to the Form by and by.

My Lord, By the way I think it will not be denied, but that the Commons in Parliament may impeach any Commoner of Treason before the Lords in Parliament; I take that to be admitted. And I do not find that Mr. Attorney denies it, or makes any doubt of that; for I think that was the Case of Tresilian and Belknap, who were impeached in Parliament by the Commons before the Lords: I am sure my Lord Chief Justice Vaughan does, in his Reports in Bushe's Case, say so; and upon that Impeachment of the Commons, one of them was executed, and the other banished, in Parliament. My Lord, I cite it not merrily, but I cite it as Authority. Indeed I do not go so far as to cite the Parliament Roll, it was in the Time of Richard II. I have not seen the Roll of late truly, but I am sure it is upon the Roll, and there it is to be found.

Since then Impeachments of Commoners will lie in Parliament, here then, my Lord, will be the Question, Whether this Court may proceed upon an Indictment for the same Offence the Parliament was for? And here I shall distinguish upon Mr. Attorney: He does allow the Parliament to be a superior Court; but admitting that, he says, though it be so; yet the inferior Court having original Jurisdiction of the Person and the Cause, it may proceed notwithstanding an Indictment in the superior Court; and, ergo, he does infer that this Court may proceed upon an Indictment, notwithstanding an Impeachment in Parliament.

My Lord, I will compare a little the Case of an Indictment and an Impeachment, and shew how manifestly they differ. I do take the Case of an Impeachment not to be the Case of an Indictment, and so the Principle that Mr. Attorney hath taken is wrong, and the Ground of that Argument wrong. I cannot say it is like the Case of an Appeal, but I may say the Case of an Appeal is like the Case of an Impeachment. For in an Appeal of Murder, though the Indictment be capital, and the same that is given upon Criminals prosecuted for the King, yet it is at the Suit of the Party, as in this Case it is at the Suit of the Commons; and so it is an Intimation of, and analogical to, and bears the Resemblance of an Impeachment in Parliament; I will not compare an Impeachment to an Appeal, but I will say an Appeal imitates an Impeachment. And it is as plain as can be, because Appeals are proper to Courts in Westminster-Hall, and it is at the Suit of the Party, the Prosecution and all the Process is ad instantiam partis; so is an Impeachment at the Suit of the Commons. An Indictment is found upon the Presentment of a Grand Jury, who are sworn ad inquirendum pro Domino Rege pro Corpore Com. and it is a Mistake in the Form, when it is said & pro Corpore Com. for it is not for the King and the Body of the County, but for the King for the Body of the County. But now an Impeachment in Parliament is otherwise; it is not in the Name of the King, but in the Name of the Commons in Parliament, and of all the Commons in England, wherein it suits with an Appeal, which is at the Suit of the Party; so that it is like an Appeal, and not like an Indictment: An Indictment is for the King, an Impeachment for the People. And as it is in its Nature and Constitution different, so it is in the Prosecution also, for that is by the Commons of England, they are the Prosecutors in effect; but now in all Indictments they are prosecuted always by the King's Attorney, or by some Person in the Name of the King. We are now arguing upon the Methods and Forms of Parliament, therefore I must crave leave to insist upon those Methods more particularly. The Commons they bring up the Impeachment to the Lords, the Commons they prosecute the Impeachment, they manage the Evidence upon the Trial; and when the Lords have considered of it, and have found the Fact, the Commons come and demand Judgment, and Judgment is given at the Prayer of the Commons, and no otherwise, and there are no Proceedings by the Attorneys. Indeed there have been Attempts by Attorneys to prosecute Persons in Parliament, by exhibiting Informations in the Parliament; but what Success they have had, I leave to them to consider that are concerned, and have read the Rolls of Parliament. But it is not safe to alter the old Ways of Parliament, therefore I take it under Correction, that it is out of the Road of Comparisons, when they will compare an Indictment and an Impeachment together; for they do not agree, but differ extremely.

I would then offer you some Reasons why this Court ought not to proceed upon this Indictment. I take it, it does not become the Justice of this Court to weaken the Methods of Proceedings in Parliament, as this Court will certainly do: For if you will admit this to be the Course that I have opened, your Proceedings will alter it. When there is an Impeachment depending in Parliament for Treason, if your Lordship will admit there may be an Indictment here afterwards in this Court, and Proceedings in this Court upon that Indictment, it is to alter the Method of Parliament Proceedings, and to subject the Method of their Proceedings there to the Proceedings of this Court; and what the Mischief of that will be, I must leave to your Lordship. As I opened it before, the Methods of both Courts are different, and their Proceedings very much vary, I think, I need not trouble your Lordship with that; we all know it very well in the main. Indictments in this Court are to be tried by a Jury, where a Verdict must be given presently: There is but very little Time for giving the Evidence, or for making Observations for the Crown, or for the Publick; and in order to bring it to the Trial, there must be an immediate Plea of Guilty, or Not Guilty. Now if the Proceedings of Parliament were so sudden, there might be a great Surprise, and great Offenders pass unpunished, because the Prosecutors had not greater Time to inspect the Records that might be of avail in the Case: Therefore in Parliament it is quite otherwise; there is Time for Deliberation and Consideration, there are many References, and many Examinations, which are Matters of Deliberation and Consideration, which take up a great deal of Time; but here you are straitened not only in Time, but bound up to strict Rules, and so are straitened in your Methods and Forms of Proceedings, as Mr. Attorney would here tie us up to the Forms of little Courts: But it is not fit that the Justice of the Kingdom, and High Court of Parliament, should be cramped by the Methods of an inferior Court, and a Jury. So you will then subject the Methods of Proceedings in Parliament to the Courts in Westminster-Hall, and what the Consequence of that will be, is worth the Consideration.

Another Reason I would humbly offer, is this, my Lord: The Parliament is the Supreme Court certainly, and this Court is every way inferior to it, and it will be strange that that Supreme Court should be hindered by an inferior: For the highest Court is always supposed to be the wisest; the Commons of England in Parliament are supposed to be a greater and a wiser Body than a Grand Jury of any one County. The Peers, who are the Judges in that Court, are supposed to be the wisest Judges, as the Commons the wisest Inquest. Will the Law of England now suffer an Examination, Impeachment and Prosecution for Treason, to be taken out of the Hands of the greatest and wisest Inquest in England? And will the Law of England suffer the Judicature upon this Prosecution to be taken out of the Hands of the wisest and greatest Judicature, and put it into the Power of a smaller Number of Judges, or of an inferior Jury? I do think it does not stand, my Lord, with the Wisdom of the Government.

Another Thing is this, my Lord, the common Argument in any extraordinary Case, there is no Precedent for this Way of proceeding; it is my Lord Coke's Argument in his Comment upon Littleton, Fol. 108. and in the 4th Inst. Fol. 17. in his Comment upon the High Court of Parliament. And he takes occasion to speak it upon the Account of that Precedent, the Case of the Indictment against the Bishop of Winchester, and of that against Mr. Plowden; and he says, This was never practised before; therefore it ought not to be: So he infers, and puts a black Mark upon it, by saying it is a dangerous Attempt for inferior Courts to alter or meddle with the Law of Parliaments. For the Words I refer myself to the Book, I dare not venture to repeat them upon my Memory. So in this Case, in regard that it never was done from the Beginning of the World till now, the 33d Year of this King, I may say, it being without Precedent, there is no Law for it.

My Lord, there is another Mischief that will certainly follow upon this, and that too runs upon this Comparison of an Appeal and of an Indictment. In the Case of an Indictment, it is in the Power of the Prince to pardon that Indictment, to pardon the Punishment, and to pardon the Offence; but in case of an Impeachment, I take it to be otherwise, as it is in the Case of an Appeal. And, my Lord, if your Lordship will take this Case out of the Power of the Parliament, and bring it into this Court, where the Offence may be pardoned, you do by that Means subject that Offence, and that Method of Proceedings, which would make it, without Consent of the Party prosecuting, not pardonable by Law, to a Pardon: And this may be of dangerous Consequence to the Publick, that Crimes that are heinous and great in themselves, mighty bulky Crimes, fit for the Consideration of a Parliament, be they never so great, never so dangerous to the Government, yet should, by giving this Court a Jurisdiction, and possessing it of these Causes, expose them to the Will of the Prince; and so those Crimes, which are unpardonable by Methods of Proceedings in Parliament, would become pardonable by Prosecution in this Court.

Now, my Lord, for my Authority, that Impeachments are not pardonable, I would only hint a little to compare it to the Case of an Appeal, as Pawyn and Corbet's Case in 3 Croke, Hill. 38 Eliz. fol. 464. There was an Appeal of Murder; upon which he is found guilty of Manslaughter, and not guilty of the Murder. Then there was a Pardon pleaded of the Burning in the Hand, or of the Punishment: It is not plain in the Book, whether the Pardon was after the Verdict, or before (that I cannot be clear in); but however, there was a Question whether the Queen could pardon the Burning in the Hand; however, it was there allowed: But there was an Exception, my Lord Coke, who was then Attorney-General, took, that the King could not pardon, if it had been an Appeal of Homicide; and he concurred with the Court in that Opinion. But that Appeal being for Murder, and the Verdict of Manslaughter, they passed over the Question, for this Reason that I have mentioned, That the Appeal was not for Manslaughter, it was for Murder; and if he had been found guilty of the Murder, it was not in the Power of the King to pardon him, it being at the Suit of the Party: So the Opinion of that Book is, and of the then Attorney-General.

Thus I have stated the Thing, and the Consequences of it, and it is not fit for me to dwell upon it: You will consider of it, I am sure.

Another Thing I would say, is this: If your Lordship should meddle with this Way of Proceeding, it will invert the Law in another Thing; for it is a Principle with us, That no Man's Life is to be put twice in Danger for one and the same Thing. I will then put the Case thus: If your Lordship should proceed upon this Indictment, and this Person should be acquitted upon it, I am in your Lordship's Judgment whether that Acquittal will bind the Lords in Parliament; if that will not bind them, but they may still proceed on the Impeachment, then you invade that common Right which every Englishman by the Law ought to have preserved to him, that no Person ought twice to be brought in question for one and the same Thing. And so, my Lord, you make a Man to run the Risk of his Life twice, by indicting him in this Court, where, though he be acquitted, he may be called to an account again, if the Law be so. And if the Lords in Parliament should be of Opinion, for they are the Judges of that Case, that the Acquittal will not be binding to them, then a Man's Life is brought in question twice upon the same Account.

My Lord, I now come to this, the Time, how unreasonable a Thing it is, and how dangerous to the Government: I take it to be a critical Thing now at this Time to make such Attempts as these are. There are Lords now that lie under Impeachments of Treason, the highest Treason, I think, that ever was contrived; and upon this Impeachment one Lord hath been convicted and executed. Suppose upon the Dissolution of that Parliament that impeached the late Lord Stafford, there had been an Indictment against him for one and the same Treason: And by the same Reason that this Court may proceed, his Majesty may appoint a High Steward to try by a Jury of Peers. For the Court held before the High Steward, is as much a Court as any Court in the Kingdom, except that of Parliament. I say, suppose the King had appointed a High Steward, and that Lord High Steward had proceeded against my Lord Stafford, I think my Lord Stafford had been alive at this Day. For in the Case of Treason your Lordship knows there must be two Witnesses; and I am sure there came in fresh Testimony against my Lord Stafford after the second Parliament after the Impeachment. I appeal to those noble Lords that are here, if it were not so; and had it not been for that fresh Testimony that came in afterwards, possibly my Lord Stafford might have been alive at this Time. And the Lords in Parliament, as I have observed in the Beginning, when they find an high Crime before them, when they find such a general contagious Design to subvert the Government, and yet they cannot come to cut off the principal Agents in this Design, because perhaps there may not be two Witnesses in strictness of Law at the first, it is the Wisdom of a Parliament to deliberate and to take Time. The good Queen was used to say, Truth was the Daughter of Time, and Time would produce Truth, Veritas filia temporis. If then there had been any such hasty Proceedings, as in this Case, I doubt my Lord Stafford had been now alive. Now then for these Lords that are now in the Tower, if your Lordships do go on in this Way, do you not open such a Gap, as may be a Ground to deliver them by the same Justice (I speak it under Correction here, and I only offer it to your Judgment, for I have not had many Hours to consider of it; but your Lordship will think well of it before you give any Judgment) by the same Justice the other Lords may be tried by another Court? This I offer in point of Reason, that this Proceeding will be very hard, and is an imprudent Thing, if not an illegal Proceeding. My Lord, I am sure it will have this Effect, it will stir up a Question between the Jurisdiction of this Court and the Court of Parliament: For in all Probability, if this Person should be acquitted, the Commons and the Lords will look into it. They are a Court that make a Survey of the Proceedings of all other Courts; and they will examine this Proceeding, or at least may do. And if he be found guilty, here is the Power of the Commons in Impeaching, and the Jurisdiction of the Lords in Trial and Judgment, taken away by an inferior Court to them, and so stir a Question between this Court and that highest of Courts, the Parliament. And what will be the Consequence of that? The Judgment of that Question will be in the Superior Court, for there is no middle Court between this Court and the Parliament to judge of it; therefore I submit it to your Lordships.

These are the Things which I offer to your Lordship in point of Reason, whereof some go to the Prudence of the Thing, some to the Reason, and some to the ill Consequences that may happen upon it, and I think many to the Illegality of the Act. And now this being said in the general, I come to the particular Exceptions made by Mr. Attorney as to the Form of our Plea.

He was pleased to say, that this Plea was a plain frivolous Plea, which is his Exception in general; and he gave you three Reasons for it at first, and does now insist upon the same for Substance.

One was this, and he insisted upon it at this Time, This Plea does not set forth any Record of an Impeachment, nor the particular Matter of it, so as this Court may judge of the Reason of it; for he compares it to the Case of a Plea of autre foitz acquit. If a Man hath been indicted and acquitted, he may plead it in another Court that hath Jurisdiction of the Cause, if he be again indicted for the same Matter: But, my Lord, first of all, I take this Plea to be well pleaded in Form; and, in the second Place, if there be any Informality or Defect (which I do not take it that there is, but if there were any such Thing), I take it it is of another Consideration, which the Court will deliberate before they give their Judgment on.

But I say in the first Place, I take it to be a very good Plea, and that it is good according to the Pleading of autre foitz acquit. In pleading of a general Act of Parliament, we need not set forth the Act, but refer to the Record; and that will depend upon the Method of Impeachments in Parliament, which I am of Opinion, being the general Law of Parliaments, this Court ought to take Cognizance of. In the Case of autre foitz acquit, there is first an Indictment proceeding of the Court upon the Plea, a fair Trial, and a fair Acquittal, and a Record of all this Matter. If now this Person comes to be indicted again for the same Offence, there is a Record for him to plead that will shew forth the whole Matter; and if he does not plead that Record, 'tis his own Default.

But in this Case here is no such Record to plead, and there is the Mistake upon which Mr. Attorney has gone all along. And you must in this Case be governed by the Rule and Method of Parliament, which is this: The Commons, in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of England, impeach such a Person, and they bring up this Impeachment to the Lords in general, and there they have Liberty to present Articles in due Time, after due Consideration, which ought not to be done hastily. All this is no Record, such as may be had in the Case of auter foitz acquit: For first, the Impeachment of the Commons is no Record; when 'tis brought up to the Lords, there is only an Entry into the Journal of the Lords, that such a Day such a Person came from the House of Commons, and impeach'd such a one. And you are not to expect the same strict Method, and Form of Proceeding, as in other Courts, the Courts in Westminster-Hall, or inferior Courts. Your Lordship in this Case must be govern'd by such Proceeding as is in Parliament, and must take it as it is; and we have said enough, and as much as can be in our Case. We have not indeed set forth an Indictment, a Plea, a Venire facias, &c. for there is no such Proceeding in Parliament; but there was an Impeachment by the Commons, in the Name of themselves and of all the Commons of England, before the Lords, that it is in pleno robore & effectu, and that it was secundum legem & consuetudinem Parliamenti, prout patet inde inter Record remanen. &c. And here is enough. For when we refer you to a Record, that is as much as if we had set forth the Record itself; for we tell you there is such a Record, and we point you to the Place where you may find it. So we take it, 'tis a very full Plea; and if not, 'tis as much as any Man can plead in such a Case, though it be not pleaded particularly.

And, my Lord, that your Lordship is to judge in this Case according to the Methods of Parliament, I depend upon the Authority of my Lord Coke; I will repeat you some of his Words: Speaking of the Law of Parliaments, he says, and he borrow'd it out of Fleta, That this High Court of Parliament propriis suis Legibus & Consuetudinibus subsistit. Et ista lex ab omnibus querenda, à multis ignorata, & à paucis cognita. But he tells you, and certainly he says true in it, Whoever will be learned in the Law of Parliaments, must repair to the Rolls of Parliament: And give me leave to cite his Opinion, which, I hope, may be of great Weight with this Court: It is in the Fourth Institute, fol. 15. he says, For any thing mov'd or done in the House of Commons, it ought to be determined, adjudged and discuss'd by the Course of Parliament, not by the Civil Law, nor yet by the Common Laws of this Realm, used in more inferior Courts, which was declared so to be secundum legem & consuetudinem Parliamenti, concerning the Peers, and the like, patri ratione, for the Commons; and that stops this Court in our Case: For so it is said in this Plea, which is the Matter you are to be governed by, that it is secundum legem & consuetudinem Parliamenti. He tells you further, there is no Notice to be taken of any thing said or done in the House of Commons, but by the Report of that House, and every Member thereof hath a judicial Place; he takes it out of Henry VII. and so the Book is expressly.

And he goes on; This is the Reason that Judges ought not to give any Opinion of Matters of Parliament; because it is not to be decided by the Common Laws, but secundum legem & consuetudinem Parliamenti. So he tells you, you are bound by the Methods of Parliament; and I need not press the thing much after his Authority; for he was learned in Parliament Matters.

But I would crave leave to mention a Case that was lately in this Court, and that was the Case of my Lord of Shaftesbury, who was brought by Habeas Corpus to this Court, and upon that Habeas Corpus it was thus returned, That he was committed by Order of the Lords in Parliament, there to remain during the Pleasure of the King and of the House of Lords; and this for an high Contempt committed in that House. Upon this Return we insisted that my Lord might be bail'd, because it was uncertain, the Pleasure of the King, or the House of Lords; and upon reading the Order, there is no Crime express'd, but only in general for an high Contempt. I speak it not for the particular Case's sake, but to apply the Reason of it to our Case; the Reason then given by the Judges, Mr. Justice Jones will please to remember it (for it was particularly declared by him) why they could not bail my Lord, was this; he was pleas'd to say, We in this Court take notice of the Court of Exchequer, and other Courts in Westminster-Hall; and it would be strange if we should not take notice of the Course of Parliament, and House of Lords. And if you are bound so to do in other Cases, you are bound to do so in this. And if without pleading you take notice of the Course of those Courts, you will also take notice of the Law of Parliaments, and Customs of Parliaments. And (that I may make use of it to our purpose in this Case) we need not particularly say, secundum legem & consuetudinem Parliamenti in hoc, instancing in this, and that, and t'other Particular: But the Court is to look into it, without my pointing to the particular Law of Parliament. So that, my Lord, here is ground enough before the Court, and I know the Court will look into it, before they give Judgment.

The second Exception is this, That it is not said in the Body of the Plea, that Fitz-Harris is impeach'd for this Treason; but it comes in only in the Averment. Now, my Lord, as to that, we must pursue the Impeachment as it is in the Lords Journal. 'Tis for Treason generally there, and 'tis said to be secundum legem & consuetudinem Parliamenti, which goes to all, and there is a Record of it among the Records of Parliament, and Mr. Attorney hath confessed it by the Demurrer.

And that this is the same Treason, we do aver in Fact, which also is confessed by the Demurrer; and your Lordship will see by the Records and Forms of Entries in Parliament (that I may not repeat Things over and over again) that this is the Course and Method of Parliaments.

Mr. Attorney hath fancied an Exception of Grammar, an Adjective for a Substantive; but I take it to be as well as any Man can plead in this Case. For what says the Prisoner? The Knights, Citizens and Burgeesses in Parliament assembled, d'd impeach me; which Impeachment is still in Force before the Lords. I take it to be as plain as can be. If they did impeach me, then there was an Impeachment; it can bear no other Sense.

My Lord, another Exception, and which was thought a strong one the other Day, and strongly urged, is, That the King may chuse his Court, and they compared it with the other Courts: But there is the Mistake that runs all along in this Case. 'Tis no doubt, the King may chuse his Court for his own Action and Suit; but the Impeachment is an Impeachment of the Commons, and their Suit is to be try'd no where else but in Parliament. And the Case that was the other Day cited by Mr. Attorney, for this Purpose, is true of the Person that was arraigned for Treason, and hath been indicted and arraigned in Ireland, and he may be arraigned and tried here, there is no Question of it; but to say, therefore, that this is a Consequence from that Rule, that therefore he will chuse whether he will proceed in Parliament upon the Commons Impeachment, and put a Stop to the Proceeding of the Parliament, by proceeding in this Court; I take to be a great non sequitur.

My Lord, I have offered these Reasons, as to the Form of the Plea to maintain it. Now as to the Precedents, I would a little speak what hath been done in the like Case, where this Court hath taken hold of Causes, and the Prosecution of the Court hath been stopp'd by Pleas to the Jurisdiction, and what hath been done upon those Pleas. What Doom they have had, I will hint some of them to you.

There was a Case mentioned by your Lordship the other Day, the Bishop of Winchester's Case, 3 Ed. III. I dare not say I have looked upon the Parliament-Roll; but my Lord Coke tells us, he hath recited the Record, de verbo in verbum: In the 2d Institute, fol. 15. there are all the Proceedings. It was not an Indictment, for my Lord Coke contradicts that, and says, it was a Declaration: There the Record at large sets forth, that the Bishop of Winchester was attached to answer the King; for that whereas at a Parliament held at Sarum, it was ordained, per ipsum Regem ne quis ad Dom. Parliament. summonitus ab eodem recederet sine licentia Regis. And that this Bishop, in Contempt of the King, recessit, without leave of the King. I think, 'tis rather an Action than a Criminal Proceeding: What says the Bishop to this? He comes, and says, Si quis deliquerit erga Dominum Regem in Parlamento aliquo, in Parlamento debet corrigi & emendari, & non alibi in minore Curia quam in Parlamento, &c. What becomes of this Plea? 'Tis strange there should be such an Inhibition, that no Man should depart without leave of the King, and the Bishop be punished for it; we do not find any Judgment was given, nor would they venture to do it. My Lord Coke hath a Mark upon it; for this very Reason, it looked as if there was a Design to weaken the Parliaments, by bringing their Proceedings into Westminster-Hall, but they would not do it; they would give no Judgment for the King; but for aught appears, the Plea stood.

Then there is the other Case of Mr. Plowden, and many more in primo & secundo Phil. & Mar. where a great many of them, some whereof were Burgeesses, and they submitted, but he did not. The Information there is this, that these Persons were summoned to the Parliament, and departed from thence without the leave of the King and Queen, though it was prohibited by them that any should depart: Most of them submit to a Fine; and if it had rested there, it might have turned to the Prejudice of the Commons as an Example.

But Mr. Plowden, he pleads as one that understood himself, and the Power of Parliaments, and their Proceedings very well, and considers the Time to have pleaded in: Says he, I continued in the Parliament from the Beginning to the End of the Parliament; but he relies not there; but he brings a Traverse full of Pregnancy; and if our Plea be faulty, theirs was an hundred times as faulty, absque hoc, That he, the said Edmund Plowden, the said Day and Year, during the said Parliament, without Licence of the said King and Queen, and the Court aforesaid, did contemptuously depart, in Contempt of the said King and Queen, and their Commandment and Inhibition, and to the great Detriment of the Common-Weal and State of this Kingdom, &c. All these Things he pleads, which your Lordship knows to be a very ill Traverse; and yet this Case continued all the time of that Queen, and the Court would never give Judgment in it. This was in primo & secundo; and yet it appearing upon the Face of the Information, that it was a Case that concerned the Commons, the Court would not give Judgment for or against the Commons as long as the King and Queen lived.

There is a later Case, and that is Elliot's Case, 5 Car. There is an Information against my Lord Hollis, Sir John Elliot, and many more; and there is a Plea put in to the Jurisdiction of the Court; I have a Copy of my Lord Hollis's Plea, and 'tis in a manner as faulty as Plowden's Plea: but the Court in that Case does not go upon the Insufficiency of the Plea, but gives Judgment generally that this Court had a Jurisdiction; the Assault happened in Parliament, and the Words were spoken there; and upon the Demurrer, they gave Judgment upon the whole Matter. What became of that Judgment? We know very well it was reversed, 19 of this King. And pray observe the Proceedings in the Reversal of that Judgment. Judgment was given against my Lord Hollis and the rest of the Gentlemen of the House of Commons, though there was no Prospect of a Parliament, yet they were obstinate, and would not plead; for they thought the Judgment to be a very hard Judgment; and this being a Plea in Abatement, Judgment was given for want of a Plea over. It may fall out in this Case, that this Person may be obstinate, and not plead over, if you should give your Judgment against this Plea. In Elliot's Case they were fined severely, and they continued under this Judgment in Prison, and in Execution for the Fine a great while; and they were delivered by what I cannot indeed justify in all it's Proceedings, I mean the Long Parliament; but what was done in 19 of this King, I think is good Authority, which none can say but was a Parliament as useful to the King and Kingdom as ever could be. In that Parliament the Commons examined this Judgment, I speak because I have it in my printed Book; 'tis in Croke Car. I confess, it is not in the first Impression; but it is in the Second Edition, which I have, and these are the Expressions in it.

L. C. J. What Case is that?

Mr. Williams. It is in Croke Car. 181. 604. but the Reversal was in 19 of this King.

L. C. J. Was the Judgment given, do you say, 19 of this King? Can a Case of that Time be reported in Croke?

Mr. Williams. I don't say so absurd a Thing. If your Lordship will have Patience to hear me, I'll tell you what I say. My Book, which is the 2d Impression of Croke, reflecting upon that Case in 5 Caroli, does publish the Votes

Votes of the House of Commons about, and the Reversal of the Judgment, in the 19th of this King. There the Proceeding is this; Information is given to the House of Commons, that there was such a Case published, which did derogate much from the Privilege of Parliament, invading the Liberty of Speech; and the House of Commons considering the Consequence, ordered the Book to be sent for and read, and taken into Consideration and debated; and upon Debate, the House came to this Resolution, That the Judgment against Elliot and others is an illegal Judgment; and against the Freedom and Liberty of Speech: And this Vote they send up to the Lords, where it is confirmed and resolved in Agreement with the Vote of the Commons: And by the Way, in Answer to a Paper that is commonly spread about by the Name of The Observer; I say, the Commons came to a Resolution, and pass a Vote, which is not indeed a Law; and when they have done that, they may transmit their Opinions to the Lords, and desire them to concur: Then the Lords and Commons have a Conference upon it, and at the Conference the Commons Reasons are delivered, which the Lords take up with them to their House, and debate them. Then they come to a Resolution to agree with the Commons. Afterwards, upon this Resolution of both Houses, they go regularly to work, by Writ of Error to reverse the Judgment. And if it should fall out in this Case, that your Lordship should give Judgment against the Plea, and this Person should be obstinate, and not plead over, and thereupon your Lordship give Judgment of Death upon him; it may come to be a very hard Case, if a Writ of Error should be brought in Parliament, to reverse this Judgment; and it should be reversed when the Party is dead. Therefore it will be of great Consequence in this particular.

My Lord, I'll mind you of one old Case, it was 20 Ric. II. A Person * there presents a Petition to the Commons in Parliament; and it seems there was something suggested in the Petition, which did amount to High-Treason, as there may be some Petition or some Complaint against a great Minister that may contain an Insinuation, as it were, of High-Treason; he was indicted out of Parliament for High-treason, and was found Guilty, and by the Grace of the Prince he was pardoned: But because the Commons would not lie under that Precedent of an Invasion of their Privilege, though he was a Person without Doors that prepared that Petition, and no more Hurt done to him but the Prosecution, he being pardoned, the Judgment was voided.

L. C. J. Where is that Authority?

Mr. Williams. 20 Ric. II. Ro. Parl. 12. And you will find it in the Argument of Selden's Case, published in Rushworth's Collections, Appendix to Vol. I. Fol. 47, and 48.

And now, my Lord, I have done with the Substance of the Case, with my Reasons for the Matter and for the Form. In this Case, here is the Life of a Person before you; here is the Right of the Commons to impeach in Parliament, before you; here is the Judicature of the Lords to determine that Impeachment, before you; here are the Method and Proceedings of Parliament before you; and how far you will lay your Hands upon this Case, thus circumstantiated, we must submit to you: But I hope you will proceed no further on the Indictment.

L. C. J. Pray, Gentlemen, let us a little direct you not to spend our Time about that which is not to the Purpose, or that is not in the Case: Here is nothing of the Commons Right to impeach in Parliament before us, nor of the Lords Jurisdiction, nor the Methods of Parliament in this Case: They are Things quite foreign to the Case and the Matter in hand; which is, whether this Plea, as thus pleaded, be sufficient to protect the Prisoner from being questioned in this Court, for the treasonable Matter in this Indictment before us. Therefore you ought not to spend Time in Things that are not before us to be considered, being out of the Case; for we have nothing to do with any Privilege of Parliament, or of either of the Houses here at this Time.

Mr. Just. Jones. And, Gentlemen, there is nothing at all here of any Fact done in Parliament that can be insisted on here; nor is there any Complaint against Mr. Fitz-Harris for any thing he hath done in Parliament. All Mr. Williams's Precedents run to that; but this is for a Thing done without Doors.

L. C. J. We speak to you to come to the Point, which is the Duty of all Courts to keep Counsel to the Points before them. The sole Matter before us is, whether this be a good Plea to ouster this Court of a Jurisdiction, which otherwise unquestionably we have of this Matter?

Mr. Williams. It is a hard Matter for the Bar to answer the Bench, my Lord.

Sir Fran. Winning. My Lord, I shall pursue your Direction as well as my Understanding will give me leave, and save your Time as much as I can; but the Court having assigned us of Counsel, you will give us leave to use our Discretion, keeping as near as we can to the Points of the Case, and to the Pleading. But if upon the Reasoning of this Case, other Parliament-Cases fall in, I hope you will give me leave to cite them for maintaining our Plea. The Plea here is to the Jurisdiction, and consists of two Parts. First, Matter of Record, which is, that an Impeachment is depending in the House of Lords (for so it must be taken upon the Pleading, as I shall manifestly prove:) The second is Matter in pais (viz.) the Averment, that the Impeachment and Indictment are for one and the same Treason: and the Plea is made up of these two Parts, together with an Averment that the Person is the same. The King's Attorney hath been pleased to demur generally to us, and I am sure that if our Plea be well and formally pleaded, all the Matter of Fact is confessed by the Demurrer.

Mr. Attorney did, to my Apprehension, make but one Objection the other Day, and he still insists upon it, that here is a Record too generally pleaded, and they compare it to the common Case of an auter foitz acquit, upon another Indictment; but I hope to make it evidently appear, that it is in no fort a parallel Case. The Matter which I conceive is confessed by the Demurrer, is, that there is an Impeachment by the Commons of England of High-Treason against Fitz-Harris lodged in the House of Lords, secundum legem & consuetudinem Parliamenti: And that the Treason for which he was impeached, is the same Treason contained in the Indictment, to which the Prisoner hath now pleaded. Upon this Matter of Fact, so agreed, the general Question is,

Whether an Impeachment for Treason, by the House of Commons, and still depending, be a sufficient Matter to ouster the Court from proceeding upon an Indictment for the same offence: My Method will be shortly to speak to these Things.

L. C. J. Pray let us give you some Direction; that is not the Question, nor can come in Question in the Case: You mistake the Points of the Case.

Sir Fran. Winning. Why, my Lord?

L. C. J. The Question is, Whether you have pleaded sufficient Matter here to ouster us of our Jurisdiction? It is to no purpose to put Questions in the Case, that are not in it.

Sir Fran. Winning. My Lord, I know the Case is very nice and tender on all Sides, and therefore may very well bear an Interruption; however I express my self, my Meaning is the same with your Lordship's. The Method that I shall proceed in, will be this: I will suppose the Case before you had been of an Impeachment, containing the special Treason for which he is now indicted. I will shew in the next Place, that as it is now pleaded, it is as available as if the Impeachment in the House of Lords had mention'd the particular Treason. I shall then give some Reasons why it is so, and mention one or two Precedents that have not yet been cited. Two of the King's Counsel did agree, that they would not make a Doubt of the Plea, if there had been a particular Impeachment; and therefore I would, by considering what would be the Reason of that Case, apply it particularly to the present Case. The House of Lords is a superior Court to this: and is agreed to be the highest Court of Record in the Kingdom, Plowden 389. Co. Lit. 109, 110. 9 Co. in Prefat. And then I am within the common Rule of Pleading, according to the Differences taken in Sparrie's Case, 5 Co. 61, and 62. That a Suit first commenced in an Inferior Court, cannot stop a Suit in a Superior Court, though subsequent; but a Suit in a Superior Court may be pleaded, to stop the Proceedings of one that is Inferior. And though it may be objected here, that the Parliament is determined and dissolved, and so there would be a Failure of Justice; yet this Objection is of no Force: For if once the Suit be well commenced in the Superior Court, it cannot after go down to the Inferior. And what is begun in one Parliament may be determined in another; so is the Case 4 Edward III. n. 16. of the Lord Berkeley, and those that were accused for the Death of Edward II. And though it was objected there, as hath been here, that by this Means there might be a Stop of Justice, by the Dissolution of the Parliament; yet the short and true Answer is, That it is in Law to be presumed, Parliaments will be called frequently, to consider of the Business of the Kingdom, and redress Grievances, according to the several Statutes made for that Purpose, 4 Ed. III. cap. 14. 36 Ed. III. cap. 10. I shall labour this no farther; but taking it as the common Rule of Pleading, that a Record in a Superior Court may be pleaded to stop a Proceeding in an Inferior; I shall come to prove that this Record is well pleaded, and could not be otherwise, unless Mr. Attorney would have had us plead what is false, this being the Truth of the Case. For the Commons did impeach Mr. Fitz-Harris generally of Treason, as it is the Course of Parliaments for them to do; and in our very Plea we alledge, that he was impeached secundum legem & consuetudinem Parliamenti; and so Mr. Attorney hath confessed by the Demurrer: And if they may prefer an Impeachment in general, according to the Law and Custom of Parliament; why then so far it must be allow'd, that we have pleaded well that he was impeached of Treason. It is very true, my Lord, if a Man will plead generally that he was indicted of High-Treason, it would be ill; because the Court cannot take it otherwise than he pleaded it; and such a general Indictment would be altogether void, and therefore no Averment could make it good, or supply that Generality and Uncertainty.

But an Impeachment generally for Treason, is good and warranted by the Law and Course of Parliament, and so confessed by the Demurrer. And so your Lordship will take it to be, and will give Credit, that all is regular in the Proceedings of that High Court. You will presume, even in the Ecclesiastical Courts (as my Lord Coke says, in the 4th Report) that all Things are rightly done, when they have a Jurisdiction; a fortiori you will believe the greatest Court in the Kingdom does proceed regularly. My Lord Coke in the 4th Inst. Fol. 14, and 15, does say, what the Law and Course of Parliament is, the Judges will never intermeddle with. They always leave it to the Parliament, who are the superior Judges, and are to determine the Matters before them. For they take notice, that the Course of a Court is the Law of a Court, as it is in Lane's Case in the 2d Report in the Case of the Exchequer. And therefore, if a general Impeachment is secundum legem & consuetudinem, which is confessed by the Demurrer in this Case, then you must take it for granted, that the Parliament proceed rightly, and that such a general Impeachment is sufficient in Law. There is a famous Case that strengthens what I say, 11 Ric. II. di. Rot. Parl. par. 2. the Case of the Lords Appellants. You will find it also cited in Rushworth's Col. Part 1. in the Appendix, Fol. 51. Tressilian and others were appealed against for Treason, and both the Judges of the Common and of the Civil Law were by Direction of the King called to advise of that Matter. And they did all declare, that the Proceedings in that Case were neither agreeable to Common Law, nor Civil Law. But the Lords in Parliament said, it did not belong to the Judges of the Common Law or Civil Law to guide them; but that they ought to proceed according to the Course and Law of Parliaments (which are the Words of our Plea), and that therefore no Opinion of theirs should ouster them of their Jurisdiction, or alter the Course and Method of their Proceedings. My Lord, this Case is very remarkable; but I will go a little farther: The Judges in all Ages have been so far from taking upon them to judge of the Laws and Customs of Parliament, that they have denied to answer when their Advice has been demanded, and insisted upon it, that they were not proper Judges of such Matters, as in 31 Hen. VI. Rot. Parl. N. 26. For there, among other Things, the Judges were demanded, whether the Speaker of the House, during the Adjournment of Parliament, might be arrested: They desired to be excused from giving any Opinion: For, said they, in this great Matter they ought not to interpose, it being a Matter of Parliament.

In the Great Council primo & secundo Jacobi, about the Union of both Kingdoms, the Judges refused to give their Opinions upon several Questions put to them; desiring to be excused, for that such Things did not belong to them, but were Matters fit for Parliament only. My Meaning is, to infer from hence, that since it is pleaded here to be according to the Law and Course of Parliaments, and Mr. Attorney hath acknowledged it, that now your Lordship is foreclosed from further meddling with this Case, it appearing upon Record to be a Matter whereof you cannot judge.

But the Objection is, that admit the Impeachment should be taken to be according to the Course of Parliament, yet it is so general, that the Court cannot judge upon it: I answer, that it is evident the Impeachment was not for nothing; it is most certainly to be presumed, that such a Body of Men as the House of Commons would not impeach a Man for no Crime. Fitz-Harris avers by his Plea, that it was for the same Treason, for which the Jury have found this Bill against him. Now this Averment makes the Matter as clear to the Court, as if the Impeachment had mentioned the particular Treason.

Every Day's Experience shews, that Averments, which are consistent with the Record, are good, and are of Necessity to clear the Fact to the Court; so that the Judges may give a Judgment upon it. If the Defendant will plead a Recovery in a formal Action, in bar to an Action of Debt, or other Action; it is not enough for him to set out the Record; he must aver also, that the Causes of the Action are the same, and that it is the same Person who is mentioned in one Record, and in the other Records; and this shews, that the most special and particular are of no Use without Averments.

My Lord, there is a Case that I find directly to this Purpose, which goes further than the Case I did but now put, and that is, 26 Affix. Pl. 15. It is also mentioned in Stamf. Pla. Cor. 105, where a Man was indicted for the Murder of J. S. and he pleads a Record of Acquittal, where he was indicted for the Murder of J. N. But he avers, that J. S. in this Indictment, is the same Person with J. N. in the other Indictment; and that was adjudged a good Plea, and the Party was acquitted, though the Averment there seemed to be a Contradiction to the Record. This makes it clear, that if an Averment may consist with the Record, the Law will allow it. In More's Rep. 823. Pl. 1112, the King against Howard, it is said, that if an Act of Parliament be certified into Chancery, no Averment lies to say this is no Act of Parliament, because the Commons did not assent to it; but if it appears in the Body of the Act, that the Commons did not assent, as if it was ordained by the King and Lords, and without mentioning any Assent of the Commons: there it may be aver'd to be no Act; for this being a Matter consistent with the Record, is avorable: And so it is agreed in 33 H. VI. Fol. 18. Pilkinton's Case.

Now Mr. Attorney has his Election here (as it is in all such Cases) either to plead Null. tiel. Record. and then we must have produced it; and if we had fail'd, it had been against us, as to the whole Plea. Or if he would not deny the Record (as indeed he could not) he might have taken Issue upon our Averment, that it was not for one and the same Offence; but he has demurred, and thereby confessed there is such a Record, and confessed the Averment to be true, that he was impeached for the same Crime, and that he is the same Person. And now it is plain to your Lordship, that I stated the Question right at first.

My Lord, I shall cite you one Precedent out of Rast. Ent. Fol. 384 and 385, where a Man was indicted and acquitted before certain Justices, and being indicted de novo.—

L. C. J. It is Title Gaol-Delivery, is it not?

Sir F. Win. Yes, my Lord, it is. And he pleads that he was indicted coram aliis Justiciariis, for the same Felony, and upon this Plea the Entry is made, Quia testatum est hic in Cur. in prefatos Justiciarios, that the said Party was acquitted of the Felony, in Manner and Form, as he had alledged in his Plea. Therefore it is adjudged, that he should be discharged, and go without Delay. My Lord, I do not altogether rely upon this Precedent for Law; but I find it in that Book.

Now, my Lord, I shall offer some Reasons in general. First, that when once the Commons in Parliament, in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of England, have lodg'd an Impeachment against any Man, it seems to me against natural Justice, that ever any Commoners should afterwards come to try or judge that Man for that Fact. I speak this, because every Man in England that is a Commoner, is a Party to the Accusation; and so we have pleaded by such an Impeachment, a Man is subjected to another Sort of Trial: Magna Charta says, That every Man shall be tried by his Peers, or by the Law of the Land. And by the Law of the Land, there are several Sorts of Trial, some by Juries, others not by Juries. This is one of those Sorts where the Trial is by the Law of the Land, but not by his Peers: For it would be hard that any Man should come to try or give Judgment upon a Person who hath been his Accuser before; and in Effect hath already given his Judgment that he is guilty, by the Accusation of him, and so stands not indifferent. By this Means the Trial by Jury is gone; and the Lords, who are the Peers of the Realm, are Judges in Point of Fact, as well as Law. Here is an enormous Offence, against which all the Nation cries, for so they do in the Impeachment. Then, says the Law, it is not fit that you should try him, who are Parties; but the Lords are the proper Judges, they shall try him per testes, and the Commoners may come in as Witnesses, but not as Judges.

My Lord, another Reason is this, that if an Appeal of Death, or any other Appeal were depending before the Statute of 3 H. VII. cap. 1, the King could not proceed upon an Indictment for the same Fact; because the King, as the common Parent, does only take Care that such Offenders should not go away with Impunity; but the Preference was given to the Person more particularly concerned, and the King's Indictment must stay till the Year and Day were out, to see whether they will proceed in their Suits. And so says my Lord Chief Justice Hales, in his Pleas of the Crown, 2442, 45. Then a minori ad majus, does the Law so regard the Interest of the Wife or the Heir, &c. in their Suit, and has it no regard to the Suit of all the Commons of England? For manifestly, an Impeachment is the Suit of the People, and not the King's Suit.

That's the 2d Reason; another Reason I shall urge, is that which was touched by Mr. Williams. Suppose this Man should be try'd here, and be acquitted; is it to be presum'd that he can plead this Acquittal in bar to the Impeachment before the Lords? My Lord, I believe there is no considering Man in England, that has regard either to the Jurisdiction of Parliament, or to the Nature of the Suit, will affirm, that it would be a good Plea; and that he could bar the great Court of the Kingdom from proceeding against him, by saying he was acquitted by a Jury in Westminster-Hall, after the Suit was first well commenced in that Court.

My Lord, I say, with Reverence to the Court, that should you proceed in this Trial, it may fall out, that contrary to a fundamental Rule of Law, a Man shall be twice put in Danger of his Life for one Offence, which by the Law he cannot be; and therefore I urge that as a Reason, why you cannot proceed here on this Indictment.

My Lord, I will now mention two or three Precedents, which will prove that this Impeachment is according to the Course and Law of Parliaments, though it may seem needless, after the King's learned Counsel have agreed to it.

My Lord, I shall first mention the Case of Michael de la Poole, Rot. Par. 18 or 28 H. VI. n. 18. He was a very great Man, and came to the House of Lords voluntarily, and said, there was a Rumour that he was guilty of horrible Things.

L. C. J. Where did you take this Case, out of Cotton? It is mentioned there; but I have seen a Copy of the Roll.

Sir Fran. Win. Yes, my Lord: Thereupon the Commons pray he may be committed upon his own Confession; and that the thing being debated in the House, the Lords said, We know not what was meant by those Words, horrible Things; it may import only Misdemeanors: If it had been said Treason, we had known how to have proceeded thereupon: And thereupon within a few Days after, the Commons came and accused him of Treason. And there it is said, that the Course of Parliament is to find out the Truth by Circumstances, and such Degrees as the Nature of the Thing will bear, and they are not confined to the strict Rules of other Courts. I will not cite any more antient Cases, though there are many to be found of general Impeachments: For we are not disputing what is the Right and Course of Impeachments, which is confessed, upon the pleading: But we have had several Cases of late; the Earl of Clarendon was impeached generally, and the Commons took Time to bring in their Articles; and I have had the Experience in three or four Parliaments, wherein we have been pretty well busied with Impeachments, though we have had no great Success in them, that though the Commons may, if they please, carry up particular Articles at first; yet the Law and Course is, for the Lords to receive the general Impeachment, and the Commons say, that in due time they will bring in their Articles. So it was done in the Case of the five Popish Lords; some particular Member was appointed to go up, and impeach them of High Treason in general; and in that Case, though the Parliament was dissolved before any Articles were sent up, yet afterwards, in the next Parliament, the Articles upon the former Impeachments were sent up, and received, and my Lord Stafford since executed, upon his Conviction upon that Impeachment: Yet Indictments were exhibited against them, before ever any Impeachment was sent up by the Commons, and Preparations were made for their Trials. But from that Day to this, there hath been no Attempt to try them upon their Indictments, though there have been several Intervals of Parliament.

Our Case is stronger than that of the Lords: For in the Case at the Bar, the first Suit was in the House of Lords by the Commons, whilst in the other Case the first was the Suit of the King, by Indictment; and yet by a subsequent Impeachment that was stopped, and the Lords continue yet Prisoners in the Tower. Our Time hath been so short, that we could not see the Copies of Orders, which we might otherwise have made Use of, for maintaining this Plea: We sent to the House of Lords, but the Officers were out of Town, and we could come at the Sight of nothing there. We have been told the Opinion of the Judges was delivered at Council concerning these very Lords, that the Impeachments being lodged in Parliament, no other Prosecution could be against them, till the Prosecution of the Commons was determined. So far the Courts below have always been from meddling with the Jurisdiction of Parliament, that even many times in Questions upon Acts of Parliament, they have gone up to the Parliament, to know what was meant by it. And I remember it was said by the Court in that Case of my Lord of Shaftesbury, where it was agreed by all, that the Commitment was too general, for it was only for a Contempt, whereas the Crime ought particularly to appear in the Warrant; that it being in a Case of Commitment by the Parliament (at least while that Parliament was continuing) they ought not to meddle with it, nor could they enquire into the Formality of the Warrant.

My Lord, I must mention one Thing touching the Case of my Lord Hollis, which was cited by Mr. Williams, and I have but a word to add: It is in the Appendix to the first Part of Rushworth's Coll. and also in Croke, Car. fol. 181. It was there pleaded to the Jurisdiction of this Court, that it was a Matter done in Parliament: In our Case it is pleaded that an Impeachment is depending in Parliament; that was but a Prosecution for a Misdemeanor, this is a Case of High-Treason. It fell out in that Case, the Court here did adjudge, that the Information did lie; but upon a Writ of Error it was agreed by the Lords unanimously, that the Judgment was erroneous, and that the Parties should be restored to all which they had lost, by reason of it: But if this Man should lose his Life by your Judgment, what Help would there be upon a Writ of Error? The Danger of such a Thing requires great Consideration; and it would be of fatal Consequence, if the Lords should hereafter adjudge that this Court had no Jurisdiction.

As for Mr. Attorney's Objection to day, that we have not set forth actually, that there was any Impeachment; I do confess I was a little startled at it; for the Words of the Plea are, That Edward Fitz-Harris, by the Knights, Citizens and Burgeesses, was impeached; which Impeachment is in Force. I do not know how in the World we could have thought of more express Words, than to say, he was impeached; and that that Impeachment is in full Force, as appears by the Record.

For the other Objection, the other Day (for we would mention all, how little soever they deserve an Answer) that the King may chuse in what Court he will sue; it is agreed, when it is at his own Suit: But this is not so, but at the Commons Suit, and can be no where else prosecuted, than where it now depends. This is the Method and Course of Parliaments, we say; and that the Method and Course of Parliaments is the Law of the Land, your Lordship will take Notice that it is so.

To conclude, as this Plea now stands, the Demurrer confessing the Matter of it, it cannot be over-ruled, without deciding whether the Lords can proceed upon such general Impeachments, and whether the Commons can impeach in such a general Way. We submit the whole to your Judgment: It is a Case deserves great Consideration, as being of great Weight and Moment; and highly concerns the Jurisdiction of the Lords, the Privileges of the Commons, and the Rights of all the People of England.

Mr. Wallop. May it please your Lordship, there are in this Plea three principal Parts upon which it turns, which are expressly alledged. First, That Fitz-Harris before the Indictment was according to the Law and Custom of Parliament impeached of High-Treason, and this I humbly conceive is confessed by Mr. Attorney upon the Demurrer. The second, Thing is, That this Impeachment, be it as it will, general or particular, does remain in full Force and Virtue. This is plainly alledged and demurred to, and so confessed by Mr. Attorney; for all Things well alledged and pleaded, are confessed by the Demurrer. The third great Point and Hinge upon which it turns, is this, That the High Treason, mentioned in the Indictment, and the High Treason for which he was impeached in the House of Lords, is one and the same Treason. This we have plainly averred, and this Mr. Attorney hath likewise by his Demurrer plainly confessed, as we humbly conceive.

For the two former Points there is no Difficulty in them, and therefore I shall pass them over. 'Tis this third Matter which I take to be the only Point in the Case; and if we have well averred it, and can by Law be let into such an Averment; then I hope your Lordship and this Court will not pretend to go on in this Case. They object, and say, because he is impeached of High-Treason generally, without naming any particular Treason, that cannot be averred to be the same, and a Demurrer does never confess the Truth of that which by Law cannot be said; but if it may be said, and is said plainly, then the Demurrer confesses it.

My Lord, I humbly conceive this Matter is well averrable, and we have taken a good Averment. I grant that a repugnant and an impossible Averment cannot be taken, as to aver a Horse to be a Sheep, which is apparently repugnant and impossible; and in that Case a Demurrer can never confess the Truth of that which appears impossible to be true. But, my Lord, if there be no Impossibility, nor Repugnancy, nor Contradiction in the Averment between the Matters that are averred to be the same, as there is not between that which is but generally expressed, and that which is more especially alledged; where all may well stand together, and the one includes the other, and needs only some farther Explanation; it is not only allowable to aver it, but most proper, and in such Case only necessary. For, quod constat clarè non debet verificari, in this Case it is not necessary that it should appear to the Court upon the View of the Indictment and Impeachment, that the Matter contained in both, is the same; but it is sufficient, that it be proveable upon an Issue to be taken. And so much is admitted by the Judges in Sperry's Case Co. 5. Rep. 51. That if there be convenient Certainty which may be put in Issue, it is sufficient, and consequently not necessary to appear at the first, but upon the Event of the Issue afterwards to be tried. And if they intend it otherwise, I confess I understand them not. It is true, it must appear to the Court, either at the first opening, or upon an Issue subsequent to be found. And, my Lord, if this Matter may appear at first or at last, and the Thing is possible to be proved, then we are well enough. In Corbet and Barne's Case, in the first Croke, Fol. 520, a Battery supposed to be in London, and a Battery supposed to be in Hertfordshire, were averred to be one and the same Battery, which naturally is impossible; yet being transitory, and therefore supposable to be done in any County, such an Averment is allowable, though it seem'd contradictory, and could not appear to the Court by comparing the several Declarations to be any way the same. And there being a Demurrer for that Cause in that Case, the Truth of the Averment was rul'd to be confess'd by the Demurrer, and so here by the Demurrer, the Truth of the Suggestion, that the Treason in the Impeachment, and the Treason in the Indictment, is one and the same, is confess'd.

By taking this Averment, we offer them here a fair Issue, an Issue of Fact triable by a Jury, wherein the Attorney-General might have join'd with us, if he had pleas'd; but refusing that, and having demurr'd, and thereby confess'd what we have alledged, it must be taken to be true, as if found by a Jury. And, my Lord, that this Matter is properly averrable and triable, I think it is plain; it being a Question of Fact, which is properly triable by the Country: And if they had taken Issue upon that, we might have gone to a Jury, where the Matter would have been easily prov'd. For upon Evidence given, the Jury might fairly take into Consideration the reading of this very numerical Libel set forth in the Indictment, and the particular and special Debates of the House of Commons thereupon. And that upon those very Debates the House voted that Fitz-Harris should be impeach'd for Matters contain'd in that Libel. And that upon those Votes the Impeachment was carry'd up to the Lords. This is Evidence sufficient, that the House of Commons did intend to accuse him of the same Treason contain'd in the Indictment; which proves the Issue, that is, that the Treason contain'd in the Impeachment, is the same with that contain'd in the Indictment. Neither is this to put the Intention of the Mind, or secret Thoughts of the Heart in Issue, which is against the Rules of Law; but to put them into a Way of Proof, which well stands with the Rules of Law, which upon the general, or other collateral Issue, may well be enquir'd of by the Jury. As in an Action, quare canem mordacem defendens scienter retinuit. Here [Scienter] is not directly issuable, but it is proveable, and must be prov'd upon the general Issue. So in the present Case, the Intention of the Commons upon the Issue offer'd by us, and refused by the Attorney-General, might, and ought, and would have been prov'd; and without Doubt, found by the Jury. Neither is this general Impeachment such a notional Thing as the other side would pretend; but it is as if they should say, We do charge him to have committed certain Crimes that are Treason. Now whether the Crimes they say he had committed, and for which they impeached him, are the same with those for which he is indicted, is a good and proper Issue. And if it appears to the Court to be the same, you will certainly yourselves take off your Hands from those Proceedings. This is all I shall say as to the Averment. And if we can well get over that, I take it, all the rest is well enough.

But again, they say, the Impeachment is too general, and no Man shall be put to answer to such a general Accusation.

And I say so too, neither shall Fitz-Harris be put to answer to it without special Articles; yet he cannot quash the Impeachment for this Cause, as he might the Indictment; which shews the Difference betwixt an Impeachment and an Indictment, which always contains the special Matter, and without which it might be quash'd and made no Record. But here by the Law of Parliament such general Impeachments are held good: and Articles are usually brought in afterwards, and after those additional Articles, which cannot be in the Course and Way of Indictment; and therefore we must take the Impeachment as we find it; and since it stands against us as a Record, though 'tis general, we may, and must plead it in the same Generality; having no Way to make it on Record, as we have in case of such a general Indictment.

So then this being an Impeachment according to the Course of Parliament; it is well lodg'd in the House of Lords, where it only ought to be tried, and we must plead it as we may, and as we find the Case to be. And having averred the Crimes to be the same, we have done what we could, and therefore enough.

And that a general Impeachment without Articles is a Bar to any Indictment for the same Matter, was resolv'd by all the Judges, as I am inform'd in the Case of the Lords in the Tower, who were all indicted for Treason, either in the King's Bench, or before Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer. And afterwards [5 Dec. 78.] generally impeached before the Lords in Parliament; and no Articles exhibited till 3 April 79. And yet in the mean time it was resolv'd at the Council Table by all the Judges there attending, that after the general Impeachment before Articles, they could not be proceeded against upon those Indictments, though the Parliament wherein they were impeached was dissolved.

And that was a stronger Case than this of Fitz-Harris: for there the inferior Court was first possess'd of the Cause, and yet the general Impeachment clos'd up the Hands of the Court. But in this Case, the superior Court, the Parliament, was first possess'd of the Cause, which cannot be taken out of their Hands by the inferior Court.

There is a farther Difference betwixt an Impeachment in Parliament, and an Indictment; that in an Indictment which is always as particular as Articles upon an Impeachment, you cannot plead autre foitz arraigned; but you must plead either autre foitz convict or acquit, as appears in Sir William Wisshpole's Case, Chron. 1. 105. But in an Impeachment in Parliament, the other Side will acknowledge, that after Articles exhibited, there can be no proceedings upon an Indictment for the same Offence, although the Defendant in the Impeachment be neither convict, nor acquit. Otherwise you may bring back all the Lords in the Tower to the King's-Bench to be tried, which Mr. Attorney will not, I suppose, attempt.

And it is observable in the Case of Sir William Wisshpole, That to avoid the Doubt that the Party there should not be questioned, both upon the Coroner's Inquest, and the Indictment of Murder; it was rul'd by the Court, that the first should be quash'd as insufficient: So careful were the Judges to avoid the double Vexation, in a Case compared with this, of no great Import.

I shall say no more to the Case, but only observe how scrupulous the Judges have been to touch upon a Case, where they had the least Suspicion of Jealousy that the Parliament had, or pretended to have a Jurisdiction, or were possess'd of the Cause. I am sure I could never get any thing by any Labours of mine in those Cases. But upon all such Motions they were so aware of what might be the Consequence, that they would always worship afar off, and would never come near the Mount, they would ever retire when they came but near the Brink of this Gulph.

Now, my Lord, if you retain this Cause, in Consequence you charge yourselves with the Blood of this Man; wherein, if you proceed regularly, and according to Law, all is well. But however, by over-ruling his Plea, you take upon you his Blood one way or other; through which you must wade to come at the Cause. And whether it be advisable to come at it upon these Terms, I leave it to your Lordship's Wisdom to consider.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I shall not make any long Argument, there hath been so much said before me. But I would fain come to the Question if I could; for I must confess, after all, I cannot see what the other Side make the Question. Mr. Attorney was pleas'd to say, that both for the Matter and Form, he objected against our Plea. But if for the Matter it be admitted to me, that an Impeachment in Parliament for the same Matter will out this Court of Jurisdiction; I will say nothing at all of it, for I apprehend that is not then in Question.

L. C. J. No, not at all.

Mr. Pollexfen. Then the Matter seems to be agreed, and only the Manner and Form of the Plea are now in question. And for the Manner, they except to it in these Particulars. First, they say, it is not alledged that there is any Impeachment upon Record; now I confess, Form is a subtil Matter in itself, and it is easy for any Man that reads other Men's Words and Writings, if he will, to make what Construction he will of them, even Nolimus to be Volumus; but I know the Court will not do so. But for an Answer to the Objection, I think it is as strongly and closely penn'd as I can tell how to pen any thing, he was impeached, Quæ quidem Impetitiō, &c. What can that quæ quidem signify, but the Impeachment that was just mentioned before? But what they mean by this, to say, this is not the same Impeachment, when the Words are positive that it is the same, I must confess I cannot fathom.

My Lord, there was another Thing spoken the last Day, but they have not mentioned it now; if there be any thing stirr'd in it, I hope your Lordship will be pleas'd to hear us before you give your Judgment in it. That it was not said to be sub pede sigilli; but I know they won't insist upon it, therefore I say nothing to that.

But the great Question now is, whether or no this be not too general, the alledging that he was impeached in Parliament, and not saying how or for what Crime; though there be an Averment afterwards, that it is for the said Crime? Whether this be not so general, as that therefore this Plea should be naught?

First, For this of the Averment, I take it with Submission, let the Crimes be never so particularly specified in the Record that is pleaded, and in that upon which the Party is brought in Judicature, yet always there must be an Averment; and that Averment is so much the substantial Part of the Plea, that let the Matter never so much appear to be the same without an Averment, it would be naught; and it must come to be tried per pais, whether the Offence be the same or not: For if a Man plead one Indictment for the Murder of J. S. to another Indictment for the Murder of J. S. though they bear the same Name, he must aver they are one and the same Person. For else non constat to the Court; but there may be two J. S's. Therefore all Averments are still the Substance of the Plea, to bring the Identity of the Matter into Judgment, and are to be tried by the Country: So then the Objection to the Generality is not an Objection to the Substance, but rather an Objection to the Form on their Side; because the Substance is alledged in the Plea, that it is for the same Treason: Which Substance, if Mr. Attorney had thought not fit to have demurred to, but taken Issue on, must have been tried per pais.

Having thus spoken to the Averment, my Lord, let me speak to the general Allegation that he was impeached for Treason, and not saying particularly what the Fact was.

My Lord, if they admit the Law, that an Impeachment in Parliament does suspend or take away the Jurisdiction of this Court, then they have admitted a great Part of the Fact, and then the Matter in question will be, what Impeachment in Parliament it is that will take away the Jurisdiction of the Court, and there can be but two Sorts; the one at large, where the whole Offence is specified; the other not at large, but only in general Words, The Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses in Parliament assembled, in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of England, do impeach such an one of High-Treason. Now, my Lord, if so be such Impeachment in Parliament be a good Impeachment, then have we, I think, the most plain Case pleaded that can be, as plain as the Fact that this is an Impeachment in Parliament; and then this Court is outed of its Jurisdiction.

They that have gone before, have said, which I must pray your Lordship to remember, that the Court and we are to take notice of the Proceedings in other Courts, as other Courts are bound to take notice of the Proceedings of this; then I would suppose in other familiar Cases, there is generally (as it is true in Sperry's Case) the Writ or Declaration, which does in all civil Causes set forth the Particularity of the Thing in question, yet in some Cases we are sure it does not do so; but the Course and Practice of some Courts admit general Proceedings. Now wherever that is so, the Party cannot mend himself by making their Course otherwise than it is: For he must not say it is more particular than the Course of the Court does make it. Therefore he hath no other Way by the Law to bring his Matter on, and help himself, but by an Averment that it is the same. I will suppose a Case of such a Nature as this; A Man brings an Account in London upon Concessit solvere, and he does not particularize in the Court any Thing what or how his Debt did arise; but after he brings another Account or Delivery, a special Declaration in an Account of Debt: shall not I, because the first Declaration is in general Words, aver that this is the same Matter that he sued for by the Concessit solvere, which he now sues for in this particular Declaration? Or, suppose a Man in this Court does bring an Account for divers Wares and Merchandizes sold, and does not express any Particulars, but that he was indebted, in general Words, for Wares sold; and afterwards becomes and brings another Account, and says, it is for such and such Wares; so much for Cloth, so much for Wine, &c. though his first Declaration be in general, not expressing what the Wares were, and the last is particular; shall not I come and plead in Abatement to the second Declaration, that the first and second were for one and the same Thing? Suppose again an Indictment of Barretty be found against a Man, which is an Offence that is only general, and hath no Particulars alledged in the Indictment; should not a Man that is the second Time indicted, come and say, this is one and the same? My Lord, under favour, in all these and such like Cases, the Law must be governed by its own Proceedings, and take notice of the Nature of the Things depending before the Court. And if so be, upon Consideration of the Nature of the Thing, there is as much of Certainty set forth as the Case will admit, and is possible to be had, we must permit the Party to plead as he can, and help himself by the Averment.

Then, my Lord, the Question is, whether an Impeachment generally in Parliament, without particularly setting forth for what, be a good Impeachment there or no? If they say it is not, then the Bottom of the Plea is naught, and all is quite gone; but if they say it is, then I have pleaded my Matter as it is. For I cannot say, that that is particular, or make that particular that is not; and I have done all that is possible for me to do in my Case. I have pleaded what is in the Record; and as it is in the Record, from which my Plea must not vary, and I have averred it is for the same Matter, and you have confessed it by the Demurrer.

My Lord, I would not intangle the Question; but I must confess, I cannot see how they can extricate themselves out of this Dilemma, if they do admit a general Impeachment is a good Impeachment. Then there are fresh Instances of this considerable in the Case, as that which hath been particularized of the Lords in the Tower, and of the Opinion in February of the Judges in their Case. For in the Beginning of December were those Lords indicted; and after on the 5th of December, the House of Commons taking it into their Consideration, that there was a Commission going out for an High-Steward, with an Intent to bring them to Trial before the Peers; they purposely to have the Carriage and Prosecution of his great and horrid Treason, and take off the Prosecution upon the Indictment, do impeach the same Lords, and there the Impeachment is just the same as this in our Plea of High Treason; but not of any particular fact, adding, only of other Crimes and Misdemeanors, which is as general as can be. Now, my Lord, the Judges did take so much Notice of it, that though the Parliament was dissolved before the particular Articles were carried up to set forth the particular Offence; yet in February following (some of the Judges are here, and they will rectify me (if I be mistaken) their Opinions being asked about it at the Council-Board, upon the Petition of the Lords, to be either bailed or tried; they were of Opinion, that this Impeachment, though thus general, was so depending in Parliament, that they could not be tried. So that I think the Proceedings in Parliament are of that Nature, that if you will meddle with what they do, you will take Notice of their Method of Proceedings, as you do of other Courts.

Why then, my Lord, if this be so, how is it possible for us to do better? We have pleaded as our Fact is an Impeachment of High Treason, what would they have had us to do, or wherein is our Fault? What would they have had us said? We were impeached of any High Treason, so and so particularizing, how can that be? There is no such Thing. Then they would have said, Nul. Tiel. Record; and we must have been condemned for failing in our Record: Then indeed we had been where they would have had us. But having done according to our Fact, if that Fact be such as in Law will out this Court of Jurisdiction, I see not how it is possible we should plead otherwise, or what Answer they will give to it.

My Lord, I will meddle as little as I can with what hath been said, they have mentioned that it is a Case of an high Nature, and this Impeachment in Parliament they will look upon it as the Suit of all the People of England; why then, my Lord, this must needs be agreed to me, if this Impeachment in Parliament be in the Nature of an Appeal, surely an Appeal does suspend the Proceedings upon an Indictment for that Fact: Which is the Case expressly in my Lord Dyer, Fol. 296. Stanley was indicted of Murder, and convicted; after he was convicted, and before any Judgment, the Wife of the Party murdered brought her Appeal; then came they and moved for Judgment: No, said the Court, here is an Appeal brought, and they could not go to Judgment till that Appeal was determined. So the Stat. of 3 H. VII. Cap. 1. and Vaux's Case 4 Report, Fol. 39. An Appeal of Murder the Party convicted before Judgment, the Petitioner in the Appeal did die. Then an Indictment brought, and this Conviction pleaded in Bar of that Indictment, and adjudged to be a good Plea; but then there was a Fault found in the Appeal, upon which the Conviction on the Appeal was void in Law, and they went on upon the Indictment. This is to shew, that if this be of the Nature of an Appeal, then ought this Suit first to have its Course and Determination, before your Lordship proceed on this Indictment.

But, my Lord, whether it be of this Nature or no, is a Matter we know were under great Controversy; and whether your Lordship will interpose in that great Question, or whether it comes in Judgment under this Question, you will do well to consider: For it is a Matter of Parliament, and determinable among themselves, not in the Courts below, nor have ever inferior Courts taken upon them to meddle with the Actions of the superior Courts, but leave them to proceed according to their Laws: And if that be done in any Case, there will be as much Regard had in this great Cause to the Court of Parliament as in others.

Besides the Authorities cited out of my Lord Coke and others, I would cite one more, and that is Cotton's Records, 5 H. IV. Fol. 426. the Earl of Northumberland's Case. He comes and confesses himself to be guilty of an Offence against his Allegiance, the King delivered his Petition to the Justices, and would have them to consider of it; no, said the Parliament, it is Matter of Parliament, and the Judges have nothing to do with it: the Lords make a Protestation to this Purpose, and then they went on themselves, and adjudged it to be no Treason. There is only that one Record more which has been often cited, and that is, Rot. Parliamenti 11 R. II. Pars 1. N. 6. in this Parliament the Lords Spiritual and Temporal claimed the same Privilege. My Lord, I only offer these Things, with what my Lord Coke says hath been formerly thought Prudence in the Judges to do.

So that I hope, that if the Matter be good, the Form is as good as the Matter can be put into, and therefore we hope you will allow us the Benefit of it.

Mr. Attorney. May it please your Lordship, I am of Counsel in this Case for the King, and notwithstanding what hath been said, I take it, with Submission, that this Plea is a naughty Plea, as a Plea to your Jurisdiction, and there is no Matter disclosed therein that we can take a good Issue upon.

The great Substance of the Arguments of these Gentlemen assigned of Counsel for the Prisoner, is against the Prisoner. For the great Matter of their Arguments was, lest this Gentleman should escape (which Arguments in several Instances they have used to support the Plea) but the Prisoner pleads this Plea to the Purpose that he might escape. Therefore if these Gentlemen had taken Instructions from him, surely they would have used Arguments to the same Purpose that he might escape.

My Lord, they object we have admitted here that there is an Impeachment depending, that we have admitted it is for the same Matter, and that we have admitted the Parliament to be in being; but no Fact is admitted that is not well pleaded. Indeed if that be admitted that the Parliament is still in being, then it goes very hard with us; and if not so admitted, the whole Force of Mr. Williams's Argument falls to the Ground. But I say, my Lord, with Submission, to this Matter, that the Beginning, Continuance, Prorogation, Adjournments, and Dissolution of Parliaments, are of publick Cognizance, and the Court ex Officio will take Notice of them, so that they need not be averred. And so is the 41 of the Queen, the Bishop of Norwich's Case. A private Act of Parliament was pleaded, and the Day of the Parliament mistaken; there was a general Demurrer, and it was resolved that it was naught, and Judgment given against the Bishop, though no Exception was taken in particular, because the Days of the Beginning and Ending of Parliaments are of publick Notice; and the Judges take Notice, when a Parliament is in being, and when not. That's a sufficient Answer to that Matter.

Then for those many Cautions that have been given you, what a difficult Thing it is for two Jurisdictions to interfere, Mr. Fitz-Harris is much concerned in that Matter, who hath forfeited his Life to the Law as a most notorious Offender that certainly deserves nothing but Punishment; yet he would fain live a little longer, and is much concerned that the Judicature of Parliament should be preserved. If it be not Law, he shall not be oppressed in it; but if it be Law, fiat Justitia. Certainly no Consideration whatsoever ought to put Courts of Justice out of their steady Course; but they ought to proceed according to the Laws of the Land.

My Lord, I observe it is an unusual Plea, and perhaps they had some Reason to put it so. It concludes, si curia procedere vult, I wonder they did not put in aut debeat, that is the usual Form of such Pleas; for you have no Will but the Law, and if you cannot give Judgment, you ought not to be pressed in it; but it being according to Law that great Offenders and Malefactors should be brought to condign Punishment, we must press it, whatsoever the Consequences are. And if we did not take it to be the Interest of all the Kingdom, and of the Commons too as well as of the King, my Lord, I should not press it; but it is all their Interest that so notorious a Malefactor that hath certainly been guilty of Treason in the highest Degree; and that for the utmost Advancement of the late Popish Plot, should not escape, or the Truth be stifled, but brought into Examination in the Face of the Sun, that all Men may see what a villainous Thing hath been attempted to raise up the whole Kingdom against the King: But they say, if it be not Law, you will not proceed, it ties your Hands. But, with Submission, they have not given you one Instance to make good what they say. Many Things have been, that a Plea depending in a superior Court is pleadable to the Jurisdiction of an inferior Court: for, my Lord, that is it we put upon them to shew: If it had been pleaded in Abatement, it would have had its Weight, and been considered of, as in Sperry's Case, where it was no Plea to the Jurisdiction.

Put the Case it had been a good Impeachment, and he had been arraigned upon it and acquitted; if he had afterwards come to be indicted in this Court, and the Prisoner will not plead this in Bar but to the Jurisdiction of the Court, it would not have been a good Plea; but he had lost his Advantage by mispleading. If then an Arraignment, and an Acquittal, or Conviction thereupon, is not a good Plea to the Jurisdiction; then certainly an Impeachment depending singly cannot be a good Plea to the Jurisdiction. This Court hath a full Jurisdiction of this Case, and of this Person, both of the Crime and of the Party, who is a Commoner; and not only to find the Indictment, but to proceed to Justice; and this you had at the Time of the Fact committed. For certainly, we need not put Cases for to prove that the King's-Bench, especially since the Statute for trying Treason beyond the Seas, hath an universal Jurisdiction of all Persons and Offences. Pray then what is it that must out this Court of their Jurisdiction? For all the Cases that have been, or can be put about Matters which are not originally examinable in this Court, make not to the Matter in question: there, it is true, the Court may be by Plea outed of its Jurisdiction; as at Common Law, where a Fact is done super altum mare, and so pleaded, that puts it out of the Court's Jurisdiction; and that was my Lord Hollis's and Sir J. Elliot's Case, and so that was my Lord Shaftesbury's Case too, the Fact was done out of their Jurisdiction, and that may be pleaded to the Jurisdiction, because they had no original Jurisdiction of the Fact; but where the Crime and the Person were absolutely within the Jurisdiction of the Court, and the Court may originally take Cognizance of it, as this Court had of the present Case, I would fain know what can out that Jurisdiction less than an Act of Parliament: I will be bold to say, the King by his Great-Seal cannot do it; nor can an Act of either House, or both Houses together without the King, out the Jurisdiction. To say, their Proceedings ought to be a Bar, that is another Case, the Party hath his Advantage, and may plead it in Abatement or Bar, as the Case requires: For if there had been an Acquittal or Conviction, the Party could not plead it to the Jurisdiction. Therefore for those Cases they put, when you come to examine the Reason of them, you see how they stand, viz. that the Court had no original Jurisdiction.

My Lord Shaftesbury was committed by the Lords for a Crime in that House; a Contempt to that House; he is brought here, and it appears to be a Commitment in Execution. My Lord, that was out of your Jurisdiction; and if you had bailed him, what would you have done? would you have bailed him to be tried here? No, you could not do it, and therefore you proceeded not in that Case. And so in the other Cases: for there is not one of their Cases that have been cited of the other Side, but where it was out of the Jurisdiction of the Court originally, and not at all within it. As for the Case of the five Lords in the Tower, because they say it will have a mighty Influence upon them, and they put the Case, that there was in December an Indictment, and afterwards an Impeachment from the Commons; and they cite some Opinion, given at the Council-board, which I hope these Gentlemen will not say was a judicial Opinion, or any way affects this Cause: But for that, my Lord, I observe, the Lords took care that these Indictments should be all removed into the Lord's House; so they did foresee that the King might have proceeded upon the Indictments, if they had not been removed thither. But our Case now is quite another Thing: For those Lords were not fully within your Jurisdiction. You cannot try a Peer of the Realm for Treason; and besides, the Lords have pleaded in full Parliament, where, by the Law of Parliament, all the Peers are to be their Judges; and so you cannot out them of that Right. And the Reason is plain, because thereby you must do them an apparent Prejudice; they having pleaded there, all the whole Peerage are their Triers. But upon Trial before Commissioners, they must have but a select Number of Peers to be their Triers. But in none of those Cases hath any Judicial Opinion been given: For the Case of 11 R. II. first cited by Sir Fran. Winnington, and then by Mr. Pollexfen, a Declaration in Parliament, That they proceeded according to the Law of Parliament, and not according to the Common Law, nor according to the Practice of inferior Courts; that will be nothing to our Purpose at all, that was in Case of the Lords Appellants. A Proceeding contrary to Magna Charta, contrary to the Statute of Edw. III. and the known Privilege of the Subject. But those Proceedings had a Countenance in Parliament; for there was an Oath taken by all the Lords in Parliament, that they would stand by the Lords Appellants. And thereupon they would be controuled by none, and they would not be advised by the Judges, but proceed to the trying of Peers and Commoners according to their own Will and Pleasure. And between that Time of 11 R. II. and 1 H. IV. see what Havock they made by those illegal Proceedings; and in 1 H. IV. you will see, that these very Lords were sentenced, except one or two of them who were pardoned; and then it was expressly resolved by Act of Parliament, that no more Appeals of that Nature, nor any Appeals whatsoever, should be any more in Parliament. And if so, these Gentlemen had best consider how they make an Impeachment like an Appeal: For in that Statute, it is said, there shall be no more Appeals. And the Petition upon which this Act is founded, runs thus: They pray that no Impeachment or Appeal may be in Parliament. But when the King came to make the Grant, he grants only for Appeals, and principally to out those Lords Appellants who were condemned by that very Parliament. So that it is a very pretty Matter at this Time of Day to liken an Impeachment to an Appeal.

But, my Lord, the other great Point is this. There is nothing at all certainly disclosed to you by this Plea; therefore there is nothing confessed by us, only the Fact that is well pleaded: therefore I shall come to consider what is said by them, as to the Form of it. They say, my Lord, that they have pleaded it to be secundum Legem & Consuetudinem Parliamenti; and if that be sufficient, let them have said what they would, that would have healed all. But I say, my Lord, with Submission, they must disclose to you what is the Law and Custom of Parliament in such Case, or else you must take it upon you upon your own Knowledge, or you cannot give Judgment. It is very well known what this Lex & Consuetudo Parliamenti is; no Person versed in the Records, but knows it, that by Course of Parliament a Message goes up with a Declaration to impeach the Party generally; and then after there are Articles or a Bill of Impeachment produced. Now till that be produced, sure there is no Counsel of the other side will say, that ever the Party can be called to answer. And because these Gentlemen do pretend to urge their Knowledge herein, I would observe there are three Things to be considered of the Parliament; the Legislative Part, the Matters of Privilege, and the Judicial Part proper to this Case. For the Legislative Part, and Matters of Privilege, both Houses do proceed only secundum Legem & Consuetudinem Parliamenti; but for the Judicial Part, does any Man question, but that in all Times they have been guided and directed by the Statutes and Laws of the Land? And have been outed of a Jurisdiction in several Cases, as by the Statute of 4 Edw. III. and 1 H. IV. And the Lords in all Writs of Error, and all Matters of Judgment, proceed secundum Legem Terræ; and so for Life and Death. And there is not one Law in Westminster-Hall, as to Matters of Judgment, and another in the Court of the Lords above. But I will not trouble your Lordship any further to pursue these Things. But it is not sufficiently disclosed to you, that there is any such Thing as an Impeachment depending there; it is only alledged, that he was impeached, and so much the News-Book told us, that he was impeached: but to infer from thence that there was an Impeachment carried up and lodged for the same High Treason, is no Consequence. And then it is alledged, Quæ quidem Impetitus, when no Impeachment is before set forth, but only that he was impeached generally. And as I observed before, a Person might go up with a Message to impeach, but that cannot be said to be an Impeachment to which the Party is compelled to answer; it must be an Impeachment on Record, and appearing on the Face of the Record for what Crime it is; and so they ought to have set it forth.

Now that this is too general that is alledged here, I take it the Books are very full. When a Record is pleaded in Bar or in Abatement, the Crimes ought to be set out to appear the same, and so, my Lord, are all the Precedents of Coke's Entries 53, Holderst's and Burgh's Case, and Watt's and Bray's Case in 41 and 42 of Queen Eliz. Coke's Ent. 59. Wroth's and Wigg's Case, 4 Rep. 45. and in Lewes and Scholastica's Case, and Div's and Manning's Case. The Record must be set out, that the Court may judge upon it; and the Record must not be tried per pais, but by itself. But for what they say, plead it never so certainly, there must be an Averment, it must be so it is true; but that is for another Purpose than they urge it. The Reason is, because if it be for another Fact that he hath committed, he may be indicted again, though it be of the same Nature; but whether of the same Nature, or not of the same Nature, is the Thing must appear upon the Record pleaded, because the Court must be ascertained, that it was sufficient for the Party to answer to it; for if it were insufficient, he may be again proceeded against: As if an Indictment be pleaded which was insufficient, though the Party pleads an Acquittal or Conviction upon it, it will not avail him; for the Court will proceed on the other Indictment. And so is the Resolution in Vaux's Case, and in Wigg's Case; though there was a Judgment given of Acquittal, yet he was tried again. So that, my Lord, that is one great Reason why it must appear, that the Court may judge whether it be sufficient for the Party to answer. And you have now that here before you; if this be such an Impeachment as they have pleaded it, as this Person could not answer to by any Law of Parliament or other Court; then it is not sufficient to out you of your Jurisdiction. And I do think, that by no Law they are, or can be compellable to answer to a general Impeachment of High-Treason. And to give you Authority in that, there are many might be cited, as the Cases of my Lord Stafford, and the other Lords in the Tower, and so is the ancient Course of Parliament: With Submission, I will be bold to say, the Impeachments are all so, that ever I met with. And it appears by them, that they all conclude contra Coronam & Dignitatem Regis, in the Form of Indictments, laying some Overt-Acts and the special particular Crimes for which the Person is impeached, as Overt-Acts for Treason required by the Statute of 25 Edw. III. And I hope they will not say, that without an Overt-Act laid in the Impeachment, the Impeachment can be good. If then this be so general that it cannot make the Crime appear to the Court, and is so insufficient, that the Court cannot give Judgment, I take it you will go on upon the Indictment, which chargeth him with a particular Crime.

My Lord, Mr. Pollexfen does put the Case of Barretrie where such Averment is allowable; but that is a special, certain, and particular Crime, but High-Treason is not so; there are Abundance of special Sorts of High-Treason, there is but one Sort of Barretrie, and there are no Sub-divisions; therefore there is nothing to be averred but the special Fact that makes that Barretrie.

Then there was another Authority out of the Book of Affizes cited by Sir Fran. Winnington, and greatly relied upon. A Man is indicted for the Murder of J. S. and afterwards for the Murder of J. N. the former was pleaded to the second, with an Averment that it is the same Person; that is but according to the common Form of Averments, to be of Matter of Fact. For if J. S. was known, as well by the Name of J. N. as of J. S. the Indictment was for the Murder of the same Person, and there it is pure Fact averred. But where it is essential, as this Case is, that the particular Treason do appear; to say, that it is the same particular Treason, and to say, that Matter of Fact averred shall enlarge a Record, I think, is impossible to be found any where. And of all the Cases that I have seen or heard, I confess none of the Instances comes up to it: For the Case in Moor, King, and Howard, cited by Sir Francis Winnington, that is an Authority as expressly against him, that nothing can be more: For if there be an Indictment for Felony in such a particular Act, and then he is indicted again, he cannot come and plead a general Indictment of Felony, and then aver 'tis for the particular Felony, and so to make the Fact enlarge the Record, and put Matter of Record to be tried by a Jury.

Mr. Wallop was of Opinion, that upon this Averment the Jury may try the Fact. What a pretty Case would it be, that a Jury should judge upon the whole Debates of the House of Commons, whether it be the same Matter or no: For those Debates must be given in Evidence, if such an Issue be tried. I did demur with all the Care that I could, to bring nothing of that in Question; but your Lordship knows if they have ever so much in particular against a Man, when they come to make good their Impeachment, they must ascertain it to a particular Crime; and the Overt-Acts must be alledged in the Impeachment, or else there is another Way to hang a Subject than what is the King's Highway all over England. And admit there was an Intimation of a Purpose to impeach, a Message sent up, and any Judgment given thereupon, pray consider what may be the Consequence as to the Government; a very great Matter depends upon this: If there be any Record of that Parliament, then is the French Act gone: For so is the Resolution in 12 Jacobi, where the Journal-Book was full of Proceedings; yet because there was no Judgment passed, nor no Record of a Judgment in a Writ of Error, they adjudged it no Session; but if any Judgment had been given, then it had been otherwise. So that the Consequences of these Things are not easily seen, when Men debate upon touchy Matters.

But that which is before your Lordship is this Point upon the Pleading, and I conceive I have answered all the Precedents they have cited; therefore, my Lord, I take it, with Submission, there is nothing of that Matter before you concerning an Impeachment depending before the Parliament; but whatsoever was done, 'tis so imperfectly pleaded, that this Court cannot take any Notice of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I shall endeavour to be short, and shall confine myself (because I am tender of your Time) to the Point in Question; which is, Whether this Plea be sufficient in Point of Form? There have been many Things said on the other Side, which I must crave Leave to take Notice of, so far only as to shew they are not in Question before you. Those are what relate to the Matter of the Plea; for they argue 'tis good both in Matter and Form: And from the Matter of the Plea they have taken Occasion to debate, whether a Commoner may be impeached? Whether this Court hath Power to judge of the Privileges and Course of Parliament? None of which Questions will arise upon our Case now. Therefore I will not now debate, whether Magna Charta, that hath ordained that every Man shall be tried by his Peers, and the Statute of 4 Edw. III. which says, That the Lords shall not be compelled, nor shall have Power to give Judgment upon a Commoner, have sufficiently secured the Liberty of the Subject from Impeachments. Nor is it the Question before your Lordship, whether you shall judge of any Matter that is a Right or Privilege of Parliament; here is nothing before you that was done in Parliament; but this is an Indictment for High-Treason, committed by Fitz-Harris in this County. Now, my Lord, as that is not the Question, neither will it be the Question, Whether an Impeachment depending in the House of Lords against a Commoner, by the House of Commons, will bar this Court of Jurisdiction? For though they have entered upon it, and debated it at large, and seemed to obviate the Objections made to that if it had been a Question; as by the saying that the King hath no Election, because this is not the Suit of the King, but the Suit of the Subject: I will not now ex insinuatione argue that Point; but I will humbly offer a few Things to your Lordship's Consideration, and I shall take my Hints from them. They say, the House of Commons are the grand Inquest of the Nation, to enquire of Treasons and other High Crimes, and they make these Presentments to the House of Lords. Now when such a Presentment is made, 'tis worthy Consideration, whether it be not a Presentment for the King; for an Impeachment does not conclude as an Appeal does, but contra Ligeantiae suae Debitum, & Coronam & Dignitatem Domini Regis; so far 'tis the King's Suit. In an Impeachment the Witnesses for the Prisoner are not sworn, the Prisoner hath not Council for his Life in Matter of Fact, as in Cases of Appeal, at the Suit of the Subject he hath. The King may pardon part of the Sentence, it was done so in Rich. the 1st's Time, and it was done so lately in my Lord Stafford's Case; but take it for a Supposition that it is the Suit of the People, yet that cannot preclude the King from his Suit neither; for at Common Law before the Statute of 3 Hen. VII. where a Man had an Appeal for Murder, the King had not his Hands tied up, not to proceed upon the Indictment: It had been used so, I do agree, and so 'tis recited, that it had been used so, in the Statute of 3 Hen. VII. but there was no positive Law for it, nor could it have been pleaded in Bar or an Indictment, that the Indictment was within the Year, but the King used to stay out the Year in Favour of that Suit. But since the Statute, the Use is otherwise; and the Reason why they proceed immediately is, because now an Acquittal or an Attainder upon the Indictment is no Bar to the Appeal, but the Party may go on in his Appeal. I mention this, because the Consequence which they urge as such a dismal one, will be nothing; which is, What if he should be acquitted here, he could not plead autrefois acquit, so would be twice brought in Jeopardy for the same Offence. For it is the same in all Cases of Appeals, a Man comes in Jeopardy twice if he be indicted within the Year, and attained or acquitted within the Year, it is no Bar to the Appeal. But this is not like the Case of an Appeal for Murder neither; for though it hath been used discretionally in the Court to stay the Suit of the King, and to prefer the Suit of the Subject, it was then because the Subject had the first and nearest concern, as the Son in the Death of his Father, and it did mostly concern him to prosecute it. The King is concerned as the Fountain of Justice only, to bring Offenders to condign Punishment; but the nearest Damage, and the first to be preferred, was that of the Party who had lost his Relation. Now the Reason of that turns quite contrary here: For as in that Case the Subject had the nearest Concern in the Loss of his Father, and so was best intitled to the Suit; so in this Case that very Reason will have the King's Suit to be preferred: For there is no Treason but against the King, and in Treason against himself, the King has the nearest Concern, and the Wrong is primarily and originally to himself. And the Subjects Damage is but a Consequence of that, as all hurt to the King must needs hurt the People. So the King's Suit is to be preferred here, as the Subjects was in the other Case.

Now for the Objection that has been made, That if you try this Man, upon the same Reason you may try the Lords in the Tower. Their Case is different, as hath been already observed by Mr. Attorney; and that which has been done by the Lords in that Case, to me does rather seem to imply, that this Trial may be in this Case. For if the Lords after an Impeachment brought up against the five Lords in the Tower, and after the special Manner in the Articles which does ascertain upon what they do proceed, have thought fit notwithstanding to remove the Indictment by Certiorari into Parliament (for so it was in Fact) that no Prosecution might be upon them; then certainly they thought the King's Court might proceed without doing so.

My Lord, I will mention no more upon this Matter; but leave it to your Lordship's Consideration: But as to the Form of the Plea, I do conceive, with Submission, 'tis not a formal Plea.

We know here of no Form of pleading an Indictment, but what does set forth the Indictment particular; the Precedents are so, 'tis so in Vaulx's Case, and all the Precedents that I have seen: So is the Precedent in Raft. Ent. where in an Appeal the Defendant waged Battle, the Plaintiff replies he was formerly indicted, he sets forth the Indictment particularly. All the Precedents are so, and the Law-Books resolve it must be so; as Wroth and Wigg's Case, where the Defendant in an Appeal of Murder by the Wife pleads, that he was indicted for Manslaughter before the Coroner of the Verge, and Coroner of the County, for killing the Husband at Shepperton, in the County of Middlesex, and had his Clergy with Reference to the Record, and the usual Averments; with this farther, that he averred that Shepperton at the time of the Indictment and Death was within the Verge. To which the Plaintiff demurred, and Judgment for the Plaintiff. Now two Things are resolved by this Judgment.

1. That 'tis necessary to set forth the whole Record of the Indictment, or otherwise they ought not to have given Judgment for the Plaintiff, by reason the Indictment was sufficient, as 'twas pleaded, in that it did not say that Shepperton was within the Verge, which was necessary to entitle the Coroner of the Verge to a Jurisdiction, because being pleaded with Reference to the Record upon Nul tiel Record pleaded, and the Record thereupon brought in, that Defect might have been cured.

2. That no Averment of Fact can supply that which should appear upon Record, therefore the Averment that Shepperton was within the Verge, did not mend the Matter, though confessed by the Demurrer as much as it is in this Case, that 'tis the same Treason.

But they say, there is a Difference between this Case and those which I have put; for that 'tis the Course of Parliament (of which your Lordships must take Notice), to impeach general; so they could not have pleaded otherwise than they have done, unless they had pleaded it otherwise than the Cases were: This Reason holds rather the other Way; for if in any Case such a general Way of pleading with Reference to the Record were to be admitted, it were in case of an Indictment, because the Court knows there is no Indictment but what does particularly set forth the Felony, which when produced, is capable of being applied: But here if the Record be brought in, 'twill no more ascertain the Matter of the Impeachment, than the Plea does already. And whereas they say your Lordship is bound to take Notice of the Course of Parliament, so your Lordship will take Notice too, that 'tis not the Course of Parliaments to try any Man upon such a general Impeachment. I never heard of any Man (I speak it with Submission to them that know better) that was brought to plead Not Guilty, upon a general Impeachment of High-Treason; that is, upon the Commons bare saying, We do impeach such an one of High-Treason. I know none that ever was brought to answer that general Accusation.

And now, my Lord, as the Plea is nought for not setting out the Record, so is the Averment, with Submission, insufficient too. For though he does aver, That the Treason in the Indictment, and the Treason for which he was impeached, are one and the same, and not divers affirmatively and negatively; yet as this Case is, he ought to have said, That the Treason for which he is indicted, and the Treason mentioned in the Impeachment, is one and the same: For if he was impeached generally for High-Treason without Mention of Particulars, it is impossible to be reduced to a Certainty: So 'tis an Averment of a Fact not capable to be tried.

First, Because, with Submission to these Gentlemen that have said it, the Debates of the House of Commons are not to be given in Evidence, and made publick to a Jury: Nay, they are not always possible to be reduced to a Certainty, as the Circumstances may be; for they do not always particularly resolve upon what Particulars they will accuse before they go up, but a general Allegation serves the Turn: So that such Averment is not triable per pais, because as the Case may be, it may not be capable of any Certainty from the Debates of the House of Commons.

Another Reason is, because, by this Way of pleading, Proceedings may be staid for Treason, though subsequent to the Impeachment, which no Man yet has pretended to say: For suppose now a general Impeachment lodged, and a Treason afterwards committed by the Party, I think no Man will say, that the House of Commons, when they bring up their special Matters, cannot make even this subsequent Treason an Article upon that Impeachment; neither can it be said that such Averment as this is, upon such Plea pleaded to an Indictment here below, would be repugnant, because there is no time at all laid in the Impeachment as 'tis here pleaded, nor no Time when the Impeachment was brought up; so that it cannot appear to the Court, whether the Treason in the Indictment be subsequent or not: The Consequence of which is, we must try whether the House of Commons, upon this general Impeachment, did intend to proceed to try him for a Fact committed after the Impeachment carry'd up. My Lord, this would be to affirm, that a Man once impeach'd in Parliament shall never be tried for any Offence; it would be like that Privilegium Clericale, which they made use of to exempt themselves from Punishment for all Offences.

But, my Lord, we do think upon the whole Matter, without entering upon the Debate, whether a particular Impeachment lodg'd in the House of Lords does preclude the King from his Proceedings, we have a good Case upon this Plea; for that is not a Question necessary to be resolv'd, though it be not granted by the King neither. But the Question is, Whether this be a formal Plea, and whether here be sufficient Matter set forth upon Record to bring that other Matter into question, and tie up the Hands of the Court?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, there hath been already enough spoken in this Case. I shall desire only to offer one Word to that single Point, viz. the Informality of the Plea; which I take to be the sole Question in this Case: For to argue, whether because there was no Bill pass'd, or Decree made in the House of Lords (though the Articles had been carry'd up) the Impeachment did not fall to the Ground by the Dissolution, I conceive altogether improper; for I think it does not affect the Question: Though I desire to take Notice that Sir Fr. Winnington, Mr. Williams, and Mr. Wallop were all Mistaken: For there were no such Concessions made by any of the King's Counsel the other Day, as they alledge; because we did not think it to be the Question, and therefore made no Discourses about it.

But, my Lord, I desire first to take Notice of a Case or two that hath been cited on the other Side; and then I shall apply myself to that which is the Question before you at this Time. They cite the Case of the Lords in the Tower as a Judgment for them, which seems to be a Judgment against them: For by the Lords granting a Certiorari to remove the Judgments into Parliament, they seem to be of Opinion, that notwithstanding they were impeach'd before the Lords, yet there might have been Proceedings below upon those Indictments, had they not been remov'd; and there they remain to this Day. Nay further, to those Impeachments they have pleaded to Issue, which is read for a Trial: But in the Case at Bar, there only is an Accusation, without any further Proceeding thereupon.

And as to the Case of my Lord Shaftesbury, that makes strongly for us as I conceive. Mr. Justice Jones's Opinion was taken Notice of by Sir Fran. Winnington, that they would not meddle by any Means with Matters depending in Parliament: But I must remember, he then gave this Reason for his Opinion, because the Parliament was then in being. And I must humbly put your Lordship in mind, that the whole Court did then declare, That if the Parliament had been dissolved, they would have said something more to that Case. I do not say, that they would have given such or such a Judgment; but I attended at the Bar at that Time, and I appeal to the Memory of the Court, if the Court did not then make such a Declaration.

But now to the Question: Without all Peradventure, the Cases cited by Mr. Pollexfen are true. If I bring a general Indebitatus assumpsit for Wares, sold and delivered, and after bring a particular Indebitatus assumpsit for such and such Wares, naming the Particulars, the Party may come and plead in Bar, and aver it is for the same Thing; and it is a good Averment, because there is sufficient Matter set forth in the Record to support such an Averment: For the Doubt is only, whether the particular Goods mentioned in the second, be not the same that were intended under those general Words (Goods and Merchandizes) in the first.

But suppose there had been only an Account brought, and no Declaration put in, could then the Defendant have pleaded such a Plea with such an Averment, when there was not sufficient Matter of Record set forth in their Pleading, whereby the Court might be able to give a Judgment, or put it into a way of Trial, whether it was for the same or not?

And is it not so in this Case? there being but a bare Accusation: For I still keep to the Informality of the Pleading, and I take it not to be such a dangerous Case, as these Gentlemen of the other Side do pretend, for you to determine it. For I am sure it will be better for the Court to answer, if ever they shall be required, that they have performed their Duty, and done Justice according to their Consciences and their Oaths, than ever to be afraid of any Threats or Bugbears from the Bar.

For would not they, by this Manner of Pleading, put upon your Lordships a Difficulty to judge, without any thing contained in the Impeachment to guide your Judgment, whether the Prisoner be impeached for the same thing Thing for which he is indicted? May not the Treason intended in this Impeachment be for clipping or coining of Money? for it is generally said to be only for High-Treason. How comes this then to be help'd, so as to be any way issuable, and be tried? Shall it be by that Way which Mr. Wallop laid down, that if Mr. Attorney had taken Issue, the Jury must have tried the Question by having the Debates of the House of Commons given in Evidence? Certainly that cannot be, my Lord. If there were but one Sort of Treason, there might be some Colour for this Sort of Pleading; but there are divers Kinds of Treasons, and how is it capable to be tried? Who can prove the Intentions of the House of Commons, before they are come to a Resolution? and therefore cannot be given in Evidence, or be regularly brought into Judgment.

Therefore we rely upon the Informality and Uncertainty of the Pleading only; and meddle not with the Question, whether an Impeachment in the House of Lords supercedes an Indictment in the King's Bench? For we say, they have not pleaded it so substantially, as to enable the Court to judge upon the Question: And therefore we pray your Lordship's Judgment, that the Plea may be over-ruled.

Sir Fran. Withins. My Lord, there has been so much of your Time already taken up by those Gentlemen that have argued before me, that I shall be very short in what I have to say.

The Question is not at this Time, how far forth the Commons in Parliament may impeach or not impeach a Commoner, before the Lords in Parliament, or where the Lords may admit or not admit of such Impeachments? That is not the Case here, as I humbly conceive, nor will I meddle with it: I shall only speak to the Validity of the Plea according to Law. Now, I say, that this Plea of the Prisoner as thus pleaded, cannot be good to out this Court of Jurisdiction: For first, The Prisoner cannot be admitted to make the Averment in this Plea, that the Treason mentioned in the Impeachment in Parliament, and that contained in this Indictment, is the same; for if, as the Gentlemen that argued on the other Side, urg'd, that this Court must take Notice of the Proceedings and Law of Parliament, then you will take Notice that no Person is there tried upon a general Impeachment of Treason. Special Articles are always first exhibited: In this Case then either the House of Commons have carried up special Articles against the Prisoner to the Lords in Parliament or not; if the House have done it, then the Plea might have been pleaded better by setting forth the Articles (which is part of what they say on the other Side, that it could be pleaded no better,) for then it would have appeared plainly whether the Treason were the same or not. If the Articles are not carried up, shall it lie in the Mouth of any particular Person to say, what Articles the Commons in Parliament would have carried up? Shall any single Person be admitted to say, what the House would have done, before the House itself says it? In Cases of Impeachments, it lies in the Discretion and Judgment of the Commons upon Debate to exhibit what Articles they in their Wisdoms shall think fit; and sure it shall never come, that any particular Person shall limit them to this or that particular Treason before-hand; no surely.

Now suppose in such a Case as this, after such a Plea pleaded, the Commons upon Deliberation should carry up Articles quite different; such a Plea then would appear to be a stark Lie, and the pleading and allowing of it, an apparent Delay of Justice. So that I conceive, my Lord, the Prisoner shall by no Means be admitted (nor indeed can it be, to aver the Intention of the House of Commons, which cannot be tried) before they have declared it themselves; and therefore I conceive the Plea to be naught for that Reason.

But, my Lord, I conceive that the Prisoner's Plea is ill for another Reason, because the Court in this Case, by any Thing expressed in this Plea, cannot discern nor take notice whether it be the same Treason or not.

Now the Reason why the Record, as this Case is, ought to be alledged specially, is because the Matter contained in it may plainly appear to the Court, and then by that Means the Court might judge whether it be the same Treason or not. Now Treason generally alledged in the Impeachment, is the Genus, and the particular Treason mentioned in the Indictment is only a Species, and the Averment in the Plea is, that the Genus and the Species is the same; which is absurd, and if allowed, tends to hood-wink and blind the Court, instead of making the Matter plain for their Judgment.

Plea ought to be plain and certain, because the Court, upon them alledged, is to judge either of Men's Estates or Lives; and for that Reason the Matter ought to come plainly and fairly before them, that Wrong may be done to neither Party by Reason of the Obscureness or Doubtfulness of the Allegation: If therefore the Hoodwink be brought instead of a Plea, it ought not to be allowed. And therefore for these Reasons (for what I have farther to say, has been already said by others) I conceive it ought to be over-ruled. I humbly submit it to the Court.

L. C. J. You have done your Arguments, Gentlemen, on all Sides?

Counsel. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, I'll tell you, you have taken up a great Part of our Time. We never intended, when we assigned four Counsel to Mr. Fitz-Harris, that they all should make formal Arguments in one Day, it is the first time that ever it was done; but because it is as you press it in a Case of Blood, we were willing to hear all you could say, that you might not afterwards say, but that you were fully heard on all Sides. But in Truth, I must tell you, you have started a great many Things that are not in the Case at all. We have nothing to do here, whether the Commons House at this Day can impeach for Treason any Commoner in the House of Lords; we have nothing to do with this, what the Lords Jurisdiction is, nor with this Point, whether an Impeachment in the Lords House (when the Lords are possessed fully of the Impeachment) does bar the bringing any Suit, or hinder the Proceeding in an inferior Court: But here we have a Case that rises upon the Pleadings; whether you have brought here before us a sufficient Plea to take away the Jurisdiction of the Court, as you have pleaded it, that will be the sole Point that is before us: And you have heard what Exceptions have been made to the Form, and to the Matter of your Pleading. We do ask you again, Whether you think you are able to mend your Pleading in any thing, for the Court will not catch you, if you have any thing wherein you can amend it, either in Matter or Form? If you will let us know it, we shall consider of it; but if you have not, if you abide by this Plea, then we do think it is not reasonable, nor will be expected of us in a Matter of this Consequence to give our Judgment concerning this Plea presently. All the Cases cited concerning Facts done in Parliament, and where they have endeavoured to have them examined here, are nothing to the Purpose at all. For plainly, we do not assume to ourselves a Jurisdiction to enquire of such Matters: For Words spoken, or Facts done in the Commons-House, or in the Lords, we call none to question here, nor for any Thing of that Nature, which takes off most of the Instances you have given; but our Question is barely upon the Pleading before us, Whether we have a sufficient Pleading of such an Impeachment as can foreclose the Hands of the Court? And as to that, we shall take some reasonable Time to consider of it; we will not precipitate in such a Case, but deliberate well upon it before we give our Judgment. Take back your Prisoner.

Mr. Att. Gen. Before he goes away, we hope you will set a reasonable Time, as short as you can, to have him come again, for your Judgment.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, we can send for him when we please, to come hither by Rule; you see this Business is come on in the busy Part of a Term, and it is impossible for the Court to attend nothing but this, we will take some reasonable Time.

[Then Fitz-Harris was carried back to the Tower.]

On Tuesday, May 10. Mr. Attorney moved the Court to appoint a Day for their Judgment on the Plea, and for Fitz-Harris to be brought up, which they appointed to be the next Morning.

And accordingly on Wednesday Morning, May 11, he was brought from the Tower to Westminster-Hall.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I pray that Fitz-Harris may be brought to the Bar.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Where is the Lieutenant of the Tower? Bid him bring Fitz-Harris to the Bar, (which was done.)

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I pray your Judgment on the plea.

L. C. J. Mr. Fitz-Harris, you have been arraigned here for High-Treason, and it is for endeavouring and compassing the King's Death, and other Treasons, specially mentioned in this Indictment; you have pleaded here to the Jurisdiction of this Court, that there was an Impeachment against you by the Commons of England in Parliament, before the Lords, for the Crime of High-Treason; and you do say, that that Impeachment is yet in Force; and you do say, by way of Averment, that this Treason whereof you are now indicted, and the Treason whereof you were impeached by the Commons of England, before the Lords, are one and the same Treason. And upon this the Attorney-General for the King hath demurred, and you have joined in Demurrer: And we have heard the Arguments of your Counsel, whom we assigned to argue it for you; we have heard them at large, and have considered of your Case among ourselves; and upon full Consideration and Deliberation concerning your Case, and all that hath been said by your Counsel, and upon Conference that we have had with some other of the Judges, we are three of us of Opinion, that your Plea is not sufficient to bar this Court of its Jurisdiction; my Brother Jones, my Brother Raymond, and myself, are of Opinion that your Plea is insufficient, my Brother Dolben not being resolved, but doubting concerning it. And therefore the Court does order and award, that you shall answer over to this Treason.

Cl. of Crown. Edward Fitz-Harris, hold up thy Hand.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I desire I may have Liberty to advise with my Counsel before I plead.

L. C. J. Mr. Fitz-Harris, when you proposed a Difficulty you had in a Matter of Law, the Court were willing to assign you Counsel; because it is known you cannot be a fitting Person to advise yourself concerning the Law. But as to this, we cannot assign you Counsel; it is only a Matter of Fact, whether you be guilty or not guilty. Therefore in this Case you can't have Counsel allowed to advise you.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I desire, before I plead, or do any thing of that Nature, that I may make an End of my Confession before your Lordship, and some of the Privy Council.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, for that you have trifled with us already; you pretended you had some Scruples of Conscience, and that you were now become another Man, and would reveal and discover the whole of this Design and Plot, that you are said to be guilty of here: But you have trifled several Times concerning it, and we can say nothing concerning that now; we must now have your Plea: If afterwards you have a Mind to confess and be ingenuous, you may do it; but now you must either plead, or not plead.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I have some Witnesses a great way off, and I desire Time to have them ready for my Defence.

Cl. of Cr. Edward Fitz-Harris, hold up thy Hand (which he did); thou hast been indicted of High-Treason; upon that Indictment thou hast been arraigned, and hast pleaded to the Jurisdiction of this Court. To which Plea his Majesty's Attorney-General hath demurred, and thou hast joined therein: And upon the whole Matter, this Court, upon mature and considerate Deliberation, is of Opinion, that thou oughtest to answer over. How sayest thou, art thou Guilty of the High-Treason whereof thou hast been indicted, and hast been arraign'd, or not Guilty?

Mr. Fitz-Harris. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Cul. Priſt. &c. how wilt thou be tried?

Mr. Fitz-Harris. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

L. C. J. Now if you have any thing to move, do it. We could not hear your Motion till you had pleaded; for the Method of the Court must be observ'd.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. I have some Witnesses at a Distance, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where are your Witnesses?

Mr. Fitz-Harris. I have one Witness in Holland, a very material one; that I am much concerned to have for my Life.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What is his Name?

Mr. Fitz-Harris. His Name is Steward, my Lord.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Fitz-Harris, I'll tell you, reasonable Time is allowed to all Men to make their Defence in; but when a Man is in Holland, I know not what Time you will take for that.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. What Time your Lordship thinks fit for a Man to return from thence hither.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Attorney, why should not we allow Mr. Fitz-Harris Time for his Trial till next Term?

Mr. Att. Gen. I think he hath not offered any thing to entitle him to it: He doth not tell us, and I would fain know what the Witnesses will prove.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. It may be, Mr. Attorney, he will confess what it is that Witnesses can prove.

Mr. Att. Gen. For the whole Proof in a Case of Treason lies on our Side.

L. C. J. Commonly, and prima facie, it does so; but there may be some Things that the Prisoner may give in Evidence for himself that may be material for him to urge for his Defence.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I know not whether it be safe for me to tell what he can say.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Then you reserve it wholly in your own Judgment, whether he be a material Witness, or no?

Mr. Fitz-Harris. If my Lord Chief Justice pleases, I will acquaint him in private with it.

Mr. Att. Gen. I never saw any good Effect of these private Proceedings. If he have any thing to offer, he may do it publicly, in the Face of Justice: And therefore I desire he may be tried this Term; for he hath had a whole Term's Notice, and Time enough to consider what Persons are material Witnesses for him.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Unless he do shew good Cause to the contrary, he must be tried this Term.

Mr. Att. Gen. And, my Lord, where it is in the same County where the Fact was committed, there is the less Reason to stay; Criminals in High-Treason, the Fact must be plain and evident against them.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Attorney, peradventure he hath been made depend upon his Plea, and hath been advis'd so to do.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. Yes, my Lord, and have been close Prisoner, and not allowed to speak with any body.

L. C. J. If so, then it may be a Surprise upon him.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I have been allowed nothing to prepare for my Defence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, he ought to be provided for his Trial this Term. I do not know, my Lord, what Witnesses he can pretend to have; the Fact was done in Middlesex here, and the Proof of the Circumstances of that Fact do arise here; and I do not know what Surprise he can complain of. As to the Witness he tells you of, that is in Holland, he doth not tell you to what Purpose he is a Witness; so that you may know whether it be material or not. I know very well, my Lord, in the Old-Bailey, when the Priests did urge it, that they had Witnesses beyond the Sea in other Countries, they were not suffered to delay their Trial upon such a Pretence. We must submit it to your Lordship's Discretion: But we suppose it will not be a precipitous Proceeding, he having Notice of his Trial all this Term.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, truly, since he pretends he is surprised, and hath depended upon his Plea, and hath Witnesses that require some Time to fetch, we think it reasonable that he should have till the next Term; and we will defer it till then. We are all of that Opinion, (especially it being such a little Delay) to enable him to have what Witnesses he doth pretend to have.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I never desired in this Case, nor in any other, nor ever shall do, that Justice be precipitated. I know these open and fair Trials proceed with such equal Steps to all Parties, that we need not be hasty; and therefore, if your Lordship be of that Opinion, I submit to it, so it be the first Week of the next Term.

L. C. J. The first Week it cannot be.

Mr. Att. Gen. Within the first seven Days, I mean.

L. C. J. The first Thursday in the Term. And take Notice, Mr. Fitz-Harris, that is the Day appointed for your Trial.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. I desire Liberty to see my Wife, and have a Solicitor in the mean time.

L. C. J. I will tell you, for that, Mr. Fitz-Harris, the Court would never deny any thing of that nature to any one in your Condition and Circumstances; but your Wife makes an ill use of the Liberty we granted her: And if she do make an ill use of it, then the Court must restrain her, and hold their hands over her. If we were satisfy'd she would use the Liberty lawfully, and not abuse it—

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I am sure she will use it lawfully hereafter, and make no ill use of it.

L. C. J. Look you, upon her good usage of it, if she will fairly demean herself, and not abuse it again, we are willing to take off the last Rule, and she shall have the same Liberty she had before that Rule.

Mr. Sol. Gen. With this, if your Lordship please, we desire there may be some other Judge of her Prudence besides herself, and the Lieutenant of the Tower be by.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I desire I may have a Solicitor; for he was never allowed to come and speak to me, though I had a Rule for him.

L. C. J. Look you, as to your Counsel now, which was the main Reason why you prayed a Solicitor, we cannot allow you them any more; for now we are come to a Matter of Fact only, and we cannot by the Rules of Law allow you Counsel. Therefore what need you have of a Solicitor, I cannot tell; his business before, was to go from you to the Council, and from them to you, which is ceased now. But this, Mr. Attorney, if he have a desire to see Papers, and would send for any Papers that concern his Defence, so as they contain no new Treasonable Matters and Contrivances, he ought sure to have them; and if he have Papers at his House, or any where else, which he desires to make use of in his own Defence, being inspected by the Lieutenant, to see that there be no Matter of evil contained in them, he may have one to do that for him without any Danger.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I do not oppose it, my Lord; but I desire that all Caution may be us'd that can be; for this Solicitor of his is a Lawyer, and writes Tracts of Law: But any thing material for his Defence I am not against.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, you need not fear any harm will be that ways: For he is not to speak with him alone.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. I hope his Solicitor may come to him to take Instructions how to send for his Witnesses.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You can tell how to do that, surely, without a Solicitor.

L. C. J. Just as the last Rule was, let there be another Rule made: For he must have all just Advantages to enable him for his Defence.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. I hope I shall have a Rule of Court to make my Witnesses appear.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. That you may have without a Motion.

L. C. J. We will give you any thing that will enable you to make a fair Defence.

Cl. of Cr. He shall have Subpoena's for his Witnesses.

L. C. J. Then, Mr. Fitz-Harris, you must expect no other Notice. You must take notice now, that upon the first Thursday in the next Term, you are to receive your Trial here. Take the Prisoner back.

Mr. Att. Gen. In order to his Trial, I desire the Sheriff may bring in the Freeholders Book to the Clerk of the Crown, to strike the Jury.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, we will consider of that, how far can we do that, and the Course of the Court shall be observed. But I doubt how we can.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is the Practice in Trials at the Bar.

L. C. J. In civil causes, but not in Criminal, that I know of.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have reason to desire it; because we are afraid of some Practice in this Cause, and fear there may be some odd Carriage in the Return of them.

Mr. Fitz-Harris. May I not see my Wife before I go hence?

L. C. J. With all our Hearts; she may go to you, and with you, Sir, if you please: We will not hinder you of her Company, so she carry herself fairly.

Then the Lieutenant took back his Prisoner.

The Trial of Edward Fitz-Harris†, at the King's-Bench for High-Treason, June 9. 1681.
Trin. 33 Car. II.

ON Thursday 9 June, 1681, Edward Fitz-Harris was brought to the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench; and the Court being sat, proceeded thus:

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, I moved you the other Day, that before Mr. Fitz-Harris's Trial, he might give such Evidence as he had to give against Sir John Arundel and Sir Richard Beiling, concerning the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, before he be convicted of Treason; and we understood that it was the Direction of the Court, that we might move it this Morning before Conviction, that he might declare upon Oath here in Court what he knows of that Matter against those Gentlemen: For after he is convicted, I believe it will be too late for us to think of it. Mr. Godfrey hath a great Deal of Reason to desire what I now move, that his Brother's Murderers may be prosecuted; and we hope, all the Favour that can be granted in such a Case, will be granted unto us: For there hath been a Design of late set on Foot, to make it be believed, that Sir Edmundbury Godfrey murdered himself, notwithstanding that clear Evidence that hath been already given of this Matter, and notwithstanding that several Persons have been convicted and attainted upon that Evidence. So that these Gentlemen think themselves obliged to prosecute the Matter as far as they can, and beg of your Lordship, that what can be done for them may. And particularly, that he may perfect his Discovery against the two named at his last Examination before the Grand-Jury; and that his Examination about them may now be taken by the Court.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Thompson, that that you moved before, had some Reason in it, that he might be examined, and give Evidence to a Grand-Jury, and we told you he should; but if there be never a Grand-Jury sworn yet, who can he give Evidence to? Would you have us take his Examination, and afterwards give it in Evidence to the Grand-Jury?

Mr. Thomp. My Lord, I only say, then 'tis our hard Hap that he is not examined before a Grand-Jury.

L. C. J. But do you think it is fit for you to move this now?

Mr. Thomp. My Lord, I understood it was permitted me by the Court the other Day, to move again; and I move by the Direction of my Client, and I submit it to your Lordship.

L. C. J. You know it cannot be granted. Go on, and swear the Jury.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I beg that my Wife and Solicitor may be by, to help and assist my Memory.

L. C. J. Let your Wife be by you, if she please, and if you think 'tis any Advantage to you, with all our Hearts; if she will, let her go down to you.

Cl. of Crown. Cryer, make an O Yes: Whoever can inform, &c.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I know not what the Effect of this may be; if his Wife be instructed to instruct him, that ought not to be permitted, with Submission: Suppose she should come to prompt him (and for certain she is well documentiz'd) that your Lordship won't suffer.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, she comes prepared with Papers in her Hand.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. I won't shew them without my Lord's Permission.

L. C. J. If she brings any Papers that are drawn by Council, prepar'd for him, without doubt 'tis not to be allowed.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. No, no; 'tis only my own little Memorandums.

L. C. J. Whatsoever is written by her Husband, for Help of his Memory in Matter of Fact, let her do it.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I humbly beg my Solicitor may be by me too.

L. C. J. We allow of no Solicitors in Cases of High-Treason.

Cl. of Cr. Edward Fitz-Harris, hold up thy Hand (which he did): Those good Men which thou shalt hear called, and personally appear, &c.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I desire they may be distinctly named as they are in the Pannel, that I may know how to make my Challenges.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I must humbly offer it to your Lordship's Consideration, for the Precedent's Sake, Whether any Person can assist the Prisoner as to Matter of Fact?

L. C. J. Yes, and 'tis always done to take Notes for him to help his Memory.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But, my Lord, I would acquaint your Lordship what is the Thing we find in this Case; here is a particular Note given in to the Prisoner of the Jury, pray be sure to challenge such and such, and don't challenge the rest. God forbid but his Memory should be helped in Matters of Fact, as is usual in these Cases; but no Instructions ought to be given him, sure. And, my Lord, the Example will go a great Way; and therefore we are in your Lordship's Directions about this Matter.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I hope 'tis but just, for I have had all the Disadvantages in the World. I have been kept close Prisoner, and have not been permitted to have any one come to me, to help me in my Preparation for my Trial.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I pray your Judgment in Point of Law; I doubt not you will do the King right, as well as the Prisoner; I could not get a Copy of the Pannel, till last Night about four o'Clock: Here is prepared a Copy, with Crosses and Marks who he should challenge, and who not; and truly, my Lord, since I had the Pannel, upon looking over it, I do find the Sheriff hath returned three Anabaptist Preachers, and I know not how many Fanaticks: And since there are such Practices as we find in this Case, we doubt there may be more; and therefore I pray she may be removed.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. I will not be removed.

Fitz-Harris. Is it fit or reasonable for me, that I should stand here without any Help?

Mr. Att. Gen. In Case you be guilty of this, you deserve no great Favour.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. Surely the Court will never suffer the King's Council to take away a Man's Life at this Rate.

L. C. J. Mrs. Fitz-Harris, you must give good Words: And if you will not be modest and civil, I promise you we will remove you presently.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. If you do remove me, that is the worst you can do to me: What should I come here for, without I may help my Husband?

L. C. J. If she do bring him Instructions to except against such and such Jury-men, she does misbehave herself, and must be removed.

Mr. Att. Gen. This Paper that we speak of is a Copy of the Pannel; and there are particular Marks, a great many.

Mr. Sol. Gen. A Woman hath a very great Privilege to protect her Husband; but I never yet knew that she had Liberty to bring him Instructions ready drawn.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. My Lord, the Lady Marchioness of Winchester did assist in the Case of my Lord Stafford, and took Notes, and gave him what Papers she pleased.

L. C. J. Sure 'tis no such huge Matter to let a Man's Wife stand by him, if she will demean herself handsomely and fairly.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is not if that were all; but when she comes with Papers, instructed, and with particular Directions, that is the assigning him Counsel in Point of Fact.

L. C. J. Let her stand by her Husband, if she be quiet: But if she be troublesome, we shall soon remove her.

Fitz-Harris. 'Tis impossible I should make my Defence without her.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I see it is a perfect formal Brief.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. Must he have nothing to help himself?

Fitz-Harris. In short, the King's Council would take my Life away, without letting me make my Defence.

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire not to take any Papers from him, if they be such as are permitted by Law.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, his Innocency must make his Defence, and nothing else.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, we are in your Lordship's Judgment, whether you will allow these Papers.

L. C. J. Let us see the Paper.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I will deliver them to my Wife again.

L. C. J. Let it be so.

Cl. of Cr. Call Sir William Roberts (who did not appear): Sir Michael Heneage.

Sir Michael Heneage. My Lord, I am so ill, I cannot attend this Cause.

L. C. J. We cannot excuse you, Sir Michael; if there be not enough besides, 'tis not in our Power to excuse you.

Sir Michael Heneage. I must suffer all Things rather than lose my Health.

L. C. J. Well, stand by, till the rest are called.

Cl. of Cr. Sir William Gulston, Nicholas Rainton, Charles Umphreville (they did not appear): John Wildman.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I desire he may be asked, before he be called to the Book, whether he be a Free-holder in Middlesex?

Major Wildman. I am a Prosecutor of this Person; for I was a Parliament-man in the last Parliament; and I dare not appear, my Lord, for fear of being questioned for Breach of the Privileges of the Commons.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I pray he may answer that Question, whether he be a Free-holder in Middlesex?

Major Wildman. I pray to be excused, upon a very good Reason; I was one of them that voted the Impeachment against this Man.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you a Free-holder of Middlesex, upon your Oath?

L. C. J. Look you, Major Wildman, you are returned upon a Pannel here, you have appeared, and your Appearance is recorded; you must answer such Questions as are put to you; 'tis not in your Power to deny.

Major Wildman. I beg the Excuse of the Court, I cannot serve upon this Jury.

L. C. J. If you be no Free-holder the Law will excuse you.

Major Wildman. Perhaps there may be some Estates in my Name that may be Free-holds; perhaps I may be some Trustee, or the like.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you any Free-hold in your own Right in Middlesex?

Major Wildman. I don't know that I have; if it be in the Right of another, or as Trustee, I take not that to be a Free-hold.

Cl. of Cr. Call Thomas Johnson.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. Let him be sworn, there is no Exception against him.

L. C. J. Hold your Peace, or you go out of Court if you talk again.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. I do not say any thing that is any harm, my Lord.

Cl. of Cr. Swear Tho. Johnson: You shall well and truly try, &c.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I pray the Clerk may not skip over the Names as they are returned.

Cl. of Cr. Sir, I call every one as they are in the Pannel; and don't do me wrong.

L. C. J. It may be he does not call them as they are mentioned and set down in the Pannel, for all have not appeared; but calls those whose Appearance is recorded.

Cl. of Cr. I have called them as they are here set down.

L. C. J. Well, let them all be called for; may be they will appear now that did not appear before.

Cl. of Cr. Maximilian Beard.

Mr. Beard. My Lord, I desire to be excused, I am very infirm and very ancient, Threescore and Fifteen Years of Age, at least.

L. C. J. Why did the Sheriff return you? If you be of that Age, you should be put out of the Free-holders Book. But stay, you are here impanneled, and have appeared; if there be enough, we will excuse you.

Mr. Just. Jones. He ought to have Witnesses of his Age; and if he would not have appeared, he might have had a Writ of Privilege for his Discharge in regard of his Age.

L. C. J. Well, we will set by him; if there be enough besides, we will spare him.

Cl. of Cr. Isaac Honeywood (he did not appear): Lucy Knightly (who was sworn): Henry Baker.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I challenge him for the King.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, why should he challenge him? I desire to know the Law, whether the two Foremen should not try the Challenge, and not the Court or the Council.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. If the King challenge, he hath time to shew Cause till the Pannel be gone through; the Law will have the minus suspecti; but if there want any thing, the King must shew good Cause.

Cl. of Cr. Edward Probyn.
 Mr. Att. Gen. I challenge him for the King.
 Cl. of Cr. Edward Wilford (was sworn.)
 Fitz-Harris. My Lord, must not Mr. Attorney shew his Cause now?
 L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Fitz-Harris, either side may take their Exception to any Man; but the Cause need not be shewn till the Pannel is gone through, or the rest of the Jurors challenged*.
 Cl. of Cr. John Kent of Stepney.
 Mr. Kent. My Lord, I am no Free-holder.
 L. C. J. Then you cannot be sworn here upon this Jury†.
 Cl. of Cr. John Willmore.
 Mr. Att. Gen. We challenge him for the King.
 Fitz-Harris. For what Cause?
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. We will shew you Reasons hereafter.
 Cl. of Cr. Alexander Hefey (was sworn:) Giles Shute.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Are you a Free-holder, Sir?
 Mr. Shute. No.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Whitaker is got near him, and he tells him what he is to do, my Lord.
 Fitz-Harris. Here is the Lieutenant of the Tower between me and him.
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. But the Bar is no fit Place for Mr. Whitaker, he is not yet called to the Bar.
 Cl. of Cr. Martin James.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Are you a Free-holder, Sir?
 Mr. James. Yes.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Then swear him, (which was done.)
 Cl. of Cr. Nathanael Grantham.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Are you a Free-holder, Sir?
 Mr. Grantham. No.
 Cl. of Cr. Henry Beiling.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Are you a Free-holder, Sir?
 Mr. Beiling. Yes.
 Fitz-Harris. Then I challenge him.
 Cl. of Cr. Benjamin Dennis.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Is he a Free-holder?
 Mr. Dennis. No.
 Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, you see what Practices here are, most of the Jury are no Free-holders.
 Cl. of Cr. John Preston, (did not appear:) John Viner of White Chappel.
 Mr. Att. Gen. He hath fetched them from all Corners of the Town here, yet not all of them Free-holders neither.
 Cl. of Cr. Swear Mr. Viner, (which was done.) William Withers, (was sworn:) William Cleave, (sworn:) Thomas Goffe (sworn:) Abraham Greaves.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Ask him if he is a Free-holder?
 Mr. Greaves. No.
 Cl. of Cr. Henry Jones.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Is he a Free-holder?
 Mr. Jones. No.
 Cl. of Cr. Ralph Farr.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Ask him the same Question.
 Cryer. Are you a Free-holder, Sir?
 Mr. Farr. Yes.
 Cl. of Cr. Then swear him, (which was done.) Samuel Freebody.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Are you a Free-holder, Sir?
 Freebody. Yes.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Then swear him, (which was done.)
 Cl. of Cr. Gilbert Urwin of Covent-Garden (did not appear.) Edward Watts of Westminster.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Are you a Free-holder, Sir?
 Watts. Yes.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Then we challenge you for the King.
 Cl. of Cr. John Bradshaw of Holborn (did not appear:) Isaac Heath of Wapping (no Free-holder:) Edward Hutchins of Westminster.
 Mr. Att. Gen. We challenge him for King.
 Cl. of Cr. John Lockier of Westminster.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Are you a Free-holder?
 Mr. Lockier. Yes.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Then swear him.
 Cl. of Cr. Count these. Thomas Johnson.
 Cryer. One, &c.

The Names of the Twelve sworn, are these:

Thomas Johnson,	Martin James,	Thomas Goffe,
Lucy Knightley,	John Viner,	Ralph Farr,
Edward Wilford,	William Withers,	Samuel Freebody, and
Alexander Hefey,	William Cleave,	John Lockier.

Cl. of Cr. Edward Fitz-Harris, hold up thy Hand. Gentlemen, you that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and harken to your Charge.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I humbly beg Pen, Ink, and Paper.

L. C. J. Let him have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

Cl. of Crown. You shall have them presently; (which were given him.)

HE stands indicted by the Name of Edward Fitz-Harris, late of the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, Gent. for that he as a false Traitor against the most illustrious, and most excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, by the Grace of God King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, his natural Lord; not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil; the Love, and true due and natural Obedience, which a true and faithful Subject of our said Sovereign Lord the King, towards him our said Sovereign Lord the King, should, and of right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing; and with all his might intending the Peace and common Tranquillity within this Kingdom of England to disturb, and War and Rebellion against our said Sovereign Lord the King to stir up and move; and the Government of our said Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, to subvert; and our said Sovereign Lord the King from the Title, Honour, and Regal Name of the Imperial Crown of his Kingdom of England to depose and deprive; and our said Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to bring and put, the 22d Day of February, in the 33d Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, now King of England, &c. and divers other Days and Times, as well before, as after, at the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, traiterously did compass, imagine, and intend the Killing, Death, and final Destruction of our said Sovereign Lord the King, and the ancient Government of this his Kingdom to change, alter, and wholly to subvert, and him our said Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, from the Title, Honour, and Regal Name of the Imperial Crown of his Kingdom of England to depose and deprive, and War and Rebellion against our said Sovereign Lord the King, to stir up and levy within this Kingdom of England. And his said wicked Treasons and traiterous Compassings, Imaginations, and Purposes, aforesaid to fulfil and perfect, he the said Edward Fitz-Harris, as a false Traitor, together with one Edmond Everard, a Subject of our said Sovereign Lord the King, did then and there traiterously assemble himself, meet and consult, and the same his Treasons and traiterous Compassings, Imaginations, and Purposes, then and there to the said Edmond Everard, in the hearing of divers other Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King, openly, maliciously, traiterously, and advisedly speaking, did publish and declare: And to persuade and induce the said Edmond Everard, to be aiding and assisting in his said traiterous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes, he the said Edward Fitz-Harris, as a false Traitor, maliciously, advisedly, and traiterously to the said Edmond Everard a great Reward then and there did offer, and promote to procure. And for the further compleating of his Treasons aforesaid, and to incite the Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King, as one Man, to rise, and open Rebellion and Insurrection within this Kingdom of England to raise, against our said Sovereign Lord the King, and our said Sovereign Lord the King from the Title, Honour, and Regal Name of the Imperial Crown of his Kingdom of England to cast down and depose, he the said Edward Fitz-Harris, as a false Traitor, a certain most wicked and traiterous Libel, the Title of which is in these English Words following, The true Englishman speaking plain English, traiterously, maliciously, and advisedly, in Writing to be made and expressed, did then and there cause, procure and publish; in which said Libel the said most wicked Treason, and traiterous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid, of him the said Edward Fitz-Harris, to excite and persuade the Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King of this Kingdom of England, against our said Sovereign Lord the King to rise and rebel; and our said Sovereign Lord the King from the Title, Honour, and Regal Name of the Imperial Crown of this his Kingdom of England to deprive and depose, in writing are expressed and declared amongst other things, as followeth: If James (meaning James Duke of York, the Brother of our said Sovereign Lord the King) be conscious and guilty, Chs. (meaning Charles II. now King of England) is so too, believe me (meaning himself the said Edward Fitz-Harris) both these (meaning our said Sovereign Lord the King, and the said James Duke of York) are Brethren in Iniquity, they (meaning our said Sovereign Lord the King and James Duke of York) are in Confederacy with Pope and French to introduce Popery and arbitrary Government, as their Actions (meaning the Actions of our said Sovereign Lord the King, and James Duke of York) demonstrate. The Parliament's Magna Charta and Liberty of the Subject are as heavy Yokes they'd as willingly cast off, for to make themselves (meaning our said Sovereign Lord the King, and the said Duke of York) as absolute as their Brother of France. And if this can be proved to be their Aim (meaning our said Sovereign Lord the King, and the aforesaid Duke of York) and main Endeavour, why should not every true Briton be a Quaker thus far, and let the English Spirit be up and move us, (meaning the Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King of this Kingdom of England) all as one Man to Self-Defence? Nay, and if need be, to open Action, and fling off those intolerable Riders? (Meaning our said Sovereign Lord the King, and the said Duke of York.) And in another Place in the said most wicked and traiterous Libel are contained, amongst other things, these false, seditious, and traiterous Sentences in these English Words following. J. and C. (meaning the said Charles our Sovereign Lord the King, and his said Brother James Duke of York) both Brethren in Iniquity, corrupt both in Root and Branch, as you (meaning the Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King) have seen, they (meaning our said Sovereign Lord the King, and the said Duke of York) study but to enslave you (meaning the Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King) to a Romish and French-like Yoke. Is it not plain? Have you (meaning the Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King) not Eyes, Sense or Feeling? Where is that old English noble Spirit? Are you (meaning the Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King) become French Allies, to suffer any Load to be laid upon you? And if you (meaning the Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King) can get no Remedy from this next Parliament, as certainly you (meaning again the Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King) will not; and that the K. (meaning our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is) repents not, complies not with their Advice, then up all (meaning the Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King) as one Man. O brave Englishmen! Look to your own Defence ere it be too late, rouse up your Spirits. And in another Place in the said most wicked and traiterous Libel are contained, amongst other things, these false, seditious, and traiterous Sentences in these English Words following; to wit, I (meaning himself the said Edward Fitz-Harris) will only add, that as it is the undoubted Right of Parliaments to make a Law against a Popish Successor, who would prove destructive to our Laws and Liberties; so it is their undoubted Right to dethrone any Possessor that follows evil Counsellors to the Destruction of our Government, (meaning the Government of this Kingdom of England.) And in another Place in the said traiterous Libel, are contained these English Words following: Then let all (meaning the Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is) be ready; then let the City of London stand by the Parliament with offers of any Money for the maintaining of their Liberties and Religion in any extreme Way, if parliamentary Courses be not complied with by the King; (meaning our said Sovereign Lord the King) against the Duty of their Allegiance, and against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, &c. and against the Form of the Statute in this Case made and provided.

Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded, Not Guilty; and for his Trial hath put himself upon God and his Country, which Country you are, &c.

Cryer. Make Proclamation. O yes, if any one will give Evidence, &c.

Mr. Heath. May it please you Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment of High-Treason against Edward Fitz-Harris, the Prisoner at the Bar; and the Indictment sets forth, that the 21st of February, in the 33d Year of the King, at St. Martin's in the Fields, he did compass * Here the Chief Justice did not shew the same Favour to Fitz-Harris, which he afterwards shewed to Count Coningsmark, in directing him how to make the King shew Cause, by challenging all the rest, Vol. III. p. 465.

† In Lord Russell's Trial No Free-holds were not allowed to be a good Challenge; and several, though no Free-holders, were admitted to be sworn on the Jury. The like Colonel Sidney's Case.

and imagine the Death of the King, and to raise War and Rebellion within this Kingdom. And the Indictment does set forth, that for the Accomplishment of this, he did meet and assemble with one Edmond Everard, and several others, and did discover this his traitorous Purpose to the said Everard, and did persuade him to aid and assist therein; and offered him great Rewards if he would do so. It further sets forth, That for the further perfecting of this treasonable Imagination of the said Edward Fitz-Harris, he did frame and make a treasonable Libel, and the Title of the Libel is, The true Englishman speaking plain English; and in that treasonable Libel, are these treasonable words contained, If James be guilty (meaning the Duke of York) Charles (meaning the King) is so too, &c. And the several words that have been read to you in this Indictment, are contained in the said Libel, which I shall not repeat. To this Indictment he hath pleaded, Not guilty; if we prove it upon him, you are to find him Guilty.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. May it please your Lordship, truly 'tis a sad thing to consider how many have been found guilty of Plotting against the King, but none have gone so far as the Prisoner at the Bar: For they designed only his Death; but this Person would have carried on his Treason by a means to slander him while he was alive, and thereby to excite the People to such a Rebellion as you have heard. I shall add no further words; the thing is not aggravatable, 'tis so great an Offence in itself; but we will call our Witnesses, and go to our Proof.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, Yesterday you had here the Primate of Ireland, who was found guilty for a notable High-Treason in Ireland: You have now this Day before you one of his Emisaries, who is come over into England, and who has here committed one of the most execrable Treasons that ever was brought into a Court of Justice; I must needs say, that it will appear to all the Auditors this Day, that here is the highest Improvement of the Popish Plot, and aggravated with such Circumstances, as shew they have out-done themselves in it. Hitherto those Cases that have been brought into Judgment before you, have been the Attempts upon the Life of the King, in Instances of either Shooting, Stabbing, or Poisoning: I say, hitherto they have gone no further than to practise these Things, and that by Popish Hands, they have kept the Plot amongst themselves; but now they have gone one step further, that is, by attempting to poison all the Protestants of England as much as in them lies, that they should by their own Hands destroy one another, and their lawful Prince; that is the Treason now before you; and I take it, with submission, they can go no further. For 'tis impossible to arise to a higher piece of Malice and Villainy than to set the People's Hearts against their Prince, and to set them together by the ears one against another. This we shall prove, in the Course of our Evidence, to be the Design of the Prisoner at the Bar. The general Design hath been opened to you out of the Indictment to kill and destroy the King, and to depose him from his Government; and we shall charge him with all those several Overt-Acts, which I shall open to you: First, Several Meetings to consult about this Matter at Gray's-Inn and several other places; which, my Lord, I think there is no question to be made, but is an Overt-Act to make High-Treason. We shall go further, and shew that these Designs he had to depose the King, and raise his People against him, he does declare openly to Mr. Everard; which is another Overt-Act within the new Statute. We shall, my Lord, go further yet, and prove the great Rewards he hath offered to Mr. Everard for joining with him, and being assisting to him in this Affair, part in ready Money, and part in annual Pension. And there your Lordship will find where the Spring is, from whence all these Mischiefs arise, some foreign Power; but the Papists, the Priests are at the Bottom of it, they are the Persons that set him on, and these must draw in a great Person beyond Sea, who must reward this Gentleman for being a Partner in this Plot. And we shall prove some Money paid in Hand. But then, my Lord, that which was the Effect of this Consult, is the framing this pernicious Libel; for so give me leave to call it.

My Lord, the Indictment is modest, but when you come to hear the Libel itself read, you will find it so; and it was not Prudence, that so vile a thing should appear upon Record. And truly, I believe in a Protestant Kingdom 'tis the first Attempt of this Nature that ever was: For, my Lord, it is to defame the whole Royal Family, 'tis to stain their Blood, and to make them vile in the sight of the whole Kingdom, and of all Posterity. My Lord, this Libel in its Particulars chargeth that most excellent and innocent Person, our late and never to be forgotten Sovereign King Charles I. to be the Author of the Irish Rebellion; it charges our present Prince with the Exercise of Arbitrary Government, to be a Papist, to be a Person that deprives his Subjects of all manner of Liberty, and Property; in express Terms, it charges him with this, than which nothing can be more false: For there is none of his Subjects, I think, but must say, that our most gracious Prince, for the Time he hath reigned, may vie with the best 20 Years of any of his Predecessors, for the preserving the Liberty and Property of the People, for giving us Peace and Plenty all our Time, for the permitting and securing to them the free Current of the Law, and for securing their Civil and Religious Rights.

My Lord, when we have gone through the Evidence about the Contexture, and this Libel is read and produced, we shall prove the Design of it, and how it was framed, and the Eyes of the World will be opened, and you will see that this was no Intention, no Engine framed to trap, or ensnare any private Person, or as it was secretly bruited abroad, to be put in such Men's Pockets; but a piece of the greatest Machiavellian Policy that ever was invented and prepared for a publick Press, as a Catholick Poison to infect all the King's Subjects, and excite them one against another.

And we shall prove that this Person, in the several Methods that I have opened, hath proceeded to accomplish his traitorous Designs of dethroning the King: Nay, he hath said, 'tis resolved among them, now that nothing else will do it but the poisoning the Hearts of the People with Hatred to their King, and Malice against one another. And when we have proved the Matter fully, through all the Parts, we must leave it to the Jury, who, I question not, will do themselves, and all other Protestants Right, as well as their Prince. We shall now go to our Evidence, and first we will call Mr. Everard; but, my Lord, I would only first observe to you, that this Gentleman, Mr. Fitz-Harris, and Mr. Everard, were both employed in the French King's Service, and there acquainted together. Mr. Everard came early off, and became a Protestant, leaving the French King's Service, because he found their several Plots and Designs upon England. Then comes Mr. Fitz-Harris to him, and because he looked upon Mr. Everard not to be rewarded according to his Merits, invites him over, with telling him those things that the Witness himself will tell you, back again to the French Interest.

Then Mr. Everard was sworn.

Fitz-Harris. Look me in the Face, Mr. Everard.

Mr. Everard. I will, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will you acquaint my Lord, and the Jury, how you came first acquainted with the Prisoner; and then tell the several Passages between you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Tell your whole Knowledge of this Matter.

Mr. Everard. My Lord, I came acquainted with Mr. Fitz-Harris beyond Seas, when we both were in the French King's Service, and upon Conference with him of late, especially about the beginning of February last, he renewed his Acquaintance, though at several Times before we had several Discourses, whereof I did not take much notice: But in those Meetings in February last, and in those Visits he paid me then, we had several Discourses tending to represent the Disadvantages and Sufferings I sustained, for adhering to the Protestant and English Interest; and besides comparing in the other Balance, what Advantages I might expect if I would re-ingratiate myself into their Interest.

L. C. J. What Interest?

Mr. Everard. The French and the Popish Interest. And there was an Opportunity in my Hands, wherein I might be serviceable to myself and others; and he told me there were several Persons, among whom were some Parliament-Men, that did adhere to the French Interest, and gave an Account to the French Ambassador of every Day's Proceedings: And as I was looked upon to be the Author of a Kind of Pamphlet, that was called, An Answer to the King's Declaration, concerning the Duke of Monmouth; therefore I should be fit to serve them, especially to make such another Pamphlet to reflect upon the King, and alienate him from his People, and his People from him. Whereupon I told him I would do any thing that was for my true Interest, but I did conceive with myself, that that was none of it. He appointed a Time when we should meet again; but I sent him a Note, I could not meet possibly that Day, which was Monday, as I remember the 21st of February: However he was impatient, and came to me, and told me he would give me Heads and Instructions tending to that Pamphlet I was to write, to scandalize the King, and raise a Rebellion, and alienate the Hearts of the Kingdom, and set the People together by the Ears. Upon this he gave me some Heads by word of Mouth: As soon as I parted from him, I met with one Mr. Savile of Lincoln's-Inn, and as soon as I met with him, I acquainted him with what was passed, and told him I wished rather than ten Pound I had met him sooner, half an Hour before. Why, what is the occasion, says he? Why, said I, there is a Person that hath had such and such Discourse with me, and one of his main Errands, amongst others, is for me to write a scandalous Libel reflecting upon his Majesty and the Government. And upon this I said, Mr. Savile, I shall not confer with him any further, unless I have somebody by to witness what he says; he speaks most commonly French, and sometimes English, and therefore it must be one who understands both the Tongues well. So we went into the City together that Afternoon to one Mr. Crow's, who is a Silkman in Queen-street; said we, Sir, you are a moderate impartial Man, and understand French, we desire you will be present to over-hear some Proposals that are made to me tending to set our Country together by the Ears, and he comes from a Popish Party. Mr. Crow said, he would be willing to undertake any thing to serve the Protestant English Interest, but he would not undertake to speak French so well as to be able to understand all nice Passages, and Words that might be proposed. And then Mr. Savile and I went to Mr. Smith, a Durham-Gentleman, and made him the same Proposal I had made to Mr. Crow, desiring him that he would come and over-hear our Discourse, and I would place him in a fit Place. Mr. Smith assented to the Propositions, and said he would. Mr. Smith asked me what Day and Time we were to meet; I told him, To-morrow at six or seven o'clock at Night at my Chamber in Gray's-Inn: But further, he said, we must have other Witnesses, for one Witness would not be sufficient; so we went to the Exchange Coffee-house, and there we met with Sir William Waller, to whom we made the same Proposal, that since we must have some that understood French, and keep the thing secret, till it were time to have it come out, he would please to undertake it. Sir William Waller promised to come, but failed the first Meeting, which was to be on the Tuesday; then we went to another French Merchant, who was proposed by Mr. Savile, but he was not within: So then we must rely upon one Witness for that Meeting. Mr. Fitz-Harris, was to meet me about two o'clock at my Chamber in Gray's-Inn, where Mr. Smith and Mr. Savile were to meet likewise, and they came first to the Tavern just at the Corner of Fuller's-Rents, which hath a Prospect into the Court: And from thence I saw Mr. Fitz-Harris in the Court pointing to another Gentleman that was with him, up to my Chamber, and he was walking suspiciously up and down. Then I went out of the Tavern, and came up to my Chamber, and after a little while Captain Fitz-Harris came up to my Room; I placed him in another Room, where my Wife was, and shut the Door to, whilst I sent word to Mr. Smith to come into the outer Room and shut himself into my Closet. There was Mr. Smith in the Closet, and there was an Hole or two for the purpose made through both the Planks of the Boards and Hangings, but the Hangings hung over the Hole that it might not be discerned by Mr. Fitz-Harris; and he could raise it, and then see who was in the Room, and hear their Words; for I placed my Chair towards the Closet, which had an Angle outwards, and now and then I did stand against the Hole, and now and then sat, to give Mr. Smith Advantage, and to give Mr. Fitz-Harris no Suspicion. When we were so placed, Mr. Fitz-Harris asked me what I had done as to the thing proposed, this Libel that I was to draw up; I said, I was busy, and had not been able to finish it; but here are some Heads of it, said I, and shewed him half a dozen Lines drawn up together; and when I had read them, Sir, said I, is this your Mind? Yes, said he, but I must add much more than this is to it. Then Mr. Fitz-Harris proceeded to give me further Instructions; and so repeated what Instructions he had given me before, that the King and all the Royal Family must be traduced to be popishly and arbitrarily inclined from the beginning, that King Charles I. especially had an hand in the Irish Rebellion, and that likewise King Charles II. that now is, did countenance the same, as did appear by his promoting those very Officers that were in the Irish Rebellion, Fitz-Gerald, Fitz-Patrick, and Mont-Garrat, which should be named in the Libel. Besides that, the Act made at the King's coming in, forbidding any to call the King Papist, was merely to stop People's Mouths, that they should not call him a Papist, when he should incline to further Popery, and did intend by his Actions so to do. And besides his adhering so closely to the Duke of York's Interest, was to be another Argument of it, his hindering the Duke of York from coming to his Trial, and to be proceeded against by the Parliament, and hindering the Officers that were put in by the Duke of York from being cast out. Another Argument was, because those Privy Counsellors and Justices of the Peace, that did adhere to the Protestant Interest, were turned out of all places of Trust; and besides, he said, it did appear to the People consequently, that the King was conscious to himself, that he was as guilty as his Brother, and was as much a Papist as his Brother, and it was in the People's power as well to depose a present Popish Possessor, as a Popish Successor; and that the People must be stirred up against him, and encouraged to blow the Trumpet, and especially that the City and Common Council must be encouraged to stand by the Parliament: And seeing the King was such, that no hopes was to be had of the Parliament at Oxon, they were bound to provide for themselves, and to advance some hundreds or thousands of Pounds to the Parliament to settle the Protestant Religion without the King, if Parliamentary Ways would not succeed. These were some of the Instructions.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he say any thing that Day about a Reward you should have?

Mr. Everard. He spake in the general about a Reward, but he spoke more fully to that the Day after; he did not then come so much to Particulars: Then some part of those Instructions I writ in my Table-Book, which is produced here, and others of them in another Scroll of Paper. He then desired to know of me when the Scheme of this thing would be ready; said I, you may come to-morrow; I will, says he, come about six or seven a-clock in the Evening. In the mean time I writ a Letter to Sir William Waller in French, which I sent by a Porter, and therein I said, Sir, you have missed a great Opportunity of rendering a great Service to the King, by not coming to see me when you were expected; for the Person, the French Emisary whom I spoke of to you, hath proposed very scandalous seditious things to be written, and therefore I desire you not to fail, as you tender the King's Interest, to come to my Chamber at six a-clock at Night. Sir William Waller received my Letter, and came thither accordingly; I placed Sir William Waller in another Room, and I placed my own Chair at a narrow Table near the place where Sir William Waller was, and there through the Wainscot and Hangings we made a slit, whereby Sir William Waller might see into the next Room where Mr. Fitz-Harris and I sat: But before I placed him there, I shewed Sir William Waller two Copies of the Instructions for the Libel drawn up. Said I, Sir, here are two Copies which are both the same, and I desire you to counter-mark them, that you may know them again, and thereby see what Alteration will be made; for here are no Blots now, and by that you will find the Alteration. Sir William Waller, while my Back was turned, counter-marked those Copies. I went into the next Room, and I had not been long there, but Mr. Fitz-Harris came in; I placed the Table near the Alcove, where Sir William Waller was, within his hearing and seeing. Mr. Fitz-Harris asked me what I had done in the business: Sir, said I, here are two Copies of it, pray, will you see how you like it? So he took one, and I took the other.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, I must interrupt this Gentleman, for I see they continue to give the Prisoner Papers.

Fitz-Harris. 'Tis only a Paper of the Names of my Witnesses.

L. C. J. Go on, Sir.

Mr. Everard. My Lord, Captain Fitz-Harris did read one Copy of this Pamphlet, and did amend it; he did add some things, and struck out other things: Then said I, is this, Sir, according to your liking? Yes, says he, but I must add something, for it is not yet full enough; but says he, this must be fair copied out; for 'tis not fit for the French Ambassador's Confessor to read, who should present it to the Ambassador. Upon this I told him it should be done against the next Day; but in the mean time I told him, Sir, these are very treasonable Things, and this a very treasonable Project. Oh, said he, the more treasonable the better, and that will do the effect better. What is that, Sir, said I? That is, says he, to set these People together by the ears, and keep them clashing, and whilst they are so in clashing, and mistrusting one another, the French shall gain Flanders, and then, said he, we shall make no Bones to gain England too. But, Sir, said I, you spoke of some Recompence for me, what shall I have for venturing this? Why, says he, after this Libel is delivered up, and that hath gotten you their Confidence that you are trusty, then I will gain the French Confessor, who is very shy, and may so well be, because one of the Confessors of an Ambassador hath been already trappan upon such an occasion. Therefore he is very wary, but he must have an assurance under your hand, which he shall have by this Libel; and then in a few Days you shall have forty Guineas, and a monthly Pension, which shall be some thousands of Crowns; for my Master the French King is not a Niggard as to these Things. The Spanish Ambassador is so very niggardly and penurious a Man, that he cannot keep a Table; but said he, you shall be well rewarded by the French King; and be not discouraged by the Danger, for I am in as great Danger as you. After some such Instructions, and Encouragements, that Mr. Fitz-Harris gave to go on in the Work, he departed; and I cannot well call any thing to mind of more Particulars; but upon Questions asked me, perhaps I may. But then at that time, or the next time, Captain Fitz-Harris gave me half a Sheet of Paper; for I told him I may chance to forget part of your Instructions, therefore pray write what is your Mind; and in that Paper he writ down, that it was in the People's power to depose a Popish Possessor, as it was to oppose a Popish Successor, and certain other treasonable Heads: The half Sheet of Paper is to be produced in the Court, under his own Hand, which he hath confessed, besides other treasonable Instructions, that he gave me by word of Mouth. But he at that time departed, and came the next Day to have a Copy of the treasonable Libel writ out fair, and promised me to meet at the Boarded-House, where we usually met in Holborn at Mr. Fashion's; and

I did there come and deliver him a Copy of this treasonable Libel, and he said I should hear in a few Days from him, and should have a Recompence; and this should be but as an Entrance-Business; for I should be brought into the Cabal, where several Protestants and Parliament-Men came to give an account to the Ambassador, how things were transacted: But to-morrow, said he, I cannot go to receive the Libel back again, for I am to go to Knight's-bridge.

Fitz-Harris. Where there?

Mr. Everard. To my Lord Howard's; for, said he, you have seen his Son often with me. My Lord Howard is very civil to me, he was my Father's Lawyer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will you ask him any Questions, Mr. Fitz-Harris?

Fitz-Harris. Did you write this Libel?

Mr. Everard. Yes, by your Instructions I did.

Fitz-Harris. Do you believe I had any traiterous Intention in it?

Mr. Everard. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You said, the more Treason, the better, Mr. Fitz-Harris.

Fitz-Harris. Were you put upon this to trapan others?

Mr. Att. Gen. 'Tis no Trapping to ask them to come, and hear you give him those Instructions, sure.

Fitz-Harris. But I ask him this Question, Mr. Attorney; Was he put upon it to trapan others?

Mr. Everard. Can you mention any Person that I was to trapan?

Fitz-Harris. Were you put upon it to trapan the Protestant Lords, and the House of Commons?

Mr. Everard. No, I was not.

Fitz-Harris. Is this the same Libel that was read in the House of Commons, upon which I was impeached?

Mr. Everard. Yes, I believe, Mr. Fitz-Harris, it was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Everard, because he puts you upon it, and to satisfy all the World, I ask you upon your Oath, Did any Person whatsoever put you upon this to trapan other Persons, or to put it into their Pockets, as 'tis reported?

Mr. Everard. I was put upon it by none but Mr. Fitz-Harris, of whom I asked, what will be the use of this? Said he, we shall disperse them, we know how.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he tell you in what manner?

Mr. Everard. No, he did not tell how.

Mr. Att. Gen. To whom was it to be delivered?

Mr. Everard. I was to deliver it to Fitz-Harris, who was to deliver it to the French Confessor, and it was to be drawn in the Name of the Non-confessors, and put upon them.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What Religion is Mr. Fitz-Harris of?

Mr. Everard. He was always looked upon to be a Papist.

Fitz-Harris. When did you see me at Mass?

Mr. Att. Gen. Hath he not owned himself so?

Mr. Everard. He hath owned himself at several times to be a Papist.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did he say to you about your being a Protestant, and what cause you had to turn to the Popish Religion?

Mr. Everard. He said, I was under great disadvantages, and had much loss by leaving them, I had better have adhered to their Interest still. He had this Discourse with me at several Meetings, and gave me several Visits, some at my Chamber, some at Gray's-Inn Walks, sometimes at the house with black posts in where we talked of several things.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. I am sorry he kept such a Rogue as you are Company.

L. C. J. Officers, take her away, if she can't hold her Tongue, and give better Language.

Fitz-Harris. She will speak no more, my Lord.

L. C. J. Stand still then, and be quiet.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was your Discourse at the Ale-House.

Mr. Everard. To give Instructions to set the People together by the ears; and one most effectual Means was by scandalizing and libelling the Government, and especially the King.

Mr. Jones. Did any body else assist you in drawing the Libel?

Mr. Everard. There is at the latter end of the Libel a Paragraph that was taken out of another Book; there was a scandalous Libel that was brought by the Woman that carries Paper-Books about, and out of that, to make short Work, and out of The Character of a Popish Successor, in which he said were many things material, he would have some of the Expressions of this Libel taken: So I copied some of the Queries out of that Paper, which was said to be a Letter intercepted to Roger L'Estrange, and that Day that I was under Examination before Mr. Secretary Jenkins, that Libel lay before him upon his Table. He asked me if I had seen that, I told him yes, for I had copied in that Paper that was the Libel, those Queries; and then, said he, here is a Warrant to be given out against Curtis for it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. After such time that you had carried him the Copy that Sir William had marked, and he amended it, did you shew it Sir William Waller presently?

Mr. Everard. Yes, immediately; and I asked him, Sir, says I, is there any Alteration? Yes, said he, I see Alterations, and shew'd them one. Do you know the Difference of Hands, said I? Yes, said he, I do, and suppose will give you an Account of it.

Mr. Johnson. My Lord, I humbly beg Mr. Everard may be asked, who those Parliament-men were that were to concur with the French Ambassador in this Design?

L. C. J. Did he name any Parliament-men?

Mr. Everard. No, he did not, he said, I should know them hereafter.

L. C. J. Then he did not name any?

Mr. Everard. No, he did not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then swear Mr. Smith. (Which was done.) Pray, Sir, will you look about, and give an Account what you know.

Mr. Smith. Will you have an Account how it came first to my knowledge?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, the whole, from the bottom to the top, from the beginning to the end.

Mr. Smith. I remember, about the 22d or the 21st of Feb. either one or the other, Mr. Everard and one Mr. Savile came to my Chambers, and told me the same Design that Mr. Everard hath repeated before, and that there was an Irish Gent. an Officer of the French King's Army, that was to manage the thing; he was one that could speak French very well, and they desired me to be concerned in it, because I understood French. Upon this this I told him, I would willingly undertake such a Business, if I thought there were any convenient place in the Room where I might hear, and see, undiscovered. After he had told me, as he has before told your Lordships, that it was to make a Difference between the King and his People, and to misrepresent the King, as I shall inform you by and by. I went to his Chamber after we had spoke to Mr. Crow, who would not undertake to speak French so well as to be capable of understanding all; but at last we met Sir William Waller, who undertook the Matter. I walked immediately after Dinner to the Chamber, and saw the Conveniences, and the next Night we expected Sir W. Waller; but he not coming that Night, I went into the Closet myself till Fitz-Harris came according to the Appointment. When Fitz-Harris came, there were two Chairs set, one Chair next the Closet where I stood, and another opposite against me; that opposite against me, was that where Mr. Fitz-Harris sat, and Mr. Everard was next close to me, and I looked out through the Hole, and I heard there were some little Discourses about the Business in hand. At last Mr. Everard stands up, and goes to the Side-board, and brings a piece of Paper, about half a Sheet, as I think, with him; and he read it, which was a seditious kind of Paper, which I shall tell you of by and by: And he asked him in French, whether this were agreeable or no; to which the Gent. answered, it was well, but something must be added to it. Upon this, Mr. Everard took out his Note-book, and read some things therein, and then Mr. Everard desired him to instance what Heads he would have more than were there. To which Fitz-Harris replied, that he would have him to represent the King as a Papist, which might be demonstrated by several Reasons: First, his adhering to the Duke of York, and peremptorily resolving to espouse that Interest. The second Reason was, the preferring such as were the Duke's Creatures, both at Sea and Land, and keeping in Office those that were preferred by the Duke, known Papists; and this was also another Reason to prove that Head of the Instructions, that the King after his Restoration procured an Act to be made, that it should be Treason for any to call him Papist; and this was only that he might the better, and with more ease, introduce Popery into England. He charged likewise King Charles I. to be a Promoter of the Irish Rebellion, and that Charles II. furthered and approved it; that is another Instance. That the Parliament at Oxford was only a Sham to delude the People, and that such a King was not not to be trusted with such a People, neither as to their Lives, Liberties, or Religion; but that the People must provide for themselves in time, and blow the Trumpet boldly. Another Instance was, as it was the undoubted Right of the People to make laws against, and to oppose a Popish Successor, so they might depose a Popish Possessor. To this Effect was the Substance of what was said.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he name a Reward that Mr. Everard was to have?

Mr. Smith. There was a Reward mentioned, but I don't remember any Particulars.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he tell who set him on work?

Mr. Smith. He said, if they did but set England together by the Ears, the French would get Flanders, and at length prevail here, and Mr. Everard should get an Interest in the Common-Council, and make it his Business that they should make a kind of an Address to the Parliament, and promise to stand by them with their Lives and Fortunes in opposing Popery, and Arbitrary Government, and if Parliament-ways failed, to assist in another way; and if the King hindered the Duke of York to come to a legal Trial, that then they should take other Courses.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he desire from Mr. Everard, when he seemed to boggle at his Instructions?

Mr. Smith. Mr. Everard said, he would do these things, yet he was in great Danger; why, says Mr. Fitz-Harris, so am I, and a great many more. What other Conference was between them, I know not, for I never saw them together after.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Look you, Sir, is this the same Person?

Mr. Smith. Yes, I did know him to be the same Person that Night he was taken.

L. C. J. You could see him where you were?

Mr. Smith. My Lord, I saw him clear enough, there were three Candles lighted, and I was as near to him as I am to your Lordship.

L. C. J. You were not in the Room?

Mr. Smith. I was in a little Closet close by.

Mr. Att. Gen. You know nothing of the Paper of Instructions?

Mr. Smith. I remember he told me of such an one, but I was not there the second Night.

Sir Fran. Withins. Mr. Everard said they were Treasonable things, what then said Fitz-Harris?

Mr. Smith. He said, the more Treason was in them, the better.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. And the Particulars were to set the People together by the Ears, and to bring in the French King.

Mr. Smith. It is all one in Terms.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. How was it?

Mr. Smith. That the King and the People should be set at variance, then the French King would fall upon Flanders and Holland, and afterwards would take England in his way, and make no bones of it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Will you ask him any Questions, Mr. Fitz-Harris?

Fitz-Harris. Do you believe that I did it with a treasonable Intention?

Mr. Smith. Sir, I am not to judge of that, I am not of your Jury, nor to answer any such thing.

Fitz-Harris. What do you think, Sir, pray?

Mr. Smith. You could have no good Design to bring about by any such Matter (I think) as this Paper is.

Fitz-Harris. Is this the same Paper that was read in the House of Commons?

Mr. Smith. Sir, I was not of the House of Commons, I don't know what was read there.

Mr. Johnson. Mr. Everard did seem to hint at a Design amongst some Protestant Lords, and Parliament-Men, and others, Dissenters from the Church of England; I desire to know whether Mr. Smith heard those Words?

L. C. J. That was not the first Night.

Mr. Smith. I did not hear it.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Johnson, Mr. Smith was not present at the second Meeting, then Sir Will. Waller was there, it was only the first Night Mr. Smith was there, and he speaks to that. Therefore as to the Alteration of the Copy, and some other things, he tells you that was done the second Night, and then was the Discourse concerning the French Confessor, and those other things which you mention.

Mr. Att. Gen. I believe the Jury misapprehend Mr. Everard in that too.

L. C. J. It was only what Fitz-Harris told him.

Mr. Att. Gen. But I see the thing sticks with the Jury; therefore, I would fain ask Mr. Everard this Question, Did you declare any such thing, or was it Mr. Fitz-Harris that told you?

Mr. Everard. Mr. Fitz-Harris told me, that several Parliament-men were joined with the French Ambassador to give him an account of things, but he told me besides, that it must be drawn up as it were in the Name of the Non-Conformists, to father it upon them; yet when there was one word in it, Thou, as if it were in the Quakers Name; no, says he, it must not be so, but it must be under the Name of all the Non-Conformists, that it may be common to all the discontented Party.

L. C. J. So you must take the Sense of this right, Gent. It is not, Mr. Everard tells you, some Parliament-Men and Lords were engaged in this business, but Mr. Fitz-Harris's Design was to engage Everard, and he urged what he could to encourage him to it. So that the Arguments he used were, that some Lords and Parliament-Men were engaged in this, to encourage him to go on.

Mr. Johnson. 'Tis true, my Lord, so that here does appear there was some other Interest than the French Interest in this matter, if what Mr. Fitz-Harris said was true.

Mr. Att. Gen. Fitz-Harris said so, to engage him.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Johnson, we do all verily believe and hope, there was no such thing as that any Lord, or any of the Commons of England were so engaged; it was his Interest, as Mr. Fitz-Harris took it, to mention it so, to engage this Gentleman.

Mr. Everard. I did not say Lords.

L. C. J. What did you say then?

Mr. Everard. Parliament-Men in general.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then swear Sir William Waller, (which was done.)

Sir Fran. Withins. Pray, Sir William, will you give an account of what you know of this matter.

Sir Will. Waller. My Lord, the last time I was here in this Court, being summoned to give in my Evidence, I did make some difficulty of it, upon the account that this Person was impeached by the Commons of England in Parliament; but Mr. Justice Jones having declared the Law required me in such a Case to give in my Evidence, I am now ready to give it in, and shall do it as briefly as I can.

L. C. J. Well, Sir, pray go on.

Sir Will. Waller. My Lord, upon the 22d or 23d of Feb. last, Mr. Everard met me in the City, and told me, he had a business of very great concernment to discover to me; whereupon, my Lord, we went into a place where we might conveniently discourse together; and he told me, in short, that Mr. Edw. Fitz-Harris, that unfortunate Gentleman at the Bar, had been with him several times, and endeavoured to engage him in a Business, which would in effect turn all into Confusion in England, and render the King very odious in the sight of his Subjects. Many things he did there tell me, and earnestly pressed me to join in this Design, to endeavour the Discovery of it. I was indeed at the first shy of meddling with it, being no way in the Commission of the Peace, and so not liable to engage in a Business of that Nature; but I was afraid to discourage Mr. Smith, who voluntarily and ingenuously offered himself for the Service of his King and Country: But I did not go that Afternoon, being willing to hear whether the Business went on, and was likely to come to any thing. The next Morning Mr. Everard writ to me this Letter (plucking out a Paper.)

Mr. Just. Dolben. Read it, Sir.

Sir Will. Waller. My Lord, in effect it was for to let me know, Mr. Smith hath been with him the Night before, and that according as they had laid their business, Mr. Fitz-Harris did indeed come, and had some Discourse in the hearing of Mr. Smith several things beyond what they had acquainted me with, things of the highest nature imaginable; and therefore he earnestly pressed me, as I tendered the Welfare of my King and Country, that I would not fail to come that Afternoon to be an Ear-witness of the treasonable Practices that were in hand. I looked upon myself then obliged to go, and did, according to the Directions he gave me, go about three of the Clock in the Afternoon to a Tavern at the lower end of Fuller's Rents near Gray's-Inn, and there we were to discourse further of the Business. I had not been there long, but I looked out of a back Window, and spied Mr. Fitz-Harris with another Gent. in a brown-coloured Suit, walking just before Gray's-Inn Door. I don't know the name of the Court, but there I saw them walking, but in their going, he frequently looked up at Mr. Everard's Chamber, and pointed at it. When he was gone, I told him, it may be Mr. Fitz-Harris may come sooner than the Hour appointed, therefore I think it will not be amiss to go without further delay to your Chamber, and see what Convenience there may be to lie secret, where I may be both an Eye and an Ear-witness. I went to his Chamber, and when I came into the Room, there was a little Closet, which I thought not so convenient for me, and I rather chose to look about if I could find another place more convenient. In short, in the next Room I found by my Candle there was a Door, and Hangings over it. I turned up the Hangings there, and in the Door there was a Crevice, which I opened a little with my Knife, and ripped a Hole in the Hangings which looked into the Room where the Gent. was to be. And before Mr. Fitz-Harris came, Mr. Everard had given me a large Account, much after the same manner that he hath given in his Testimony here, and he shewed me two Papers. I took the two Papers, and gave them a private Mark, that I might know them again; and withal we placed a Table and a Chair ready against Mr. Fitz-Harris's coming in, and agreed that he should be placed so, as that through the Hole I might have a full Sight of him: But left by an Accident he should be removed from thence, I desired Mr. Everard to ask him three Questions. The 1st was, Whether he had not married a Daughter of one Captain Finch, whose Father was killed in his Majesty's Service? The 2d was, Whether, as he read over the Paper, it was drawn up according to his Instructions? And the 3d was, Who was the Person that should recompence Mr. Everard for running so great a Hazard? According to these Instructions, the Table being placed, and every thing in order, about seven o'clock, or between six and seven, Mr. Fitz-Harris came in, and being sat down, he began to ask some Questions; amongst others—

[Then some Complaint was made by the King's Council, of Papers given Mr. Fitz-Harris.]

Fitz-Harris. Pray, My Lord, I beg that Paper may be given to my Wife again.

Mr. Att. Gen. I pray it may be given to the Court.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. I pray it may be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. 'Tis not the Duty of a Solicitor to bring Papers, he was only appointed by the Court to run of Errands; he is not to advise or furnish with Matter of Defence.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, this is an Offence committed in the Face of the Court, therefore we pray the Person that hath done it may be committed.

Mr. Just. Dolben. It is nothing but the Resolutions of the House of Commons; give it him again.

L. C. J. If Mr. Whitaker lies there to trouble the Court, we shall find another Place for him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, Mr. Whitaker hath done his Duty now, and what Service your Lordship appointed him; so I think he may be sent away, for here is no more Business for him.

Sir Will. Waller. Mr. Fitz-Harris came in, I think it was between six or seven o'Clock, and coming there, he sat himself down in the Chair prepared for him; and Mr. Everard, according to the Instructions I had given him, did ask him several Questions; but Mr. Fitz-Harris did ask him first, Whether he had finished the Paper according to some Instructions he had given him? Mr. Everard produced two Papers, the one was the Copy of the other, as I counted. Mr. Fitz-Harris had one given into his Hand, and the other Mr. Everard had. Mr. Everard, after he had read a little in it, did ask, whether this was drawn up according to the Instructions Mr. Fitz-Harris had given? He answered, It was exactly according to the Instructions he had given him. After he had read a little further, says Mr. Everard to him, This is a Business of a very dangerous Consequence, what Reward shall I have for running so great a Hazard? He told him again thus: Sir, says he, I think I run an equal Hazard with you; for you have a Paper under my Hand, which will render me liable to Danger. And then he went on and read further; and if Mr. Attorney will please to let me see the Paper, there is one particular Clause in it that I took special Notice of.

Mr. Att. Gen. Would you have the Libel, or the Paper, Sir William?

Sir Will. Waller. The Libel, Sir; (which was given him.) There was one Passage in it which I remember, and it was this (speaking of the King's preferring Persons that were engaged in the late Irish Rebellion) the Paper was first (prefers) but says Mr. Fitz-Harris, in French, it must be (has promoted:) Several Passages of this Nature I heard him alter, and I saw him alter with his Pen. For after such Time as Mr. Fitz-Harris was gone out of the Room, I went immediately into the Room where Mr. Everard was, and took Notice of the Paper, and the Ink upon the Paper was hardly dry.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon that, that is the original, and the other the Counter-part.

Sir Will. Waller. Here is the Mark (then pointing to the Bottom of the Paper.) These two Papers I marked both together, and this is the Paper, Sir, was mended. I do remember it more particularly, for this Paper I had in my own Custody, and signed it afterwards.

L. C. J. Well, go on.

Sir Will. Waller. He was asking him, Pray, Sir, said he, what Reward shall I have? Why, says Mr. Fitz-Harris, you shall be very well paid, you shall not need to fear, you shall have all Manner of Encouragement. This Business will bring a considerable Advantage to you, and you shall be otherwise preferred than what you were in the French King's Service. Says he, You cannot but know how you have been slighted and neglected, notwithstanding the Service you have done; and the French Ambassador is the Person that is to recompence you for your Pains; and he spoke of forty, but truly I did not hear whether it were Guineas, or what it was, that he should have for present Payment; and I heard him speak something of a Pension, he named three Thousand Crowns, but whether annually, or how, I cannot tell. Pray, Sir, said he, what shall I do in this Case, for I do not know, I am but in a low Condition, and have Occasion for Money? Why, says he, the French Ambassador will supply you, and you shall certainly, as soon as the Paper is perfected, have your Reward; and, says he, there are a great many more that we have employed in Businesses of this Nature, to create Misunderstanding between the King and his People, by which Means the French will easily over-run Flanders and the Low-Countries, and then England will become an easy Morfel. And this is the Substance of what I remember.

Fitz-Harris. Do you believe I had any such Design as Treason in it?

Sir Will. Waller. I cannot say any Thing to that, I only speak to Matter of Fact.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he declare he had many more employed in the Service?

Sir Will. Waller. Yes, he did say so. And said he, there are two Parliament-Men that frequent my Lord Shaftesbury's, who my Lord does not suspect, that do come and found him, and then go and acquaint the French Ambassador with all they can discover.

Fitz-Harris. Is this the same Paper, by the Oath you have taken, for which I was impeached by the Commons in Parliament?

Sir Will. Waller. Yes, 'tis a Copy of the same Paper, and that Paper I did read in the House.

Mr. Att. Gen. 'Tis the original.

Mr. Johnson. My Lord, I desire to ask Sir W. Waller one Question: Sir, you have heard the Indictment read, then pray tell us, whether this very Libel be expressed in the Indictment according to what was delivered in the House of Commons?

Mr. Att. Gen. You shall hear that by and by yourselves: For you shall hear the Paper read to you with the Indictment.

Sir Will. Waller. This is a Copy of that Paper.

Mr. Johnson. (Foreman of the Jury.) Does Mr. Fitz-Harris stand impeached by the House of Commons upon the same Treasons mentioned in the Indictment?

Sir Will. Waller. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Upon the same Treasons?

Sir Will. Waller. Upon this treasonable Paper he does. For as soon as ever I had communicated this Paper to the House, and I had made Report of the treasonable Transactions of Mr. Fitz-Harris, the House immediately proceeded to the Impeachment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Does the Impeachment mention that Paper; or what particular Treason he was impeached upon?

Vol. III.

Sir Will. Waller. I know nothing of that. But upon this Paper that Impeachment was grounded, that is all I can say.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That this Libel was spoken of in the House of Commons, is true; but it does not appear upon the Impeachment, that he was impeached for that Libel.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witnesses?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, we have to other Matters. But we desire to let them alone till the Libel be read.

Mr. Johnson. My Lord, we beg we may have the Comparison of the Libel with the Indictment.

Fitz-Harris. I would ask Sir William Waller one Question more upon his Oath, whether he had any Design of trepanning me, or any Body else in this Thing?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you any Design to trepan the Prisoner, or any Body?

Sir Will. Waller. No, Mr. Fitz-Harris, indeed not I.

Fitz-Harris. I looked upon you always as a Person that was my Enemy.

Mr. Att. Gen. What, because you were a Papist?

Fitz-Harris. No, it was upon another Account, I appeal to Mr. Just. Dolben.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What do you appeal to me for?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Have you known Mr. Fitz-Harris before, Sir William?

Sir Will. Waller. Yes, many Years.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What Religion was he reputed to be of?

Sir Will. Waller. A Roman Catholick.

Fitz-Harris. I am not bound to continue so always.

Mr. Jones. Shew your Conversion.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray let the Libel be read.

[Then the Paper was produced.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir W. Waller, and Mr. Everard, is that the Paper?

Mr. Everard. This is the Paper.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is it interlined with his own Hand?

Mr. Everard. Yes, for there are the Words (have promoted) that I said before, he altered.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, pray mark this now, you will hear the Clauses contained in the Indictment read, and you shall hear this Paper read, and then yourselves shall be Judges, whether it does contain them, yea, or no.

Mr. Johnson. We desire to see it at the Bar.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is a Copy of these Clauses, you may examine it by that.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. 'Tis not the whole Libel, but only some Clauses of it he is indicted for.

L. C. J. Yes, Brother: But what they desire is only to see whether so much as is contained in the Indictment, is also in the Libel.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray swear Mr. Astrey, then; (which was done.)

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, this is one that is intrusted with the Affairs of the Crown; he is now sworn, and I ask him this Question for your Satisfaction: Mr. Astrey, are the English Sentences that are in the Indictment also comprized in the Libel?

Mr. Astrey. My Lord, I did examine this Indictment with the Libel at Mr. Attorney General's Chamber as well as I could, and they are in terminis the same; the Words in the Indictment, and the Words in the Libel.

Mr. Johnson. My Lord, if all be not in the Indictment that is in the Libel, then perhaps there may be some Connection with what is antecedent, something to explain those Clauses the Indictment mentions, so that they may bear another Construction. Therefore we would have all read.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. It must be all read to them.

L. C. J. Yes, Brother, it shall be wholly read them, though it need not be expressed de verbo in verbum in the Indictment; yet for their Satisfaction it shall be wholly read to them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. These Gentlemen are very cautious, I perceive.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, if you will attend the Court, we will give you what Satisfaction we can; pray, Mr. Solicitor, give them Leave to speak to the Court: What you desire, Gentlemen, is reasonable enough, that you may hear the Libel, to see whether these are not Clauses taken out of a Paper, which may have another Import in the Paper than they have when they are taken out; that is your Meaning.

Mr. Johnson. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. To that Intent you shall hear the Libel read distinctly; you shall have the very Clauses of the Indictment by you, that you may look upon them.

Mr. Att. Gen. The other Part of the Libel will do it.

L. C. J. Pray, Mr. Attorney, don't direct me, they shall have the Indictment whilst Mr. Astrey reads the Libel, that they may see the Import of the Words. You do not apprehend it aright: Mr. Johnson does not desire to see, whether Mr. Astrey read right, but whether those Clauses in the Indictment are of the same Import in the Indictment, that they are in the Libel; therefore they must have a Copy of the Indictment whilst Mr. Astrey reads the Libel: And Mr. Astrey, pray mark those Clauses, when you come to them, for you will find they are dispersed up and down the Libel.

Mr. Astrey. I do not swear to that very Paper; but I believe you will find they are rightly taken out of the Libel in the Indictment.

Mr. Att. Gen. This is the Copy of the Indictment-Clauses.

Cl. of Cr. reads. Friend, I thank thee for the Character of the Popish Successor—

[Then one of the Jury, having the Copy in his Hand, and not finding it exact, desired a true Copy.]

Sir Will. Waller. Here is a true Copy of it, which I took myself, and read in the House.

[Then the Libel was read through, which was as follows:]

The true Englishman speaking plain English, in a Letter from a Friend to a Friend.

I Thank you for the Character of a Popish Successor which you sent me, wherein our just Fears, and the Grounds of them, are justly set out. But I am in greater Fear of the present Possessor; why do we frighten ourselves about the Evil that is to come, not looking to that which is at Hand? We would cut off the budding Weeds, and let the poisonous Root lie still; we would stop the Channel of our Evils, and let the Fountain still run: My meaning is this; can Pylades know and act all these these bloody Conspiracies, and not impart them to his dear Orestes? If James be conscious and guilty, Charles is so too: Believe me, these two Brethren in Iniquity, they are in Confederacy with Pope and French, to introduce Popery and arbitrary Government, as all their Actions demonstrate. The Parliament, Magna Charta, and Liberty of the Subjects, are as heavy Yokes which they would cast off to be as to be as absolute as their Brother of France; and if this can be proved to be their only Aim and Endeavour, why should not every true Briton be a Quaker thus far? Let the English rise, and move as one Man to Self-Defence, to open Action, and sling off their intolerable Riders. Blow the Trumpet, stand on your Guard, and withstand them as Bears and Tygers. And since there can be no trust given to this goodly Couple of Popish Brethren, nor no Relief expected from a Parliament; trust to your Swords in Defence of your Lives, Laws, Religion, and Properties, like the stout Earl of old, who told a King, that if he could not be defended by Magna Charta, he would be relieved by Longa Spada.

Yet to convince the World, that this Scottish Race is corrupt, Root and Branch, and Popish from the very beginning, be pleased to consider these Reasons following:

The Grand-Father of these Men, James the Scot, was of no Religion at the bottom, but entred by a Pretence of a sham Plot of the Papists against his Life, whilst really he colloqued with the Popish Party under-hand; his Mother, his Kindred and Companions were French, and Papists; when come into England, he wrote to the Pope with great Submission, yet afterwards thinking it for his Purpose to cajole the Parliament, and write against the Pope and Cardinals, he sends a Scot's Bird to blind the Eyes of the Vatican Keeper with Money, and to steal his Letters from off the Roman File, and then he crows as boldly as an unsuspected Harlot for the Protestant Religion and Interest.

That Man's Son, Charles the First, held a secret Correspondency with the Pope, calling him his dear and holy Father, as is to be seen in his Letters recorded in Rushworth's Collections: Were not his Wife and Courtiers Papists? Did he not countenance and promote the Rebellion in Ireland? As the Irish Grandees and his very Commissions testify and declare, was there not a Popish Plot, and an universal Conspiracy of the Papists discovered to him and his Confessor Laud, and did they not piously stifle it, lest they should have discovered the Nakedness of their Mother Church? Whilst that goodly Protestant Prince pretended to relieve the poor besieged Protestants at Rochel by his confident Buckingham, did he not hold Correspondency with the French Cardinal how to betray them for a Sum of Money? (which his Obstinacy with his Parliament made him stand in need of.) But they who so ill approved themselves to be Heads of the Protestant Church, Charles and Laud, did they not lose their own Heads by a manifest Judgment of God? And was not the false Heart of their Emisary Buckingham, found out by an Assassin's Knife?

But to come nearer to our Purpose, these two goodly Imps of our Days are stark Naught, arrived at the Height of Wickedness, and of professed Arbitrariness and Popery.

As for James he was a Papist whilst he had a Regiment in the French, and afterwards in the Spanish Service beyond Seas. And as for Charles, he was reported, ere he came into England, to have been reconciled to the Church of Rome in one of the French King's Country-Houses; and since they came in, how have they wheedled and played fast and loose in their Profession of Religion, as Occasion and their Affairs required? Have they not all along maintained secret Correspondency with France and Rome? As Coleman's Letters may sufficiently instruct such who have not seen more secret Memoirs.

But let us come to examine their Actions, which are a better Proof of their Hearts: Were not the Duke's Servants and Confidants all Papists? Witnesses his Talbots, Patricks, and other Irish Teagues. Were not the Duke and such of his Creatures as were known Papists, promoted to all publick Offices of Trust, both at Sea and Land? Witnesses Bellasis, now a Traitor in the Tower. Did not James, by Coleman, Throgmorton, and others, hold open Correspondency with the Pope and Cardinals? And could Charles be ignorant of all this? Nay, he liked all so well, that he hardly employed any about him but Papists, as Clifford, whom he made Treasurer; or employed any abroad but Persons of the same Stamp. Witnesses Godolphin, whom he sent Ambassador into Spain, as he did others elsewhere; what more obvious than that, though the Duke's Treachery against the Kingdom and Protestant Religion be fully made out, and the People and Parliament seek to bring him to a legal Trial, yet Charles obstructs Justice, and will not suffer it? How can this be, but that he is joined in Will and in Deed in all the Duke's Villainies, and that he is afraid to be discovered and found out to be a Papist, and a Betrayer of his People and the Protestant Religion? If he was heartily concerned for our Religion, would he not oppose a Popish Successor, who would infallibly overthrow it? Can there be any Thing more evident, than that he continues the Duke's Adherents, and those who were advanced by him in all Offices of Trust? And hath he not turned out of his Council the most zealous Protestants, such as Shaftesbury, Essex, and others, and introduced in their Rooms other mere Tools, or those that are popishly and arbitrarily affected? Hath he not modelled all the Sheriffs and Justices throughout England, in Subserviency to a popish Design? Was not Sir William Waller, and Dr. Chamberlain, and divers others turned out of the Commission in and about London, merely for being zealous Prosecutors of Priests and Papists? Doth not Charles all he can to hinder the further Detection of the popish Plot? And doth he not to his utmost discountenance the Discoverers of it, and suffer them to want Bread? And doth he not in the mean Time plentifully encourage and reward Fitzgerald and all the sham Plotters? Whereas Dangerfield had 8l. a Week whilst a Forger of Plots against the Protestants, he is cast off with Scorn, and in Danger of his Life, since he laid open the Popish Engineers. Is not Charles so much in Love with his Popish Irish Rebels, (therein treading in his Father's Steps) that he promotes Mongarret, Carlingford, Fitz-Patrick, and others who were the Heads of the Rebellion, to Honours and Preferment; though Charles took the Covenant and a Coronation Oath to preserve the Protestant Religion, yet hath he not palpably broken them? He made large Promises and Protestations at Breda for the allowing a perpetual Liberty of Conscience to Non-conforming Protestants, but he soon forgot them all: To what end was the Act, which was made soon after his Restoration, prohibiting any to call him Papist, or to say he was popishly inclined, and render such as should offend, guilty of a Pre-munire; but to stop the People's Mouths whenever he should act any Thing in Favour of Popery, as he was then resolved to do?

Is it not manifest therefore that Scotch Oaths, Breda Promises, Protestant Profession, Liberty of Conscience, War with France, saving of Flanders, is all in Jest to delude Protestant Subjects? Is it not apparent that breaking of Leagues, Dutch War, Smyrna Fleet, French Measures to favour their Conquests, Loss of Ships, War in Christendom, Blood of Protestants, relieving of Popish Traitors, is all in Earnest, and done in favour of Popery? And are not his fair Speeches, his true Protestant Love to Parliaments, just Rights, and English Liberties, his pretended Ignorance of the Plot, and his hanging of Traitors to serve a Turn but in mere Jest? Are not his great Debaucheries, his whoring Courtiers, popish Councils, cheating Rogues, hellish Plottings, his saving of Traitors, his French Pensioners, his Nests of Whores, and Swarms of Bastards, his Macks, his Cut-throats, his horrid Murderers, his Burning of London and the Provost's House too, his sham Plotting, his suborned Villians, his popish Officers by Sea and Land, his Strugglings for a popish Successor, his Agreements with France, his frequent Dissolutions of Parliaments, his buying of Voices, his false Returns, all of them Designs to ruin us in good earnest, and in favour of arbitrary Government? And is it not in order to this blessed End that you see none countenanced by Charles and James, but Church Papists, betraying Bishops, tantivy Abhorers, barking Touters, popish Scribblers to deceive the People, and fix the Popish Successor's illegal Title? Are not Jesuits Counsels, French Assistance to conquer Ireland, subdue Scotland, win Flanders, beat the Dutch, get their Shipping, be Masters of the Seas? And are not facing a Rebellion, the letting the Plot go on, the endeavouring to retrieve the Popish Cause by getting a Popish Pensionary, abhorring Parliaments, who shall betray their Country, enslave Posterity, and destroy themselves at last, Means only to save a popish traitorous Successor, and a present popish Possessor? James and Charles are Brethren in Iniquity, corrupt both in Root and Branch, and who study to enslave England to a French and Romish Yoke, is not all this plain? Have you not Eyes, Sense, or Feeling? Where is the old English noble Spirit? Are you become French Asses, to suffer any Load to be laid upon you? And therefore if you can get no Remedy from this next Parliament, (as certainly you will not) and if Charles doth not repent and comply with it, then up all as one Man. O brave Englishmen, look to your own Defence ere it be too late; rouse up your Spirits, remember your Predecessors, remember how that the asserting of their Liberties, justified both by Success and Law, the War of the Barons against wicked Counsellors who misled the King. And will you now let that go which cost them so dear? How many oppressing Kings have been deposed in this Nation, as appears in Records referred unto in that worthy Patriot's History of the Succession; were not Richard II. and Henry VI. both laid aside, not to mention others, and was there ever such a King as this of ours? Was not King John deposed for going about to embrace the Mahometan Religion, and for entering into a League with the King of Morocco to that Purpose? Though Mahometism and the King of Morocco were no such Enemies to our Rights and Liberties, as Popery and the French are. Is it not Time then that all should be ready? Let the City of London stand by the Parliament, for the maintaining of their Liberties and Religion in an extreme Way, if parliamentary Ways be not consented unto by the King, let the Counties be ready to enter into an Association, as the County of York did in Henry the Sixth's Time.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, now you have heard it read, and you may observe there is nothing in this Paper can extenuate or mitigate the Clauses, but abundance to make them more horrid and exceedingly aggravated.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then call Mr. Saville, who was the Person Mr. Everard did meet with, and acquaint with this Business (but he did not appear.) Then call Sir Philip Lloyd and Mr. Bridgman. My Lord, the next Piece of Evidence we shall give, is this; Sir William Waller and Mr. Everard do both say, that he gave part of his Instructions under his own hand; we shall produce the Paper, and prove he acknowledged it to be his own Hand.

[Then the Paper was produced.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Who writ that, Sir?

Mr. Everard. Mr. Fitz-Harris.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are those the Instructions he gave you to frame this Libel?

Mr. Everard. These are part of the Instructions, my Lord; the other part I took in my Table-Book before Mr. Smith.

Mr. Att. Gen. We will prove it by other Witnesses, Sir Philip Lloyd, and Mr. Bridgman.

Mr. Bridgman sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did the Prisoner acknowledge that to be all his own Hand-writing?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, my Lord, Mr. Fitz-Harris did acknowledge it to be all writ with his own Hand.

Sir Philip Lloyd sworn.

Sir Fran. Withins. Look upon that Paper, Sir, (which he did.) Did Mr. Fitz-Harris acknowledge it was his Hand-writing?

Sir Philip Lloyd. Yes he did; and that I might bear testimony of it the better, I writ with my own Hand on the back of it, that he did so.

Mr. Att. Gen. Read it.

Cl. of Cr. reads, After this sham Meeting of the Parliament at Oxford, which nobody expects any Good of, it will be necessary, &c.

Mr. Sol. Gen. These Words are likewise in the Indictment.

L. C. J. When was that given to you, Mr. Everard? for—Mr. Fitz-Harris it seems owned it before the Lords in the Council, but Mr. Everard swears of the Delivery of it; what time was it?

Mr. Everard. It was either Monday or Tuesday.

L. C. J. In February, was it not?

Mr. Everard. Yes, and I asked Captain Fitz-Harris, according to Will. Waller's Queries, whether he had given Instructions according to what he would have contained in the thing? Yes, said he; but have not enough under my own Hand to do it by?

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, we have done our Evidence, we will leave it now to hear what the Prisoner will say for his Defence.

L. C. J. Mr. Fitz-Harris, if you have any thing to say for your Defence, this is your time to do it.

Fitz-Harris. Yes, my Lord, Dr. Oates, I desire, may be called.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you have any Witnesses, name them.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. Yes, yes, Dr. Oates? and ask him what he heard Mr. Everard say.

L. C. J. What say you to Dr. Oates? here he is.

Fitz-Harris. Pray, Doctor, what have you heard Mr. Everard say about this Libel since I was taken?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, after this Business was talked of abroad, having heard that Sir William Waller and Everard had made the Discovery, I did discourse Mr. Everard about the Business, and about the Libel. He told me he wrote the Libel, and when I would not believe it, the Man was a little angry that I would not believe it: And then I told him he was a Man very unfortunate in speaking; for he spoke but badly. He said, though he was unfortunate in his Tongue, yet he was as fortunate in his Pen, and that he took a great deal out of the intercepted Letter to Roger L'Estrange: and I then asked him what the Design of it was, he told me, it was to be printed, and to be sent about by the Penny-Post to the protesting Lords, and the leading Men in the House of Commons, and they were to be taken up as soon as they had it, and to be searched, and to have it found about them. I then asked him if there were any other Persons concerned in it, besides those publicly talked of; he told me the Court had a hand in it, and the King had given Fitz-Harris Money already, and would give him more if it had success. This he told me at Oxford, and before he went thither, and after.

Fitz-Harris. Mr. Sheriff Cornish, I do beg you say what his Majesty told you, when you came to him from me, when I was in Newgate.

Mr. Sheriff. I do not know what you call me for, Mr. Fitz-Harris.

Fitz-Harris. I desire you to acquaint the Court what the King said to you when you came to him from Newgate from me.

Mr. Sheriff. My Lord, I shall desire your Lordship's Opinion in this Matter, whether it be seemly or decent for a Subject to declare what Discourse his Prince is pleased to have with him?

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, if you give any Evidence, give it. We are not to direct any Witness whether they shall give their Evidence, or not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Sheriff, you ought to do it openly, if you give any; therefore pray let us hear you.

Mr. Sheriff. My Lord, I cannot remember what was said relating to this particular Matter. There was a great deal his Majesty was pleased to discourse with me concerning things of several kinds and natures; my Memory may fail me; but if Mr. Fitz-Harris please to ask as to any particular Matter.

Fitz-Harris. What the King said when you came from Newgate to him, to acquaint him that I would make a Discovery: Did he say I was employ'd by him, and received any Money, and what for?

Mr. Sheriff. My Lord, I do remember something of that kind. When I was giving his Majesty an account that I found the Prisoner at the Bar in a Disposition to make a Discovery, his Majesty was pleased to tell me, he had often had him before him and his Secretaries upon Examination, and could make nothing at all of what he did say or discover to them; and his Majesty was pleased likewise to say, that he had for near three months before acquainted him, that he was in Pursuit of a Plot, a Matter that related much to his Majesty's Person and Government: And the King did say, in as much as he made great Protections of his Zeal for his Service, he did countenance and give him some Money. I know nothing more.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did the King ever declare that he saw Fitz-Harris in his Life, or that he ever was in his Presence?

Mr. Sheriff. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, but before his appearing at the Council-Table, did the King ever say he saw him, or before he was arrested for this Fact?

Mr. Sheriff. Yes, his Majesty was pleased to say about three Months before, he came to him, and pretended he would discover a great Plot to him.

L. C. J. Have you any other Questions to ask Mr. Sheriff?

Fitz-Harris. No. Where is Colonel Mansel?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I desire that if the Prisoner have any more Questions to ask me, he may do it; because the Croud is great, and I would go out.

Fitz-Harris. Sir, I have many more Questions to ask you, I desire you would please to stay.

L. C. J. You must stay if he have any more Questions to ask you. Here is Col. Mansel, what say you to him?

Fitz-Harris. Colonel, what did you hear Sir William Waller say, after this Discovery was made?

Col. Mansel. That which I heard Sir William Waller say, was this: I had occasion to speak with Sir James Hayes, and enquiring for him, I found he was at the Dog-Tavern; so I went up, and found in the Company Sir William Waller, and another Gentleman, one Mr. Hunt, and some more. After the rest of the Company were gone, and only Sir James Hayes, Mr. Hunt, myself, and Sir William Waller left, Sir William was giving an Account of this Business, and said the King, when I had acquainted him with it, told me I had done him the greatest piece of Service that ever I had done him in my Life, and gave me a great many Thanks; but I was no sooner gone from thence, but two worthy Gentlemen gave me an account, that the King said, I had broken all his Measures, and he would have me taken off one way or another.

Fitz-Harris. Did he say any thing, that it was a Design to put the Libel upon the Protestant Lords and the House of Commons?

Col. Mansel. There was that said.

L. C. J. What was said? Don't come with your imperfect Discourses here; but if you give Evidence, tell what was said.

Col. Mansel. Sir William Waller said, that the Design was against the Protestant Lords, and the Protestant Party.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. I do not doubt that it was against the Protestant Party.

Mr. Att. Gen. Recollect yourself: Was it against the Protestant Lords, or the Protestant Party.

Col. Mansel. He said, the Protestant Party.

Mr. Att. Gen. So say we.

Fitz-Harris. Did he not say it was another sham Plot, Sir, against the Fanatics, and the House of Commons? Where is Mr. Hunt?

[Mr. Hunt appeared.]

Mr. Hunt. What would you have with me, Mr. Fitz-Harris? I never had any Conversation with you in my Life.

Fitz-Harris. No, Sir; but what have you heard Sir William Waller say concerning my Business?

Mr. Hunt. My Lord, I would rather I had lost my Hearing for that Time, than have heard it to repeat it. Sir William Waller did tell me, at the Dog-Tavern, where was Sir James Hayes, and Colonel Mansel by, after he had read over the Libel to us, there was a great deal of Company more; but he only gave us the Curiosity to see what the Libel was: And when he had read it, he did tell us, that the King gave him particular Thanks for that good service he had done him in detecting Fitz-Harris; but he said he was told by two Gentlemen that had heard the King speak it, who were of undoubted Credit, that the King was in an extreme Passion, bestowed many hard Names on him, and said, he would give any thing in the World to take him out of the World; that he was an insufferable Vexation to him, and that he had broken all his Measures. And he said the same things again, in the Presence of Sir Philip Harcourt, and my Lord Radnor's Son Mr. Roberts, at Capt Hall's Chamber, in Pembroke-College in Oxon.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he say about the Prisoner?

Mr. Hunt. This was about the Libel of Fitz-Harris, that the King gave him particular Thanks about that Business: And afterwards the King did express great Passion, in some short Time after he was gone: And he did say he was informed by two Witnesses, that heard the King say it, he knew not what to do with him, he broke all his Measures.

Fitz-Harris. Did he not say, this was a Design against the Protestants?

Mr. Hunt. He did say it was a Design to contrive these Papers into the Hands of People, to make them Evidences of Rebellion; and that was his Apprehension of the Thing. And he said further (for I am a Witness here, and must speak all my Knowledge) that he had another Plot which he had traced near to a full Discovery, a more horrid Plot than this or Dangerfield's; for he said, this was the Counterpart of Dangerfield's Plot. I hope he will not deny it, if he be asked, here he is, and upon his Oath; I am not, and I desire not to take Credit unsworn, but am willing to give my Testimony on Oath.

Fitz-Harris. Where is Dr. Cary?

Mr. Sh. Cornish. Dr. Cary is not well, my Lord, and can't come.

Fitz-Harris. Then Mr. Sheriff Bethell.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I pray I may be discharged.

L. C. J. Doctor, we have nothing to say to you, but the Prisoner hath more Questions to ask you. 'Tis not we that detain you, but you stay upon the Prisoner's account.

Fitz-Harris. Mr. Sheriff Bethell, I desire to know what you can say concerning Mr. Everard.

Mr. Sh. Bethell. My Lord, I know nothing of Mr. Everard as to his Business, save that he told me, he writ the Libel himself. And I confess, my Lord, further, that before ever he knew my Face, or before ever he heard me speak a Word in his Days, he put in an Information of Treason against me, at the Instigation of one that is known to be my mortal Enemy: And it was so groundless, that though it was three Years ago given in, yet I never heard a Word of it till Friday last, I can bring Witnesses of this, Persons that sent the Notice of it to me.

Fitz-Harris. Pray call Mrs. Wall, (who came down from her Seat.)

Fitz-Harris. Mrs. Wall, pray will you tell the Court, have not I conveyed some Libels and treasonable Papers to the King by your Means, and received Money upon that Account?

Mrs. Wall. Not as I know of.

Fitz-Harris. Did not you receive some of them from me to give to the King?

Mrs. Wall. No indeed not I.

Fitz-Harris. Is the Footman here that was by, when you paid me the Money?

Mrs. Wall. Yes, and the Porter too, though you have not subpoena'd them.

Fitz-Harris. How long ago is that?

Mrs. Wall. Two Years ago.

Fitz-Harris. Was it not about Christmas last was Twelve-month I gave you the Libel about the King and your Lady; and the King thanked me extremely, and I had 250*l.* given me? Come Mrs. Wall, don't think to trick me out of my Life in the Case, for I will not be tricked so. Pray tell the Court: Can you deny that I had the 250*l.*? speak, Mrs. Wall, had I 250*l.*?

Mrs. Wall. That was not the Question you asked me at first.

Fitz-Harris. But speak, had I it?

Mrs. Wall. There was 250*l.* I think it was 200 or 150, or 250*l.*

Fitz-Harris. What Use was it for? and upon what account?

Mrs. Wall. You do know it was not for any Libel.

Fitz-Harris. If you have any mind, tell it.

Mrs. Wall. There it is: (Delivering in a Paper to be read.)

Cl. of Cr. The humble Petition of Edward Fitz-Harris.

Mrs. Wall. I really took him for as honest a Man as ever I knew in my Life; and had it been in my Power to have done him a Kindness, I should not have failed to have done it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was he your Countryman, Madam?

Mrs. Wall. Yes, he is, and my Relation too. I knew him to be the Son of a very suffering, loyal Family; and while his Mother was in Town, he came often to our House; and when she went away, he left visiting the House a great while. And you, Mr. Fitz-Harris, did once tell me, you could bring in People to the King's Interest, that were very considerable. So I spoke to the Secretary of State about you, that there was one that had been with me, and told me, that he could bring in those to the King and Duke's Interest that were very considerable. The Secretary of State desired of me to know who they were; and then he named to me one Thomas Merrey, and another Person, who I desire to be excused from naming. The other Party he did name was thought considerable, both for Quality and Understanding; and the Secretary desired me to get him in, if I could.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Madam, who was it?

Mrs. Wall. I desire Mr. Fitz-Harris may tell you.

Fitz-Harris. No, Mrs. Wall, pray do you tell it, since you have spoke of it.

Mrs. Wall. I say nothing but what I will take my Oath of.

Fitz-Harris. Then you will never swear that which is true. Pray, Mrs. Wall, speak, who was it?

Mrs. Wall. I desire I may not name him; but he may.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. He will not.

Mrs. Wall. Truly I do not think it convenient for me to name such Persons as those are, upon such accounts.

Fitz-Harris. Pray, Mrs. Wall, name the Person that I would have brought into the King's Service.

Mrs. Wall. If the Court commands me, I will; otherwise I will not.

Fitz-Harris. Did you ever, upon any such account as this, receive any Money for me? Speak the Truth.

Mrs. Wall. God forbid your Blood should lie at my Door; I assure you, I should be sorry for it. He told me, these Persons were considerable for the King's Interest, and could do him extraordinary good Service. So, as I said, I spoke to the Secretary of State; and he would know who they were. And when he was told who they were, as for one of them, Thomas Merrey, he was not thought worth the looking after, for he was thought an inconsiderable Rascal; but as for the other Gentleman, he was thought a Man of Worth, and a Person, that, if he would, could really serve the King. Upon this, when you first came, I was never at rest for you; and therefore, after a while, before you came again, I gave the Porter Order to tell you, I was not at home; and I desire the Porter may be asked the Question. But when I next saw the Secretary, I desired that he would give them a positive Answer, one way or the other; and the next time I saw you, this was your Business, and I told the Secretary of State of it. You gave me this Paper, and desired me to solicit for your Quit-Rent in Ireland, for you were in great Misery, and had been a great Sufferer. So I spoke to the Dutcheſs of Portsmouth, and she spoke to the Secretary of State; that if this Man be so considerable a Sufferer, 'tis convenient to give him something for his Encouragement: And if you will give him something, said I, give it him quickly. I was four, if not six Months, a-getting this Money.

Fitz-Harris. But will you say it was upon that account? When was that Money paid?

Mrs. Wall. I never thought I should be brought in for a Witness; or that you would have abused me thus for my Kindness.

Fitz-Harris. When were those Papers given you that you produced?

Mrs. Wall. I wish I may never see the Face of God, if I know any more than what I gave Evidence; there are the Papers, they will tell you the Time.

Fitz-Harris. Did I give them you?

Mrs. Wall. You or your Wife did; and I suppose your Wife's Condition was yours.

Fitz-Harris. Was not the Money received before those Papers ever were given you?

Mrs. Wall. Nay, Mr. Fitz-Harris, I will tell you more; send to Mr. Henry Guy, and let him tell you when he paid it you.

Fitz-Harris. Call the Porter, and the Footman if he be here.

L. C. J. If you would ask any more Questions of Mrs. Wall, do.

Fitz-Harris. Did not I come to you the Wednesday before I was taken, and told you, I desired to speak with the King, and that I had a Libel to present to him?

Mrs. Wall. No, so far from that, that it was the Thursday before you were taken, you came about nine o'Clock at Night to our Lodgings, and sent up to my Chamber; and I sent word that Mr. Cowling was there, for I did not care to see you: But you sent word up, you had something of Consequence to tell me. So I came down, and you desired me to bring you to the Speech of the King, which was a thing you did never desire before: And you said thus, if you did but see the King, you believed you could say something to him that might do him Service.

Fitz-Harris. Did not I say, here is the Libel that I come to deliver to the King now?

Mrs. Wall. No, as I have a Soul to be saved.

Fitz-Harris. Mrs. Wall, I did, and this was what you said at the same time: That since my Lord Sunderland was gone, you could have no secret Service. I did desire to speak with the King privately, those were the Words; and you told me, you could not so easily do Business with the King, since my Lord Sunderland's time.

L. C. J. We must not let you hold a Dialogue between yourselves, you must speak that the Court may hear.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was not he a Roman Catholic?

Mrs. Wall. Yes, we looked upon him so, and upon that account we said it was dangerous for him to go near the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not you know that ever he was admitted to the King?

Mrs. Wall. Never; but he hath been talking with me in a Room as the King passed by.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did the King ever take any Notice of him, speak to him?

Mrs. Wall. The King never took Notice of him, nor spoke with him by my means, nor gave him Money, other than what I speak of, nor the Dutcheſs of Portsmouth.

L. C. J. Look you, Mrs. Wall, I think you do say, that there was some Money paid to Mr. Fitz-Harris; pray speak plain, upon what account was it paid?

Mrs. Wall. My Lord, it was for the bringing in of my Lord Howard of Eſſerick, who is there; since you press me to it, I must tell; I think my Lord will not deny it.

Ld. Howard. I will never deny the Truth.

Fitz-Harris. Where was my Lord Howard of Eſſerick?

Mrs. Wall. He was not so much for the King's Interest, or that which they call the King's Interest.

Fitz-Harris. How long is this since?

Mrs. Wall. Two years ago since he came first to me; but whether it be a Year and a half since my Lord met with the King, I cannot tell.

Fitz-Harris. When my Lord was admitted in to the King, I did wait on him to that purpose, to bring in my Lord Howard.

Mrs. Wall. I desire that my Lord Howard may be asked, whether he don't remember, when the King was coming, Mr. Fitz-Harris was put out of the Room first.

Fitz-Harris. You say, I never shewed any Libel to the King.

Mrs. Wall. I tell you what I said since to this Gentleman that is here; I with you had shewn the Libel unto me, that I might have been in a Capacity of saving your Life.

Fitz-Harris. You said, that I had the 250*l.* for bringing in my Lord Howard.

Mrs. Wall. I say, it was upon Promise to bring in Persons that would be useful and serviceable to the King.

L. C. J. She is your own Witness, and she tells you, two Persons you did undertake to bring in, and for that you had this Money.

Mrs. Wall. It was his Poverty and this together.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Mrs. Wall, I conceive he never discovered this Libel unto you; but pray, did he ever discourse with you about Everard? and what Character did he give him?

Mrs. Wall. Once he did, and he said he was an honest Man; and asked me if I would be acquainted with him? I told him No, for he had a knavish Reputation; He was an Informer, and I cared for no Informers.

Fitz-Harris. Mrs. Wall, to let the World see how you shuffle about me, When did the King see my Lord Howard first, when I brought him?

Mrs. Wall. I don't know, ask my Lord Howard.

Fitz-Harris. Did not I speak to the King in the outer Room? And did not you get me to make a stand there?

Mrs. Wall. Mr. Fitz-Harris, don't make me tell that Thing.

Fitz-Harris. Pray speak the Truth, Mrs. Wall.

Mrs. Wall. I defy you and all Mankind, to say I do otherwise. You did desire me to tell the Duke, that you would first bring my Lord to him, and then to the King; and I spoke to the Duke, and he said, you were a Rascal, and he would not meddle with you: This you know.

Fitz-Harris. Did not my Lady Portsmouth tell me, the Duke was angry, &c.

Mrs. Wall. Mr. Fitz-Harris, when you came to me upon such an Errand, was it reasonable that I should bring you, upon every Trifle, to the Speech of the King, and I should not bring you then? 'Tis without Sense and Reason.

L. C. J. You must not ask Questions, but answer. And Mr. Fitz-Harris, do you design to detect Mrs. Wall of Falshood? She is your own Witness, you consider not you can get nothing by that.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, when you see the Papers produced, you will find it is upon another Account.

Mrs. Wall. Is this your Hand, Mr. Fitz-Harris? (Shewing him a Paper.)

Fitz-Harris. But is not this upon the Account of a Pension granted in Ireland? Pray let the Gentlemen of the Jury see, this is of another different Nature; I appeal to my Lord Howard of Eſſerick, whether he did not speak to my Lady about it.

Ld. Howard. I did so.

Mrs. Wall. My Lord did second my Lady, to get you some Charity.

Fitz-Harris. So that the Money received here was plainly upon another Account.

L. C. J. Look you, if you will have any Papers read, they shall be read. But the Gentlemen of the Jury must not see any Papers but what are read.

Then the Petition of Mrs. Fitz-Harris, and the King's Letter to the Duke of Ormonde, was read, about a Pension in Ireland.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, if you please, I have something further to say to Mrs. Wall. But I desire to ask Mr. Cowling a Question, and that is, Sir, What Mrs. Wall said to you about my Business?

Mr. Cowling. My Lord, I think, the Day after this Man was examined in the Council, I came to Mrs. Wall, and she told me, that the second or third Night before he was taken, he came to her to bring him to the King; but she sent down Stairs, that she would not let him come up. But asked him, why he did not go to one of the Secretaries of State? No, said he, I can't go thither, without being taken notice of; but I'll tell you my Business. No, said she, if you will write down your Business, and give it me in a Paper, I will carry it to the King; and if the King have a mind to speak with you, you shall be sent for. No, said he, I will not do that. Then, said she, I must beg your Pardon, if I don't bring you to the King. And Mrs. Wall said further to me, truly her Blood did chill when she said so, for she was afraid he was come to do the King a Mischief.

Mr. Att. Gen. This was three or four Nights before he was taken.

Fitz-Harris. Is Sir Robert Thomas here? (He did not appear.) Then I desire my Lord Howard to stand up.

Ld. Howard. Have you any thing to say to me, Mr. Fitz-Harris?

Fitz-Harris. Yes, my Lord, if you please. My Lord, I desire your Lordship will please to tell, what my Lady Portsmouth did express to you concerning me, at your coming thither; and whether I did not introduce your Lordship; and how civil she was to me upon that account; and how she undertook to get the Quit-Rent for me.

Ld. Howard. Sir, I shall answer as particularly as I can all your Questions; but it will be necessary to introduce my Evidence with the Relation of the whole Transaction. You know, about October last, about the beginning of the Month; for it was, as I take it, ten Days, or a Fortnight, before the sitting down of the Parliament; you did make Applications to me, in the Name of the King, whether with or without his Privy, I cannot say; but you did make several Invitations to me, of putting myself into the Possession of an Honour I was altogether unworthy of, of waiting upon the King. I gave you my Reasons why I thought myself unfit for that Honour, because I was not in any Capacity of doing the King any Service: And I looked upon the King as a Person too sacred, and whose Time was too precious to be trifled away upon one that had nothing to offer to him, and therefore I refused it. But notwithstanding, this was reinforced by you: and when I still persisted in the Denial of that which was an Honour I ought rather to have sought, but only because I thought myself incapable of deserving it; after several Applications, I did at last tell you, besides the Impertinency of it, I did also apprehend it might be the Occasion of some Indecency; for perhaps I might thereby put myself upon declaring myself in some of my Sentiments, very much differing from those of his Majesty. And for me to seek an Opportunity to express my Contrariety to his Majesty's Thoughts, would be both Rudeness and Imprudence; and therefore I did then ultimately answer you, I would by no means be prevailed with. Then you did lower it, and said, it should suffice, if I would wait upon the Dutcheſs of Portsmouth. Truly, I told you, as to that too, you did me a great Honour, and greater than I could expect for I had nothing (I was afraid) worthy her trouble; and therefore I desired to know what it might mean. In short, you did resolve it into this, That you did find the King under great Apprehension, that there was something deep in the Hearts of some, that stood at a Distance from his Majesty, and opposite to his Interest; and that the Parliament stood at an irreconcilable Difference with the King. Truly, said I, I am a Person not fit to speak in the Name of a Parliament, for in a little time they will speak for themselves; but if were to I speak, or should presume presume to speak in the Name of the Parliament, or the whole Nation, I should say, I believed the King would find his Parliament meeting him with as great Affection, Duty, and Loyalty, as any Parliament ever met any King of England. You said, then you were confident, and you cited her Grace the Duchess of Portsmouth for it, that the King came to meet them with Inclinations to gratify them in any Thing they could desire. Then said I, to what End need I come there, for the Parliament will speak its own Sense speedily? Pray do me that Kindness, as to go and satisfy the Duchess of Portsmouth, and to let her know she may now have an Opportunity of declaring how willing she is to be a good Instrument between the King and his People. Said you, I can assure you, that she is altogether for the same Interest that you look towards; for you are very much mistaken, if you think she is a Friend to the Duke of York. My Lord, in short, after much Intreaty, I did give myself that Honour, which I have no Cause to repent or be ashamed of, to go to Whitehall, humbly to kiss my Lady Duchess's Hand, and receive her Commands. But when I came there, I was surpris'd with a greater Honour of finding the King there, and I think it was an Opportunity, wherein my Time was not ill spent as to myself, but I am afraid this 25th. if it were given for the bringing me thither, his Majesty doth not think he hath deserved it at this Time.

Fitz-Harris. Your Lordship came there in October last.

Lord Howard. Because I will do you all the right I can, it was, as I take it, the Beginning of October, and about the 10th, because the Parliament sat down the 23<sup>d</sup>, and as I remember, it was a Fortnight before. This was the first Time that I owe you Thanks for the Honour of seeing the King. After that, a Matter of ten Days, I had a second Opportunity, and by your Means also. This was the last Time I had the Honour to see the King, but in Public. After this, I must confess, when the Parliament was ended, I did then, willingly enough, invite myself to the Honour of waiting upon the Duchess, and give her Thanks, and tell her, I was sensible she had endeavour'd, as much as in her lay, to persuade the King into a good Opinion of the Parliament, and to give them Time of Setting, and thereby to give them Opportunity of explaining their Intentions for his Service and Advantage. This was also the last Time I had the Honour of seeing her. At last, parting from her, I did make it my humble Request to her, that she would be pleas'd to represent your Condition to the King, since by your Means I had the Honour to be shew'd the Way to her Grace's Lodgings.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, did not I come to you with a Message the Night before my Lord Stafford was condemn'd?

Lord Howard. You say right, and it was in my Thoughts, and yet I thought it too tender a Thing to speak of; and therefore I thought it so, because, I must confess, at that Time, (you must excuse me) I did believe you did not come with that Authority you pretended to make use of. After the Time that unfortunate Lord had had his Trial, and the House were preparing their Thoughts for the Sentence, I was indispos'd, and came not to the House that Day, which provoked the House so much, that they were near committing me to the Tower; but truly, I was so ill in Body, and had so little a Mind to have my Vote mixed with his Blood, that perhaps I should have run the Hazard of going to the Tower about it, if that had been all. But the Night before you came to me, and told me as a great Secret, That you did bring it as the Desire of the King, and as that which he would take as a great Instance of my Resignation to his Will and Pleasure, and that for which I might promise myself all the greatest Kindnesses possible for a Prince to shew to his Subjects, if I would go next Day and give my Vote for my Lord Stafford. Sir, said I, I have all the Obligations of Nature and Blood to dispose me, as much as can be, to favour my Lord Stafford, as far as can consist with the Integrity and Sincerity of a Judge: But though I was wavering in my own Thoughts the Day before, now by the Grace of God I will go, though I be carried on Men's Backs to the House; now I see there is so great an Account put upon it, for I see 'tis the Concerns, not only of my Lord Stafford, but the Protestant Cause; and then, said I, if all the Relations I have were melted down into my Lord Stafford, if I had but Breath enough to pronounce his Doom, he shall die.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord says, he did not think you came from the King, when you came with that Message.

Lord Howard. Sir, can I do any more Service? I shall be willing to do it if I can. I cannot deny, but I had by your Means, the Honour of waiting upon the King and the Duchess; but I had so little Reason to value my own Worth, that I cannot imagine how it should turn to the King's Service.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I desire to have Liberty of going away, the Crowd is so great I cannot stand, and the Prisoner hath nothing to say to me.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, that may be Part of the Popish Plot, to keep Dr. Oates here, to kill him in the Crowd.

Fitz-Harris. Have you not something more to say, Doctor? Truly I forget, my Memory is so distracted.

Dr. Oates. I know not, if you have any Questions to ask me, I will speak Truth. (But he had none, so the Doctor went away.)

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. Call Mr. Fanshaw; (who did not appear.)

Fitz-Harris. My Lady Duchess of Portsmouth.

Mrs. Wall. She is not come, because the Court is very full; but if the Court will send for her, she will come presently.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I beg that my Lady Duchess of Portsmouth may be sent for.

Mrs. Wall. She gave me a Commission to say, if the Court would have her to come, she would so do.

L. C. J. We cannot send for her, if she please to come, so; we have no Occasion to send for her.

Mrs. Wall. I presume he can ask her no Questions but what I can answer.

L. C. J. We will not prejudice the Prisoner in his Questions, nor send for her, unless she will come.

Fitz-Harris. Will you send one of your Footmen, Mrs. Wall? I am a Prisoner, and have no Body to send. In the mean Time, where is the Porter?

Mrs. Wall. Here he is.

Fitz-Harris. How long is it since you paid the Money to me, from my Lady Portsmouth?

Porter. I cannot tell indeed, 'tis so long since.

Fitz-Harris. Let him have his Oath.

L. C. J. No, that he can't have.

Fitz-Harris. Was it not Christmas last was Twelve-month?

VOL. III.

Porter. I can't indeed tell what Time it was.

Fitz-Harris. You dare not speak the Truth.

Mr. Just. Dolben. You disparage your own Witnesses.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He hath no Witnesses can say any thing for him, and therefore he must find fault with what they say.

L. C. J. Have you any other Witnesses, Mr. Fitz-Harris?

Fitz-Harris. Yes, my Lord, my Lord of Arran.

L. C. J. What say you to my Lord?

Fitz-Harris. Did not my Wife shew you this Libel the Sunday that I was taken?

E. of Arran. I do not remember I ever heard it, till I heard it read in the House.

Fitz-Harris. Did you not read it, my Lord?

E. of Arran. No, not that I remember.

Fitz-Harris. Did not I tell you, I was carrying it to the King?

E. of Arran. Not that I know of.

Fitz-Harris. Was it not a Dispute, whether this was Treason or not?

E. of Arran. You did shew me a Libel, but whether this, or no, I cannot say, perhaps it was this. I took him for an honest Man, my Lord; I have known him five Years, and knew his Family to be a good Family; I happened to be at Dinner with him the Day he was taken. After Dinner there were some Papers he pulled out, and I threw them away, I told you, you would do yourself a Mischief, some Time or other, in meddling with such Papers. There we drank a Bottle or two of Wine together, and then we parted. As soon as I came Home, I heard this Gentleman was seized on, and taken, which surpris'd me much. And this is all the Account I can give of the Matter.

Fitz-Harris. Then your Lordship did not read the Paper?

E. of Arran. No indeed, not I.

Fitz-Harris. Did not I tell you, I had a Promise of a Quit-Rent for Secret-Service?

E. of Arran. I do not know particularly what he told me of the Quit-Rent; but I was willing to do him all the Good I could, about a Reversion of a Pension that he had in the Right of his Wife; that was Part of my Business that Day, thinking he very well deserved it. I am very sorry to see that his Father's Son, as the Phrase is in Ireland, should be accused of such a Crime.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, before you go, I desire to ask you one Question: Did you observe ever that he was employed by the French King, or the French Ambassador's Confessor?

E. of Arran. No, my Lord, never, as I heard of. He used to speak as honestly as any Man; I thought him of the best and loyalest Principles of any of his Religion.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What Religion did you take him to be of?

E. of Arran. He always owned himself a Papist, and he and I have had some Disputes about it.

Fitz-Harris. Mr. Sec. Jenkins, I desire to know of your Honour, what the King said of me?

Mr. Sec. Jenkins. I remember the King did conjure him, to declare who the Author of the Libel was.

Fitz-Harris. You are a Man of Honour, Sir; Did not the King own he had employ'd me?

Mr. Sec. Jenkins. I never remember the King did own he made Use of him, by Mrs. Wall's Means, or otherwise.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord Conway, don't you remember it?

E. of Conway. No, not upon my Honour. But I have heard him say, he did formerly employ you in some trifling Things.

Fitz-Harris. Did not the King declare in Council, that I had gotten Money of him?

E. of Conway. That was for my Lord Howard of Eserick's Business.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Now your Lordship is here, I would ask you; Did you ever hear the King declare when he first spoke with the King?

E. of Conway. The King never spoke with him till after he was taken; he was taken the 27th of February, and the King never spoke with him till the 28th, the Day after.

Fitz-Harris. Did not you tell me, if the King did put himself upon the Parliament, they would use him as his Father was used?

Mrs. Wall. I never told you any such Thing. You promis'd me to bring in my Lord Howard of Eserick; but they found themselves mightily mistaken in what was promis'd he would do when he came in.

L. C. J. Why, Mr. Fitz-Harris, you cast any Thing upon any Body, to make a Noise.

Fitz-Harris. Where is Mr. Peacock?

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. I would know of her, what Mr. Bulstrode said.

L. C. J. That every Body may see you are fairly dealt with, you shall have all the Liberty that can be given. You must not ask what another said, but call them themselves to say what they know. Here is Mr. Bulstrode himself.

Fitz-Harris. Mr. Bulstrode, then, what Message did you bring from the King to my Wife?

Mr. Bulstrode. No Message at all; but I'll tell you what I know. Mrs. Fitz-Harris, soon after her Husband came to be close confin'd, delivered a Petition to the King in the Park; and the King was pleas'd to give it to me, as he frequently does. Mrs. Fitz-Harris came to me, to tell her what the King said to it. Said I, the King hath given me no Commands at all in it, but this, Carry it to the Secretary of State, for I cannot say any Thing to it. For the King generally tells me what he will have done with such a Petition. But she was so very importunate, I asked the King again; Sir, said I, Mrs. Fitz-Harris is very importunate, what is your Majesty's Pleasure in it? Said the King, If she have a Mind to petition the Council, she may, I will neither meddle nor make with it. Afterwards I met her several Times, and she said, her Husband was very severely and hardly used, and she was denied the Liberty of coming to him. Said I, I hear he is guilty of a very foul Thing, and there is no Way to help him, but by discovering the Author of that villainous Libel. For she asked me, what I thought of her Husband; and she told me, she intended to try what she could do for him. I said, there was no Way to do any Good, but to make a full Discovery of the Author. Then said she, if the King would but let me speak with him, I am sure I could do him Service, and prevail with him to discover the Author. So I told the King of it; and the King said, If she will come and be examin'd, with all my Heart. And as soon as ever I heard she was come to Town, I told her what the King said: And she told me, she would willingly come; and if the King would give her Leave to speak with her Husband, she did not doubt to prevail with him. That Night, about Midnight, after I was in Bed; and had been in Bed two Hours, she came to my Door and knocked me up. So I rose, and put on my Night-gown, and went down, and I heard a Voice which I thought was hers. So she came out of the Coach to me, and told me, said she, I am come to you to beg of you, that you would be secret, and not to let the Court know that I was to come to have any Conference with you; for if you do, I am undone and ruined; for there are some Persons, my Friends, that will not look upon me if they hear any such Thing. The next Morning I went to her, and told her, the King had directed she should be examined in the Afternoon, and she should come down to be examined: Which she did; and as soon as the Council was up, I told his Majesty she was below. So he ordered some to examine her; but when I told her of it, said she, if the King will not speak alone with me, I will not speak a Word, nor be examined. This is the Truth of it, I assure you, my Lord, upon my Salvation.

O o

Fitz-Harris. Where is Mr. Peacock?

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. What did Mr. Bulstrode say to me?

L. C. J. Look you, Mrs. Fitz-Harris, and you Gentlewoman, you must not be heard to talk of Discourses among yourselves, and to examine what Discourse passed between Person and Person, up and down; that is not to be permitted in a Court; the Witnesses is here, ask him himself. What hath been said to her, will be no Evidence.

Mrs. Fitz-Harris. What Offer did you make me?

Mr. Bulstrode. None; I told you this would be the Way to ruin your Husband.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I beg of you, may not I ask what he did say?

L. C. J. No, 'tis no Evidence.

Fitz-Harris. Then call Mr. Henry Killigrew. (But he not appearing, the Prisoner would have asked what he had been heard to say, but it was not permitted.)

Mrs. Wall. Here is the Footman Richard Perrot.

Fitz-Harris. How long ago is it since you brought the Money to me from my Lady Portsmouth?

Perrot. I never brought any.

Fitz-Harris. Was it not he brought the Money?

Mrs. Wall. Ask him.

Fitz-Harris. Was my Lord Howard ever at your House before October last?

Perrot. I do not know.

L. C. J. What Use do you make of that?

Fitz-Harris. Pray, my Lord, when did you go to my Lady Duche's? Was it before October last?

Lord Howard. I think not, I take it as near as I can, it was just before the Session of Parliament.

Fitz-Harris. It was ten Days before the Session.

Then my Lady Duche's of Portsmouth appeared, and a Chair was set for her.

Fitz-Harris. I am sorry to see your Grace come here upon any such Account; but I hope your Grace will excuse me, 'tis for my Life. I desire to know of your Grace, Whether I was not employed to bring several Papers to the King, and among the Rest, the Impeachment against your Grace: And thereupon your Grace was pleased to tell me, That it was a great Piece of Service to bring those Sort of Papers; and if I could find out Men serviceable for that Purpose, I should do the King good Service. I told your Grace, I knew one Mr. Everard, who knew all the Intrigues, and all the Clubs in the City, and could tell all the Designs of my Lord of Shaftesbury, and all that Party. And your Grace did encourage me to go on, and I did, by your Grace's Direction, and by your Means I came to speak with the King about it.

Lady Duche's. When must I speak?

Sir George Jefferies. Now, Madam; and will your Grace now be pleased to stand up?

Lady Duche's. I have nothing at all to say to Mr. Fitz-Harris, nor was concerned in any Sort of Business with him. All I have to say, is, he desired me to give a Petition to the King to get his Estate in Ireland; and I did three or four Times speak to the King about it. But I have not any Thing else to say to him; I never spoke to him about any Thing else.

Fitz-Harris. Does not your Grace remember what Directions I received about my Lord Howard?

Lady Duche's. I know nothing of that, I sent you not to my Lord Howard.

L. C. J. If you will ask any Questions of my Lady, do; but do not make any long Discourses.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, my Lady may forget. Madam, does not your Grace remember you undertook, upon the Account of those Papers I conveyed, that you would procure me my Quit-Rent?

Lady Duche's. I never had any Papers.

Fitz-Harris. Not that Paper of the Impeachment against your Grace?

Lady Duche's. No.

Fitz-Harris. Upon what Account then had I the Money I received?

Lady Duche's. For Charity.

Fitz-Harris. I am sorry your Grace is so much under Mrs. Wall's Influence.

Lady Duche's. I come not here to wrangle with you, Mr. Fitz-Harris, I am come here to say what I know, and will not say one Bit more.

Fitz-Harris. Have I had any Money of your Grace since you knew my Lord Howard?

Lady Duche's. You never had, but that for Charity.

Fitz-Harris. When did your Grace ask it for me?

Lady Duche's. I do not remember the Time. Mr. Fitz-Harris, if I had any Thing in the World to do you Good, I would do it; but I have it not, and so cannot see that I am any Ways more useful here. (Then her Grace went away.)

L. C. J. Mr. Fitz-Harris, have you any more Witnesses that you would have called?

Fitz-Harris. No, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Will you apply them you have called?

L. C. J. Well, have you any Thing further to say?

Fitz-Harris. Yes, my Lord, I have something further to offer for myself: I will tell you what I know, since my Witnesses will not do me Justice. Gentlemen of the Jury, you are my Judges in Point of Law as well as Fact, and my Blood will be required at your Hands, if you do not do me Right. My Lord, I cannot forbear complaining to the Court of the hard Usage I received in Prison, contrary to the Statute of the 31st of his Majesty's Reign; greater Oppression hath been done to me than to any before. My Lord Stafford, Sir Thomas Gascoigne, and others, had all the Liberty they could desire, to enable them to make their Defence against their Trial; which I have had denied me. But my Defence consists of two Heads, and I shall rely upon the Consciences of the Jury for the Issue. Though my Lady Portsmouth, and Mrs. Wall, and the Rest, are pleased to say, that I was not employed, nor received Money for secret Services; yet 'tis very well known I did so. As to Mr. Everard, when I met with him, though now he hath made a French Story, yet if he would tell the Truth, he knows that it was otherwise. He told me he was well acquainted with my Lord of Shaftesbury and my Lord Howard, and in several Clubs of the City he knew all their Intrigues; and that Speech that went by the Name of my Lord Shaftesbury's, my Lord gave it him before it was printed, and he had several other Things of that Kind. So then I told him, it was a Business of the greatest Consequence that could be, if he would continue those Discoveries. And whereas he says, I would betray the People to the French Interest, it is very well known I was always an Enemy to the French Interest; but I humoured him in his Discourse, and discoursed him to reduce the Paper that he accuses me of under some Heads; and that Paper I no sooner had, but I came to Whitehall with it: And though he said, he was to have forty Guineas, and so said Sir William Waller too, yet it was only forty Shillings that he desired, for his Poverty, I would lend him. And as to what he talks of three thousand Crowns Pension, it is a very unlikely Business. When I came to Whitehall, I was advised to go to my Lord Clarendon, or Mr. Hyde. Accordingly I did shew it to a Gentleman who was to give it to my Lord Clarendon, but before he could get to him, I was taken. Now, my Lord, I hope what I did was with a Design to serve the King, in discovering what was designed against him, according as I was employed, though both the Secretaries are so unkind as not to declare it: When I know I am in the Right, I am not ashamed to speak it, though my Life be lost upon it; and I refer it to the Gentlemen of the Jury. I was taken before I could come to the Speech of my Lord Clarendon. Next, I hope, Gentlemen of the Jury, you will consider these are great Persons that I have to do with; and where great State-matters are at the Bottom, it is hard to make them tell any Thing but what is for their Advantage: And so I am left in a sad Condition. But, my Lord, in the next Place, I think 'tis impossible for any Jury to find me guilty, without prejudging of those Laws which are not to be judged by any Jury or inferior Court: For if they judge me and bring me in guilty, 'tis Murder in them; and let the Bench tell them what they will, 'tis of that dangerous Consequence, that it overthrows the Government. My Lord, here is the Impeachment of the House of Commons, and here is a Copy of the Votes of the Commons thereupon; and though they be not Laws, yet they are such Declarations of the Parliament, as that afterwards no other Court ought to meddle with that Matter; and the inferior Courts do not use to meddle with Parliament-matters: And so, Gentlemen, you will lay at your own Doors what would lie at theirs, if you meddle not. For though the Court have over-ruled my Plea, yet the Matter is plain before you now who are my Judges, and my Blood will lie at your Doors, and you must answer it if you do me not Justice. And there is no insufficiency of a Plea as to Matter of Law will excuse you in Point of Fact; and you are obliged, as you will answer the contrary to God and your Consciences, to do me Right. And I hope your Lordship and the Jury will take particular Notice of this. I have been a close Prisoner, and had no Manner of Help, nothing at all allowed me to refresh my Memory; which if I had had Means to do as I ought, I could say a great deal more. But this I insist upon, if the Gentlemen of the Jury do bring me in guilty and convict me, they do shed my Blood, and overthrow the Law and Course of Parliaments. Whereas, if they bring me in not guilty, my Impeachment stands good still, and I am liable to answer that Impeachment before the Parliament: And I hope you will consider the Persons I have had to deal with; and that it cannot be made so plain, as in Matters wherein we deal with common Persons. I submit to what you shall think fit.

L. C. J. You have done, Mr. Fitz-Harris?

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I have done; only I would examine one Gentleman, if he were here, but he does not appear. But here's a Copy of the Impeachment and Votes of the House of Commons, I desire I may deliver them to the Jury.

L. C. J. No, no; that can't be.

Fitz-Harris. Sir William Waller does declare upon Oath, that for this very Thing I was impeached by the House of Commons, and that I desire them to take Notice of.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Therefore you are not guilty: Is that the Consequence?

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Lordships, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard our Evidence, and what the Prisoner hath said. The Crime, for which he is accused, that is High-Treason, and 'tis Treason in conspiring the Death of the King, in endeavouring to raise a Rebellion here; and that in order to destroy the King and the Liberty of all the People, to bring them under the Slavery of the King of France. This is the Treason that he was indicted for; and the Proof of this Treason is very full: It is proved to you by three positive Witnesses, and all Men of Credit, of whom you cannot have the least Suspicion. They prove to you, that Mr. Fitz-Harris is the Man guilty of this Treason; he was the Contriver of it, he was the Mover of it first to Mr. Everard, and he gave him those Instructions to pursue those Purposes of raising a Rebellion here, in order to destroy the King, by contriving a seditious Pamphlet to set the People together by the Ears; and he came to him in order to perfect this Libel. This is proved by Everard, who upon the first Motion of it to him, did acquaint Mr. Smith immediately, and Sir William Waller, that such a Design was on Foot, and desired them to come and be Witnesses of it. They both came, and heard the Communication between the Prisoner and Mr. Everard, to contrive such a Libel as hath been opened to you, and they swear it positively. Now what Defence does the Prisoner make to it? Truly I cannot say, whether it hath more of Folly or Impudence in it; for 'tis a Defence of a strange Nature; for it is inconsistent with itself, and shews what a Make he is of: And the latter Part is pursuing the same Treason he stands indicted for, which is the rendering the King odious to his People, by those Insinuations; that he did this by the King's Order. The first Part of his Defence is, I am not guilty, for Mr. Everard is the Man that did contrive it, it, and he is the Author, and it moves from him. Now pray consider the Parts of your Evidence, and see if there be any possibility for you to be induced to believe any thing like it. 'Tis proved by Mr. Everard positively, that he came to him first; and when you consider this Objection that is made by Mr. Fitz-Harris, and consider on the other Side who were the Witnesses, and who is the Man that makes the Objection, you will then see no Cause in the World for you to give any Credit to it. The Prisoner says he was trepanned into it: For that, pray consider he is an Irish Papist, one that hath all along made it his Business to defame the Proceedings about the Popish Plot, to ridicule it, to deny that there was ever any such a Thing, and to laugh at the Justice that was executed upon the Popish Offenders who died for the Plot. The Witnesses that prove it against him have been zealous Prosecutors of the Plot, Men that have discovered many of those who were guilty of it, and brought them to Justice; Men that have been material Evidences upon the Discovery. Mr. Smith is a Man that spoke materially in the Trial of my Lord Stafford, and for which Service, I believe, the Papists, and Mr. Fitz-Harris himself, owe him little Thanks. As for Sir William Waller, all Men know how busy and active he hath been to bring in Men that were guilty of the Plot, and he hath suffered for it. Now if you can believe that Mr. Smith and Sir William Waller should be guilty of a Trepan that was to be put upon Fitz-Harris, a Man of that Persuasion you hear of, (and you must believe that, or you cannot believe the Defence the Prisoner makes) I leave it to you. Mr. Everard could do nothing alone; why then Sir William Waller must be guilty of this Contrivance, and of setting Fitz-Harris on Work and Everard too. But this is so unlikely a Story, that if there were any to assert any such a Thing, you could not possibly give any Credit to it. But when you consider what hath been proved, and what hath been shewed you under the Hand of Fitz-Harris himself, then there is no Room I am sure to doubt. They do positively swear, both Smith and Sir William Waller, they heard him own that he had given Instructions to Everard. They prove to you that he mended this Libel in several Places, they not coming up to the Instructions he had before given. They prove Part of the Libel written with his own Hand, and that is Treason enough: For that is certainly Treason, that 'tis the undoubted Right of People to dethrone the King. I never heard of that Doctrine any where but among the Papists, and 'tis a Papist that preaches that Doctrine to you now. As this is an Evidence in a Matter beyond any Contradiction in the World, his own Hand-writing of Part, and his owning the giving the Instructions; so there is no Room in the World for you to believe that ever he was drawn into this by Everard; or that he was the Man that was the original Contriver of it, and trepanned him into it. But it appears plainly upon the Proof, that it moved originally from Fitz-Harris; that it was the Malice of his Heart that promoted it; and that the Contrivance was how to raise a Rebellion here. For when he had read Part of the Libel, and Everard told him that it was Treason, why said he, I meant it so; and the more Treason, the better; the more odious you make the King to be, the more likely 'tis to raise the People into a Rebellion; and the sooner you raise the People into a Rebellion, the more like you are to accomplish the Design of bringing the People into Slavery to the French King, and so at once to destroy all Liberty and Property, and all that is sacred. Nobody can believe but Mr. Fitz-Harris is guilty of this Libel and Contrivance to dethrone the King, and raise a Rebellion here, as the Witnesses have sworn. Now as you cannot possibly doubt but this moves from Mr. Fitz-Harris, so then consider the Inconsistency of the second Part of his Defence, and the Impudency of it too. For as before he pretended he was drawn into it by Mr. Everard, so now he would make you believe he did not do it out of a traitorous Design, for that he was employed about these Affairs; and this comes under the Title of secret Service: And he would fain have it that you should believe the King should hire him to raise a Rebellion against himself, to defame himself, and to incense the Minds of the People against him. And this must be the Service that he is put upon; he had no traitorous Intent in himself, but he was to trepan all the Lords that stood zealously up for the Protestant Religion and Property, and that by Direction from whom? From the King, whom Fitz-Harris would have all People to believe to be a Papist; and he would have People believe that he is an innocent Man, that he was only employed upon such a special Piece of Service; that the King should be at great Pains to employ Mr. Fitz-Harris to destroy himself and the whole Nation, and to stain his whole Family: And upon what Reasons would he have you to believe it? As first, you observed how inconsistent it is with the former Part of his Defence, that he was trepanned into it; now he did not do it from Mr. Everard, nor with a traitorous Intention. But certainly this is a Treason that nothing can be said to palliate or excuse, and I am sure he hath said nothing will do it. Yet all the Defence he hath made has tended that Way. For though he hath not arrived to the Confidence to say such a Thing is, yet he hath insinuated, by the Method of his Proceedings, that he would fain have such a Thing believed; and that the Man had no traitorous Design in it. Now what Evidence hath he produced for it? He hath produced to you Evidence that he hath had Money from the King, and hath been sometimes at the Dukes of Portsmouth's. That he had Money from the King is true, but it little became him to mention it; for it was Charity to relieve a Man in Necessity, that was ready to starve, and was forced to go all the Ways to Work he could to raise Compassion; he urged the Sufferings of his Wife's Father; you heard the Petition read as a Ground for Supply; and he hath so far prevailed upon the King's Charity (which he hath abused) as to have a Sum of Money given him, and he hath had the Benefit of it: But he hath made a very ill Return for it; for the Thanks he hath given to the King for this his Charity, is to fly in the Face of him, his Family, and the Government. He hath endeavoured to raise a Rebellion; and when he is brought to his Trial, he continues to defame the King, which is an Aggravation of his Treason, if possible. And now having no Proof in the World for these malicious Insinuations; and all the Witnesses that he hath called to make out what he would fain have believed, and dares not mention, (not proving any such Thing) you will have little Reason, Gentlemen, to believe any Thing that comes from him, especially if you consider the Nature of the Libel itself, it is impossible this Man should ever be set on Work to contrive such a Thing as this, to defame the King and all his Family, to raise a Rebellion, to overthrow all Religion, Liberty, and the King himself; it is impossible to be believed. But I fear I press too much upon you, as if I did suspect there could be Men in this Kingdom so bad as to believe such a malicious Insinuation. Gentlemen, I leave it to you; you hear what our Evidence is, three Witnesses that positively swear this Treason against the Prisoner. Now as you have this positive Evidence on the one Side, so you have no Colour of Evidence on the contrary; and 'tis impossible for you to find him not guilty. It is to deny the Light of the Day; and 'tis a Thing of that Consequence, that all Ages, when they hear of it, will say, that there is no Justice to be had, if an English Jury do not find a Verdict according to their Evidence: For what Security hath a Man for his Life and Estate, if twelve substantial Men of a Jury shall dare to go against plain and full Evidence? 'Tis all the Security an Englishman has for all he enjoys, that he is to pass through the Hands of twelve honest Men of his own Country. And if it be possible for a Jury to go against Evidence so plain as this is, I say, no Man is safe in his Life or Estate.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Gentlemen, I desire to take Notice of what Mr. Fitz-Harris was pleased to conclude withal. He says, his Blood is to be required at your Hands, and therefore he would fain by that Means insinuate you out of your Consciences. But I think, if you consider the Circumstances that have been given, and all the Evidence, it will be impossible for Men that have any Respect to their Credit and their Consciences, to acquit this Gentleman. In the first Place, it is known, and it hath been given in Proof to induce the Probability of the Matter evidenced against the Prisoner at the Bar, that he is a known Roman Catholic; they are all Protestants, and good Protestants, and you are all Protestants too. And then the Case goes thus far further: You that are Protestants must take it upon your Oaths, that these Gentlemen have sworn false, and convict them of wilful Perjury; and if you do convict them, it must be upon the bare Allegation of a Papist: And I hope never to live to see the Day that Men that are of good Credit, and Protestants, shall by an Allegation (though never so confidently affirmed at the Bar) be presumed to be guilty of Perjury. So that I say, my Lord, besides the Baseness and Venom of this impudent Libel, which certainly no honest Man in the World will give the least Countenance to, here is Evidence enough from himself. And you cannot believe it proceeds from any Direction from the Crown, (as this Man would insinuate) and therefore he hath given us the greatest Evidence by his libelling at the Bar. And he hath not only libelled the Crown, but he hath called up some Witnesses on purpose to libel the Rest of his own. And then I hope you will take Notice how he did insinuate with Mr. Everard at the Beginning: When you were in the French King's Service, said he, and have been neglected ever since you left it; if you will come and join with me, without peradventure you may get Encouragement fitter than that poor and mean Way that you are reduced to by embracing the Protestant Interest. He gives him a Method likewise to walk by: He thought him the Person that had writ some Pamphlet before, and therefore was fit for his Purpose, and ought to be encouraged. And he does tell you the Words not only against the present Government, but that which every good Protestant must needs abhor and tremble at; he bids him take Care to libel the whole Family. He tells him withal, you must be sure to say, that the late King, of blessed Memory, was concerned even in the Irish Rebellion; and that this King hath promoted those Persons that his Father had countenanced for that Action; and he tells him the Names of those Persons that were so promoted. After this is done, what does Mr. Everard do? he goes and makes a Discovery; he tells the Circumstances and the Persons, to whom and when: And the Persons he made that Discovery to, do in every Circumstance agree with Time, Place, and all. The first Night this Appointment was, I hope you will remember, that when Mr. Everard had so placed that Gentleman, against whom there is not the least Word said or imagined to find fault with him, he takes Notice of the Instructions; owns that he had given him Instructions; and takes particular Notice of one Passage, that when Mr. Everard said, But there may be Danger in them, is not this Treason? the Prisoner made Answer, the more Treason the better. Ay, but then this is dangerous, how shall I venture upon such Matters? Why have you not my Hand in it? I am as guilty as you, and in as much Danger. What then was the Reward? there was to be at present forty Guineas, and an annual Pension. But to whom was Mr. Fitz-Harris to discover this? not to the King, but to the French Ambassador, and the Confessor was to be the Man that was to give the Reward. Flanders was first to be subdued, and the Parts beyond the Seas, and then England would be but a Morfel for them, they could take that in the Way. All this was done, which is plainly sworn by a Witness that had a Place made on Purpose for him to over-hear all that passed. And, my Lord, for the next Witness there is Sir William Waller; there is this, besides what is sworn, agreeing in Circumstance: He tells you both, to their very Money, that it was forty somewhat, but he cannot say Guineas; and he tells you something of the Pension, a great many thousand Crowns: And he tells you particularly of that Circumstance of the French Confessor, and the French Ambassador. Besides all this, does not Sir William Waller tell you this very Thing, That he espy'd him with a Pen and Ink, that he gave a Note of the Libel itself, and he heard him give the Directions? and when he came into the Room, he saw the Ink fresh upon the Paper; and when he heard him give Directions for the Alteration of particular Words, he said, You have not worded it according to my Mind in such and such particular Places. But, my Lord, there is this Venom in it further to be taken Notice of, that he gave his Instructions to draw it so, as that it might best take Effect, according to his Intention: For when Mr. Everard thought it might do well to make it with thou and thee, as though it should be the Design of the Quakers, he said, No, by no Means; but put it in changing the Phrase, as if it was the Design of all the Protestant Dissenters, and so by that Means would draw the Odium upon them, and bring them in Danger as well as others. And this is confirmed too by Sir William Waller; so that in every Circumstance he hath shewed the Venom of his Design. But in the last Place, which surely the Gentlemen of the Jury will not forget what Sir William Waller

Waller said, that Fitz-Harris did say, I have taken Care already to disperse abundance of Libels amongst our Party. And when Everard told him of a Libel that was some While before, he said he had seen that a great While ago, and there might be somewhat in it to the Purpose. And for the Answer that hath been given to it, my Lord, I think it does not bear any Sort of Relation to the Charge that is upon him; for whatsoever Discourse, or whatsoever he hath urged, is not much to his Purpose. He hath brought here a Nobleman; but after all, I would put him in Mind of one Thing that Nobleman said, He did believe he came to him in the Name of one that sent him not: And so will every Body say that hath heard the Evidence; for all his Witnesses do positively deny that they ever knew of any such Matters as he speaks of. And now, my Lord, I could be very glad if this Gentleman (instead of saying as he hath said) would have come as soon as he had this Libel from Everard, and discovered it immediately to some Body himself before he had carried it on, as Everard did before the Thing was perfected. And so, Gentlemen, we do think upon this Evidence, we have left you without all Manner of Excuse: It being impossible, upon such a Proof as this is, and considering the Nature and Venom of the Libel itself, the base, venomous, malicious Insurgings he made Use of to effect it, and the Ends for which it was done, to bring in the French to set us together by the Ears, to render the King odious to his People; and the Person 'tis acted by, a known Irish Papist; I cannot doubt of the Issue. And I do hope when I see so many honest Gentlemen and Protestants at the Bar, they will be loth to forfeit their own Souls to eternal Damnation, to save a Man that is guilty of such a Treason as this.

L. C. J. Have you done, Gentlemen?

Sir George Jeffries. Yes.

L. C. J. Then look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, here is Mr. Fitz-Harris indicted for Treason against the King, and 'tis for endeavouring to take away his Life, to make him odious to his Subjects, to incite them to a Rebellion, and to raise Arms here in this Kingdom against our King, our Sovereign. And by the Indictment it is said, that he hath declared these Endeavours and these Intentions, by causing a scandalous and evil Pamphlet or Libel to be written, with an Intent to be dispersed through the Kingdom. The Words of the Libel you have heard particularly read; some of them are taken out and mentioned in this Indictment. Mr. Fitz-Harris hath been arraigned, and hath pleaded Not Guilty; and you are to try the single Matter before you, whether Mr. Fitz-Harris be guilty of this Treason. That this is Treason, and contains a treasonable Matter, Gentlemen, is so plain, as no Body living can doubt it: But it is a Treason of as high a Nature as peradventure ever was in the Kingdom of England, and tends as much to that which would be the Destruction both of the King and Kingdom. The King's Life, all our Lives, all we have that is dear to us, or of any Advantage or Avail in the World, are concerned in this: For what does it tend to? It tends to a popular Insurrection, to raise the People up in Arms, that like a Deluge would overrun and sweep away all. It is to undo the Government and all Order in the Kingdom, and to destroy the Life and Being of all that is good amongst us. A more virulent and villainous Book certainly was never written; nor any Thing that tended more to Sedition, or to incite the People to a Rebellion: Such a Book as peradventure no well governed Kingdom ever heard of the like. It tends to defame the King and all his Ancestors, and to blast all that shall come after him, to raise us into a Tumult. And what is all this to do? To settle the Roman Catholic Religion amongst us. And this is such a Piece of the Art of the Jesuits, which peradventure hath out-gone all they have done before. It seems to be their Hand directly, and we are all concerned as Englishmen to take Care of such Villainies. This is the Nature of the Treason that is comprised in this Book. Whether Mr. Fitz-Harris was the Author, or Director, or Contriver of this Book, is the Question before you: (For plainly, without any Suppose, the Book contains in it as high Treason as ever was.) And as to that, Gentlemen, you must consider that this appears evidently to be a Design of the Roman Catholic Party; 'tis a jesuitical Design: For this is that they aim at, to confound all Things, that they may fish in troubled Waters. And you see they have found out an apt Instrument, an Irish Papist, one that hath been all along continually concerned with them, and intermeddled in several of these Plots and Papers. Gentlemen, the Evidence that is given here against him is by three Persons, and there is great Evidence from the Matter that is produced, besides those Persons. There is Mr. Everard does declare to you the Whole of this, and Mr. Fitz-Harris's Application to him to write this Book. He tells you the Intention of it, and he gives you the very Grounds upon which this was to be written; that is, to raise Sedition, that was the first Instruction; to raise a Sedition in the Kingdom, and this was to buy us at Home, that the French King might get Flanders and the Low Countries, while we are confounded at Home: And then the Catholics have their Game to play, and carry all before them. Look you, Gentlemen, Mr. Everard is so cautious, that he walks, not alone in the Case, but with a great Deal of Prudence declares it to others, that they may be Witnesses in the Case for him. Mr. Smith does agree in all Things for the first Night that Mr. Everard hath declared, how that he heard the Directions owned as given by Mr. Fitz-Harris, for the writing this Book, and he heard the Design of it, he heard there was a Reward promised to him for the doing of it, and he tells you some of the Instructions. The next Night Sir William Waller was present; and he tells you all the Instructions of that Night, and that Fitz-Harris owned them, that he gave those Instructions in the private Consult. But that that is not to be answered, Gentlemen, is his own Instructions in Writing; what can be said to that? If you were doubtful of the Credit of these Gentlemen, yet Mr. Fitz-Harris's own Instructions in Writing under his Hand, are an Evidence beyond all Controul in the World that he gave those Directions; and these are Treason, that is plain. And therefore it does seem to be as strong an Evidence against Mr. Fitz-Harris of this Treason, as peradventure ever was given against a Traitor. There is not any one Witness that stands single, but there are two to each Night; and his own Instructions written by himself do not stand upon the Evidence of a single Witness, for he owned it in the Presence of three Witnesses: So then a stronger Evidence cannot be given that he was the Author and Director of this Book.

Then, Gentlemen, you must consider what he says for himself in Excuse of this horrid Treason that these Witnesses seem so fully to fix upon him. The first Witness he brings is Dr. Oates; and he does tell you, that having some Discourse with Everard, Everard should say, this was a Design of the Court, and was to be put into some Lords, and I think, into some Parliament-Men's Pockets; and then they were to be apprehended. I think this is Dr. Oates's Testimony. Mr. Burnard is here upon his Oath, and he testifies no such Thing in the World: 'Tis easy for one to come and say, I heard a Man say so; perhaps he said it by Way of Conjecture; but that is no Answer to direct Proof. Mr. Sheriff Cornish is the next Witness, and he says, he had some Discourse with the King, and the King should say, he thought Mr. Fitz-Harris had been an honest Man, and had given him some Money.

Mr. Sh. Cornish. No, my Lord, the King said, he took him to be an ill Man.

L. C. J. Then it seems I was mistaken; his Majesty did not tell him he took Fitz-Harris to be an honest Man, but an ill Man. But that he had formerly some Money of the King, upon Pretence of doing him some Service; now that brings it out what the King's Meaning was: For it seems there had been begged some Money for him, and the King, at my Lady Portsmouth's Desire, by way of Charity, gave him some little Matter of Money; he boasting and telling the King he could do him some Service. You see what Manner of Service it is he would have done for him and the Kingdom. Then as to the Rest of his Evidence, there is Mrs. Wall, and my Lady Duchess of Portsmouth; and he hath examined them concerning the Money he hath received, and they both declare upon what Ground that Money was given: It was given, they tell you, for a Gratuity from the King to him; and upon his boasting, says Mrs. Wall, that he could do the King Service, and bring over Persons to his Interest. I think there is no other Witness very material: For as for Mr. Bulstrode's Evidence, it signifies nothing at all; it is not material for him or against him in the Case: A Discourse about delivering a Petition to the King from his Wife. Now, Gentlemen, you must consider what ill Use this Gentleman designs to make of the King's Charity and Favour to him; he gave him some Money to relieve his Wants, and now would he interpret this, and insinuate this to be given for ill Purposes, for to make him trepan his Subjects: Which is another Piece of Virulency that these Papists always exercise against the King; they always make an ill Use of his best Actions, and an ill Interpretation of them. For, Gentlemen, can it be believed, that the King would ever design such a Thing as this is, to blacken his Family for ever, to stir up all his Subjects against him, to endanger his Crown and Kingdom, and all that he has in the World? And all this to what Purpose? No colourable Design can be made of it. This is such a Thing, to excuse such a Villainy, as never was heard of, by wresting the King's Charity and Generosity to such ill Purposes; but that some Men have the Confidence to do any Thing. I must leave it to you. Here are three witnesses his own Hand to these Instructions, and his making a Declaration that it was not treasonable enough, nor virulent enough. All these Things are strong Evidences in the Case. And if you believe these Witnesses and his own Hand-writing, 'tis a plain Case, you must find him Guilty.

Fitz-Harris. May I have Liberty to speak one Word?

L. C. J. Gentlemen, I had forgot one Thing. For fear it make an Impression in you, because I see he hath inculcated it often and often, and that is, the Impeachment that was by the Commons House of Treason against Mr. Fitz-Harris in the Lord's House: I must tell you, Gentlemen, that is not before you at all; the Matter of that was by way of Abatement pleaded to the Jurisdiction of this Court, and that is now over. You must have no Consideration, nor can have any Consideration of that now. Your Question is not whether we have Authority to try this Cause; but you are impannell'd and sworn to one Point, and that is, whether Fitz-Harris be guilty of this Treason or not. Whether the Court have Authority to do it, is another Question proper for our Determination, and we have determined it; but there is nothing of that lies before you in this Case. Therefore you must not be misled with any Thing that he talks so fondly of concerning the Impeachment, or concerning his Blood lying at your Doors, that surely will signify nothing to Men of Understanding at all.

Mr. Johnson. My Lord, 'tis our Unhappiness to come before you under these Circumstances. We have understood there is a Vote of the Commons of England in Parliament, that says this Man shall not be tried in an inferior Court; now we take ourselves to be the Judges of this Man in Part under your Lordship's Directions.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. You are not Judges of it, you are only to try the Fact.

Mr. Johnson. I only offer my Sense, and if the other Gentlemen think otherwise, they will speak it. I think the Office of a Juror is such, that it is within his Power to acquit or condemn, according to the Evidence, as it lies within his own Conscience. Now if we should acquit this Man (we have no Assurance we shall acquit him, only suppose it) then there is nothing against him but what lies in a Parliamentary Way, and we shall forejudge their Cause. Therefore, I say, I do not know how far by Law we are compellable to give a Verdict in this Case upon him.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, we would consult your Satisfaction as much as we can in all Things; and 'tis reasonable that if you have any Doubts you should propose them to us, and to that Purpose we are to give you Satisfaction, and will in all Things. I must tell you, as to the Jurisdiction of the Court, that is not at all before you: and as to the Vote of the House of Commons, alledged by him, if any such there be, that cannot alter the Laws of the Land, nor justify any of us in departing from our Duties, no more than if a Letter or Mandate should be gained from the Prince or Chief Magistrate of this Kingdom, to any of us in Derogation of Justice (as it's possible by Surprise to be) we are to take Notice of the one, no more than the other. We are upon our Oaths to do Justice according to the Law of the Land: You likewise are upon your Oaths, and sworn to do Justice in your Sphere; and your Oath is, that you shall enquire truly whether he be guilty or not; and if he be guilty in your Judgments, you can no more spare him, than you can condemn an innocent Person. It never was pretended by any Man, nor will it be asserted by any Man that understands himself or the Constitution of the Government of this Kingdom, that a Vote of the House of Commons can change the Law of the Land. It cannot excuse us, if we deny to try a Man that is brought before us; nor will it excuse you, being under an Oath justly to try him. If you should (because the Commons House have voted that he shall not be tried) declare that Man innocent, who in your own Judgment you believe to be not innocent; you nor we are not to consider what will be the Consequence of this, if this Man be acquitted or condemned; that is not before us. You and we too are tied precisely to the Laws of the Land, and by that Law must this Man be judged. As to our Parts, we must do it as to the Law, and you as to the Fact. But I'll tell you further, Gentlemen, this Doubt was moved to us by the Grand Jury, before the Bill was found; we had an Intimation that they would move such a Doubt to us as seems to be your Doubt now. Therefore for their Satisfaction, and the taking away any Scruple that might be in the Case, all the Judges of England did meet together, and seriously debate the Matter and Substance of all this; and it was not our Opinion of this Court only, but the Opinion of all the Judges of England, That we had a Jurisdiction to try this Man. This we have told you, because we would satisfy all Men to go on fairly in the Things that are before them. Therefore, that being put out of the Case, you must consider of your Verdict, and give it in upon this Trial.

Mr. Johnson. We do not doubt, my Lord, but your Opinion in this Case will indemnify us from any future Charge by the Commons of England. But it lies before us to consider what we are bound to do in the Case.

Mr. Just. Jones. Gentlemen, I suppose you do not doubt but we are all of the same Opinion. It is no marvel indeed to hear a Man that stands in Fitz-Harris's place, to object any Thing that many cast a Mift before your Eyes. And yet it cannot but be wondered at too, that when three Protestant Witnesses have sworn precisely, he should have the Confidence to urge any Thing of this Nature. He who appears by the Indictment itself, and the Proofs made upon the Indictment, to have endeavoured to destroy all the Laws of England, all Magna Charta, all our Liberty and our Religion, and to enslave us to the King of France: For that appears plainly the Design, if you have any Credit to the Witnesses that are produced: He that would have pulled down all that is sacred amongst us, is so zealous for the Authority of the House of Commons. We have all of us a great Reverence for the House of Commons, and for their Opinions; but as my Lord hath told you, so I tell you my Opinion, That a Vote of the House of Commons does not in the least fort alter the Law: For indeed if it did, it were to give a Legislative Power to the Commons, which does only belong to the King, the House of Lords, and the Commons together. And, Gentlemen, though Mr. Fitz-Harris says, if he be acquitted here by you, yet he should remain to be questioned again in Parliament; there is no Man in the World can doubt, if he were acquitted here, and were questioned in Parliament, but he would say, he hath been upon his legal Trial by his Peers, and that he hath been acquitted by his Peers upon solemn Evidence. But, Gentlemen, you are to consider what is your Business: Your Office is to be Jurors, not to be Judges; you are not to take upon you any such Authority. Your Commission is your Oath, and by that Oath you are sworn to inquire whether the Prisoner be guilty, as he is indicted, or not: If you, as Englishmen, can say, he is not guilty, let it lie upon your Consciences, and the Danger of the King's Blood and Life be upon you.

Mr. Just. Delben. Gentlemen, I desire to speak one Word to you, to let you know, I am of the same Opinion with my Lord, and with my Brother; and I cannot but wonder at you for making this Scruple: For if there were any Thing in what you have said, it concerns us that are Judges, and not you at all; for 'tis a Matter of Jurisdiction: And whether we have a Jurisdiction or not, we must satisfy ourselves that we have a Commission to do it; it concerns not you. Do you but consider the Oath you have taken, That you will well and truly try, and true Deliverance make betwixt our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Prisoner at the Bar, according to your Evidence: And you have sworn a true Verdict to give upon it, and do you now scruple whether you should give any Verdict or no, when but even now you have sworn you will give a Verdict? If any such Thing as this had been in your Heads (for it might be then in your Heads, as well as now) why did not you speak of it before you took your Oath? You now lie under the Obligation of an Oath to give a Verdict according to your Evidence, and would you acquit him against such an Evidence as hath been given? For, besides what Sir William Waller, Smith, and Everard have deposed, the very Note sworn by Sir Philip Lloyd and Mr. Bridgman, to be owned by Fitz-Harris as his Hand, contains Treason enough in it, if there were no more: Therefore there must be something more in it, than for the Sake of such an unreasonable Scruple.

Mr. Just. Raymond. I am of the same Opinion, truly.

Mr. Johnson. My Lord, I took the Liberty to speak it now; I could not speak it before: For I was not then to enquire what I was to be sworn to, nor could I know what would be the Matter that would come before us, till we were sworn. Therefore I humbly beg your Pardon, that I made the Motion.

L. C. J. We are not at all troubled at any Thing you have said; do not mistake us, we do not take it ill from you, that you acquaint us with your Scruples: We are ready to give all Satisfaction we can, to any that are concerned before us; therefore we are no way troubled that you made any such Scruple, but have given you a fair Answer to it.

Mr. Johnson. My Lord, I desire a Note of the Names of the Jury.

L. C. J. Give it him, Mr. Astrey, or else the Crowd is so great he may not know them.

[Then the Jury withdrew for half an Hour, and at their Return being called over and appearing, the Clerk took the Verdict.]

Cl. of Cr. Edward Fitz-Harris, hold up thy Hand: (Which he did.) Look upon the Prisoner; how say you, is he Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty, &c.

L. C. J. I think you have found a very good Verdict, and upon very full and strong Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Will your Lordship please to give Judgment?

L. C. J. We will take Time for that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Will you give a Rule to have him brought up to-morrow?

L. C. J. Move us another Day for it.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I hope I may have the Liberty of my Wife, and some Friends now to come to me.

L. C. J. Any Friend I think may come to you: But, Mr. Fitz-Harris, you must be modest in the using that Liberty we give you. You have heretofore abused your Liberty: I do not love to exasperate Things to one in your Circumstances, but you must be prudent and careful, knowing your own Condition, that you do nothing prejudicial to the King or Kingdom.

Upon Wednesday June 15, 1681, Edward Fitz-Harris was brought to the Bar of the Court of King's Bench, to receive his Sentence.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I humbly pray your Judgment against Mr. Fitz-Harris, who is convicted of High-Treason.

Silence proclaimed during Judgment.

Cl. of Cr. Edward Fitz-Harris, hold up thy Hand. Thou hast been indicted and arraigned of High-Treason, and hast thereunto pleaded, Not Guilty, and for thy Trial put thyself upon God and thy Country, and thy Country have found thee Guilty: What canst thou say for thyself, why Judgment of Death should not be given against thee, and Execution awarded according to Law?

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I think it will be prejudicial to the King's Service, that Sentence should pass before I have made an End of the Evidence I have given in against my Lord Howard.

L. C. J. Mr. Fitz-Harris, we can take no Notice of any Thing of that Nature. When you are asked, what you can say why Judgment should not pass against you, it is, what legal Matter you have, what Matter in Law, to excuse yourself from that Judgment? For this is nothing, the saying you are to give Evidence; we know nothing of that, it will not delay Judgment a Minute. And for what you say, it will be prejudicial to the King's Service, it is the King that prays Judgment against you by his Attorney.

Fitz-Harris. I beg the King's Mercy for Transportation, my Lord.

L. C. J. We can do nothing in that.

Fitz-Harris. Nor to give me Time before my Execution? I can say no more, my Lord.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Fitz-Harris, you have been here indicted for a very great and heinous Treason, a Treason that is in Truth of the first Magnitude; for it is a Treason that tends to the rooting up the whole Government of this Kingdom, and the destroying of us all; plainly, both of the King and of all his Subjects. It does not only destroy the Peace and Quiet, but it tends in Truth to the utter Destruction of the whole Kingdom, and to bring us into a Confusion and Disorder, never to be avoided or retrieved, if your Designs should have taken effect. You have been here arraigned, and put yourself upon the Country, and they have found you guilty of this Treason: It is a Thing you should well consider; for certainly, you have contracted to yourself a mighty Guilt in such a Thing as this is. You have endeavoured the Destruction of the King, and in such a Way, as must have in Truth destroyed all his good Subjects together with him. Your Design hath been to excite the People to a Rebellion, and a popular Insurrection, that would have swept away all like a Deluge, if it had taken Effect. In Truth, it is a Treason against all Mankind, the stirring up of the People is; it is of evil Example to all Mankind, the stirring up of the People against their natural Lord, to whom we owe all Allegiance and Obedience. But your Design in this Way was by setting the People of England together by the Ears, to bring in the Roman Catholick Religion upon such as should be left. It seems you are an Irish Papist, and sucked in very ill Principles where you have lived; and you have here endeavoured to do as much Mischief in this Kingdom, by that treasonable Book, as lies in any one Man's Power perhaps to do. It is a Mercy and a Happiness, that it hath pleased God in his Providence to deliver us out of your Hands; for this was your Design, if you could have brought it about: But it hath pleased God now to bring you to Justice for it, and the Judgment of the Law must pass upon you. Now that Judgment is this: You must return to the Tower, from whence you came, and from thence you must be drawn through the Streets of the City of London to Tyburn; there you shall be hang'd by the Neck, but cut down before you are dead; your Bowels shall be taken out and burnt before your Face, your Head cut off, and your Body divided into four Quarters, to be disposed as shall please the King; and I pray God to have Mercy upon your Soul, to give you a Sight of your Sin, and Repentance for it.

Fitz-Harris. My Lord, I hope I may have the Liberty of my Wife to come to me, and any Friend.

L. C. J. You have that Liberty already.

Fitz-Harris. No, not without the Presence of a Warder.

L. C. J. We will not restrain them as to that, let them come to you.

Officer. There is no Rule of Court for it, my Lord.

L. C. J. We will not restrain any thing of your Wife's coming, there is no Rule to restrain her; but let him have that Liberty that other Prisoners in his Condition usually have had in the Tower, his Wife to come to him, or any other Friend or Protestant Minister whatsoever.

Officer. Pray let it be put into the Rule of Court, my Lord.

L. C. J. We make no Rule, there does not need any. Look you, Mr. Fitz-Harris, we lay no Restraint upon your Wife, or any other Friend; but if your Wife be in another Condition, that she can't come to you, we can't meddle with that.

Mr. Just. Jones. We are not to deliver her out of Prison.

L. C. J. No, we make no Rule, but take off the Hands of the Court from restraining any one to come to you.

Then the Prisoner was taken away, and in Pursuance of this Sentence, the last Day of the said Trinity-Term, being the 22d of June, 1681, a Writ issued out of the Court of King's Bench directed to the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, reciting the Judgment, and commanding him to deliver the Prisoner to the Sheriff of Middlesex, upon Friday the first Day of July next following to be executed according to the Sentence. Which Writ followeth in these Words.

And another Writ at the same time was issued out of the same Court, directed to the Sheriff of Middlesex, to receive the Prisoner from the Lieutenant of the Tower at the Time appointed, and to execute him according to the Sentence. Which Writ was in these words.

Per. Cur. ASTRY.

Upon the Day appointed, viz. July 1. Edward Fitz-Harris was, near the Tower-Gate, on Tower-Hill, delivered into the Custody of the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, viz. Slingsby Bethel and Henry Cornish, Esquires; who upon the Place signed a Discharge for him to the Lieutenant of the Tower. Then he was put on a Sledge, and thence conveyed through the City of London to Newgate, where he overtook Oliver Plunket, who was just before on another Sledge, passing to the same place of Execution.

Where being come (soon after Plunket's private Prayers, &c.) Fitz-Harris asked Capt. Richardson, Whether the Sheriffs had a Warrant for the Disposal of his Body? Capt. Richardson answered, Yes. Then he desired Dr. Hawkins's Assistance, which the Sheriffs readily granted, and called for him to go to him on the Sledge; which the Doctor did, and on his Knees embraced him, and continued a private Discourse with him for some Time.

Sheriff Bethel asked Mr. Fitz-Harris, What have you to say?

Mr. Fitz-Harris answered, the Doctor of the Tower would answer for him, he having left his Mind with him.

Mr. Sheriff Bethel. You will do well to discharge your Conscience.

Fitz-Harris. I have left it all with the Doctor in Writing under my hand, who will communicate it with Witnesses, to the World.

Doctor Martin, of Woodstreet, being at the same Time in the Presence of the Sheriffs, desired Mr. Fitz-Harris to declare, whether he died a Protestant or a Papist. He answered, Having left his Mind fully with Dr. Hawkins, he hoped it might be satisfactory. The Doctor replied, it would be more satisfactory to declare himself there, and that it was no Shame to die a Protestant. To which Mr. Fitz-Harris replied as before.

Then Mr. Fitz-Harris said, Good People, this infamous kind of Death is much more irksome to me than Death itself: Such Judgments as these my Sins against God may justly bring upon me, and I do most humbly submit unto it. But as to the Crimes which I now die for, I take God to witness, I was no further concerned in the Libel, than to discover to the King what Practices of that kind were against him, being employed to that end; tho' those that employed me, refused to do me Justice at my Trial. And I call God to witness, I never had a Farthing of Money of the King in my Life, but on the Account of the like Service. And as to the Witnesses that have sworn against me, I do here solemnly declare now at my Death, that I have not seen the French Ambassador since the beginning of the breaking out of the Plot, neither have I had any Acquaintance with him. And as to his confessor, I never spoke with him in my Life; neither had I any Dealing, either directly, or indirectly, in my life with them, though Sir William Waller and the rest swore most falsely to the contrary. And how like is it that the French Ambassador would give three thousand Crowns for writing that Libel, I leave the World to judge. What I may further declare, I have left with Dr. Hawkins. I forgive all the World, and do hope that God will forgive me. I beg the Prayers of all good People for a happy Passage into the other World.

Mr. Fitz-Harris desired to know of the Sheriffs, whether his Body might not be at the Disposal of his wife, without quartering. Upon which the Sheriff read him the Warrant.

Soon after which he was executed.

The Paper * referred to was as follows.

I Edward Fitz-Harris, having been indicted of High-Treason, for endeavouring to dethrone the KING, was thereupon found Guilty, and Sentence of Death passed on me. I the aforesaid Edward Fitz-Harris do voluntarily and freely, without any Hopes to save my Life, but a dying Man, and to discharge my Conscience towards God, and for the better Satisfaction of the World, make this Declaration following, in the Presence of God, and unto Doctor Francis Hawkins, Chaplain of the Tower of London.

I do profess and declare my Religion in the general to be that which hath been truly and antiently delivered in the first four general Councils; and in particular, my Belief is that true Faith of a Christian, briefly contained in those three Creeds, commonly called The Apostles Creed, St. Athanasius's, and The Nicene Creed: And I die a Member; and in the Communion of Christ's Holy Catholick Church, hoping for Mercy, through the alone Merits of the Passion of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

I do also confess and declare, as to the Crimes which I die for, I was no further concerned in the Libel, than as employed to give the King Notice of what Libels or other Accusations, there were against him; and to this Intent, and no other, I endeavoured to get this Libel: Which at length I did from Mr. Everard, all written under his own Hand, and carried it to Mrs. Wall, by whose Means I conveyed all Matters of this, or the like Nature, to the King. I told her I had a Business of great Consequence to acquaint the King with: But she answered me, That my Lord Sunderland being out, there would be no Money had for secret Service, and advised me to go to the Lord Clarendon or Hyde: But before I could do this, I was taken. As for that Part of the Libel which I left with Everard, as a Pledge, to assure him I would not betray him, I received it of the Lord Howard; and the Money I received from the King, was for bringing a Libel called, The King unveiled, and the Lady Portsmouth's Articles. I call God to witness, I never had a Farthing Charity from the King.

I do further confess and declare, that the Lord Howard told me of a Design to seize upon the King's Person, and to carry him into the City, and there detain him till he had condescended to their Desires. He and myself were privy to this Design, and had several Meetings with the Lord Howard; and as an Encouragement, the Lord Howard assured us of breaking the Settlement of Ireland, taking off the additional Revenue of the Bishops, Forty-nine Men, and Grantees, whose Estates were to be shared amongst the Party.

I do confess and declare, That while I was in Newgate, the Sheriffs, Bethel and Cornish, came to me, with a Token from the Lord Howard, which I knew to be true, and brought Heads with them from Everard, wherein he accused me of being a Court-Emisary, or Yorkist, put on by the King to put the Libel into Protestant Houses to trepan them. But I declare upon my Death I had no such intent, nor do know any such thing. The Sheriffs likewise told me, I was to be tried within three or four Days, that the People would prosecute me, and the Parliament would impeach me, and that nothing would save my Life but discovering the Popish Plot; and then the Sheriffs aforesaid gave me great Encouragement from my Lord Howard, that if I would declare that I believed so much of the Plot as mounted to the introducing the R. C. or if I could find out any that could criminate the Queen, R. H. or make so much as a plausible Story to confirm the Plot, that the Parliament would restore me to my Father's Estate, with the Profits thereof, since his Majesty's Restoration. I finding myself in the Condition I was, in Newgate, fettered, moneyless and friendless, my Wife ready to lie-in, without any Subsistence, my Children in a miserable Condition, and must needs be in a worse by my Death, and I could see no other Refuge for Life, but complying with them; so not with ambitious Intent, but to save my Life, I did comply. The Sheriffs brought Instructions, which they said came from the Lords and Commons who met that Day in order to address the King in my Behalf (if I should confirm the Instructions) and they made use of my Lord Shaftesbury's Name, and others, what Advantage I might have thereby. At the first I made a formal Story concerning the Plot, which was not prejudicial to any body, but most relating to general Heads known publickly; upon which Mr. Cornish told me these were things cried about the Streets two Years ago: I replied, I could say no more. Mr. Sheriff said, He was sorry for me with all his Heart, but thought I could say more if I would, and pressed me hard to speak to several Heads; unto which, unless I spoke, he said, there was no Hope of Life; the Heads I was to speak to, is what the examination taken by Sir Robert Clayton, and Sir George Treby contains, and a great deal more that I did not say then, relating to the Queen, R. H. Earl of Danby, declaring French Pensioners, Lord Halifax, Hyde, Clarendon, Feverham, Seymour, and others; the burning the Fleet, Ports and Governments in Popish Hands, Meal-Tub Plot, Prentices Plot, the Contrivance of the Libel on the Lady Portsmouth, being a French Design to destroy Protestants. These and many other Heads were brought to me by the Sheriffs.

I do further confess and declare, that Sir Robert Clayton, and Sir George Treby, coming to me to examine me, Sir Robert Clayton asked me what I could say concerning Godfrey's Murder? I answered something. He replied, It may be I was in a Confusion; recollect your self. And what I said concerning Father Patrick, was forced out of me, and what I said concerning him is not true. Sir George Treby was with me three Hours, or thereabouts, and pressed me to say something concerning Godfrey's Death: And said, Unless I could speak to that Murder, I could say nothing; whereupon I said something I had from others. He asked me if I could say no more? I replied, is not this enough to save my Life? Am not I Rogue enough? The Recorder hereupon swore, 'Zounds, what were you ever but a Rogue? Then the Recorder entered upon the Heads of the Examination; which being done, he told me, All this would not save my Life, unless I would speak to the Libel, which was a Court-Trick; and it was not for nothing that I have been so often seen at the Lady Portsmouth's. The Lord Shaftesbury said, You know more of these Matters than any Man. Sir George would have me speak to the Consult; that the Duke was at it, the Lords Bellasis, Arundel, and Powis, were at it; you have seen them go to it at St. James's, without doubt they were there; do you but say it, we have those that will swear it.

I do further declare and confess, that what I said against the Queen and the Duke, I was put upon, in the Matter of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's Murder; and do further declare; That what I swore against the Earl of Danby; the threatening Words that were uttered, I did (to the best of my Remembrance) hear, but whom they concerned I could not well know, by by what my Lord himself said. And what de Puis told me concerning my Lord of Danby, I do believe was spoken out of ill Will; and what I said against him was to save off my Trial till a Parliament; and they were the more desirous to accuse the Lord Danby of Godfrey's Murder, because the Crime of Murder is not inserted in his Pardon. I am sorry for what I have said against the Queen, his Royal Highness, and the Earl of Danby; I desire God to forgive me the Wrong I did them, and do heartily beg their Pardon.

By whom

I do further declare and protest, That this Confession and Declaration of mine I own sincerely, as a dying Man, and not to save my Life; and I call God and his Angels to witness the Truth of it; and I renounce Mercy at the Hands of God Almighty, if this be not true.

And I do further declare and protest, as a dying Man, unto James Walmsley, Edward Pattel, and Mary Walmsley, That I have made this Confession and Declaration unto Dr. Hawkins freely, and of my own voluntary Accord, without any Manner of Promise made, or Hopes given me by him from the King of saving my Life by this Confession, I having given him to understand beforehand they were Matters of Consequence, and such as chiefly concerned the Good of the King and Kingdom.

I give the Doctor my hearty Thanks for all his Prayers, Counsel, and charitable Offices he hath done me, and I pray God to bless him for ever for it. I forgive all the World, and desire all the World to forgive me; and the Lord have Mercy on my Soul.

Edward Fitz-Harris.

CIII. The Trial of Dr. OLIVER PLUNKET*, Titular Primate of Ireland, at the King's-Bench for High-Treason, June 8, 1681, Trin. 33. Car. II.

THE third of May, 1681, in Easter, 33 Car. Secund. Reg. Dr. Oliver Plunket was arraigned at the King's-Bench Bar for High-Treason, for endeavouring and compassing the King's Death, and to levy War in Ireland, and to alter the true Religion there, and to introduce a foreign Power: And at his Arraignment, before his Plea he urged for himself, that he was indicted of the same High-Treason in Ireland and arraigned, and at the Day for his Trial, the Witnesses against him did not appear; and therefore he desired to know if he could be tried here for the same Fact. The Court told him, that by a Statute made in this Kingdom, he might be tried in the Court of King's-Bench, or by Commission of Oyer and Terminer in any Part of England, for Facts arising in Ireland; and that this Arraignment there (he being never tried upon it) was not sufficient to exempt him from being tried here; because till a Trial be passed, and there be a Conviction or Acquittal thereupon, an Arraignment, barely, is no Plea: For in such Cases the Party is put twice in Danger of his Life, which only is the Thing the Law in such Cases looks after to prevent. He then desired Time for his Witnesses, which they told him he could not do till after Plea pleaded; whereupon he pleaded Not Guilty, and put himself upon the Country for his Trial. And after some Consideration, had about Time to be allowed him to bring his Witnesses from Ireland, the Court appointed the Day for his Trial, to be the first Wednesday in next Term, which was full five Weeks Time.

And accordingly on Wednesday the 8th of June, in Trinity-Term, he was brought to his Trial, and Proclamation, as in such Cases is usual, being made, it proceeded thus:

Cl. of Cr. Oliver Plunket, hold up thy Hand, those good Men which thou shalt hear called, and personally appear, are to pass between, &c.

Plunket. May it please your Lordship, I have been kept close Prisoner for a long Time, a Year and an Half in Prison: When I came from Ireland hither, I was told by Persons of good Repute, and a Counsellor at Law, that I could not be tried here; and the Reasons they gave me were, that first the Statute of Henry VIII. and all other Statutes made here, were not received in Ireland, unless they were an express mention made of Ireland in them: So that none were received there but such as were before Poyning's Act. So I came with that Persuasion that I could not be tried here, till at my Arraignment your Lordships told me it was not so, and that I must be tried here, though there was no express mention made of Ireland. Now, my Lord, upon that, whereas my Witnesses were in Ireland, and I knew nothing of it, and the Records upon which I very much rely were in Ireland, your Lordship was pleased to give me Time from the 4th of the last Month to this Day; and in the mean Time, as your Lordship had the Affidavit here Yesterday, and as Captain Richardson can testify, I have not dispatched only one, but two to Ireland, into the Counties of Armagh, Dublin, &c. and where there were Records very material to my Defence; but the Clerk of the Crown would not give me any Copy of any Record at all, unless he had some express Order from your Lordship. So that whether it were that they were mistaken, or wilfully refused, I could not get the Records, which were very material for me. For in some of those Records, some of those that accuse me were convicted of high Crimes, and others were out-lawed and imprisoned, and broke Prison; and there were other Records also of Excommunication against some of them, and I could not get the Records, unless your Lordship would instruct me in some Way or other, how I can get over them that are most material for my Defence. The Servants that I sent hence, and took Shipping for Ireland, were two Days at Sea, and cast back again, and from thence were forced to go to Holy-Head, and from Holy-Head in going to Dublin they were thirteen or fourteen Days, the Winds were so contrary; and then my Servant went about to go into the County of Armagh and Derry, that were a hundred Miles from Dublin and Meath, and other Places: So that in so short a Time, my Lord, it was morally impossible for them to have brought the Witnesses over; and those that were ready to have come, would not stir at all, unless they had a Pass from hence, because some of them were Roman Catholics, and they had heard that here some were taken Prisoners that were Roman Catholics, and that none ought to come without a Pass; and they being Witnesses against the King, they might be clapped up here, and brought into very ill Condition; so they sent one over, that made Affidavit.

† L. C. J. It was the Affidavit was read here Yesterday.

Plunket. So that, my Lord, I conceive your Lordship will think I did it not out of any Intent to put off my Trial; for Captain Richardson is here, who knows that I writ by the Post, and desired them to come with the Pacquet-Boat, and they writ over to the Captain after they were landed; so that I depended upon the Wind and the Weather for my Witnesses, and wanted your Lordship's Order for the Records to be brought over, and that their Examination might be brought into Court, and their own original Examination here might be compared with it. So I humbly beg your Lordship's Favour, the Case is rare, and scarcely happens in five hundred Years, that one should be in my Circumstances. I am come here where no Jury knows me, nor the Quality of my Adversaries: If I had been in Ireland, I would have put myself upon my Trial To-morrow, without any Witnesses, before any Protestant Jury that knew them and me. And when the Orders went over, that I should be tried in Ireland, and that no Roman Catholick should be upon the Jury, and so it was in both the Grand and other Jury; yet then when I came to my Trial, after I was arraigned, not one appeared. This is manifest upon the Record, and can be proved.

L. C. J. There was no Prosecution of you there.

Plunket. But, my Lord, here is no Jury that knows me, or the Quality of my Adversaries; for they are not a Jury of the Neighbourhood that know them, and therefore my Case is not the same with other Cases. Though I cannot harbour, nor do not, nor will not, nor ought not, the least Conceit of hard Measure and Injustice; yet if I have not full Time to bring my Records and Witnesses all together, I cannot make my Defence. Some were there then, some afar off, so that it was a Miracle that in six or seven Counties they could do so much as they did: But they got in seven or eight of them, yet there were five or six wanting. Therefore I beseech your Lordship, that I may have Time to bring my Records and Witnesses, and then I will defy all that is upon the Earth, and under the Earth, to say any Thing against me.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Plunket, 'tis in vain for you to talk and make this Discourse here now; you must know that by the Laws of this Kingdom, when a Man is indicted and arraigned of Treason and Felony, 'tis not usual to give such Time; 'tis rare that any Man hath had such Time as you have had, five Weeks Time to provide your Witnesses: If your Witnesses are so cautious, and are such Persons that they dare not, or will not venture for fear of being apprehended, or will not come into England without such and such Cautions, we cannot tell how to help it; we can't furnish you with Witnesses, you must look to get your Witnesses yourself: If we should stay till your Witnesses will come, perhaps they will never come here, and so you will escape out of the Hands of Justice. Do not be discouraged in this, the Jury are Strangers to you peradventure, but they are honest Gentlemen, and you shall have no other upon your Jury; and you may be confident, that if there be not some Fact proved against you, that may amount to Treason, you shall be discharged; there are Persons that understand so much, and we will direct them so much. You shall have as fair a Trial as if you were in Ireland; but for us to stay for your Witnesses, or send you back to Ireland, we cannot do it: Therefore you must submit to your Trial. We heard your Affidavit Yesterday, and we did then tell the Gentleman that moved it, as much as we tell you. You are here to be tried, look to the Jury as they are called, and except against them if you will.

Plunket. My Lord, I desire only to have the Favour of some Time, some Time this Term.

L. C. J. We can't do it. Cl. of Cr. Swear Sir John Roberts.

Plunket. I humbly present this to your Lordship, I am then in imminent Danger of my Life, if I cannot get ten Days to have my Witnesses over: I desire I may have but to the one and twentieth of this Month, and then if they do not come, you may go on.

L. C. J. We cannot do it, you have had five Weeks Time already.

Plunket. I desire but a few Days.

Clerk. Sir John Roberts, take the Book, look upon the Prisoner: You shall well and truly try, &c.

Plunket. My Lord, I desire to know, whether they have been of the Juries of Langborn, or the five Jesuits, or any that were condemned?

L. C. J. What if they have? That is no Exception.

Then the Jury was sworn, whose Names follow.

Sir John Roberts ,	Thomas Earsby ,
Thomas Harriot ,	John Hayne ,
Henry Ashbush ,	Thomas Hodgkins ,
Ralph Bucknall ,	James Partherich ,
Richard Gowre ,	Samuel Baker ,
Richard Pagett ,	William Hardy .

Cl. of Cr. Oliver Plunket, hold up your Hand. You of the Jury look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Charge.

HE stands indicted by the Name of Oliver Plunket, late of Westminster, in the County of Middlesex, Doctor in Divinity, for that he is a false Traitor against the most illustrious and most excellent Prince our Sovereign Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland King, and his natural Lord, the Fear of God in his Heart not having, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, the cordial Love, and true and due natural Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King, towards him our said Sovereign Lord the King do and of right ought to bear, utterly withdrawing, and contriving, and with all his Might intending the Peace

"Peace and common Tranquillity within the Kingdom of Ireland, as also of this Kingdom of England, to disturb, and War and Rebellion against our said Sovereign Lord the King in the Kingdom of Ireland, then being the Dominion of our said Sovereign Lord the King, in Parts beyond the Seas, to stir up and move, and the Government of our said Sovereign Lord the King there to subvert; and our said Sovereign Lord the King from his Regal Power and Government there to depose and deprive; and our said Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, to Death and final Destruction to bring and put; and the true Worship of God within the said Kingdom of Ireland, by Law established and used, to alter to the Superstition of the Romish Church: The first Day of December, in the Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second now King of England, &c. the two and thirtieth, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at Dublin in the Kingdom of Ireland, in Parts beyond the Seas, with divers other false Traitors unknown, traiterously did compass, imagine and intend the Killing, Death, and final Destruction of our said Sovereign Lord the King, and the ancient Government of his said Kingdom of Ireland aforesaid to change, alter, and wholly to subvert; and him our said Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, from the Crown and Government of his Kingdom of Ireland aforesaid to depose and deprive, and the true Protestant Religion to extirpate, and War and Rebellion against the said Sovereign Lord the King there to move and levy. And to fulfil and accomplish his said most wicked Treasons, and traiterous Compassings, Imaginations, and Purposes aforesaid, he the said Oliver Plunket, the said first Day of December, in the above said two and thirtieth Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, with Force and Arms, &c. at Dublin, in the Kingdom of Ireland, then being the Dominion of our said Sovereign Lord the King in Parts beyond the Seas, maliciously, devilishly, and traiterously did assemble and gather together himself, with divers other Traitors unknown, and then and there devilishly, advisedly, maliciously, subtilly, and traiterously did consult and agree our said Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, to Death and final Destruction to bring, and from his Crown and Government aforesaid to depose and deprive, and the Religion of the Romish Church into the Kingdom of Ireland aforesaid, to introduce and establish. And the sooner to fulfil and perfect his said most wicked Treasons, and traiterous Imaginations and Purposes, he the said Oliver Plunket, with divers other false Traitors unknown, then and there advisedly, maliciously, and traiterously, did further consult and agree to contribute, pay, and expend divers great Sums of Money to divers Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King, and other Persons unknown, to procure them the said Persons unknown, our said Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, traiterously to kill, and the Romish Religion into the said Kingdom of Ireland, to introduce and establish. And that he the said Oliver Plunket, and other Traitors unknown, afterwards, to wit, the said first Day of December, in the two and thirtieth Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King above said, at Dublin aforesaid, in the Kingdom of Ireland aforesaid, within the Dominion of our said Sovereign Lord the King, with Force and Arms, &c. unlawfully, maliciously, devilishly, and traiterously did receive, collect, pay, and expend divers great Sums of Money to divers Persons unknown, to persuade and induce divers other Persons also unknown, the said false Traitors in their said Treasons to help and maintain, against the Duty of his Allegiance, and against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord the King, that now is, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statutes in that Case made and provided." To this Indictment he hath pleaded, Not Guilty.

Mr. Heath. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment of High-Treason against Dr. Oliver Plunket, the Prisoner at the Bar; and it sets forth, That the two and thirtieth Year of the King, at Dublin in the Kingdom of Ireland, he did compass and imagine the Death of the King, and to deprive the King of his Kingdom of Ireland, and to raise War to extirpate the Protestant Religion in the Kingdom of Ireland, and to establish the Romish Religion there. And it sets forth further; that for the Accomplishment of these Treasons, the Defendant, with several others, did meet together at several Places at Dublin in the Kingdom of Ireland, and elsewhere, and at these several Meetings did consult and agree to put the King to Death, to raise War, to extirpate the Protestant Religion, and set up the Romish Religion. And the Indictment further sets forth, that to accomplish these Treasons, the Defendant did raise great Sums of Money in the Kingdom of Ireland, and did get several Persons to contribute several Sums for these Treasons, and that the Defendant with others did disburse several Sums of Money to several Persons, to persuade them and entice them to be aiding and assisting in these Treasons, and to recompence them for them. To this Indictment the Defendant hath pleaded, Not Guilty. If we prove these Things, you are to find him Guilty.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, we will quickly come to the Evidence: But in short, you have heard his Charge is as high as can be against the King, and against the Nation, and against all that is good. The Design and Endeavour of this Gentleman was the Death of the King, and the Destruction of the Protestant Religion in Ireland, and the raising of War: And to accomplish this, we charge him, that there was a Confederacy made, Assemblies and Consultations had to these Ends, and raising Money to accomplish it. Gentlemen, Dr. Plunket was made, as we shall prove to you, as they there call him, Primate of Ireland; and he got that Dignity from the Pope upon this very Design. He did by Virtue of that Power, which he thought he had gotten, make out Warrants, Significations, I know not what they call them, to know how many Men in Ireland could bear Arms from sixteen to forty; he raises Taxes upon the People and the Clergy there. But, my Lord, the Particulars will best fall from the Witnesses that we shall call and prove it by, and we need not make any Aggravation; for such a Thing as this cannot be more aggravated than 'tis.

Mr. Att. Gen. (Sir Robert Sawyer.) May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Character this Gentleman bears, as Primate under a foreign and usurped Jurisdiction, will be a great Inducement to you to give Credit to that Evidence we shall produce before you. We shall prove that this very Preferment was conferred upon him upon a Contract, that he should raise sixty thousand Men in Ireland, for the Pope's Service, to settle Popery there, and to subvert the Government.

The Evidence that we shall give you, will prove how it leads to destroy the King; and I take it according to the Relations that have been, to raise War in the Kingdom, and to introduce a foreign Power, will be certainly Evidence of an Attempt and Machination to destroy the King. As soon as he was in Possession of his Primacy, he goes about his Work. There are two great Necessaries to be provided, Men and Money: For Men, having this great spiritual Jurisdiction, whereby, indeed, all that are under it are become Slaves, he issues out his Warrants to all the Clergy of Ireland, to give an Account, and make Return from the several Parishes, and all the Men in them above fourteen, and under sixty. And Returns were accordingly made by them, that he might accordingly take a Measure what Men to provide for the Service. The next Thing was Money, my Lord; and your Lordship takes Notice, that when the Mind is enslaved, the Purse, nay all the Body bows to it. He issues out his Warrants to his Clergy to make a Collection of Money; in all Parts great Sums were levied, and when they were levied, we shall give you an Account by our Proofs, that several Sums were issued out, and sent into France to further the Business. There was also Provision made of great Ammunition and Arms; and we shall prove in particular, several delivered out by this Gentleman's Order, to carry on this Thing; and to go through with this Business, he takes a View of all the several Ports and Places in Ireland, where it would be convenient to land; for they were to have from France an auxiliary Force, and upon his View he pitched upon Carlingford as the Place. We shall prove the several Correspondencies between Rome and him, and France and him, and several Messengers employed, and Monies issued out from Time to Time for their Maintenance. This will be the Course of our Evidence; and we shall begin first with some that do not speak so particularly to this Doctor, but prove there was a general Design in all Parts of the Kingdom of Ireland, to bring in the King of France, and extirpate the Protestant Religion. And then we shall call the particular Persons to the particular Facts against him. First, we call Florence Wyer, (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you sworn, Sir?

Wyer. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray give the Court and the Jury an Account of what you know of any Plot in Ireland, to introduce the Romish Religion, or to bring in the French King.

Wyer. Yes, I know there was a Plot, both before Plunket's Time, and in his Time; for it was working in the Years 65 and 66, but it was brought to full Maturity in the Year 1667. For then Col. Miles Rely and Col. Bourne were sent to Ireland from the King of France, with a Commission to muster as many Men as he could, promising to send an Army of 40,000 Men with a Commission, upon St. Lewis's Day in August next following to land at Carlingford, to destroy all the true Subjects, to destroy the Religion as it was established there, and to set up the French King's Authority and the Roman Catholick Religion. And one Edmund Angle, that was a Justice of Peace, and Clerk of the Crown, sent for all the Rebels abroad in the North to come up into the County of Longford, and they marched into the Head-Town of the County, and fired the Town; the Inhabitants fled into the Castle: Then they came up to the Gaol, thinking to break it open, and by setting the Prisoners free, to join them with them; but then Angle was shot, received a deadly Wound, and dropt off of his Horse, and they fled. So then when they were without the Town, one Charles Mac-Canal alighted, and took away all the Papers out of his Pocket; which if they had been found, would have discovered all. This occasioned Col. Bourne to be suspected; and being so suspected, he was taken Prisoner, and turned to Newgate in Dublin. Then Col. Rely fled away again to France, and the Plot lay under a Cloud during the Life of Primate Raley the Prisoner's Predecessor. This Primate Raley died beyond Sea. Then many of the Popish Religion would have had the Primacy conferred upon one Duffy; but the Prisoner at the Bar put in for it; which might have been opposed, if the Prisoner had not engaged and promised that he would so manage Affairs, that before the present Government were aware, he would surprise the Kingdom; provided the Pope and King of France would send a competent Army to join with theirs for the effecting of it. So the first Year of his coming over I was in the Friery at Armagh; I was an Acquaintance of the Friars, and they invited me; and one Quine told the Prisoner, that they thought Duffy would have been Primate. Said he, 'tis better as it is; for Duffy hath not the Wit to do those Things that I have undertaken to do; meaning that he did undertake to supplant the Protestant Religion, to bring in Popery, and put the Kingdom under Subjection to the King of France.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How do you know that?

Wyer. Those were the Words, and the Meaning I knew before, because I had heard it talked of.

L. C. J. Who was the first of these Primates you speak of?

Wyer. Edmund Raley; he set this Business on Foot first.

L. C. J. About what?

Wyer. About calling the Rebels together out of the North when they came to Longford.

L. C. J. What Year was that?

Wyer. It was in the Year 67.

L. C. J. When died he?

Wyer. He died a little While afterwards.

L. C. J. Then Duffy would have it conferred upon him?

Wyer. Yes, after Raley's Decease he would have had it conferred upon him; and there was a Contention between him and the Prisoner, who did engage he would bring Things to that full Maturity, that before the present Government were aware he would do the Work.

L. C. J. How do you know this?

Wyer. I know this, because I had an Account of it from certain School-Fellows that were with me in Ireland, then studying in Rome; they wrote this to me, desiring me I would take a good Heart with the Rest of my Countrymen, and assuredly in a short Time the Kingdom would be relieved, and the Irish restored to their former Patrimonies.

L. C. J. This you speak of their Information. What do you know of your own Knowledge?

Wyer. All that I know is, he coming into the Friery of Armagh—

L. C. J. About what Time?

Wyer. It is either 10 or 11 Years ago, and there was a Fast there, and I was invited by the Friars, being their Acquaintance; one Quine, one of the Friars, told him—

L. C. J. Told whom?

Wyer. The Prisoner that he did expect Duffy should have been Primate; but the Prisoner made answer, 'tis better as it is; for Duffy had not the Wit to manage the things that I have undertaken for the general Good of our Religion.

L. C. J. Now tell me this: What Things were those he had undertaken? Did he explain himself?

Wyer. No farther than those Words: But I did conceive this was his Meaning; because I knew partly of it myself, knowing of the former Plot.

L. C. J. I ask you only what Words came from him; and you say they were, that Duffy had not the Wit to manage what he had undertaken for the general Good of their Religion.

Wyer. Yes, and then again in his Assembly, kept by him, he charged his Inferiors to collect such several Sums of Money as he thought fit, according to the several Parishes and Dignities, to assist and supply the French Forces when they came over.

L. C. J. How know you that?

Wyer. I have seen the Money collected; and I have seen his Warrant, sub pœna suspensionis, to bring it in, to redeem their Religion from the Power of the English Government. Again, there were those Rebels that went to Longford.

L. C. J. What Time were those Collections?

Wyer. From Time to Time since he came into Ireland.

L. C. J. About what Time?

Wyer. Nine Years, eight Years, seven Years ago, and the last Year of all.

L. C. J. Then it was several Times, you say?

Wyer. Yes, and he procured the Mackdonells a Piece of Money out of the Exchequer, pretending to do good Service to his Majesty; but he sent them for France, meaning they should improve themselves, and bring themselves into favour with the King of France, and come over with the French King to surprise Ireland. This one of the Rebels told me. So I have seen the Prisoner's Letter directed to the grand Tory Flemming, desiring that they should go to France, and he would see them, in spite of all their Enemies in Ireland, safe ashore: And Flemming should return again a Colonel to his own Glory, and the Good of his Country.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know his Hand?

Wyer. Yes, I do, as well as my own. I have seen Capt. O-Neal, Son of General O-Neal, coming every Year into Ireland, and carrying three Regiments to the French King into France; and he used to come over to Ireland every Year to get a Recruit; and he did get my Brother to go with him, and so much importuned me, that I could hardly withstand him; but I did not yield to his Desire. He told me, it was to improve me for my Good, to improve myself in military Discipline; and then I should return for Ireland a Captain under the French King, to surprise the Kingdom and settle the Popish Religion; and then I should be restored to my Estate.

L. C. J. Who told you this?

Wyer. Captain O-Neal. And in the mean while, says he, I hear Dr. Plunket is the only Man intrusted in Ireland to make these Preparations, and get Things ready against the French King's coming, who is to land at Carlingford.

Mr. Att. Gen. How often were you in the Doctor's Company?

Wyer. Not very often.

Plunket. I never saw him with my Eyes before in all my Life.

Wyer. I have seen him in the Priory the first Year that he came over to Ireland; and you know the Meetings held at George Blyke's House in the Fives, and I have seen him in his own House.

Mr. Just. Dolben. How come you to know the Prisoner's Hand?

Wyer. Because I was well acquainted with his Hand, seeing his Hand among the Priests.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Did you ever see him write?

Wyer. Yes, in the Priory, and in his own House.

Mr. Just. Dolben. How often?—Wyer. Not often.

Mr. Just. Dolben. How often?

Wyer. Ten or a Dozen Times. I should know his Hand from all the Writing in London, if it were among never so many. Let me but see it, I will know it.

L. C. J. Have you ever heard him own himself Primate?

Wyer. Yes, my Lord, he writes himself Oliverus Armacanus, Primas & Metropolitanus totius Hiberniæ, that is his Stile.

L. C. J. Who did he say made him Primate?—Wyer. The Pope, my Lord.

L. C. J. Have you heard him say so?

Wyer. Yes, I heard him discourse of it in the Priory.

Mr. Att. Gen. He was a public Officer, and they might well know his Hand.

L. C. J. I believe any Body that hath seen us write but a little, would soon know our Hands.

Wyer. His Hand is as well known over Ireland, as mine is among my Acquaintance.

L. C. J. Well go on.

Wyer. During the Time of his Imprisonment, I have seen his Commands to some of his inferior Dignitaries, commanding them, sub pœna suspensionis, to bring in the Monies assessed for bringing in the French Army; and that there was no better Time than the Time of his Imprisonment to bring it in.

L. C. J. Who were they, you say, that were commanded sub pœna suspensionis?

Wyer. Since his taking, I have seen in the Time of his Imprisonment his Commands to his inferior Dignitaries, not to be forgetful of the Monies that were assessed towards the supplying the French Army; and that there was no better Time to bring in the French, than when he was in Prison.

L. C. J. How long ago was that?

Wyer. The first of February (79). The second and last of it was in July and November last.

L. C. J. And this was to bring in the Money?

Wyer. Yes, to supply the French Army. And that there was no better Time than during his Imprisonment, and they should not be so much suspected.

L. C. J. And these Mandates you have seen under his Hand?

Wyer. Yes, I have, my Lord.

Vol. III.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know of his summoning or issuing out these Warrants for Lifts of Men?

Wyer. I have not seen any of the Warrants; but the Priests have told me they were commanded by his Warrants to let him know how many there were in all their Parishes from sixteen to sixty.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say you never saw the Mandates?

Wyer. No, I did not.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What do you know about the Prisoner's viewing the Ports?

Wyer. I have seen him going about from Port to Port, to Derry, to Carrisfergus, Casly-Down, and Carlingford, and all about.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. When he went to take a View of those Ports, can you tell to what Purpose he did it?

Wyer. Yes, I heard it among the Church, that he went on Purpose to view the Sea-Ports, to know the Strength of all the Garrisons, and to see which was the most convenient Way to bring in the French Army.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you ever speak with the Prisoner at the Bar about his going?—Wyer. No.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What Place did he pitch on as most convenient?

Wyer. Carlingford.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you in the Prisoner's Company when he viewed the Ports?—Wyer. I have seen him go to and fro; I did not go all the Circuit round with him.

Plunket. Did you ever see me at Carlingford?—Wyer. No.

Plunket. Did you ever see me at any other of the Ports?

Wyer. I have seen you at Hamilton's coming back from Derry. Do you not remember that you lodged at Sir Geo.

Plunket. I never lodged there in my Life.

Sir Fra. Withens. Have you any Thing more to say concerning the Plot in general?—Wyer. No, in general I have not.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He hath not only given an Account of the general, but fixed it upon the Prisoner.

Mr. Att. Gen. Dr. Plunket, will you ask him any Questions?

Plunket. You say you remember you saw me at my first coming as Primate ten Years ago, and that you were at the Priory when I was there?

Wyer. Yes.

Plunket. You were invisible to me.

L. C. J. If you will ask any Question, do; but do not make these Kind of Observations.

Plunket. Tell me this, Why did you not acquaint some Justice of the Peace then with what you knew, that which you had heard seven Years ago?

Wyer. When I first knew it, I was as willing to have it concealed as they.

L. C. J. What is your Question, Dr. Plunket? Pray tell it us.

Plunket. He says, my Lord, that ten Years ago I had such a Design in Hand, and he knew the Money was collected for these very Ends, and he knew of the Design from that same Captain O-Neal, whom I employed and sent abroad; and that I had a Design to bring in the French at Carlingford, and went about to all the Ports in Ireland, and pitched upon that as the most convenient; and yet it is so inconvenient for the bringing in a foreign Force, that any one that knows any thing of the Maps of the World, will easily conclude it otherwise. But, I say, my Lord, why did not he tell some Justice of Peace that I was upon such a Design, but let me live in Ireland ten Years after, and never speak of it till now?

L. C. J. What say you to the Question?

Plunket. When he saw me all the Time, and to the Time of my taking Prisoner, and never said one Word; for I was a Prisoner six Months, only for my Religion, not one Word of Treason spoken of against me for so many Years; why did not he acquaint some Justice of the Peace with it before?

L. C. J. What Religion were you of then?

Wyer. I was a Roman Catholick.

Plunket. And are you not so now?—Wyer. Yes, I am so.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Therefore it will be no Wonder that you did not discover it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. But I ask you, Why did not you discover it all this Time?

Wyer. Because I was a Papist myself: The first that did discover it, he and I did consult about it, I had charged him so to do, and I set him on work; but he was ill paid for having discovered: You got him to be trepanned, that he hath gone in Danger of his Life for it.

Plunket. Who is the Man?—Wyer. Moyer.

Sir Fra. Withens. Call Henry O-Neal, (who was sworn.) What know you of any Design in Ireland to introduce the Popish Religion?

O-Neal. In August (78.) Bishop Tyrrel came with 40 odd Horsemen to Vicar-General Brady's House, and alighted at the Door; and he gave them there an Oath, which they took willingly and freely from Hand to Hand, to forward the Popish Plot against the Protestant Religion, to make an End of them all in one Hour from End to End in Ireland; and, said he, I will come within two Days with an Order from the Lord Oliver Plunket; and you need not be afraid, for the Lord Oliver Plunket and I have sent some Gold and Money into France to get Men and bring them from France over Sea: And do not fear, this will go on in one Hour through all Ireland from End to End. In September (78.) a little While after, the same Meeting was in a Place which they call Virginia, in the County of Connaught, where they took a Priest, he is here, and he was with me, and desired me to come up to Dublin and discover this; and there I did discover it to Sir John Davis; which is all that I can say. For this Plunket, I never saw him in my Life.

Mr. Jones. You were a Papist then?—O-Neal. Yes, I was.

Mr. Jones. Are you a Roman Catholick still?—O-Neal. Yes, I am.

Mr. Jones. And were you acquainted with all these Orders?

O-Neal. Yes.

L. C. J. How came you to know of this Oath?

O-Neal. I was in the House with them; I was one concerned to take my Oath with them, and I durst not but take the Oath.

L. C. J. Had you the Oath of Secrecy given you?

O-Neal. Yes, and so this Priest commanded me to go along to Dublin and discover it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What is his Name?—O-Neal. John Mac Legh.

Sir Fra. Withens. Do you know any other Transactions about the Plot?

O-Neal. No, I will not swear for all the World more than I know.

Q q

Sir

Sir Fra. Wilem.—Then call Neale O-Neal, (who was sworn.) What do you know of any Design carrying on in Ireland against the Government and the Protestant Religion?

N. O-Neal. I will tell you all I know: I was at Vicar Brady's House the 21st of August.

L. C. J. What Year?

N. O-Neal. (78.) And Bishop Tyrrel came with 40 Horse-Men to the House, and went into the House, and discoursed a little while; and they took their Oaths, every one round, to keep secret the Plot to destroy the Protestant Religion and the Protestants, that they might have their Estates again. And he said they did not need to fear: For, said he, you have a very good Man to assist you, and that is the Lord Oliver Plunket, and you need not fear but it will go through all Ireland.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will you ask him any Questions?

Plunket. Why did you not discover it before?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Were you a Roman Catholick at that Time?

N. O-Neal. Yes, and am so still.

Mr. Papet, Jury-Man. I desire he may be asked how he came to be there.

L. C. J. You say, I think, this was at Vicar General Brady's; how came you to be there?

N. O-Neal. I was there several Times before that; for my Nurse or my Forster-Mother (I don't know which you may understand best) was House-keeper to him.

L. C. J. Were you required to take the Oath?

N. O-Neal. No, my Lord, I was acquainted in the House, I had been there two or three Weeks before.

Plunket. Why did not you tell it to some Justice of the Peace?

L. C. J. He was a Papist, and so he is now.

N. O-Neal. There were many there that were wiser than I, that did not discover it.

L. C. J. How old are you?

N. O-Neal. I believe about two and twenty Years old.

L. C. J. And this was but in (78.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Owen Murfey, (which was done.) Come, what say you?

O. Murfey. Mr. Edmund Murfey discovered the Plot; he went to one Lieutenant Baker and did discover the Plot to him, that there was a Design to bring in the French.

L. C. J. Speak out aloud, I can't hear you.

O. Murfey. All I know is from Mr. Edmund Murfey—

L. C. J. What do you know of any, of your own Knowledge?

O. Murfey. Mr. Lieutenant Baker told me, that he did hear of the French—

L. C. J. Speak what you know yourself.

O. Murfey. If it please your Lordship, this is more: I saw that Evidence that Edmund Murfey did produce in Ireland, when he was sent to the Gaol there; but without Trial or any Thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then swear Hugh Duffy; (which was done.) Speak aloud, and tell my Lord what you know of this Plot and the Prisoner: You know the Prisoner, don't you?

Duffy. I know him! yes, I know him well enough.

L. C. J. What say you more of him?

Duffy. My Lord, I say I have seen this Dr. Oliver Plunket raising several Sums of Money to carry on this Plot; sometimes 10s. per Ann. sometimes 20.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Of whom?

Duffy. Of all the Priests in Ireland; of every Priest according to his Pension and Parish.

L. C. J. In all Ireland?—Duffy. Yes.

L. C. J. And towards the Proceedings of the Plot?

Duffy. It was to give to his Agent which was at Rome, and for the carrying on the Business.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came you to know this?

Duffy. I was Servant to Dr. Duffy, who was infinitely below'd by this Man. He was Father Confessor to the Queen of Spain. There was nothing that happened between them, but I was by all the Time.

L. C. J. Were you Chaplain to him?—Duffy. Yes.

L. C. J. You are a Papist then?—Duffy. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. This Man is a Friar, my Lord.

L. C. J. Were you in the Company with them?—Duffy. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. What did pass there?

Duffy. About the Plot; how they could confirm the Plot: And this Man Plunket said, he could prevail with the King of France, and the other with the King of Spain.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray acquaint my Lord particularly when this was, and in what Place, and what they said?

Duffy. It was in 73, 74, and 75, at his own House; and at he kept three or four Jesuits there, and a matter of a hundred Priests.

Mr. Att. Gen. What passed in the Company?

L. C. J. Who else was there?

Duffy. The Discourse, my Lord, was always about the Plot, how they could contrive the Matter between them; and so they did conclude afterwards to raise so much Money upon several Priests, all the Priests in Ireland, sometimes 20s. sometimes 40.

L. C. J. A-piece, do you mean?—Duffy. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Discourse had they about the French at any Time?

Duffy. Yes, a hundred times; he talked several Times, that he did not question but he should prevail with the King of France not to invade Spain: And I have seen his Letter to Cardinal Bouillon, to exhortate with him about the King of France, why he should wage War with the King of Spain, who was a Catholick, but rather should come and redeem Ireland out of its heretical Jurisdiction.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see the Letter?—Duffy. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Why, do you know his Hand?

Duffy. Yes, I know it as well as I know my own; I know it if there were a thousand Papers together.

Mr. Att. Gen. And what was the Import of it, pray?

Duffy. That Cardinal Bouillon should prevail with the King of France not to invade Spain; and the Contents of the rest of the Letter were, That he did admire he should not rather wage War with the King of England, who hath been an Apostate, and help their poor Country that was daily tormented with heretical Jurisdiction.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came you to be in France? Were you employed?

Duffy. I went to France to live there in a Convent.

Plunket. Did Cardinal Bouillon shew you my Letter?—Duffy. Yes.

Plunket. What Year?—Duffy. 77.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, you were speaking of raising of Money—Duffy. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see any Precept about it?

Duffy. Yes, I have seen several Precepts: I was Curate to one Father Murfey; and while that Man was with Dr. Oliver Plunket, and other Jesuits, I did officiate in his Place, and he sent his Letters to me to raise 40s. and 20s. a time, several times.

L. C. J. You yourself?—Duffy. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. What for?

Duffy. It was to send to Dr. who was at Rome.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you send any Money that you know of?

Duffy. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Tell what Time you gave the Money yourself?

Duffy. In 73, 74, 75.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where?—Duffy. At his own Dwelling Place at

Mr. Just. Jones. Of what Quality was the Prisoner amongst you?

Duffy. He was Primate of all Ireland.

Mr. Just. Jones. Under whom?—Duffy. Under whom? under the Pope.

Mr. Just. Jones. How do you know he was so?

Duffy. We had it in his Writings.

L. C. J. Did he stile himself so in his Letters?

Duffy. Yes, if he writ but to the least Man in the Country, he would write, Oliverus Armicanus, Primas totius Hiberniæ.

L. C. J. And so you always understood him?—Duffy. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you present at any of the general Consultations or Meetings?—Duffy. Yes, I was.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Number might meet at that Time?

Duffy. Five hundred Men and Women.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was this?—Duffy. At Clonds.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Occasion and Design of that Meeting?

Duffy. Confirmation from the Bishop.

Mr. Att. Gen. And what was done there besides?

Duffy. The second Thing was, that the Gentlemen of the three Counties should conclude together about this Matter.

L. C. J. About what?

Duffy. About joining the French and Spanish together.

Mr. Justice Dolben. Where was that Meeting?

Duffy. In the County of Monaghan.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Was the Prisoner there?

Duffy. Yes, he was the chief Man.

L. C. J. When was this?—Duffy. In 71, to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Were you there yourself?—Duffy. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Transaction of that Day, besides the Sacrament of Confirmation?

Duffy. It was agreed that the Gentry of Armagh, Monaghan, and Connaught, should join together; and then they went into a private Council to get a List of all the Officers that were in the last Rebellion, and those that lost their Estates.

Mr. Att. Gen. How do you know that? Did you go into the Consult?

Duffy. Yes, I was in the same Consult myself, and was as willing to proceed in the Matter as any one in the World.

L. C. J. Where was this?

Duffy. Within two Miles of Clonds, at one Father House.

L. C. J. Was that at the Time when there were so many Persons met? Pray speak again what was done there besides Confirmation?

Duffy. Why they were withdrawn aside into a Garden, some stood up, and some sat down: And Oliver Plunket stood in the middle of them all as a Prelate, and every one kneeled down before him and kissed his Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was then said?

Duffy. Then they did consult and gave special Order to some of them to get a List of all the Officers in the late Rebellion, and that lost their Estates, and that they should be more forward than others to proceed in that wicked Design.

L. C. J. What was that Design?

Duffy. To destroy all the Protestants together.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it to mingle the Irish, and Spanish, and French Army together?—Duffy. Yes, it was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear the Prisoner speak about it?—Duffy. Yes, and he made a Speech before them concerning our own Faith and Religion.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any mention of Money at that Time?

Duffy. It was, that every Man of them that could dispose of Money should provide some for those Gentlemen that would soon come into Ireland.

Mr. Serj. Mayn. Who were those Gentlemen?

Duffy. The French Army and the Spanish Army together.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you at any other Meeting?—Duffy. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. After he was taken, do you know of any Order he sent out to gather Money?—Duffy. Yes, at the Affizes of Dalkiath, I think it is June two Years ago he was apprehended—

Mr. Att. Gen. Indeed he was first apprehended as a very busy Papist.

Duffy. I have seen two or three several Orders to raise Money, for the same purpose; and that it was the only Time to bring the Matter to an end when he lay in Gaol himself.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was that the effect of the Letter?

Duffy. Yes; and that the French and Spanish Kings should take Advantage that now was offered whilst he was in Prison.

Mr. Just. Jones. You say some Money was sent to Dr. Cray?

Duffy. Yes.

Mr. Just. Jones. To what End?—Duffy. To comply with this Design.

Mr. Just. Jones. Where was that Dr. Cray?

Duffy. He was at Rome, he was made a Bishop there.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who employed him there?

Duffy. This Man employed him always.

L. C. J. What was his Name?

Dr.

Duffy. Cray.
 Mr. Just. Jones. You say some of the Priests paid 20, some 40?
 Duffy. Yes.
 Mr. Just. Jones. Did the Lay-Gentry agree to pay nothing?
 Duffy. I don't know for the Gentry.
 L. C. J. But I think you paid something yourself?
 Duffy. Yes, I paid for two or three Years myself.
 L. C. J. And that was for the Design?
 Duffy. Yes, for the French and Spanish Army, and all the Purposes together.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know of any Precept to be given in of all Sorts of Persons of such an Age?
 Duffy. I gave a List of the Age of every Person from 16 to 60.
 Mr. Att. Gen. By whose Order?—Duffy. By his Order.
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. To whom did you give it?—Duffy. To Dr. Plunket.
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. That is, to the Prisoner?
 Duffy. Yes, out of my own Precinct.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Had you any Order from him?
 Duffy. Yes, it was directed to the Parish-Priest; and I, being Curate in his Place, received the Order.
 Sir Fra. Withens. To what Purpose was it?
 Duffy. To know what Men in Ireland were able to bear Arms.
 Mr. Just. Jones. What was the Number contained in your List?
 Duffy. 250.
 Mr. Just. Jones. What, in one Parish?—Duffy. Yes.
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. What was the Parish's Name?—Duffy. Coghan.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know any thing of his going to view the Ports?
 Duffy. I accompanied him to Carlingford.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did you?—Duffy. Yes, in Person I did.
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. What did he say?
 Duffy. He went round about the Place where some of the Custom-ships come in; there was a great Castle there near the Sea, and he went to view the Place, and could not get a Boat: And there was a great Talk of Carlingford to be one of the best Havens in Ireland; there was no great Garrison at the Place, and any Ship might come to the Gates of the Town, and surprize it, being a little Town.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What did he conclude upon that?
 Duffy. That he might get the French Army to land safely there.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know of delivering any Ammunition and Arms?
 Duffy. He did send some of this Money to get Ammunition into Ireland.
 Plunket. You say you were Murfey's Curate: Can you shew me such Institution as you say came to you to raise Money?
 Duffy. I could have brought them, but thought it needless.
 Plunket. Can you name any other Person I received Money from?
 Duffy. I have seen your Paper of the County of Monaghan.
 Plunket. Have you seen any of them pay any Money?
 Duffy. Yes, I have seen twenty of them pay Money.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. Why, you are acquainted with this Man, are you not Mr. Plunket?
 Plunket. My Lord, I believe I have seen him.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. Don't you know he was Chaplain to Bishop Duffy?
 Plunket. No, I never was in his Company.
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray tell him what Time of the Year it was that you were at Carlingford?
 Duffy. It was at the End of the Year 77, and the Beginning of the Year 78.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, if you can recollect, was you once, or twice, or twenty Times in his Company?
 Duffy. As I am a Christian, I have been an hundred Times in his Company. And when you were creating Priests, you would always send for me to be present; and I wonder how the Man should forget himself.
 Plunket. I do not say I have not seen him, or that I am a Stranger to the Man; but in the Company of Bishop Duffy I never saw him, nor I ever sent him Orders to pay any Money; and if he did pay any Money, he might shew the Order.
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. If he did pay any Money, you did ill to take it.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Pray let him have fair Play to ask any Questions.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Tell how you came to remember that you saw him at Sir Nich. Plunket's.
 Duffy. Dr. Duffy did send me to Sir Nicholas Plunket's, and I met Dr. Plunket as I was coming out of the City. I had been half a Year at the Spanish Ambassador's, and he sent me for Ireland again, and then I lived at the Convent in Dublin; and then, when I knew that he would come to Town, I went to Ring's-End, where the Ships came in, to meet him.
 Plunket. You say you were with him at my House.—Duffy. Yes.
 Plunket. If you were, you were invisible: But I ask you, Why did not you tell this to some Justice of the Peace?
 Mr. Just. Dolben. Good Mr. Plunket, he tells you, he was as willing to forward it then as you.
 L. C. J. How came you now to change your Mind?
 Duffy. I went into France in 77, and I was not there a Year altogether; but when I have seen how the poor People there are brought into such Slavery by the French King, I thought of it, and had rather the Devil should reign over us, than the Frenchman.
 Mr. Just. Dolben. He gives you a very good rational Account why.
 Duffy. I have been at Sir Nicholas Plunket's, and Dr. Patrick Plunket's, where there fell some Variance about something this Man had done to Father Duffy. Says Bishop Duffy, I might have had you drawn and quartered, if I were as ill a Man as you; and I might have been Primate of Ireland, if I could have undertaken those Things that you undertook. Upon that, says Sir Nicholas Plunket, What is that? Why, it was said, it was to raise 60000 Men in Ireland at any Time whenever the French or the Spanish King should wage War with England, Scotland, or Ireland. And this Man did confess before my Face to Father Duffy, that it was not only to exalt himself, but all the Romish Clergy, and all the Gentry that had lost their Estates.
 Plunket. Mr. Duffy, one Word with you: Is not this out of Malice to me, for correcting some of the Clergy?

Duffy. You had nothing to do with me, for I was a Friar.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Edmund Murfey (which was done.) Tell your whole Knowledge of Dr. Plunket and the Irish Plot.
 Murfey. May it please you, my Lord, I was one of the first Discoverers of this Plot; but of nine Witnesses, I have but one in Town.
 L. C. J. Well, tell your own Knowledge.
 Murfey. Now I beg your Lordship, as to Dr. Plunket, that you will respite it till next Term; I could bring ten Witnesses.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Do you speak your own Evidence?
 Murfey. I refer it to the King and Council, what Evidence I have given.
 L. C. J. Do not trouble yourself, be directed a little: You are here now to speak what you know concerning any Treasons, or any other Matters against the King, done by Dr. Plunket; speak your own Knowledge, for as to other Witnesses we do not call you.
 Murfey. If I be called in question for this Evidence—
 Mr. Att. Gen. Come, Sir, you have been at the Spanish Ambassador's lately, answer my Question; have you ever been with Plunket in Ireland?
 Murfey. Yes, Sir.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Have you ever heard him own himself Primate of Ireland?
 Murfey. Yes, Titular Primate.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Under whom did he claim that Authority? Under the King, or under the Pope?
 Murfey. I think he could not be under the King at all.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Under whom then?
 Murfey. It must be either the King or the Pope.
 L. C. J. Answer me directly, did he claim to be Titular Primate under the Pope?—Murfey. I suppose he did.
 L. C. J. Was he reputed generally so to be?—Murfey. Yes, my Lord.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Murfey, remember what you swore before the Grand Jury: pray recollect yourself whether that be true, and tell all.
 L. C. J. You are upon your Oath, you must speak the Truth, and the whole Truth; you must not mince or conceal any Thing.
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. Were you sworn before the Grand Jury?
 Murfey. I was sworn before the King and Parliament.
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you give in any Evidence to the Grand Jury?
 Murfey. Yes, I did.
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. Was that you swore before the Grand Jury true, upon your Oath?—Murfey. I can't say but it was.
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. Repeat it; tell my Lord and the Jury what it was, and tell the Truth.—Murfey. I have forgot it.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Why then, I would ask you a little; you remember, I was by, and 'tis no laughing Matter, Mr. Murfey, you will find it so. What do you know of any Orders issued out by Mr. Plunket to raise Money from the Priests?
 Murfey. I know there were Orders, and I took the Orders myself in my Hand.
 Mr. Att. Gen. From whom had you those Orders?
 Murfey. From another, and not from him.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Under whose Hand were those Orders?
 Murfey. They were from the Primate.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see any Order under Plunket's Hand for raising of Money?
 Murfey. No, but under the Vicar-General's, by his Authority, as I suppose.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Upon your Oath, did you not swear before the Grand Jury, that you saw the Orders under his Hand?
 Murfey. No, I did not, or I was mistaken, for it was only by his Direction.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Pray had you any Converse with Oliver Plunket about the raising of Money?
 Murfey. Oliver Plunket about the raising of Money?
 Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, that is a plain Question.
 Murfey. It was about other Matters I conversed with him.
 Mr. Att. Gen. But did you converse with him about Money?
 Murfey. No, not about the Money.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Upon your Oath, did you converse with him about bringing in the French?
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. Declare the Truth, come.
 L. C. J. Come, don't trifle; what Discourse have you had with the Prisoner about raising of Money, or bringing in the French? Either of them, Sir?
 Murfey. I know this, if the Duke of York and Duke of Ormond had proceeded according to their Intentions, it was a general Expectation at the same Time, that all the French and Irish would come and fall upon the English Nation, as I understood.
 L. C. J. Pray answer the Question directly: You must not come and think to trifle with the Court, you must speak the Truth, you are sworn to it; you must not come to quibble and run about to this, and that, and t'other, but answer directly, have you had any Discourse with the Prisoner about Orders for raising of Money in Ireland?
 Murfey. Yes, I have seen Orders from his Vicar-General for the raising of Money.
 L. C. J. Hath he owned them to be by his Direction?
 Murfey. Not before me, but others he has.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Have you seen any Money paid to him?
 Murfey. To whom?
 Mr. Att. Gen. To Plunket.
 Murfey. To the Vicar-General I have.
 L. C. J. But to Plunket?—Murfey. None to Plunket.
 L. C. J. Have you had any Discourse with him at any Time about the raising of Money, which the Vicar-General gave Order for?
 Murfey. I have had Discourse with the Vicar-General.
 L. C. J. Sir, don't trifle; have you had any with him?
 Murfey. With him?
 L. C. J. Yes, with him.
 Murfey. Yes, I have had some Discourse with him.
 L. C. J. Tell me what Discourse this was?
 Murfey. I think it was about this: If the D. of York and the D. of Mon-

Monmouth fell out together, that he had some Men to raise about the Matter, and if the D. of Monmouth would raise the Protestant Religion—

Mr. Att. Gen. You see he hath been in Spanish Hands.

L. C. J. Were you a Protestant, Sir?—Mursey. No, I am a Priest.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He is to seek yet.

Mursey. I am indifferent whether I be a Protestant or Priest.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he is a Priest in Orders, and so hath acknowledged himself.

Mursey. Yes, I am a Priest, but it makes me forget myself to see so many Evidences to come in, that never knew Plunket.

L. C. J. Sir, you refuse to answer those Questions that we put to you here.

Mursey. What I said before the Parliament, I answer punctually.

L. C. J. You are asked Questions here, and produced as a Witness, will you answer directly, or not?—Mursey. Yes, I will.

L. C. J. Then let me hear what Discourse you had with the Primate Plunket concerning any Money raised by him or his Vicar-General.

Mursey. May it please your Lordship, first of all, I did not impeach Primate Plunket, but the Officers and Justices of the Peace.

Mr. Just. Jones. Had you any Discourse with him, yea or no?

Mursey. That he should find so many Catholics in Ireland, if the D. of York and the D. of Monmouth fell out.

Mr. Just. Jones. Why, it plainly appears what you drove at at first, to put off this Trial if you could.

L. C. J. The Papists in England have been at Work with you.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I perceived this Gentleman was very busy, looking upon his Hat, I desire he may be searched, if he have no Paper about him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Solicitor and myself heard the Evidence he gave to the Grand Jury.

Then he went out of the Court, and would scarce be persuaded to come back again.

Mr. Att. Gen. We both heard him, and he gave the fullest Evidence, much fuller to all Instances and Particulars of this High-Treason, much fuller than Duffy, to the Grand Jury. Afterwards, about three Weeks ago, the Trial coming on, he ran away and lay hid; I took a great Deal of Pains to find him out, and sent Messengers about; at last I heard he was got to the Spanish Ambassador's, I sent, and they spied him in the Chapel; but the Spanish Ambassador's Servants fell upon the Messengers and beat them, the Ambassador was first sent to about it, and his Excellency promised that he should be brought, and when he was found, he told me but the last Night, that all he had sworn before the Grand Jury was true, and he was ready to make it out again.

L. C. J. And now he says, he knows not what he said then; pray take Notice of that.

Mursey. I told the Grand Jury this, that my Lord Plunket had a Design to get 60 or 70,000 Men in Ireland, if the D. of York and the D. of Monmouth should fall out.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you tell a Word of that to the Grand Jury?

Mursey. Yes, Sir, or I was mistaken.

Mr. Att. Gen. Not one Word of that did he then say.

L. C. J. Do you own this Man, Dr. Plunket, to be of your Religion?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you know this Seeker?

Plunket. He says himself he is indifferent to be a Protestant or a Papist.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I will only try you by one Question more, for you are fought out, and it may be you may be found: Do you know how many Men he was to raise in Ireland? remember what you said to the Grand Jury.—Mursey. 70000 Men.

L. C. J. What were they to do?

Mursey. For establishing if Occasion should be—

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Establishing, establishing what?

Mursey. Of the Romish Religion.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Well, so far we have got 70000 Men to establish the Romish Religion: What, was Plunket to do this?

Mursey. As far as I understood.

Mr. Just. Jones. And you understood it by himself?

Mursey. I received Letters from the Vicar-General to get so much Money collected, and as soon as I got the Letters to my Hands, I sent them to a Privy Councillor.

L. C. J. Do you not know that he was engaged to assist the French Army?—Mursey. I do not know that by him, but by others.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Did you ever discourse with him about it?

Mursey. I did discourse with him about several Matters.

Mr. Just. Dolben. About the French Army?—Mursey. Yes.

L. C. J. Do you know that he did endeavour to bring them into Ireland?—Mursey. I had a Correspondence in France at the same Time—

L. C. J. With whom?—Mursey. With one Mac Carty.

L. C. J. And do you know that he had Correspondence in France?

Mursey. Yes, I know that.

Mr. Just. Dolb. With whom had Plunket Correspondence in France?

Mursey. He had Correspondence with Dr. Cray and others in France, as I understood by others.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Was the End of that Correspondence to bring Men from France into Ireland?—Mursey. Yes, so far as I understand.

Mr. Just. Dolb. You understood the Letters when you read them, did you not?

Mursey. I know not how these People come to swear this Business, whether they had not Malice against him—

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, Sir, pray give you your Evidence, we will take Care of the Rest.

Mr. Just. Dolb. I reckon this Man hath given the best Evidence that can be.

L. C. J. Yes, it is Evidence that the Catholics have been tampering with him.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I desire he may be committed, my Lord, because he hath fenced from the Beginning (Which was done accordingly.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear John Mac Legh. (Which was done.)

Sir Fra. Wubens. Tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of any Plot in Ireland to bring in the French.

Mac Legh. I was a Parish Priest in Ireland, in the County of Monaghan, and Dr. Oliver Plunket received several Sums of Money in Ireland, and especially in the Diocese where I am. I raised some of it, and paid him 40s. at one Time, and 30s. another Time, in the Year (74) I paid him 40s. in the Year (75) I paid him 50s. and it was about July, and it was for the better Advancement of the French coming in.

Mr. Jones. Did he tell you that the Money was to be employed that way? Mac Legh. Yes, that the Money was to be kept for Arms and Ammunition for the Roman Catholics in Ireland.

L. C. J. Before you paid it, did you receive any Order from him? Mac Legh. Yes, I received an Order sub pena suspensionis, and there was a publick Order throughout Ireland, or we would not pay it; nay, several would not pay it, and they were to be suspended.

Plunket. Can you shew any of the Orders under my Hand?

Mac Legh. Yes, I can shew them, but only they are afar off, I did not expect to have them asked for.

Plunket. Have you no Superiors of your own? Mac Legh. Yes, but you being Lord Primate, you could suspend Bishops and inferior Clergy together.

Plunket. When was this?—Mac Legh. In the Years (74) and (75.)

Plunket. What is the Reason you kept it so secret all this while? Mac Legh. In the Year (77) I did discover it to one Mr. O-Neal, whom I sent to Dublin to discover this Plot. I was in France myself, my Lord.

Plunket. How many Years is it since you returned from France? Mac Legh. In May in the Year (78.)

Plunket. Why did you not speak all this while till now? Mac Legh. I did send one Mr. Henry O-Neal to Dublin, for I durst not go, lest I should have been suspended and excommunicated.

Mr. Att. Gen. This is the Priest that Henry O-Neal speaks of.

L. C. J. Is not this a very good Reason? If he had come to Dublin to discover, you would have suspended him.

Plunket. But, my Lord, then he might have shewn my Suspension, and brought me into a Præmunire.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. If you please, Dr. let us who are for the King have done with him first. I would ask you another Question, Sir, were you at one Vicar Brady's House?—Mac Legh. Yes, I was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Tell what was done there.

Mac Legh. There was Bishop Tyrrel came there with 40 Horsemen well mounted and armed, he came into the House about 10 in the Morning, and staid till about 11 at Night, I was very much among them, and was as willing to be of the Plot as themselves.

Mr. Att. Gen. Tell what was done there.

Mac Legh. There Bishop Tyrrel said, that he had Orders from Dr. Oliver Plunket, and others, to partake of the Plot to bring in the French and subvert the Government in Ireland, and destroy the Protestant Religion and the Protestants.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there an Oath given?

Mac Legh. Yes, they were all put to their Oaths, which they did take willingly to keep it private during their Lives Time, and the Reason was they were to have their Estates during their Lives Time.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Now tell us when this was?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, Henry O-Neal, and Phelim O-Neal speak to the same Purpose.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you remember whether Henry O-Neal was there? Did he take the Oath of Secrecy?—Mac Legh. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know of any Letters from Plunket?

Mac Legh. In France I landed at Brest, and going through Brittany, I met with Bishop Tyrrel and Dr. Cray, who was my Lord Oliver Plunket's Agent, and Duke John of Great Brittany came into them; for he heard of these two Bishops being newly come out of Rome, sent for them, and I being a Priest of Tyrrel's Diocese, I went along with them, and they were well accepted, and he shewed Dr. Oliver Plunket's Conditions with the King of France, which was this; to get Dublin and London-Derry, and all the Sea-Ports into their own Hands, to levy War and destroy the Protestant Religion, and that they should have him to protect them during his Life-time.

L. C. J. Did you see those Conditions?

Mac Legh. A Copy of them I did, the Governor of Brittany did shew them to the Bishop.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What Language were those Conditions in?

Mac Legh. They were were in Latin, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Was Edmund Mursey put out of the Diocese?

Mac Legh. Not as I know of.

L. C. J. What do you know of his being Primate? Upon what Conditions was he made Primate?

Mac Legh. He was made Primate by the Election of the King of France. And upon his Election, he made those Conditions with the King of France, to raise Men to join with the French, to destroy the Protestant Religion.

Mr. Just. Jones. You know that Man, Dr. Plunket?

Plunket. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will you ask him any Questions?

Plunket. None, but what I asked the others.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Then if that is all, he hath given you a good Answer to that already, he was as forward then as the Rest.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then swear John Moyer. (Which was done.)

Mr. Just. Jones. What do you know concerning any Plot in Ireland, and Dr. Plunket's being in it?

Moyer. I knew him first, my Lord, to be made Primate of Ireland, imagining that he should propagate the Romish Faith in Ireland, and to restore it to the Catholic Government; and I know the Time by Relation, that I came to Rome within two Months after his being made Primate of Ireland, upon the same Conditions that have been related to you; and I was brought into the Convent of St. Francis in Rome, by one Father and this Father was very intimate with Cardinal Spinola, and when he used to go abroad, he used to carry me along with him as a Companion, and there I found several of the Romish Cardinals say, That the Kingdom of Ireland should come under the Catholic Government by the Way and Means of the Lord Primate Plunket.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know of your self?

Moyer. As I was coming then from Rome, I happened to come into a Convent of the Order of St. Francis, and there came out of Ireland a young Gentleman of the Family of the O-Neals, who hath been my Lord Primate's Page.

Plunket. I never had a Page.

Moyer. You termed him so, my Lord, in Ireland, and as I came, this young Man had a Packet of Letters with him, as though they were Commendations to enter him into the College de propaganda fide, directed to the Secretary of that College. And thinking them to be Letters of Recommendation, an old Father, called one Thomas Crawley, and I, thought it not prejudicial to open the Seal; and the Contents were these, I translated them five Years ago, and here are the Contents following, if you please, they may be read, I will do my best to read them in English, the Original were in Latin, and some Phrases in Italian. And when I was surprised by Mr. Murfey the last Year, and taken suddenly, all my Papers were taken away before I could return back again, by the Soldiers and the Tories. I only kept a Copy of this Letter I had in English as near as I could, and if I did not diminish any thing by the Translation, upon the Oath I have taken, I have not put any thing in it, but what the Contents of the Letter were.

L. C. J. Was that Letter under his own Hand?

Moyer. My Lord cannot deny that.

Plunket. Do you know my own Hand-writing?

Moyer. Does your Lordship deny that I know your Hand?

Plunket. Pray Sir, will you answer it?

Moyer. Yes, I do very well.

Plunket. When did you leave Ireland?

Moyer. I will tell you that, my Lord, 'tis some 14 or 15 Years ago.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You were giving an Account of the Letter, read it.

Moyer. Here is the Contents, Illustrissime Domine; It was directed to Signior who is now Secretary of the College de propaganda fide. (So then he read his Paper.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. You say, you translated that out of a Letter under the Prisoner's own Hand?

Moyer. Yes, I translated it immediately, and to prove it, I have Statutes which his Lordship made in the general National Council, which are under your own Hand, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did you make this Translation?

Moyer. Five Years ago.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you make it?

Moyer. I made it out of the Original in Ireland.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where is the Original?

Moyer. When I was taken by Mr. Murfey and Mr. Hetherington the last Year, the Soldiers and Tories came and took them away, with other Papers I had of the same Business.

L. C. J. Was the Paper you translated from, of his Hand-writing?

Moyer. No, my Lord, the Paper I took this out of, was a Copy of the Original.

L. C. J. Was the Original of his Hand-writing?

Moyer. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. When did you take it?

Moyer. In Caprennica, where I met with my Lord's Page.

L. C. J. What made you take a Copy of it?

Moyer. It was in Latin and Italian, and I translated it afterwards.

L. C. J. And the English Father, you say, made bold to open it?

Moyer. Yes, because he thought 'twas a Letter of Recommendations; but the Original of the Statutes made at Clouds, I did take the Original, and gave a Copy to the Page.

L. C. J. Have you the Original here?

Moyer. Yes, my Lord, under his own Hand.

Plunket. That's another thing.

L. C. J. But we would know that other thing.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, I desire that he would produce it, 'tis his own Hand-writing; see whether his Grace can deny it.

Moyer. The signing of it is his own Hand-writing, I got the Writing along with the Letter, and thinking to have a Copy of the one, as well as of the other; it was the Statutes I got, and I never knew I had them till I was in Madrid in Spain.

Then the Paper was shewn to the Prisoner.

Plunket. My Lord, 'tis my Hand.

Moyer. Indeed, my Lord, it is your own Hand.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He owns it.

Moyer. And there is an Order in those Statutes, wherein Ireland was bound to send so much Money to Rome, upon such a Design.

Then the Witnesses read the Title in Latin.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Look out that Clause for the raising of the Money.

Moyer. My Lord, 'tis that I look for. Cum tot. Clero in Hibernia necessarium sit.

Mr. Just. Dolben. That is but negotia generally.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. That was to solicit their Affairs.

Mr. Att. Gen. 'Tis 500*l.* in the whole.

Plunket. Is it 500*l.*?

Moyer. 'Tis in Figures a 5 and two (00.)

Plunket. My Lord, this is counterfeit, 'tis put in by other Ink.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Like enough so.

L. C. J. Nothing more ordinary, you leave a Blank for the Sum, and then, may be, you put it in with other Ink.

Mr. Just. Dolben. How much do you say was the Money, Dr. Plunket?

Plunket. My Lord, every Agent that is kept at Rome hath a Maintenance, as all Countries have their Agents at Rome.

Mr. Just. Dolben. How much was it?

Plunket. It was 50*l.* a Year.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Plunket, consider with yourself, 50 or 500 in his Case is not 5 Farthings Difference, but the Money was to be raised by your Order.

Plunket. Ay, but whether it was not raised to this Effect. There is never a Nation where the Roman Catholick Religion is professed, but hath an Agent for their Spiritual Affairs at Rome, and this was for the Spiritual Affairs of the Clergy of Ireland.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. And the Letter was for Spiritual Affairs too, was it not?

Plunket. I desire nothing, that is a Truth, every Nation hath an Agent, and that Agent must be maintained; and the Reason is this, because we have many Colleges beyond Sea, and so there is no Country of Rome Catholicks but hath an Agent in Rome.

VOL. III.

L. C. J. You had better reserve yourself till by-and-by, to answer that and the Letter together; for this is but a small Part of the Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. About this Letter you were speaking of, pray, will you tell what fell out about it?

Moyer. I will tell you how it fell out afterwards. Then I came along into Marseilles in France, and there were two Captains that had as much Notice as I had in that Letter, for they were discoursing, that they would advance themselves in the French King's Service, and hoped, that by the King of France's Help to have the Roman Catholick Faith set up in their own Country; why, that Discourse passed off, for I was mightily afraid of any such thing, because I was of another Opinion; for perhaps I might think the Roman Catholick Faith would flourish as well as ever it did, and hoped so as well as any body else, but not by the Sword. As I came to Madrid, there came one Hugh O'Donnell, Son to O'Donnell, with Letters of Recommendation, and those Letters were to intitle the young Man Earl of Tyrone; and likewise that his Majesty, the King of Spain, should help him for Ireland, according to the Form of the Letters he had. And then as I came for Ireland, speedily after there came Letters of Recommendation to me, that I should present myself to my Lord Primate, to hear Confessions, and be heard Preach. I came to his Lordship at his own House the 9th of December (74,) and there he kept me several Hours, and approved me; and the Copy of the Approbation I have to shew. And after a long Dispute we went aside, and went to look Father Patrick, and there he shewed me such and such things. And after a long Discourse I told my Lord Primate, I saw your Lordship's Letter, which you sent by young O-Neal, in such a Place, and he shewed me the Contents of it, and said, Ay, my Lord, 'tis a good Intention and Design, if it can be done without Bloodshed: Then my Lord mused a little, and he said, Well Father Francis (which is my Name in Religion; my Christian Name was John) pray will you keep it Secret? Well, my Lord, said I, you need not fear; for said he, whatever I have done herein was not for my own good, but for the publick good of the Catholicks. Well, said I, 'tis well. Then he does commend me into the Parish of where this Mr.

Murfey here was to put in a Bull, that I had from my Lord Primate, which Bull was brought here last Year; and there he proffered me high Promotions, if I would further such Things, and solicit such Gentlemen as I knew would be private in such a Business, such as were old Commanders among my Friends and Relations. Shortly after this I saw Plunket and Bishop Tyrrel, and Captain Con O-Neal, practising to bring Soldiers ready for Ireland, as soon as they could get Opportunity. This Captain Con O-Neal coming to the Place where we kept our Priory, and he and his Brothers were Sons to General O-Neal. And there Captain Con comes in the Night-time and lodges with us, and discoursed with his Brother and I, because I was his Companion beyond Sea, about these matters, That he expected my Lord Primate and Bishop Tyrrel's coming thither that Night, to make some Proposals about the Church and other Affairs. After 10 o'Clock, or thereabouts, my Lord Primate and Bishop Tyrrel came, with others in their Company, and there they and Father O-Neal did consult amongst themselves, that they should send Captain Con to France and to Barcelona with such and such Instruments; and sending those Instruments away, Captain Con departs the Country, and goes for France soon after; and speedily my Lord Primate undertook, that he and Bishop Tyrrel should view Munster and Ulster, and other Parts of Ireland, to see how Affairs stood. Soon after my Lord Primate calls a General Provincial Council, and sends out his Orders to levy such and such Taxes and Subsidies, and Warrants, to all the Parish Priests, that they should give them new Lists, to know whether the Numbers they had sent to Rome before, would comply with that List. And then O-Neal went to view the Forts of Charlemont and Dun-Gannon, whilst those Lords did collect the Money: The Orders I have seen with my own proper Eyes, and his own Man confessed before the Council in Ireland, that my Lord gave them under his Hand.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What Year was this?

Moyer. It was in (76) to the best of my Remembrance.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, was this at a Provincial Meeting?

Moyer. Yes, my Lord, a general national Council, to send over Instruments, to tell them, that they were ready to assist any foreign Army that should help on the Design.

L. C. J. And to raise Money?

Moyer. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Have you paid him any Money?

Moyer. I was exempted myself, but I have seen others.

Mr. Just. Dolben. How many?

Moyer. I believe 30.

Mr. Just. Dolben. It was not a secret Thing then, but openly done by them.

Moyer. Yes, I saw them when they came with Orders, there were four Priests, and they had a great Cloak-bag going with Orders up and down.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Why were you exempted?

Moyer. Because I am a regular Priest.

Sir Fra. Withens. You say you saw the Orders for raising Money, how do you know for what it was to be employed?

Moyer. It was there specified down.

Plunket. Can you shew any of the Orders?

Moyer. I could not take them, they did not concern me.

Sir Fra. Withens. How was it specified?

Moyer. To levy so much Money per Priest. I cannot remember the particular Sum; but that every Priest should give so much towards an Agent in Rome to solicit their Business, and forward it.

L. C. J. What Year was it?

Moyer. (76).

L. C. J. Was any of the Money specified for raising an Army, or bringing in the French?

Moyer. It was both for the Agent and to summon a national Council, to get Things ready prepared to entertain and accept the French Army when it should come. I am not so good in expressing myself in English.

L. C. J. Your Sense is good, 'tis no matter for your Expression.

Mr. Jones. What more do you know?

Moyer. I know that he had the same Council, and that they did agree upon the Business, and this I know by one Patrick Bourne, and I being willing

R r

willing that this wicked Action should be hindered, sent to the next Justice to discharge myself of it, which Justice was as favourable to the Business as my Lord himself was.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any Questions, Mr. Plunket?

Plunket. I desire to know when he left Ireland.

Moyer. I cannot tell how to number the Years, but I think it was in 62 or 63, to the best of my Remembrance it was 16 or 17 Years ago.

Plunket. When did you return?

Moyer. I came back in 74, you know it, my Lord.

Plunket. Very well, when did you see the Letter with the young Man in Caprennica?

Moyer. In (72.)

Plunket. How then did you know my Hand, which you had never seen?

Moyer. I have seen it several times to several Instruments to Seignior and I have seen several other Letters of your Hand.

Plunket. How did you know my Hand?

Moyer. I cannot positively say I then knew your Hand, but according to Relation, I heard it from those Cardinals I conversed with at Rome.

L. C. J. But now you are acquainted with his Hand, is it the same Hand which you have seen up and down in Writings with his Name to?

Moyer. Yes, my Lord, it is the very same Hand.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I ask you, Sir, when you came back again and told him you had seen such a Letter under his Hand with O-Neal, did he own it to you?

Moyer. Yes, he did own it, and that he did not do it for his own benefit, but for the publick.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did he desire you to be secret?

Moyer. Yes, he did, and to be discreet, and he would see me highly promoted. And, my Lord, you sent Proposals to me, to give me 100 l. that I should not prosecute you, according as they told me, and they gave me one Guinea in Hand for it.

L. C. J. Some of it came to the Hands of Murfey, I believe.

Plunket. My Lord, I cannot say any thing to this, my Hands are tied, because my Witnesses are not here. My Lord, if I had my Witnesses and Records, I did not care for all these Witnesses.

L. C. J. But you know, you had Time to bring them.

Plunket. My Lord, I desire to know whether this be his Hand (shewing the Paper to Mr. Moyer.)

Moyer. Yes, I believe it is.

Plunket. I desire it may be read.

Moyer. Yes, I am very well satisfied it should.

Cl. of Cr. reads. For my Reverend Father Anthony Guardian of Armagh, Your Letter and Citation—'Tis dated in July (78.)

Plunket. He can best read it himself.

Cl. of Cr. Read it right (the Paper being delivered him.)

Moyer. My Lord, I pity him with all my Heart, that a Man of my own Function should be brought into Question for such things as these are, (he reads) Very Reverend Father Guardian, 'tis dated 1 July (78) Your Paternity's paternal Letter and Citation homeward, I did instantly peruse. As for my Lord Oliver Plunket, I wrote a Letter to him the Day before I saw your Reverence last, that he might cause my Fame, which is as dear to me as my Life, to be recalled, or I should cause his Name to be fixed at every publick Place, which by the Almighty I will do, Nature and all Reason compelling me to do it.

Plunket. My Lord, I say this, he says he came to my House when he came over, and I imparted this Secret to him, yet you see I had denounced him throughout my whole Diocese, and he here calls me by all those Names of Elymas, Simon Magus, and Barjesus, and 'tis impossible, if I had communicated such a Secret to him, that I would deal so with him.

Mr. Just. Dolben. He does not say, you imparted this Secret to him; but he says, when he told you of the Letter, you answered him, but you seemed surprised and amused first.

L. C. J. You seemed to flatter him then, and told him you hoped to see him the best of his Order, highly promoted.

Mr. Just. Dolben. How came you to fall out, Moyer?

Moyer. When first they had this Meeting at Brantry, seeing a Cloud a-coming, and dreading a War, and the Consequences of it, I went and applied myself to Sir Hamilton, one of his Majesty's Privy Councillors in Ireland, and I gave in all my Informations the 7th December (76.)

Mr. Just. Dolben. And thereupon he denounced you excommunicate?

Moyer. Yes, and afterwards, when he saw I was in Communication and familiar with these Privy Councillors, then he was certain I had discovered the Matter, and then he got a great many Devices to get the Letters out of my Hand.

Plunket. You shall see under his own Hand all the Stratagem of this, if I had my Witnesses here, you should then see under his own Hand, upon what Account he fell out with me. Pray, my Lord, ask him if this other Letter be his Hand.

Moyer. I believe it is my own Hand.

L. C. J. Read it.

Moyer. (Reads) Very Reverend Father Guardian (then speaking) My Lord, you know that I was loth to discover myself, being among People knowing of the Plot.

L. C. J. Well, read it over.

Moyer. (Reads) The 23d of April, (78) I was somewhat comforted by your Letter. But now I hope your Reverence hath considered what Wrong I have sustained, by my envious Adversaries Calumnies, only for standing, as I have a Soul to save, for your Rights and Privileges, as also for endeavouring to hinder my native Country's Ruin and Destruction.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Read that again (which he did.)

Plunket. Observe, that I was his Adversary, for standing for the Rights and Privileges of the Friers.

Mr. Just. Dolben. As also for endeavouring to hinder his Country's Ruin and Destruction.

L. C. J. The one and the other were the Reason of your falling out.

Moyer. (Reads on)

Moyer. My Lord, I was, I confess, a begging Frier, and stood up for the Privileges of the Friers.

Plunket. Did you write any Process to Rome against me?

Moyer. No, I never did.

Plunket. My Lord, does not he say I was in Disgrace at Rome?

Moyer. No, nothing of that.

L. C. J. I don't hear it, but what if he did? what is that to the Purpose?

Plunket. To shew his Contradictions; now he says, I was great in Rome, and but then in his Letter he says, I was in Disgrace at Rome. Now he says, all that he had against me, was for his Friers, and to hinder the Destruction of his Country, because I hindered the Friers to beg there, is the Destruction of the Country, as he was doing there. Upon that he fell out with me, and upon that his own Superiors sent this Order.

L. C. J. We can't meddle with your Superiors Orders; they are nothing before us.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, I think, for the present we have done our Evidence.

Plunket. My Lord, to shew what was part of the falling out, I would ask him if he was indicted for any Crime, and found Guilty by a Jury?

Moyer. That was for discovering, for I discovered it before.

Plunket. My Lord, he confesses he was Convict for giving Powder and Shot to the Rebels.

Mr. Just. Dolben. No, he does not say so; produce the Record, if you have any such thing.

Moyer. To satisfy the Court.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Look you, Dr. Plunket, if you will ask him any Questions, that by Law he is bound to answer, do it in God's Name, we will not interpose; but if you ask him any Questions that may tend to accuse himself, we must tell you, he is not bound to answer them.

Plunket. He hath been convicted and found guilty, he will confess it himself.

L. C. J. He is not bound to answer such a Question.

Moyer. It was a Tory Swore against me, that you did absolve.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Don't tell us a Story of your Tories.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Plunket, don't misspend your own Time; for the more you trifle in these things, the less Time you will have for your Defence. I desire you now to consider, and well husband your Time for your Defence; what have you to say for your self?

Plunket. My Lord, I tell you, I have no Way to defend myself, in that I was denied Time to bring over my Records and my Witnesses which are 10 or 12. And if I had them here, I would stand in Defiance of all the World to accuse me; but I have not sufficient Time to bring over my Records and my Witnesses, and I am brought here out of my Native Country; were I in Ireland, there both I and they should be known: But when I was to be tried, they would not appear; and it is all false, and only Malice. These Men used to call me Oliverus Cromwellus out of Spite.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. You are very like him, a destroyer of the Government.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Were not you acquainted with him?

Plunket. This is all I can say, if I had my Witnesses here, I should make my Defence.

L. C. J. Here are some Things, that if you can give an Answer to, you will do well to do it; for they stick close to you. They do testify against you here, that you did undertake to raise a body of Men in Ireland, 70000 Men they speak of, out of your own Nation, and all these were to join with the French, for the introducing the Religion of the Romish Church into Ireland, and settling that again there. And that you, in order to this, did take a Survey of all those Roman-Catholics that were able to bear Arms, from 16 to 60; and there is plentiful Evidence, that you did go a Circuit there to peruse all Towns, and see which might be most convenient for the taking in and entertaining the French, and landing their Forces; and Charlemont, you did design that for one strong Place to be taken, and Dun Gannon for another, and that you did design the French Army to land at Carlingford, and all that was with you, tells the Reason you gave, why that should be the Place, that they might come up with a burdened Ship to the very Gates of the Town; that you did, in order to the entertaining these foreign Forces, raise Money; that you did send out your Orders sub pena suspensionis to all that were of the Roman Clergy, and that this Money was received, several of them testified that they paid it to you, and this Man hath seen great Numbers of Persons pay Money to you upon these Accounts. All these are Treason: What say you to them? It does import you to consider what Answer you can give.

Plunket. My Lord, first as to the first Point, I answer, that I never received a Farthing of Money out of my own District, and but for my own Livelihood, and that I can prove by those that have received it for me, that I never received over threescore Pound a Year in my Life, unless some Gentleman would now and then give me 10 s. for my Relief. For, my Lord, this is the way in Ireland, every Priest hath so many Families allotted to him, and every Roman Catholic Family gives 2 s. a Year (as they that profess that way, know) and the Priests give me who am Superior over them, in my own District, some 20 s. some 30 s. and I never got so much in my Life as to maintain a Servant, and this was attested before the council in Ireland.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Ay, but the Witnesses say, out of your own District you sent into another Bishop's Diocese to collect Money.

Plunket. My Lord, I say, I could never get so much as to keep a Servant, and till now I never got a Farthing out of my own Diocese unless I have been called to an Arbitration or some such thing, it may be for my Journey and Expences 40 or 50 Miles they would give me something for my Maintenance. If you should find any thing else, I will be content to suffer; and if my Evidence were brought from Ireland there is nothing but what would be made clear, both under their own Hands and by Records, and that is all well known, and was attested in Presence before the Council in Ireland; which threescore Pounds was a very small thing to maintain me, and I never had above one Servant, and the House I lived in was a little thatch'd House, wherein was only a little Room for a Library, which was not seven Foot high, where once the Fellow came to affront me, because I hindered him from begging, that's for the Money. For the Men, I defy any one that ever saw me make a List of Men in my Life, or can produce any List made by my Order. I was never in my Life at Kingsale, at Corke, at Dun Gannon, at Limerick, &c. or those Parts of Munster which were the chief Ports where the French should come in, and not in Carlingford, which is the narrow Sea Ulster, which any one that knows the World will judge to be a very proper Place for the French to land in. 'Tis all one as to say that the should come in at a poor Place, where they could get nothing, it being at the narrow Seas, and they never saw me there in their Lives.

L. C. J. Yes, one does say, he was with you.

Plunket. Well, one does say he saw me there, but if I had my Witnesses here, I could prove he was a Friar, and declared an Apostate by his own Provincial, as this Gentleman is; and because I hindered them to beg in my Districts, therefore they have this Malice against me, that is all. Well, my Lord, that is for that, I was never in my Life in Connaught; and they cannot say, I took any Lift in Ulster, nor was 12 Miles in Munster in my Life. But thus, my Lord, sometimes there would be, as our way is, so many Families assigned to every Priest, (and this is the plain Truth,) this Priest perhaps complains to me of the Inequality, my Companion near me hath 150, and I have but threescore, which I must rectify; though I never knew but one of these Complaints. And if I had my Witnesses from Ireland and the Records, I would defy all these Witnesses together. For my sending to Rome, I never had an Agent in Rome for these seven Years past, because I was not able to maintain him, and indeed it was a great Shame to us; because there is never a Community of Friars, that hath a College beyond Sea, but hath some Agent at Rome.

L. C. J. 'Tis a Shame to have one there, not to want one.

Mr. Just. Delben. Well, if you have Witnesses, I cannot tell what to say.

Plunket. If I had gotten but to the latter end of the Term, I had defied them all together. And your Lordship should have seen under their own Hands what they were.

L. C. J. You forget this all this while, your own Letter; wherein this Matter is, that you had searched the Towns and considered it.

Mr. Att. Gen. He does deny there was such a Letter, he does not own there was such a Letter.

Plunket. I, my Lord, I never did write such a Letter. And that young Man that he speaks of, I could prove, if I had my Witnesses, that he never was in my Service or Company in Ireland, nor writ any Letters by him.

L. C. J. Did you never send any Letter by one O-Neal?

Plunket. No, my Lord, but he went over a begging.

Moyer. This young Man's Brother-in-Law will testify, that he was your Lordship's Page.

Plunket. I have 3 Witnesses that he came there begging, naked, and was sick three Months, and went over a begging, and was at Rome as a Stragler.

Moyer. Call Hanlet, (who came in.)

Sir Fra. Withens. Did you know Neil O-Neal?

Hanlet. Yes.

Sir Fra. Withens. Whose Servant was he?

Hanlet. My Lord Plunket sent him to Rome; he was sent there with his Letters, and I saw the young Man and his Letters.

Mr. Jones. Did he come a begging there?

Hanlet. No.

Plunket. Where did you see him?

Hanlet. At Mantis.

Plunket. Where is that?

Hanlet. In France.

Plunket. And you saw him with my Letters?

Hanlet. Yes.

Plunket. And this Man says, the Letters were opened at Caprennica, because he thought they were Letters of Recommendation.

Hanlet. Why, he went that way afterwards, and they were not opened when I saw them.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you know he was the Doctor's Servant?

Hanlet. Yes, he was.

Plunket. Did you see him in my Service?

Hanlet. I saw him in Mantis.

Mr. J. Delben. How do you know he was the Bishop's Servant?

Hanlet. Because he shewed me his Letter.

L. C. J. Was he owned for his Servant, and was he taken for his Servant?

Hanlet. Yes.

Plunket. Did he go on Foot, or on Horse-back?

Hanlet. He went on Foot.

Plunket. He was in a poor Condition in a Place not above four Miles from Rome, that I can prove.

L. C. J. Did he beg as he went?

Hanlet. No.

L. C. J. Mr. Plunket, if there is any Question you will ask of the Witnesses; or if there be any Evidence you would give yourself, this is your Time for the doing of it; if not, we must leave your Case to the Jury, who have heard the Evidence all along.

Plunket. Only this, my Lord, your Lordship sees how I am dealt with. First and foremost, I have not Time to bring my Witnesses, or my Records, which if I had, I would not weigh one Farthing to leave my Cause with any Jury in the World. Besides all this, I am brought out of my own native Country, where these Men lived, and I lived, and where my Witnesses and Records are, which would shew what these People are. I sent by the Post, and did all that I could, and what can I say when I have not my Witnesses against these People, that may swear any Thing in the World? You cannot but observe the Improbability of the Thing in itself, and unto what a Condition I am brought. My Lord, my Life is in imminent Danger, because I am brought out of my own Country, where these People would not be believed against me.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I think this Matter lies in a narrow Compass, the Evidence hath been long; I would only repeat the short Heads of that which hath been given at large. He is indicted for a Conspiracy to kill the King, the Overt-Act is an Endeavour to introduce a foreign Power into Ireland, to raise an Army, and levy War there; and the Proof of it hath been very full. The Proof in general, that there was a Plot to introduce the French, is plain by all the Witnesses; and the Proof in particular upon this Person at the Bar, hath been as plain as any Thing can be. They prove to your Lordship in general, that there was an Expectation that the French should come in, that there was an Invitation of Florence Wier the first Witness, to go over into France, and speedily he should have a Command, upon his return, in Ireland; that there were Preparations; for this appears by the Oath of Secrecy given to several Men. Forty Men that came along with Bishop Tyrrel to keep it private during their Lives. And there was a farther Proof of that general Conspiracy by Duffy, that when there was a general meeting of so many thousand People for Confirmation, there was by the Gentlemen of that Meeting a secret Consultation how to carry on the Design, and how to look out the old Officers in the late Rebellion, and to see what Posture they were in as to the Management of this Design; and this comes now particularly to the Prisoner, who was by at this Consultation, so the Witnesses do tell you. But that that comes nearer to him, is, that he did issue out Orders for the raising of Money, and that he did raise Money pursuant to those Orders, and did receive Money for that very Purpose: This is proved by three Witnesses, Duffy and Mac Legh, who paid the Money, and by Moyer the last Witness, who saw him receive it from several Persons. This is positive upon him; nay, they say farther, that there was a Lift made of the several Men, in the several Parishes, that were able to bear Arms upon occasion, from sixteen to sixty, and there was a Lift of a matter of threescore thousand Men that were ready upon any Occasion to rise for the Purpose, and this Lift was delivered over into the Hands of the Prisoner at the Bar. There is one Witness, Duffy, that says farther, that he saw a Letter under his Hand in France to the Cardinal Bouillon, to invite the French King into Ireland; and he did wonder that he should spend his Time and Blood in Wars against Spain, which was a Roman Catholick, and not come into Ireland to extirpate the Hereticks. And this Letter is confirmed by another Letter, which was seen by Moyer, a Copy of which is produced, which he translated from the Original in Latin, and the Letter was sent to Rome by Neil O-Neal, whom the Prisoner says he had no Concern for, but to give him some Recommendations.

Plunket. I gave him no Recommendations.

L. C. J. No, he says he did not give him any, nor sent any Letter by him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then he urged, that he went along begging by the Way; but 'tis proved he was sent by him, and sent with Letters, and that by his Brother-in-Law, who met him at Mantis. And 'tis proved by Moyer, who saw the Letter opened, taking it to be but a common Letter of Recommendation, he read the Letter and took a Copy of it, and translated that Copy, which Translation is enough to verify all the Matter which the Witnesses have sworn; for 'tis agreeing to what he said of Cardinal Bouillon in his other Letter, that it was more proper for the Catholick Princes to agree together and extirpate Heresy, than to vary amongst themselves; that now was the Time; for there were threescore thousand Men ready to rise upon such an Invasion. This is the Substance of the Letter, and this proves fully the Conspiracy this Man was engaged in, his receiving of Money, his lifting Men, and his Invitation of foreign Princes. And this is fully proved.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. And so his viewing the Ports too.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It was likewise agreed that Carlingford should be the Port, and 'tis like enough to be the Port, for 'tis a very large Port, that Ships of the greatest Burden may come up to the Town, and the Town itself but a weak Town. This is the Substance of the Evidence, and this is Proof enough, we think, to convict any Man of this Fact.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, I shall trouble you but with one Word that hath been omitted. I think 'tis a Cause of great Example, and that Thing which the Prisoner seems to make his Excuse, hath been answered by a Favour and Indulgence from the Court in a very extraordinary Manner. For, in as much as this Gentleman would make it a very hard Case, that he is brought out of his own Country, and hath not his Witnesses; it is very well known that by a particular Favour of the Court, which is not usual in these Cases, he had between five and six Weeks time for Preparation for his Trial: So that truly as to what does appear, I think all the Witnesses that have been examined, are Witnesses to be credited, except you Gentlemen, of yourselves, can convict upon your own Knowledge these Persons of any Misdemeanor, which I think you cannot, much less of Perjury. But besides, the Witnesses we have produced, all which speak to the Plot in general, and four of them fix it upon the Person at the Bar; they speak particularly, and every one agrees in Circumstances, and that other that spoke mincingly, I put it upon; it is the greatest Evidence that can be. For that Person that could come before a Grand-Jury, and there be the main Witness, but when he comes here, must be scrued and pumped to discover the seventy thousand Men. And I suppose you did observe how difficult it was to know of him, whether this Person was Primate of Ireland, or whether it were from the Authority of the King or the Pope; a very probable thing, that he should be such a one as the King designed to be Primate and Superintendent of Ireland. Further, my Lord, I desire to take notice of too, that Wyer, the first Witness, fixes four particular Things upon the Prisoner at the Bar, which have not yet been taken notice of. First, he fixes a Discourse with another Person that was Competitor with him for this very Office, Bishop Duffy, and he gives the Reason why he was admitted into the Office rather than the other, because he was a Man of greater Ability to carry on the Design; and though he does not give you an account of the Design, yet the rest of the Evidence do, and make it to be the Design then carrying on. Another Thing is, he tells you of the sending one into France, that was to come back again in order to this Design, I think his Name was Mac Donnel, and then the great Tory Flemming and he were to come back again Colonels in the Army that was to be raised. The next Person that fixes it upon him, is Mr. Han O-Neal, and he gives the plainest Circumstances, That at a Time in August when Bishop Tyrrel came to the House of one Brady with so many Men well equipped with such and such Arms, and took the Oath of Secrecy; he himself, but not only he, but the other Priest Mac Legh, was present at the same Time, and took the said Oath, and he does tell you that that very Priest was sent to Dublin to discover it that very Time, and so he hath fixed the Person, and Time, and the Business they came about. Then Mac Legh comes and tells you the same Thing in every Circumstance; ay, but says the Prisoner at the Bar, and would make it to be a great Objection, How chance that they have concealed this all the while, and not discovered it to some Justice of the Peace? Why, says one, I was under your Jurisdiction in that Place, that is the very Reason he gives wherefore he durst not; and, says another, I was concerned and as earnest as the Prisoner or any Body else, but going into France, I observed the Slavery that all the Subjects were under, under the Tyranny of that King, and apprehending that the same King was to come into Ireland by the Means of

of these Gentlemen, I was concerned at it, and had rather the Devil should reign over us than such an one, and therefore I will discover it. And he said very well, I think, that he had rather have the Devil to reign; for it seems to be him, or one in his Shape that reigns after that Manner. And there are two Persons that swear to the very Year that they were obliged to raise the Money, and swear positively, they saw his Orders, Sub pœna suspensionis, I do not know whether they meant hanged or suspended from their Office. But it seems it was so terrible, that it made them pay twenty Shillings a-piece for three Years successively. And there is another Gentleman that tells you, that out of a small Living, wherein he was concerned only as Curate to a third Person, it had been paid two or three Times, and another, though he was exempt himself from the Payment, yet so great a Confident was he of the Prisoner's at the Bar, that he was present when he saw thirty or forty pay this Tax, and whereas the Prisoner at the Bar would make it thought a strange Thing, that he should raise so much Money, who had but an House seven Foot high, it seems there is above that thatched House a Chappel.

Plunket. There is no Chappel.

Sir Geo. Jeff. But now, my Lord, that which substantially proves what these Witnesses say, is the Letter that is sent to Rome to the Secretary of the College de propaganda Fide, which is the last Letter that the last Gentleman speaks of, wherein he does particularly take notice, that he had taken care to raise such Monies, and view all the Ports and Places of Strength. And my Lord, that which is a very great Circumstance to back the Evidence of the first Letter to the French Cardinal Bouillon, which was taken notice of by the first Witness, and there is such a Passage in this too, that the Catholic Princes should not spill one another's Blood, when they might better employ it here in Ireland for the Propagation of the Faith; this last Letter takes particular Notice of this very Instance too, that instead of drawing their Swords against one another, they had better come to promote the Catholic Faith in Ireland. These four Witnesses are punctual and precise in every particular Circumstance of the Case, and against them there is nothing but the common Objection; If I had such Records, and Witnesses here, I could make my Defence, that is, if he had those Things that he has not, he might appear to be another Man than he is; but I am sure, as it appears upon the Evidence that hath been given by all the Witnesses, there is a plain Proof, and a full Proof of every Treason laid to his Charge.

Plunket. My Lord, I desire these Witnesses may be called [giving in a Paper.]

Crier. David Fitz-Gerard, Eustace Commynes, and Paul Gormar.

L. C. J. Who gave him this Paper? He had it not before.

Stranger. I was told that these were good Evidences for Dr. Plunket, and I gave him the Names.

L. C. J. Where are they?

Stranger. They are hard by.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where is Eustace Commynes? For he was one that gave in Evidence against the Prisoner.

Then Paul Gormar appeared.

L. C. J. What would you ask him?

Plunket. I desire to know of him, whether Mr. Moyer did allure and intice him to swear against me?

Gormar. Indeed my Lord he never did.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any more?

Gormar. But this, my Lord, Mr. Moyer and I were in Discourse, and he said if there was Law to be had in Ireland, he would shew Mr. Plunket his Share in it.

L. C. J. Well, what of that?

Gormar. My Lord, I did come out of Ireland to reveal what Plots the Irish had against the King, and as for this Mr. Plunket, as I have a Soul to save, I never heard of any Misdemeanor of him.

Mr. J. Dolben. How came you here to Day?

Gormar. I was summoned.

Mr. Just. Dolben. By whom? Was it the Attorney General or Plunket that summoned you?

Gormar. Here is the Summons.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. It is a common Subpœna.

Plunket. I never sent for him.

Gormar. It was not against you, they knew I had nothing against you, I thought you did more good in Ireland than hurt; so I declare it.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witnesses? If Fitz-Gerard or Commynes will come, we will hear them.

Plunket. My Lord, I have not any more Witnesses.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, This Gentleman here, Mr. Plunket, is indicted of High-Treason, and 'tis for conspiring the King's Death, and endeavouring to bring the French Army into Ireland for to invade that Kingdom, and to plant the Romish Religion in that Kingdom. You have had evidence against him that hath been fully examined. And these Things do seem to be very plain by the Witnesses, That he himself hath taken a Commission, or a Grant, or what you will please to call it, from the Pope to be Primate of Ireland, that he hath taken upon him to make Laws as the Provincial, and that he hath undertaken and endeavoured to settle the Popish Religion in that Kingdom, and in order to that, he hath invited the Aid of the French Army, and that he hath for the better landing of them, looked out what Places were most convenient for them; That he hath set a Tax upon the Clergy within his Province for the facilitating of all this, and for the making Preparations for the Entertainment of this Army. This the Witnesses testify against him, and that there were some Towns, as Dungannon and another Town, that were to be betrayed to the French. Now you must consider concerning these Witnesses: If you believe the Evidence that hath been given, and which hath been repeated by the King's Council, and if you believe that he did design to bring in a French Army, to establish the Romish Religion there again, and that he took upon him to raise Money for that Purpose, surveyed the Ports, and made such Provisions, as the Witnesses speak of and was in that Conspiracy; you must find him Guilty. I leave it to you, it is a pretty strong Evidence, he does not say any thing to it, but that his Witnesses are not come over.

Plunket. I can say nothing to it, but give my own Protestation, that there is not one Word of this said against me is true, but all plain Romance, I never had any Communication with any French Minister, Cardinal, nor other.

Then the Jury withdrew for a Quarter of an Hour, and being returned, gave this Verdict.

Cl. of Cr. Oliver Plunket, hold up thy Hand. How say you, is he guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty? Foreman. Guilty.

Plunket. Deo gratia, God be thanked.

Then the Verdict was recorded, and the Court rose. And the Keeper went away with his Prisoner.

On Wednesday, 15 Junii, 1681, Oliver Plunket was brought to the Bar to receive his Judgment.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I pray your Judgment against the Prisoner Oliver Plunket.

Cl. of Cr. Oliver Plunket, hold up thy Hand; Thou hast been indicted of High-Treason, thou hast been thereupon arraigned, thou hast thereunto pleaded Not Guilty, and for thy Trial hast put thyself upon God and the Country, which Country hath found thee Guilty; what hast thou to say for thyself, why Judgment of Death should not pass upon thee, and Execution be thereupon awarded according to the Law.

Plunket. My Lord, may it please your Lordship, I have something to say, which if your Lordship will consider seriously, may occasion the Court's Commiseration and Mercy. I have, my Lord, for this Fact been arraigned in Ireland, and brought to my Trial there. At the Day of my Trial all the Witnesses voluntarily absented themselves, seeing I had Records and Witnesses to convince them evidently, and shew what Men they were, and the prepened Malice that they did bear to me, and so finding that I could clear myself evidently, they absented themselves, on the Day of my Trial no Christian appeared, but hither over they came, and procured that I should be brought hither, where I could not have a Jury that knew the Qualities of my Adversaries, or who knew me, or the Circumstances of the Places, Times, and Persons; the Juries here, as I say, were altogether Strangers to these Affairs, and so, my Lord, they could not know many Things that conduce to a fair Trial, and it was morally impossible they should know it. I have been accused principally and chiefly for surveying the Ports, for fixing upon Carlingford for the landing of the French, for the having of seventy thousand Men ready to join with the French, for collecting Money for the Agents in this Matter, for assisting of the French and this great Utopian Army. A Jury in Ireland consisting of Men that lived in that Country, or any Man in the World that hath but seen Ireland in a Map, would easily see there was no Probability that that should be a Place fit for the French to land in, though he never was in Ireland, yet by the Map, he would see they must come between the narrow Seas, all along to Ulster, and the Rocks, and such Places would make it very dangerous; and by their own Confession it was a poor Town, and of no Strength, a very small Garrison, which had not been so, if it had been a Place of any Consideration. And where I had Influence only upon one Province, as is well known, though I had the Title of Primate of all Ireland, as the Archbishop of Canterbury hath of all England; yet the Archbishop of York did not permit him to meddle with his Province; and 'tis well known by the Gentry there, and those that are accustomed to the Place, That in all the Province of Ulster, take Men, Women, and Children of the Roman Catholics, they could not make up seventy Thousand. This, a Jury there, my Lord, had known very well, and therefore the Laws of England, which are very favourable to the Prisoner, have provided that there should be a Jury of the Place where the Fact was committed, as Sir Thomas Gascoigne, as I have heard, had a Yorkshire Jury, though he was tried at London. And then after my coming here, I was kept close Prisoner for six Months, not any Christian was permitted to come to me, nor did I know any Thing, how Things stood in the World. I was brought here the third of May, to be arraigned, and I did petition your Lordship to have some Time for my Trial, and I would have it put off till Michaelmas, but your Lordships did not think fit to grant so long, but only till the eighth of this Month, when my Witnesses who were ready at the Sea-side, would not come over without Passes, and I could not get over the Records without an Order from hence; which Records would have shewn that some of the Witnesses were Indicted and found Guilty of high Crimes, some were imprisoned for Robberies, and some of the Witnesses were infamous People; so I petitioned the eighth of this Month, that I might have Time but for twelve Days more: but your Lordship thought, when the Motion was made, that it was only to put off my Trial, and now my Witnesses are come to Coventry Yesterday Morning, and they will be here in a few Days, and so for want of Time to defend myself in, I was exposed to my Adversaries, who were some of my own Clergy, whom for their debauched Lives I have corrected, as is well known there. I will not deny myself, but that as long as there was any Toleration and Connivance, I did execute the Function of a Bishop, and that by the second of Elizabeth is only a Premunire, and no Treason. So that, my Lord, I was exposed defenceless to my Enemies, whereas now my Witnesses are come on, that could make all appear. I did beg for twelve Days Time, whereby you might have seen as plain as the Sun, what those Witnesses are, that began the Story, and say these Things against me. And, my Lord, for those Depositions of the seventy thousand Men, and the Monies that are collected of the Clergy in Ireland, they cannot be true; for they are a poor Clergy that have no Revenue nor Land; They live as the Presbyterians do here, there is not a Priest in all Ireland, that hath certainly or uncertainly above three score Pounds a Year, and that I should collect of them forty Shillings a-piece, for the raising of an Army, or for the landing of the French at Carlingford; if it had been brought before a Jury in Ireland, it would have been thought a meer Romance. If they had accused me of a Premunire for the exercise of my Episcopal Functions, perhaps they had said something that might have been believed; but my Lord, as I am a dying Man, and hope for Salvation by my Lord and Saviour, I am not guilty of one Point of Treason they have sworn against me, no more than the Child that was born but Yesterday. I have an Attestation under my Lord of Essex's Hand concerning my good Behaviour in Ireland, and not only from him, but from my Lord Berkley, who was also Governor there, which the King's Attorney saw; but here I was brought, here I was tried, and not having Time to bring my Witnesses, I could not prove my Innocency, as otherwise I might

I might. So that if there be any Case in the World that deserves Compassion, surely my Case does: And 'tis such a rare Case, as I believe you will not find two of them in Print, that one arraigned in Ireland, should be tried here afterwards for the same Fact. My Lord, if there be any Thing in the World that deserves Pity, this does; for I can say, as I hope for Mercy, I was never Guilty of any one Point they have sworn against me, and if my Petition for Time had been granted, I could have shewn how all was premeditated Malice against me, and have produced all Circumstances that could make out the Innocency of a Person. But not having had Time enough, and being tried, I am at your Mercy.

L. C. J. Well, you have nothing further to say in Bar of Judgment, you have said all you can?

Plunket. I have nothing further to say, but what I have said.

Then Proclamation was made for Silence, while Judgment was passing upon the Prisoner.

L. C. J. Look, you, Mr. Plunket, you have been here indicted of a very great and heinous Crime, the greatest and most heinous of all Crimes, and that is, High-Treason; and truly your's is Treason of the highest Nature, 'tis a Treason in truth against God and your King, and the Country where you lived. You have done as much as you could to dishonour God in this Case; for the Bottom of your Treason was, your setting up your false Religion, than which there is not any Thing more displeasing to God, or more pernicious to Mankind in the World. A Religion that is ten times worse than all the Heathenish Superstitions; the most dishonourable and derogatory to God and his Glory, of all Religions or pretended Religions whatsoever, for it undertakes to dispense with God's Laws, and to pardon the Breach of them. So that certainly a greater Crime there cannot be committed against God, than for a Man to endeavour the Propagation of that Religion; but you to effect this, have designed the Death of our lawful Prince and King: And then your design of Blood in the Kingdom where you lived, to set all together by the Ears, to destroy poor innocent People, to prostitute their Lives and Liberties, and all that is dear to them, to the Tyranny of Rome and France; and that by introducing a French Army. What greater Evil can be designed by any Man? I mention these Things because they have all been fully proved against you; and that you may take Notice, and repent of them, and make your Peace with God, by a particular Application for Mercy for all these Faults; for it seems to me, that against God, your Prince, and Fellow Subjects, you have behaved yourself very ill, designing very great Evil to all these; and now it hath pleased God to bring you to Judgment.

I must tell you, peradventure, what you urge for yourself might introduce Pity, if it were to be believed; that is, that you are innocent, and had Witnesses to prove it; but we cannot suppose any Man innocent, that hath had a legal and fair Trial, and a Trial with as much Candor to you, as your Case could bear, or as perhaps any Man in such a Case ever had. You had Time upon your Request to send for your Witnesses, to help you in your Defence, and to have proved your Innocence, if you could have done it; Time long enough to your own Content, you yourself thought it so, at the Time it was given. To give a Prisoner under your Circumstances, five or six Weeks Time to send for Witnesses, is not usual; we could have put you upon a present Defence, and hurried you out of the World by a sudden Trial, if we had had any Design against you; but we go on in a fair Way, and with legal Proceedings, and with as much Respect to you, as in such a Case could be used, for we gave you all the fair Hearing and Liberty that you desired to have.

Look you, as to what you urge, that your Trial was in this Kingdom, whereas your Offence was in another, that is a Thing that does not become you by any Means to object; for you have had a Trial here by honest Persons, and that according to the Laws which obtain in this Kingdom, and that too of Ireland, which is by a Statute not made on Purpose to bring you into a Snare, but an ancient Statute, and not without Precedents of its having been put in Execution before your Time: For your own Country will afford you several Precedents in this Case, as O'Rourke, and several others that have been arraigned and condemned for Treason done there. So that you have no Reason to except against the Legality of your Trial. You say, now you have Witnesses that could prove all this Matter; why that lies in the Mouth of any Man that is condemned to say; but pray consider with yourself, what regard ought to be given to this. We cannot help it, if your Witnesses don't come; you may remember they wanted not Time nor Opportunity to come over; but you told us they would not come unless they had a Passport.

Plunket. My Lord, they got a Pass to come over afterwards, and so in eight Days they came hither.

L. C. J. You might have provided yourself, if they wanted such a Thing. In the first Place, no Body is bound to give it them, much less could you expect it for them without asking.

Plunket. I could not get the Copies of the Records neither by any Means, unless I had an Order from the Council, and they would not give that Order, unless your Lordship appointed it.

L. C. J. We cannot tell that, you should have petitioned in Time.

Plunket. How could any one foresee, unless he was God Almighty, that they would deny it, or that he could not get out a Copy of a Record, paying for it, without a Petition. All the Friends I had, told me, upon Motion there it might be had; but here I have it under the Lieutenant's and Council's Hands, that they would give no Copy of Records without Order from hence, which before I could know it, it was impossible for me to have them ready against my Trial.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, I do speak this to you, to shew you that those Objections, which you seem to make against your Trial, have no weight at all; but in this Case it is not the Jury that are so material as the Witnesses themselves. I appeal to all that heard your Trial, if they could so much as doubt but that you were guilty of what you were charged with. For consider, here were Persons that were of your own Religion, the most of them Priests, I think almost all of them in Orders.

Plunket. There were two Friars, and a Priest whom I have endeavoured to correct this seven Years; and they were Renegadoes from our Religion, and declared Apostates.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, they gave an Evidence very home to your Matter; you had Liberty to examine them, and they gave you a rational Account of any Thing you asked. Let me but put you in Mind of one Thing. You made Exceptions to one's Evidence, (and indeed that was very much of your Exception to all) why he did not reveal this in all that Time: Truly he told you he was of your Mind, till he went into France; and saw what Slavery and Mischief you endeavoured to introduce upon his and your own Countrymen, and this his Spirit rose against, to see what a Condition Ireland was like to be brought into. And pray, did he not give you a full Answer to that Question?

Plunket. I had sufficient Witnesses to prove he was an Apostate, and was chastised by me, and therefore had premeditated Malice against me.

L. C. J. Therefore I have spoken this to the Satisfaction, I hope, of yourself; and all that hear it. I do now wish you to consider, you are near your end. It seems you have lived in a false Religion hitherto; it is not too late at any Time to repent, I wish you may have the Grace to do so: In the mean Time there is no room for us here to grant you any Kind of Mercy, though I'll tell you, we are inclined to pity all Malefactors: Whoever have done evil, we are inclined to pity them, and wish heartily that they may repent, as we do that you may, of what you have done. But all we can do now, is to say what the Law says, and that is to pass Judgment upon you.

Plunket. May it please your Lordship to give me leave to speak one Word. If I were a Man that had no Care of my Conscience in this Matter, and did not think of God Almighty, or Conscience, or Heaven, or Hell, I might have saved my Life; for I was offered it by divers People here, so I would but confess my own Guilt, and accuse others. But, my Lord, I had rather die ten thousand Deaths, than wrongfully accuse any Body. And the Time will come when your Lordship will see what these Witnesses are, that have come in against me. I do assure your Lordship, if I were a Man that had not good Principles, I might easily have saved my Life; but I had rather die ten thousand Deaths, than wrongfully to take away one Farthing of any Man's Goods, one Day of his Liberty, or one Minute of his Life.

L. C. J. I am sorry to see you persist in the Principles of that Religion.

Plunket. They are those Principles, that even God Almighty cannot dispense withal.

L. C. J. Well, however, the Judgment which we give you is that which the Law says, and speaks. And therefore you must go from hence to the Place from whence you came, that is, to Newgate, and from thence you shall be drawn through the City of London to Tyburn; there you shall be hanged by the Neck, but cut down before you are Dead, your Bowels shall be taken out and burnt before your Face, your Head shall be cut off, and your Body be divided into four Quarters, to be disposed of as his Majesty pleases. And I pray God to have Mercy upon your Soul.

Plunket. My Lord, I hope I may have this Favour, of leave for a Servant, and some few Friends that I have, to come at me.

L. C. J. I think you may have Liberty for any Servant to come to you, I know nothing to the contrary.

Plunket. And some few Friends that I have in Town.

L. C. J. But I would advise you to have some Minister to come to you, some Protestant Minister.

Plunket. My Lord, if you please, there are some in Prison, that never were indicted or accused of any Crime, and they will do my Business very well; for they will do it according to the Rites of our own Church, which is the ancient Usage, they cannot do better, and I would not alter it now.

L. C. J. Mr. Richardson, you may let his Servant come to him, and any Friend in your Presence, to see there be no Evil done, nor any Contrivances that may hereafter have an Influence upon Affairs.

Mr. Just. Jones. Be you present, or somebody.

Plunket. My Servant, I hope may come, without his being present.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, his Servant may be with him alone. Well, Sir, we wish better to you than you do to yourself.

Plunket. God Almighty bless your Lordship. And now, my Lord, as I am a dead Man to this World, and as I hope for Mercy in the other World, I was never guilty of any of the Treasons laid to my Charge, as you will hear in Time; and my Character you may receive from my Lord Chancellor of Ireland, my Lord Berkley, my Lord Essex, and the Duke of Ormonde.

Then the Keeper took away his Prisoner, and upon Friday the first of July, he was executed according to the Sentence.

At the Place of Execution he spake as follows.

I HAVE some few Days past abided my Trial at the King's-Bench, and now very soon I must hold up my Hand at the King of King's-Bench, and appear before a Judge that cannot be deceived by false Witnesses, or corrupted Allegations; for he knoweth the Secrets of Hearts; neither can he deceive any, or give an unjust Sentence, or mislead by respect of Persons; He being all Goodness, and a most just Judge, will infallibly decree an eternal Reward for all good Works, and condign Punishment for the smallest Transgression against his Commandments. Which being a most certain and undoubted Truth, it would be a wicked Act, and contrary to my perpetual Welfare, that I should now, by declaring any Thing contrary to Truth, commit a detestable Sin, for which, within a very short Time, I must receive Sentence of everlasting Damnation; after which there is no Reprieve or Hope of Pardon. I will therefore confess the Truth, without any Equivocation, and make use of the Words according to their accustomed Signification; assuring you moreover, that I am of that certain Persuasion, that no Power, not only upon Earth, but also in Heaven, can dispense with me, or give me Leave to make a false Protestation: And I protest upon the Word of a dying Man, and as I hope for Salvation at the Hands of the supreme Judge, that I will declare the naked Truth with all Candour and Sincerity: And that my Affairs may be the better known to all the World.

'Tis to be observed, that I have been accused in Ireland of Treason and Præmunire, and that there I was arraigned and brought to my Trial;

but

but the Prosecutors (Men of flagitious and infamous Lives), perceiving that I had Records and Witnesses who would evidently convince them, and clearly shew my Innocency and their Wickedness, they voluntarily absented themselves, and came to this City, to procure that I should be brought hither to my Trial (where the Crimes objected were not committed) where the Jury did not know me, or the Qualities of my Accusers, and were not informed of several other Circumstances conducing to a fair Trial. Here, after six Months close Imprisonment (or thereabouts) I was brought to the Bar the third of May, and arraigned for a Crime, for which I was before arraigned in Ireland: A strange Resolution, a rare Fact, of which you will hardly find a Precedent these five Hundred Years past: But whereas my Witnesses and Records were in Ireland, the Lord Chief Justice gave me five Weeks Time to get them brought hither: But by Reason of the Uncertainty of the Seas, of Wind and Weather, and of the Difficulty of getting Copies of Records, and bringing many Witnesses from several Counties in Ireland, and for many other Impediments (of which Affidavit was made) I could not at the End of the five Weeks get the Records and Witnesses brought hither; I therefore begged for twelve Days more, that I might be in a Readiness for my Trial, which my Lord Chief Justice denied; and so I was brought to my Trial, and exposed, as it were, with my Hands tied, to those merciless Perjurors, who did aim at my Life, by accusing me of these following Points:

First, That I have sent Letters by one Niel O-Neal (who was my Page) to Monsieur Baldeschi, the Pope's Secretary; to the Bishop of Aix, and to Principe Colonna, that they might solicit foreign Powers to invade Ireland; and also to have sent Letters to Cardinal Bouillon to the same Effect.

Secondly, To have employed Captain Con O-Neal to the French King for Succour.

Thirdly, To have levied and exacted Monies from the Clergy of Ireland, to bring in the French, and to maintain seventy thousand Men.

Fourthly, To have had in Readiness seventy thousand Men, and Lifts made of them, and to have given Directions to one Frier Duffy to make a List of 250 Men in the Parish of Foghart, in the County of Louth.

Fifthly, To have surveyed all the Forts and Harbours in Ireland, and to have fixed upon Carlingford as a fit Harbour for the French's landing.

Sixthly, To have had several Councils and Meetings, where there was Money allotted for introducing the French.

Finally, That a Meeting in the County of Monaghan, some 10 or 12 Years past, where there were 300 Gentlemen of three several Counties, to wit, Monaghan, Cavan, and Armagh; whom I did exhort to take Arms to recover their Estates.

To the first I answer, That Niel O-Neal was never my Servant or Page, and that I never sent Letter or Letters by him to Monsieur Baldeschi, or the Bishop of Aix, or to Principe Colonna. And I say, that the English Translation of that pretended Letter produced by the Frier Macmoyer, is a mere Invention of his; and never penned by me, or its original, either in English, Latin, Italian, or any other Language. I affirm, moreover, that I never wrote Letter or Letters to Cardinal Bouillon, or any of the French King's Ministers; neither did any who was in that Court either speak to me, or write to me, directly or indirectly, of any Plot or Conspiracy against my King or Country. Farther, I vow, that I never sent Agent or Agents to Rome, or to any other Court, about any Civil or Temporal Affairs: And 'tis well known (for it is a Precept publicly printed) that Clergymen (living in Countries where the Government is not of Roman Catholics), are commanded by Rome, not to write to Rome, concerning any civil or temporal Affairs. And I do aver, that I never received Letter or Letters from the Pope, or from any other of his Ministers, making the least Mention of any such Matters: So that the Friers Macmoyer and Duffy swore most falsely, as to such Letter or Letters, Agent or Agents.

To the Second I say, That I never employed Capt. Con O-Neal to the French King, or to any of his Ministers; and that I never wrote to him, or received Letters from him; and that I never saw him but once, nor ever spoke to him, to the best of my Remembrance, ten Words: And as for his being in Charlemont or Dungannon, I never saw him in those Towns, or knew of his being in those Places; so that as to Con O-Neal, Frier Macmoyer's Depositions are most false.

To the Third I say, that I never levied any Money for a Plot or Conspiracy, for bringing in Spaniards or French, neither did I ever receive any upon that Account, from Priests or Friers, as Priest Mac-Clave, and Frier Duffy, most untruly asserted. I assure you, that I never received from any Clergyman in Ireland, but what was due to me by ancient Custom for my Maintenance; and what my Predecessors these hundred Years past were wont to receive; nay, I received less than many of them. And if all what the Catholick Clergy of Ireland get in the Year were put in one Purse, it would signify little or nothing to introduce the French, or to raise an Army of seventy thousand Men, which I had insisted, and ready, as Frier Macmoyer most falsely deposed; neither is it less untrue what Frier Duffy attested, viz. That I directed him to make a List of 250 Men in the Parish of Foghart, in the County of Louth.

To the Fifth I answer, That I never surveyed all the Forts or Harbours of Ireland, and that I was never at Cork, Kingsale, Bantry, Youghal, Dungarvan, or Knockfergus; and these 36 Years past I was not at Limerick, Dungannon, or Wexford. As for Carlingford, I never was in it but once, and staid not in it above half an Hour; neither did I consider the Fort or Haven; neither had I it in my Thoughts or Imagination to fix upon it, or upon any other Fort or Haven, for landing of French or Spaniards; and whilst I was at Carlingford (by mere Chance passing that Way), Frier Duffy was not in my Company, as he most falsely swore.

To the Sixth I say, That I was never at any Meeting or Council, where there was Mention made of allotting or collecting of Monies for a Plot or Conspiracy; and 'tis well known, that the Catholick Clergy of Ireland, who have neither Lands nor Revenues, and hardly are able to keep decent Clothes upon their Backs, and Life and Soul together, can raise no considerable Sum; nay, cannot spare as much as would maintain half a Regiment.

To the Seventh I answer, That I was never at any Meeting of three hundred Gentlemen in the County of Monaghan, or any Gentlemen of the three Counties of Monaghan, Armagh, and Cavan, nor of one County, nor of one Barony; and that I never exhorted a Gentleman, or Gentlemen, either there, or in any other Part of Ireland, to take Arms for the recovering their Estates; and 'tis well known, that there are not even in all the Province of Ulster three hundred Irish Roman Catholics, who had Estates, or lost Estates by the late Rebellion; and, as it is well known, all my Thoughts and Endeavours were for the Quiet of my Country, and especially of that Province.

Now to be brief, As I hope for Salvation, I never sent Letter or Letters, Agent or Agents, to Pope, King, Prince, or Prelate, concerning any Plot or Conspiracy against my King or Country: I never raised Sum or Sums of Money, great or small, to maintain Soldier or Soldiers, all the Days of my Life; I never knew or heard (neither did it come to my Thoughts or Imagination) that the French were to land at Carlingford; and I believe there is none who saw Ireland even in a Map, but will think it a mere Romance; I never knew of any Plotters or Conspirators in Ireland, but such as were notorious and proclaimed (commonly called Tories) whom I did endeavour to suppress. And as I hope for Salvation, I always have been, and am entirely innocent of the Treasons laid to my Charge, and of any other whatsoever.

And though I be not guilty of the Crimes of which I am accused, yet I believe none came ever to this Place who is in such a Condition as I am; for if I should even acknowledge (which in Conscience I cannot do, because I should bely myself) the chief Crimes laid to my Charge, no wise Man that knows Ireland would believe me. If I should confess, that I was able to raise seventy Thousand Men in the Districts of which I had Care, to wit, in Ulster; nay, even in all Ireland, and to have levied and exacted Monies from the Roman Clergy for their Maintenance, and to have prepared Carlingford for the French's landing, all would but laugh at me, it being well known, that all the Revenues of Ireland, both Spiritual and Temporal, possessed by his Majesty's Subjects, are scarce able to raise and maintain an Army of seventy Thousand Men. If I will deny all those Crimes (as I did, and do), yet it may be that some, who are not acquainted with the Affairs of Ireland, will not believe that my Denial is grounded upon Truth, though I assert it with my last Breath. I dare venture further, and affirm, That if these Points of seventy Thousand Men, &c. had been sworn before any Protestant Jury in Ireland, and had been even acknowledged by me at the Bar, they would not believe me, no more than if it had been deposed and confessed by me, that I had flown in the Air from Dublin to Holy-Head.

You see, therefore, what a Condition I am in, and you have heard what Protestation I have made of Innocency, and I hope you will believe the Words of a dying Man; and that you may be the more induced to give me Credit, I assure you, That a great Peer sent me Notice that he would save my Life, if I would accuse others: But I answered, That I never knew of any Conspirators in Ireland, but such (as I said before) as were publicly known Outlaws; and that, to save my Life, I would not falsely accuse any, nor prejudice my own Soul. Quid prodest homini, &c. To take away any Man's Life or Goods wrongfully, ill becometh any Christian, especially a Man of my Calling, being a Clergyman of the Catholick Church, and also an unworthy Prelate, which I do openly confess. Neither will I deny to have exercised in Ireland the Functions of a Catholick Prelate, as long as there was any Connivance or Toleration; and by preaching, and teaching, and Statutes, to have endeavoured to bring the Clergy (of which I had a Care) to a due Comportment, according to their Calling; and though thereby I did but my Duty, yet some, who would not amend, had a Prejudice for me, and especially my Accusers, to whom I did endeavour to do good; I mean the Clergymen; (as for the four Lay-men, who appeared against me, viz. Florence, Macmoyer, the two Neals, and Hanlon, I was never acquainted with them), but you see how I am requited, and how by false Oaths they brought me to this untimely Death; which wicked Act being a Defect of Persons, ought not to reflect upon the Order of St. Francis, or upon the Roman Catholick Clergy; it being well known, that there was a Judas among the Twelve Apostles, and a wicked Man, called Nicholas, among the seven Deacons; and even, as one of the said Deacons, to wit, holy Stephen, did pray for those who stoned him to Death; so do I, for those who with Perjuries spill my innocent Blood, saying, as St. Stephen did, O Lord, lay not this Sin to them. I do heartily forgive them, and also the Judges, who (by denying me sufficient Time to bring my Records and Witnesses from Ireland) did expose my Life to evident Danger. I do also forgive all those who had a Hand in bringing me from Ireland to be tried here, where it was morally impossible for me to have a fair Trial. I do finally forgive all who did concur, directly or indirectly, to take away my Life, and I ask Forgiveness of all those whom I ever offended by Thought, Word, or Deed.

I beseech the All-powerful, that his Divine Majesty grant our King, Queen, and the Duke of York, and all the Royal Family, Health, long Life, and all Prosperity in this World, and in the next everlasting Felicity.

Now that I have shewed sufficiently (as I think) how innocent I am of any Plot or Conspiracy, I would I were able, with the like Truth, to clear myself of high Crimes committed against the Divine Majesty's Commandments (often transgressed by me), for which I am sorry with all my Heart; and if I should, or could live a Thousand Years, I have a firm Resolution, and a strong Purpose, by your Grace (O my God) never to offend you; and I beseech your Divine Majesty, by the Merits of Christ, and by the Intercession of his blessed Mother, and all the holy Angels and Saints, to forgive me my Sins, and to grant my Soul eternal Rest. Miserere mei Deus, &c. Parce anime, &c. In manus tuas, &c.

P O S T S C R I P T.

To the final Satisfaction of all Persons, that have the Charity to believe the Words of a dying Man, I again declare before God, as I hope for Salvation, what is contained in this Paper is the plain and naked Truth, without any Equivocation, mental Reservation, or secret Exemption whatsoever; taking the Words in their usual Sense and Meaning, as Protestants do, when they Discourse with all Candour and Sincerity. To all which I have here subscribed my Hand.

CV. The Trial of Sir Miles Stapleton, Bart. at York Assizes for High-Treason, June 18, 1681, 33 Car. II.

SIR Miles Stapleton, Baronet, was indicted at the Sessions of Oyer and Terminer at the West Riding of the County of York, and the Indictment was removed by a Writ of Certiorari to the King's Bench, where Sir Miles Stapleton having been arraigned, and pleaded to the same Not Guilty, was sent down to be tried in the County of York. The Indictment was as followeth.

Sir Miles Stapleton, late of Carleton in the County of York, Baronet; stands indicted, for that he, as a false Traitor against our illustrious and excellent Prince, King Charles the second, his natural Lord, not having God before his Eyes, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but by the Instigation of the Devil being moved and seduced, the cordial Love, and true, due, and natural Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our Lord the King should bear to him, and of right are bound to bear, wholly withdrawing, devising, and with all his Power intending to disturb the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Realm, and to bring and put our said Lord the King to Death and final Destruction, and the true Worship of God in this Kingdom by Law established, and used, to alter to the Superstition of the Church of Rome, and to move and stir up War against our said Lord the King in this Realm, and to subvert the Government of this Kingdom, the 30th Day of May, in the thirty first Year of our said Lord the King's Reign, at the Parish of Barwick in Elmet in the said County of York, in the West-Riding of the same County, with divers other false Traitors unknown, did traiterously compass, imagine and intend, the Death and final Destruction of our said Lord the King, and to change and alter, and wholly to subvert the ancient Government of this Realm, and to depose and wholly to deprive the King of the Crown and Government of the said Kingdom, and to root out the true Protestant Religion: And to fulfil and accomplish the same most wicked Treasons, and traiterous Imaginations and Purposes, the said Sir Miles Stapleton, and other false Traitors unknown, on the said 30th of May, in the thirty first Year aforesaid, with Force and Arms at the Parish of Barwick aforesaid, advisedly, devilishly, maliciously and traiterously, did assemble, unite and gather themselves together, and then did devilishly, advisedly, maliciously, craftily and traiterously, consult and agree, to bring our said Lord the King to Death and final Destruction, and to depose and deprive him of the Crown and Government, and introduce and establish the Religion of the Romish Church in this Realm; and the sooner to fulfil and accomplish the said most wicked Treasons and traiterous Imaginations and Purposes, the said Sir Miles Stapleton, and other unknown Traitors, then and there advisedly, maliciously and traiterously, did further consult and agree to contribute, pay and expend divers large Sums of Money, to divers of the King's Subjects, and other Persons unknown, to procure those Persons traiterously to kill our said Lord the King, and to introduce the Romish Religion into this Realm, against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in such Case made and provided.

Clerk of Assize. Hold up thy Hand, Sir Miles, thou hast heard the Treasons and other Misdemeanors whereof thou standest indicted: Art thou Guilty thereof, or not Guilty?

Sir Miles. Not Guilty.

Clerk of Assize. How wilt thou be tried?

Sir Miles. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Assize. Culpit, God send thee a good Deliverance.

Clerk of Assize. Sir Miles, this understand you, that these Gentlemen that are now to be sworn, are returned by the Sheriff of this County, to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you for your Life; therefore if you will challenge any of them, you are to challenge them as they come to be sworn, and before they be sworn.

The Jury being called, Mr. Justice Dolben took Notice to Sir Miles, that there were but few appeared, and therefore told him, he would do well not to challenge too many of them. Sir Miles thereupon said, he should not challenge many; and enquired whether those that served on the Lady Tempest's, Mr. Thwing's and Mr. Ingleby's Juries did now appear; and the Judge answered him, that if they did, Care should be taken that they should not be sworn.

Then the Jury being called to the Book, Sir Miles challenged these, viz.

Sir David Fowles, Bar.	John Wright, Esq;	Robert Turner, Gent.
John Estoft, Esq;	John Green, Esq;	John Beckwith, Gent.
William Bethel, Esq;	Robert Bell, Gent.	Simon Warrenner, Gent;
William Caley, Esq;	John Dixon, Gent.	Gervase Hatfield, Gent.
Towers Driffeild, Esq;	Thomas Wood, Gent.	John Coats, Gent.
Marm. Trueman, Esq;

And only two of the Jury returned, viz. Tho. Fletcher, Rob. Gudgeon, were sworn.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Sir Miles, I see you must stay till the next Assizes, or you challenge too many, here will not be a Jury gotten.

Sir Miles. If your Lordship please, I shall be content, and do desire the Jury may be called that served the first Day; nay, all the three Juries, if you please.

Mr. Just. Dolben. That is, you would chuse all of one Way, and leave the others; where is the Indifferency of the Trial then; but come call them, I cannot deny it.

The three Juries called, and five challenged, viz.

Tho. Worfeley, Esq;	Robert Bushel, Gent.	Roger Lee, Esq;
Manuel Tennant, Gent.	Roger Stretwel, Gent.

And these Sworn, viz.

Tho. Pennymann, Bar.	Thomas Conyers,	against by Sir Thomas
Thomas Rokely, Esq;	Christopher Tankard,	Stringer: as one that
William Stone,	Esq; who was excepted

paraged the Evidence of the Plot, and called his Dogs by the Names of Bess and Badloe; which the Judges allowed to be a good Exception; but there being no Witnesses in the Court to prove it, he was sworn.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Sir Miles, you must stay till the next Assizes we have not a full Jury.

Sir Miles. Here are Gentlemen in the Court; your Lordship may take whom you please.

Mr. Just. Dolben. I cannot do it without the King's Council move for a Tale, which as this Case stands they will not do.

And so he was remanded to Prison, and Remanet pro defectu Juratorum until the 18th Day of July 1681.

And at the Assizes then holden for the County of York, before Mr. Just. Dolben, and Mr. Baron Gregory, was proceeded against as followeth.

Clerk of Assize, Sir Miles Stapleton, hold up thy Hand; thou standest indicted by the Name of Miles Stapleton; late of Carleton in the County of York, Bar. &c. prout in the Indictment.

After not Guilty pleaded to the Indictment, and other Formalities of the Court, as before, these Gentlemen following were called.

Sir Thomas Maleverer, Kt. Challenged by the King's Council.

Sir Roger Beckwith, Kt. Challenged by the King's Council.

Sir Miles. Are any challenged?

Mr. Just. Dolben. Yes, there are two challenged for the King.

Sir Miles. I hope they must shew cause why they challenge them.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Yes, they shall, but they are not bound to shew Cause before the Pannel be gone through, and then, if you desire it, they will shew Cause; but I suppose Sir Thomas Maleverer married a Kinswoman of your's, and if so, 'tis a good Exception.

Sir Miles. I desire it may be proved.

Richard Audbrough, Esq; Challenged by the King.

John Dodsworth, Esq; Challenged by the King.

Isaac Fairfax, Esq; Christopher Bradshaw, Esq; Challenged by Sir Miles.

These following were called and sworn, viz.

Sir Barrington Boucher, Tobias Hodson, Esq; Francis Fuldgam, Esq; Kt. John Beverley, Esq; Humphrey Brook, Esq;

Sir John Jennings, Kt. Anthony Frankland, Esq; Thomas Lee, Esq;

Richard Hutton, Esq; John Addams Esq;

Wellbrough Norton, Esq; Francis Battery, Esq;

Crier. Twelve good Men and true, stand together and hear your Evidence.

Clerk of Assize. Sir Miles Stapleton, hold up your Hand (which he did). Gentlemen, you of the Jury that are Sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Charge; you shall understand that he stands indicted by the Name of Sir Miles, &c. prout in the Indictment; upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereupon pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himself upon his Country, which Country you are, &c.

Then Proclamation was made for Evidence, and Sir Thomas Stringer, one of the King's Council aggravated the Indictment as followeth.

Sir Miles Stapleton. I desire, my Lord, the King's Evidence may be put apart, not to hear what each other swears.

Mr. Just. Dolb. No, no, Sir Miles, that must not be, would you have the same for your Witnesses?

Sir Thomas Stringer. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; Sir Miles, the Prisoner at the Bar, stands here indicted of the greatest and blackest Treasons that can be invented by the worst of Men; he stands here indicted for endeavouring to depose the King from his Crown and Dignity; and imagining and compassing the Death of the King, to alter the established Government, and root out the true Protestant Religion, and to establish the Romish Religion among us. Gentlemen, to compass these wicked Designs we shall prove there hath been several Consults where the Prisoner at the Bar hath been, and where he hath contributed Money to carry on these wicked Designs: And Gentlemen, I must acquaint you, there hath been a horrid Plot against the King and Government, and I need not do it, for it hath been made notoriously known; not only Parliaments have declared it so, but there have been Noblemen, Gentlemen, and Priests, nay, some Men have been found guilty for carrying on the horrid Design, and have received their Deserts. This Plot, Gentlemen, is no new Plot, not a Plot of a Day, nor of an Age; but a Plot that hath been carried on for an hundred Years. My Lord, since we were delivered by God's Mercy from the Popish Religion by the Reformation; ever since that Time, the Pope, the Jesuits, the Priests and those of the Popish Persuasion, have, my Lord, been from Time to Time, and ever since, endeavouring to carry on this wicked Design, and had destroyed us long since, if we had not been by God Almighty, from Time to Time, delivered from their Power. And you, Gentlemen, of the Jury, I must tell you, this Plot was carried on in Queen Elizabeth's Time; and as they did in this Plot carry on their Designs, with the King of Spain at Valadolid in Spain. The King of Spain, he join'd with the Popish Party here; but it pleased the Lord to take the Queen to his Mercy, before the Plot was effected. And I must tell you, the same Men of the same Quality that carried it on then, have now endeavoured to carry it on in these Days. My Lords, the King of Spain, though he was a Papist, yet it was so horrid a Thing, that he left them to carry on their wicked Design, and God Almighty did preserve the Queen. My Lords, they rested not here; but in King James his Time they designed to have destroyed both King and Parliament at one Blow, and thereby the whole Nation in it's Representatives, and this they managed by Guy Vaux and others. And all King Charles his Time the same Plot was on Foot, and pray how far did they bring it? they brought it to the Death of that Gracious King, and the sad Effects of a Civil War; and they have brought it in these Days to raise Officers, Generals, Major-Generals, and other Officers, and proceeded so far that actual Commission was delivered for destroying our King, and if this had not been by God's Mercy prevented, what would have been the evil Effects thereof, ere this Day? And, Gentlemen, I must tell you, that which is now before you is the greatest, and most wicked Design that ever was before Men; and though you be of the Relations and Kindred, yet I know if you have but Conscience and Right in you, you will give a Verdict according to the Justness of the thing, and the Evidence you shall have.

Sir John Ottwith. We call Mr. Smith first, who will give you an Account of the Plot in general.

Mr. John Smith called and sworn.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Mr. Smith, pray tell the Court what you know of the Plot.

Mr. Smith. I must speak of it then what I have done beyond Sea, my Lord.

My Lords, I remember when I had been first beyond Sea, I became acquainted with one Abbot Montagu and Mr. Thomas Car, at Paris, and they told me then, if I came to the Romish Religion what Preference I should have here in England; they told me what Friends they made in England, they named several Persons about the Court, and several Gentry in England which I did not then know to be Papists. I staid some time among them in Paris, and all this while I did not pervert to the Romish Religion; though they told me how many Jesuits they had sent over into England. After I left France, I was for going for Rome, where I met with Father Arderton, Rector of the English College, and Father Southwel, and Father Campion, who introduced me into the Acquaintance of Cardinal Grimaldi, which is an Italian Name, but he is Archbishop of that Place; I happening there, they carried me to speak to the Cardinal, and he told me what Likelihood there was for introducing the Romish Religion into England, and he told me, he would prefer me very well there, if I would turn to their Religion; and gave me Letters to several Friends in Italy: At last I was perverted to the Romish Religion, by virtue of this Cardinal; and this Gentleman at last asked me if I had a mind to study; I told him Yes, so I came into an Italian College, and became acquainted with the all secular Priests, both English, Scotch, and French; who told me what Interest they had made in England, during the coming in of Cardinal Norfolk, and said, there was but one Man in the Way, meaning the King, and said they should soon remove him.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Did they mean the King?

Mr. Smith. Yes, my Lord, they said there was but one Man in the Way, and that they would soon make an end of him, and that they had Men ready in England for it. After this, my Lord, I left this Italian College, and came to the English College (for I had a Mind to come there) and I made Friends with the Jesuits: After I came to the English College, my Lord, I was informed of one Father Arderton Rector of that College, and Father Mondford, who told me, that by Means of this Cardinal Norfolk they did not doubt but to take the King out of the way; and that they would give me all Privileges that could be for a young Man in that Time. When I was coming away, my Lord, from Rome, and had my Letters Emisaries, by Cardinal Perorin (He sent for me when I was coming away, and as is usually done to all Scholars, and they kiss the Pope's Toe, and he gives them his Blessing and particular Indulgence; which I had when I came into England) said he to me, there is one Man in the Way who hath made us fair Promises, but will perform nothing, therefore we must take him out of the way, and that I might be instrumental in the Design; with this, my Lord, I took leave of the College, and we came five into England as Priests, and I made my Application to the Arch-Priest, which was in London, one Purrat, and I was employ'd a long Time by him in England; but Proclamations coming forth for the apprehending Popish Priests, I was constantly after at the Portugal Ambassador's Chappel, where this Purrat had a Chamber, wherein I discoursed with several of the Clergy in England, who said they doubted not but Popery would soon be settled in England. I came after that to live at one Mr. Jennison's House, where the Clergy had several Meetings, and we were all of Opinion that Course would be taken with the King, unless he brought in Popery. And this, my Lords, is all I can say in general.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Do you know of any Conspiracy in Yorkshire?

Mr. Smith. My Lord, I am coming to that. When I came to Mr. Jennison's House, there was one Mr. Thwing, a Priest, who has suffer'd as a Conspirator, he was well acquainted in the House before I came there, and did very much to persuade me that I would intreat Mr. Jennison to send his Daughters to a Place called Dolebank, where a Nunnery was to be erected, and I knew several that were there. This Mr. Thwing came to me oftentimes, and several Priests in this City, and they all pressed me to it, but I was against it, knowing what their Design was.

Mr. Just. Dolben. But do you know any thing against the Prisoner?

Mr. Smith. All that I can say to the Gentleman at the Bar, is this: I never saw him before to my Knowledge; but Mr. Thwing, when we were at Mr. Jennison's, and discoursing of the Plot, asked me how they gave Money in the Bishoprick, I told him some gave more, some less.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What were those Collections for?

Mr. Smith. My Lord, it went among ourselves under the Notion of killing the King, and rooting out the Protestant Religion; but we gave it out that it was repairing a College at Doway, which, if granted, had been penal by Law. Then I asked him, How doth the Collections go among you in Yorkshire? Some, faith he, give freely; but, faith he, my Uncle and his Friends are engaged another way; for, faith he, they are going to make a Founder for Dolebank; several persons he named, among which he named this Gentleman.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What said he of Sir Miles?

Mr. Smith. He said Sir Miles was very zealous for promoting the Roman Catholick Religion, and had contributed largely for the introducing of it into England.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. You say that amongst yourselves you gave it out, that the Money that was raised was for the Killing of the King, and rooting out the Protestant Religion; pray, by what Way and Means was it to be done, was that ever discoursed among any of you; was it for raising of an Army? or what was it for?

Mr. Smith. Wherever I was, my Lord, it was resolved, that that was the most effectual Means for the introducing of Popery.

Mr. Robert Bolron called and sworn.

Sir Thomas Stringer. Mr. Bolron, acquaint my Lords and the Jury, what you know of Sir Miles Stapleton.

Mr. Bolr. May it please your Lordship, I came to live with Sir Thomas Gascoigne in 1674, as Steward of his Coal-works; and was then a Protestant, but was persuaded by Mr. Rushton, Sir Thomas, and others, to turn Roman Catholick; when I had turned Roman Catholick, about 1676, they came and asked me, what I would do for the Romish Religion, if it should come to it; I told them, I would venture my Life in that Cause, and then I went to Barmbow-Hall, where I took the Oath of Secrecy; after that I went to Barmbow-Hall, where Sir Miles Stapleton was at a Consult in 1677.

Mr. Just. Dolben. At what Time in 77?

Mr. Bolr. It was about Whitsuntide, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolben. That was the Whitsuntide after you had taken the Oath of Secrecy?

Mr. Bolr. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Who was there?

Mr. Bolr. Sir Miles Stapleton, Sir Tho. Gascoigne, Mr. Gascoigne his Son, my Lady Tempest, Lawyer Ingleby, Mr. Thwing, Father Rushton, and several others.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. What was there done at that Consult?

Mr. Bolr. My Lord, the Consult was about killing the King, and establishing a Nunnery at Dolebank, near Ripley; Sir Tho. Gascoigne gave 900*l.* per Annum, and 300*l.* for killing the King; and I remember very well, Pickering was mentioned about killing the King; and they asked Sir Miles Stapleton what he would give? and he said, 200*l.* for killing the King.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Are you sure that in the Presence of Sir Miles Stapleton it was resolved the King should be killed?

Mr. Bolr. Yes, my Lord, it was resolved both by him and all others, that the King should be killed; and, my Lord, I heard them further say, if the Duke of York did not please, that they would serve him as they would serve his Brother.

Mr. Bar. Greg. Who said these latter Words?

Mr. Bolr. Sherby of Stone-house said these latter Words, and Mr. Sherburn said—

Mr. Just. Dolben. No matter what Mr. Sherburn said. What said Sir Miles?

Mr. Bolr. The Gentlemen said, that Sir Miles should be a Privy Councillor, and that they would procure the Duke's Consent to it.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Is that all?

Mr. Bolr. My Lord, I was further at a Consult in 78, about the thirteenth or fourteenth of June.

Mr. Bar. Greg. What Time was that?

Mr. Bolr. The thirteenth Day of June 78, and there it was agreed upon the taking of Hull, the letting in of the French there, as the fittest Place for the French to land at.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Where was this?

Mr. Bolr. At Barmbow; and likewise they did discourse, that my Lord Bellasis had caused the Block-houses to be almost ruined, that the French might more easily come in; and we had all Pardons for our Sins.

Mr. Lawrence Mowbray called and sworn.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Mr. Mowbray, tell my Lords and the Jury what you know against Sir Miles Stapleton, the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Mowbray. My Lords, you have heard what Mr. Smith and Mr. Bolron say to the Plot in general; what I say shall be very brief, in relation to Sir Miles Stapleton, and no further. Sir Miles Stapleton being present with Sir Tho. Gascoigne, my Lady Tempest, Esquire Gascoigne, and several others, they held several Discourses concerning a Design of killing the King, subverting the Government, and bringing in Popery, and accordingly they would fire London.

Mr. Bar. Greg. When was this?

Mr. Mowbray. This was in 76, where Father Rushton gave him an Oath of Secrecy, and he promised to be true to the Design, and would venture his Life and Estate for the promoting so good a Cause.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Did you hear Sir Miles Stapleton say he would adventure his Life and Estate for killing of the King?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolben. And was it resolved at that Consult?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolben. And he consented to it?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, my Lord, and took the Oath of Secrecy from Father Rushton.

Mr. Just. Dolben. This is not the Time that Mr. Bolron speaks of.

Mr. Mowbray. No, my Lord, he speaks of 76 and 78, this was in 78.

Mr. Bolr. I have seen in 75 a collusive Conveyance of Sir Miles Stapleton's Estate to Sir John Daney.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Where did you see it?

Mr. Bolr. I did see it at Sir Thomas Yarbrough's, and he asking me when Sir Miles Stapleton was at Sir Tho. Gascoigne's; may it please you, said I, I can tell you something where you are concerned with Sir Miles Stapleton; as soon as he heard that he blushed, and away he went, and would hear no further.

Sir Tho. Stringer. What say you, Mr. Mowbray, of an Indulgence you had?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, my Lord, I had an Indulgence.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Was it for the Time to come, or the Time past?

Mr. Mowbray. It was for the Time past; for I was to enter into the Rosary.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Did you ever attend Rushton at the Altar?

Mr. Mowbray. Yes, I did.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Mr. Bolron, you say, you saw a collusive Conveyance made by Sir Miles Stapleton to Sir John Daney; pray, what was the Forfeiture of it?

Mr. Bolr. It was—

Mr. Just. Dolben. Was it Sir Tho. Yarbrough, or Sir John Daney, you told of it?

Mr. Bolr. I told it to Sir John Daney.

Mr. Mowbray. I drew a Copy of that very Conveyance.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Truly, my Lord, we want Mrs. Bolron, one of the most material Evidences against Sir Miles, being sick at London.

Mr. Baynes called and sworn.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Come, Mr. Baynes, declare to the Court what you know against Sir Miles.

Mr. Baynes. I know nothing against Mr. Miles, only I have seen him at Barmbow-Hall in 77.

Sir Tho. Stringer. Pray tell us this, whether you observed, in the Year 77, Sir Miles Stapleton come to several Meetings with Sir Tho. Gascoigne, my Lady Tempest, and others?

Mr. Baynes. Yes, my Lord, I have.

Mr. Just. Dolben. But do you know what Discourse they had?

Mr. Baynes. No, my Lord; but I remember we were once discoursed about some Nuns beyond Sea, and they were called Galloping Nuns.

Mr. Just. Dolben. They were Gallopers, indeed.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Sir Miles, you have heard what hath been proved against you—

Sir Miles. My Lord, there is nothing of Truth in it at all; I hope to make it appear to your Lordship. I call God to witness I am as innocent of what they say, as any Child unborn.

Mr. Just. Dolben. That is an easy Thing to say.

Sir Miles. I hope to make it appear to your Lordship: Will your Lordship please to give me leave to ask the Witnesses some Questions?

Mr. Just. Dolb. That you may have Allowance in.

Sir Miles. Then I desire to ask Bolron this Question; Did you accuse me in your Information to Justice Lowder?

Mr. Bol. No, my Lord, I did not.

Sir Miles. Did I, or any other, desire you to keep any Secret for me?

Mr. Bol. Yes, my Lord, I have been desired.

Mr. Justice Dolben. But did Sir Miles ever desire you?

Mr. Bol. No, my Lord, he did not, but Rushton did, when I was introduced by the Priests to the Consult.

Sir Miles. Did you and Mowbray know that each other was concerned in the Plot?

Mr. Bol. Yes, we did.

Sir Miles. Name the Persons that were present at the Consult.

Mr. Bol. There was Sir Tho. Gascoigne, my Lady Tempest, Esquire Gascoigne, Mr. Ingleby, Mr. Thwing, Mr. Rushton, Mr. Addison, Mr. Metcalf, and several others.

Sir Miles. How long did the Consult last?

Mr. Bol. Some six or seven Hours.

Sir Miles. What Servants were there?

Mr. Bol. I took no notice of the Servants.

Sir Miles. What Room was it in?

Mr. Bol. In the old Dining-Room.

Sir Miles. How long did it last?

Mr. Just. Dolb. Six or seven Hours he tells you.

Sir Miles. Was there any other at Sir Thomas Gascoigne's?

Mr. Bol. None else that I can remember.

Sir Miles. Upon what Occasion did he mention Mowbray in his Information to the Council?

Mr. Just. Dolb. There hath no Information to the Council been mentioned here.

Sir Miles. Pray what was the Occasion you were turned out of Sir Thomas Gascoigne's Service?

Mr. Bol. My Lord, I know not; they say it was about a Trunk: Sir Thomas Gascoigne sent him to York, and he was to come again. I know there was a Design to take away Mowbray's Life; but I never told him so much; and my Lady accused him for a Ring; I never durst tell him this, but this was the Thing contrived against him to take away his Life; I can make it appear where he bought the Ring.

Mr. Just. Dolb. What tell'st thou us of a Ring? Can'st thou not as well tell us it was for that he left Sir Thomas Gascoigne's Service?

Sir Miles. When did you first become a Protestant?

Mr. Mowb. When I made my first Information.

Bar. Greg. When was that?

Mr. Mowb. That was in 79, and a little before that I kept Correspondence with Father Addison.

Sir Miles. I desire to know whether he saw a List of Names?

Mr. Mowb. Yes, I did.

Sir Miles. Whose Names were there;

Mr. Mowb. There was your Name for one, and Sir Thomas Gascoigne's.

Sir Miles. What was it for?

Mr. Mowb. It was a List of those that were Actors and Contributors for killing the King.

Mr. Just. Dolb. You are sure Sir Miles Stapleton's Name was in the List?

Mr. Mowb. Yes, my Lord, I am.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Was it Parchment or Paper?

Mr. Mowb. No, my Lord, it was Paper.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Were you to assist in killing the King?

Mr. Mowb. My Lord, I was to be an Actor in killing the King.

Sir Miles. Whether did I, or any other desire you to keep any Secret for me?

Mr. Mowb. Yes, Father Rushton did.

Sir Miles. Did I ever do it?

Mr. Mowb. No, Sir Miles, you never did.

Sir Miles. Did any Body else desire you?

Mr. Just. Dolb. Father Rushton, he tells you, did.

Sir Miles. Was the discourse so loud that Sir Thomas Gascoigne could hear it?

Mr. Mowb. Sir Thomas could hear well enough when he would.

Sir Miles. Was it in 79 that you discovered the Plot?

Mr. Bol. Yes; I went to London, and there discovered the Plot in 79, I think it was.

Sir Miles. You said, I was not concerned, you only accused Sir Thomas Gascoigne and some others in your Information; but did not name me.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Did he so? You may prove that upon him.

Sir Miles. It was so in his Information, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolb. Well, then let it be so. Call your Witnesses.

Mr. Lowder called and examined.

Sir Miles. I desire Mr. Lowder to acquaint your Lordships and the Jury, what was in the Information Mr. Bolron gave in, whether he accused me or no.

Mr. Lowder. All I know of it is, that in January 79, on Sunday Evening, as I think, about the 24th Day of the Month, Robert Bolron came to me, and told me he had something of Secrecy to impart to me, and I asked him if he would go into the House with me; he told me it was Matter of High-Treason; I asked who was concerned, he answered, Sir Thomas Gascoigne, and several others: Then I ordered my Clerk to bring a Bible, and pen and Ink to take his Information. I desired him to be very cautious, telling him, that several Lives were at Stake: At that he began to be fearful and changed Colour: I asked him for what Cause that Fear was; he said, if that were upon my Conscience, that was upon his, for concealing so long, I should be as fearful as he. I bid him seriously consider what he had to say; he then said, he had delivered his Information to Mr. Tindal. Well then, said I, why is it you come to me? Said I, Mr. Tindal is to be in my House the 25th Day, and I shall discourse it with him, and we shall make it together. Mr. Tindal did come, and Bolron came and delivered in his Information.

Mr. Just. Dolb. You did not give him his Oath at that Time?
